Your last kind gift was very precious, for I have so many claims on me. The poor aboriginal Indians are very badly off, and one needs money to get medicine and nourishment for them when they are sick; for when they are left alone many of them sink for want of it. I also look to the Lord for supplies of clothing for them. Out of the last money you sent I got a number of Mr. Sankey's hymn books, from Georgetown, to teach the boys and girls, who could read some of the hymns and tunes. They have already learnt a good many, and come together to practise in the evenings. The children have got on so rapidly during the few months I have been with them, that it is like tearing myself away to leave them. My fellow missionaries are, however, anxious for me to return from Berbice to Georgetown, where I can be cared for and nursed when I am ill.

I have had so many attacks of ague and fever since I came that I feel it will be the right thing for me to go back, but the people do not like to hear of it, and some of the Indian women weep when I tell them I must go. I am in a dense forest, and not one of my own colour to speak to, but the Lord is here. The prejudice to colour is not so great as you describe in South Africa. Dark coloured men are in the G.P.O. in Georgetown and in other Government offices.

How good the Lord has been to me here—200 miles from Georgetown. I had no money for some time; but I was not forgotten. An orphan Chinese boy (whom I cared for, with his brother, as infants) sent me supplies. I have to send a hundred miles for what I need; and often when hunting or fishing fails the Indians have nothing to give me.

Clothing for Emigrants.

DEAR SIR,—At this season of the year, when so many ladies are rearranging their wardrobes, in anticipation of seaside trips, may I intercede for those who are leaving England for their first, and probably their last, voyage? We know from experience that prosperity awaits our emigrant girls in the colonies, but they have not been very prosperous here, and it is very difficult for them to gather together suitable outfits. About 200 young women, carefully selected both for character and capacity, are sailing within the next six weeks under the protective care of the United British Women's Emigration Association, Imperial Office, Kensington. We want stuff dresses, blouses, jackets, and waterproofs, etc., etc. Parcels should be sent to my private address, as I am in charge of the outfitting department.—Yours faithfully,

ADELAIDE ROSS.

The Land of the Incas.—Mr. Stark, writing in his little monthly, says: "Step by step God has been preparing us and leading us forward. Here in Lima a foundation is being laid, slowly it must be, but surely, for a real Gospel work which will yet bear fruit. At times we too have been overcome with joy at seeing the signs of the precious seed growing in the hearts of a few. Some nine months ago we were visiting in a callejon leading off Calle, when a priest interrupted us saying we were 'corrupting the people with vile literature,' i.e., with Gospels. About three weeks ago, visiting in the same lane, we found a man sitting at his door carefully reading his Bible openly. He had been to our meetings with his wife, had heard the Gospel, had asked for a Bible, and is now searching it diligently, and we believe he is more than an enquirer. He is only one of a number in whose hearts the Holy Spirit is working."

Star Villa Orphan Home.—The annual report states that—"The Home is strictly Evangelical, and conducted upon the family system—its aim being to rescue friendless orphans of tender age, who are in danger of being cast upon the world and exposed to temptation and vice, by providing a shelter for them where they may be plainly educated, and trained in the fear and knowledge of God. While the orphans are in the Home we endeavour to store their minds with Scripture, believing that God's Word will not return unto Him void; and we further try to make them useful members of society by training them in habits of obedience and industry, in domestic service, and in plain needlework and stocking-knitting. They generally leave the Home for service at fifteen, but are still watched over so long as they need a mother's care. Thirty-three orphans are now in the Home; many have had to be refused through want of room and funds." The superintendent is Mrs. Hester Willis, Godwin-road, Hastings.

Livingstone College.

MORE than three years have passed since the first announcement of the founding of Livingstone College was made in THE CHRISTIAN, and already twenty former students are at work in different parts of the world. Men trained at Livingstone College have gone to North, South, and East and West Africa, the Congo, Lake Tanganyika, Central India, North East India, the Straits Settlements, China, New Guinea, Samoa, and North Queensland. This year's contingent are destined for Uganda, the Congo, North Africa, West Africa, Assam, China, and Samoa.

Reports are now coming in from all sides, telling of the work that has been accomplished. It is obvious that with only nine months' medical training men are not able to attempt the more serious operations, but many lesser ones have been performed, while numerous cases of ulcers, wounds, eye and skin diseases have been treated with great success. Some of the workers have had considerable experience in dealing with fevers, etc., whilst during an epidemic of small-pox, two of our brethren in South Africa were able to render most valuable service in vaccinating the people.

A letter from the Congo, received a few days ago from one who was only able to avail himself of a small part of the course, describes how an hour's talk with him previous to starting for the Congo, had enabled him by God's blessing to save the life of a fellow-missionary.

These encouraging reports more than confirm the statements which were made when Livingstone College was founded, as to the immense importance of giving to missionaries the opportunity for acquiring some knowledge of medical and surgical subjects. It is high time that those who are responsible for Christian Missions, should realise their responsibility for the lives of those whom they send forth. If a military expedition is to be sent out to any part of the world, every precaution is taken to preserve the health of the troops, both by sanitary arrangements and proper medical skill. It is not possible to do things on the same scale in Mission work, but it is possible to give to missionaries who are to work in dangerous climates, far from medical aid, such a knowledge of the rules of health and of the treatment of minor ailments, as will stand them in good stead in the absence of qualified help.

To neglect such precautions, and to send missionaries utterly unprepared to lonely fields of labour, to fall victims to disease which might have been avoided by the adoption of the simplest sanitary laws, or to the results of accident which a few months of training might have taught them how to remedy, brings a very heavy responsibility upon those who send them forth.

A new session begins at Livingstone College in the first week of October, and applications for admission should be made without delay. The College provides accommodation for residents, and it is an advantage to reside in the College, though non-residents are also admitted to the course of training. Friends desirous of helping are asked to make the College known amongst those to whom the course might be useful, and also to missionary societies who may not be familiar with the work. In former years the working expenses of the College have been met by the students' fees, but help is now needed, and would be warmly welcomed. Applications for admission, or donations to the work, or any questions relative to the course, should be addressed to the Principal, Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, Livingstone College, 33, Hamfrith-road, Stratford, London, E.

Lepers at Purulia.—In this large asylum are now to be found as many as 328 inmates. Rev. H. Uffmann, who is in charge, speaking of the effect of a heavy storm on the extended buildings made necessary by the growth of the work, says:—"We have finished two houses, and the third will be finished in a few days. The whole has cost more than we anticipated; partly on account of the storm the work had to be done over again, and also from the increase in wages and material. If God will we will separate soon and will be glad to have completed such a large piece of work." This means that the untainted little ones will now be kept apart from the leprous children, which they could not be for want of room till the extensions were completed. This asylum at Purulia has grown under Mr. Uffmann's care to be the largest in India. They need, and deserve, the prayers and help of Christians at home.

"A QUESTION FOR TEACHERS."

DEAR SIR,—In answer to the inquiry of "A Disciple" in to-day's CHRISTIAN, I would say it certainly is not right for a preacher or teacher to proclaim as Evangelical truth to a promiscuous audience any view or doctrine which is not definitely stated in the Scriptures. It is generally recognised that these Scriptures, notwithstanding their unpretentiousness, are comparatively full in regard to everything that concerns religious belief, life, or duty. That being so, it is expedient for the public instructor, that, before addressing his fellows, he, first of all, finds the text or basis of his discourse from the Holy Book; that next, he should compare that text with the context, with the chapter in which it is found, and with the whole scope and tenor of Scripture teachings. I say Scripture teachings, because both type and prophecy have to get their place; then, when he finds that this text is in line with the whole Bible, let him think out and pray over the subject, and, doubtless, when he delivers himself in the public assembly, he will speak with convincing authority and power in measure.

With regard to the last clause of the inquiry, which is—"or generally accepted by Evangelical Christians as truth"—there is need for more caution in reply. I would unhesitatingly say that it would not be safe for a Christian teacher or preacher to be guided in his work, in these days, by what reputed Evangelical Christians accept as truth; because there is so much mixture of doctrine, and so much of first stating Scripture truth, and then adding what is not truth, with the result that the original statement is modified, or nullified, or rendered practically useless. Proof—so many different sects, yet one Bible. I affirm then that the rule for the preacher is not to present anything as Christian doctrine, either in public or private, which he does not find in the New Testament. And the rule for the hearer is, that he measure everything he hears by the same standard.—Yours very truly,

A CONSTANT READER.

"PETER NOT THE ROCK."

DEAR SIR,—All students of the Word of God must be much interested in the subject of the discussion raised by Mr. Hunter in your last issue—as to whether or not the Lord Jesus Christ intended to designate Peter as "this rock." Some Protestant expositors believe that such was the intention of our Lord. I scarcely think their convictions will be uprooted by the ipse dixit of Mr. Hunter. This interpretation, if false, will not lose its hold unless it is displaced by something more forcible than bare assertion.

The passage is admittedly a difficult and complex one. A very helpful comment upon it by the late Rev. Dr. Edersheim has recently come under my notice. It occurs in his "Life and Times of Jesus, the Messiah" (vol. ii., pp. 80-86).

Dr. Edersheim suggests that the whole passage is essentially Jewish and Aramaic. The reference to Peter as "the rock" finds its parallel in Abraham, who, in Isaiah li. 1, is called by the Holy Spirit "the rock"—"Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn...look unto Abraham, your father." The heaven-given faith in Abraham constituted him the father of all who believe; so the heaven-given faith, "the Petrine," in Peter, which manifested itself in his confession, constituted "the rock" on which the Church was founded. Christ's contemporaries "regarded the world as reared on 'the rock' of faithful Abraham; so Christ promised that He would build his Church on the Petrine in Peter—on his faith and confession."

In the course of the momentous interview the Lord inquired of his disciples, "Whom say ye that I am?" Peter replied, "Thou art the Christ." Our Lord answered, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say unto thee that thou art Petros, and upon this Petra I will build my church." No man, literate or illiterate, reading this can logically attach any significance to these words other than that the Petra is (1) Peter, or (2) Peter's confession, or (3) a blending of both, as Dr. Edersheim well suggests.

May I avail myself of this opportunity of noting that the root-weakness of the apostate Church of Rome is not that she falsely professes to be based on "the rock" here designated by our Lord, but that she incorporates in her claim that the Apostle Peter was the first Bishop of Rome. It cannot be too often repeated that for this assumption there is no historical evidence whatever. It has been well said that the Church of Rome is like an inverted pyramid, with its huge base upwards and its apex resting on—nothing! If it cannot be proved that Peter was Bishop of Rome—to say nothing of the problematical question of succession—it is clearly a baseless fabric. The whole question of "apostolical succession," Roman and Anglican "goes by the board"!—Yours truly,

ROBERT BURN.

Nature's Voices.

FLOWER VOICES.

SPIRITS immortal, frail children of dust,
Sweet human blossoms, look sunward and trust;
List to the joy-chimes from each fairy bell,
Love's own glad music o'er woodland and dell;
Tenderly telling his message so true,
God who has made us, cares much more for you;
O buds of the Life-Tree whose fruit is above,
Bloom forth with his beauty of truth and of love.

ZEPHYR VOICES.

Hither and thither, we come and we go,
Soft is our music, Eolian and low,
Tender our voices, in woodland and glade,
In the gold sunshine, and dim dreamy shade.
Far, far away, o'er the deep azure sea,
Tossing her tresses in frolicsome glee,
Fluttering gaily the plumes of her crest,
Tenderly cradled to sleep in her breast.
Carolling welcomes to dawning's red ray,
Joy serenading the noon-queen of day;
Warbling vespers o'er eve's closing eyes,
Charming her slumbers with rapt lullabies,
Waving the corn ears, and kissing the flowers,
Lightly caressing the green forest bowers.
List, O ye mortals, we sing of his breath,
He who awaketh from slumbers of death;
Of the Love Spirit, who listeth below,
Tender it cometh, and soft doth it go;
Breathing rapt music o'er life's mystic sea,
All omnipresent its blest symphony;
Healing the heart of its aching and pain,
Giving the soul its glad Eden again.

BIRD VOICES.

O list to our chorus, ye children of earth,
Thrilling the woodlands with sweet songs of mirth,
Revering in sunshine, in soft winds and flowers,
Carolling sweetly midst green trees and bowers.
Midst the blue azure unfettered we soar,
Joyously singing, the Great God adore,
Listen, O listen! ye pale heirs of care,
'Tis from your Father the message we bear:
He who supplieth the wild birds with food,
Giveth his children whatever is good.

TEMPEST VOICES.

Bend the ear, O fragile mortals,
'Tis the tempest's battle cry;
Loosed our bonds, through dark cloud portals
How we leap, and flash, and fly.
Lo, we come with pinions drooping,
Cities reel and mountains shake;
As the eagle earthward swooping,
Children of men awake.
Lo, the azure heavens darken,
As with night's sepulchral shroud;
Trembling kneel, in silence hearken,
For a voice is in the cloud.
God on his storm chariot rideth,
Over air, and earth, and main;
By his power his steeds He guideth,
Holds them with a golden rein.
See the fiery lightning flashes,
In the pathway of his feet;
Hark! the thunder booms and clashes,
Storm winds moan, and surf drums beat.
Now we sing with joyous madness,
Sweeping chords of fire at will;
Then with sighs of plaintive sadness,
Weird and low, our lyres thrill.
Join, O join our myriad voices,
Borne on winged cars of flame;
Whilst the wind and sea rejoices,
Swell thy psalm to his name.

Temperance Notes.

AN Essex Good Templar cycling corps for open-air temperance work has been formed.

Mrs. Harrison Lee, an Australian temperance leader, has arrived on a visit to this country.

The Juvenile Templar Order has been planted in Holland by Miss Gray, who has now gone to Saxony for similar work.

At a conference of temperance reformers held at Newcastle it was decided to form a temperance council for Northumberland.

The York magistrates have declined to grant licences both within and outside the grounds of the Yorkshire Agricultural Show.

The number of public-houses in London is said to be 5,104, in addition to 2,243 beerhouses, 218 hotels, 120 clubs, and 219 restaurants, making a total of 7,904 licensed houses.

Miss Agnes Slack, of the B.W.T.A., sailed on Saturday for New York, and will address meetings in the States during the next three months, and be with Miss Willard at the National Convention at St. Louis in October.

In 1751 Bishop Benson says: "Gin-drinking has made our people what they never were before, cruel and inhuman; it has changed the very nature of our people, and will, if continued, destroy the very race of people themselves."

The temperance question will come before the Church Congress, in the form of a consideration of "The Causes of Intemperance, and Possible Remedies: In the Individual, in Social Conditions, and in the Organisation of the Drink Traffic."

A London publican has been fined for keeping his house open after closing time on a Sunday afternoon. A barmaid stated that the only drink found in the customers' glasses was a temperance beverage. For the publican, it was contended that he could keep his house open the whole of Sunday for the sale of non-intoxicants.

The National Temperance League has issued a pamphlet (1d.) on "Pure Home-brewed, or Brewery-brewed Malt and Hops," by John Abbey. Both are shown to be equally deleterious; while oatmeal drinks (for which he gives receipts) are proved better thirst-quenchers and strength-givers for harvest labourers and working men generally.

The club system, which brewers know so well how to utilise as taps for the distribution of their beer in places where public-houses are not allowed and at times when public-houses are closed, is being made use of to destroy in Wales the beneficial influence of Sunday closing. The Chief Constable of Merioneth reports an increase of about ninety per cent. in the convictions for drunkenness during last quarter, owing to the establishment of clubs.

There are now, it is said, half-a-dozen model public-houses in existence, one of the most interesting being one on Earl Spencer's estate at Harleston, Northamptonshire. The village inn was taken over by the co-operative society, and is run in connection with the grocery and general store. From a shareholders' point of view it is a decided success, and drunkenness, which was formerly common in the village, is now practically unknown.

The Friends' Temperance Union reports good work. The conferences at York, Cambridge, and Hoxton Hall, and the annual conversations at Devonshire House, have all served in stimulating the interest of Friends in temperance work generally and in that of the Union specifically. A new feature of the work has been the provision of scientific temperance lectures in some of the Society's private schools. Other branches of the work—lectures, lantern and otherwise, and the issue of literature—have been well sustained.

The Duchy of Finland.—Mrs. F. Swensson Parker, a native of Birmingham, gave an address last week at the Central Hall of that city on "Christian Work in Finland." The Finland and St. Petersburg Mission was started twelve years ago in connection with the American Episcopal Methodist Church, at Helsingfors, the capital. This work has extended till at the present time there are about twenty-eight stations, twenty ministers and evangelists, twenty Sunday-schools in different parts of the country. Helsingfors being one of the most important northern ports and a rising commercial town, the work of the mission is altogether impeded for want of a central site and a suitable church, training college for natives, and printing offices, all to be built on the desired site, to form a centre for the whole country; and also St. Petersburg, where a commencement is already made amongst the Finlanders residing there. The Finlanders being an educated race, it is wholly desirable for the spiritual welfare of the people that these desired buildings are erected. Mrs. Parker asks her townspeople to assist this scheme.

THE BOOK WORLD.

ON THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

THE latest issue of Marshall Brothers' "Upward Life Series" is Praying in the Holy Ghost, by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor. In nine brief and simple chapters he sets forth most clearly and earnestly the conditions and characteristics of effectual prayer.

A new work from the prolific and chaste pen of Rev. F. B. Meyer is Through Fire and Flood (Marshall Brothers). It contains eleven selected discourses, dealing with the experimental aspects of the life of Christian discipline. Mr. Meyer's expositions, it is needless to say, are not of the recondite order, but they are fraught with rich comfort and helpful guidance to the earnest, if tried, disciple of Christ. There is plenty of beautiful illustration, and through all there is the vindication of the ways of God toward men.

The Light of His Countenance, and other sermons. By Rev. G. C. Grubb. (1s. Marlborough & Co.) We have here eight addresses delivered by the famous missionary in Toronto in the early part of this year. Mr. Grubb's utterances are not quite the same read as heard. The Irish fervour of delivery and the attraction of a strong personality are lacking. But the searching analysis, the striking phraseology, and the thorough-going exposition of the consecrated life are here in abundant measure. A capital little book to put into the hands either of the careless worldling or the slothful believer.

NEW EDITIONS.

Messrs. Longmans & Co. have issued a cheap and popular edition (7s. 6d.) of Dean Farrar's powerfully realistic tale of the days of St. Chrysostom, Gathering Clouds. In his preface the author says: "The reader will be presented with a historic picture, in which fiction has been allowed free play as regards matters which do not affect the important facts, but of which every circumstance bearing on my main design is rigidly accurate." The stirring events of that corrupt and degenerate time afford the eloquent author free play for his gifts of graphic and rhetorical description. The narrative revolves around the faithful life and testimony of Chrysostom, Patriarch of Constantinople, and the earthly fate to which he was driven by the satanic rage of ungodly enemies. The book must be read with a peculiar interest in days like the present, when Constantinople is once more the centre of the world's most tragic happenings.

Another work of great historic interest, referring to a period eleven hundred years later, is Professor Villari's Life and Times of Savonarola, of which Mr. T. Fisher Unwin has issued a popular edition (7s. 6d.). The great Florentine monk, like Chrysostom, was a man far in advance of his time in spiritual attainments and in integrity of character, and this story of his life, compiled from the best sources, forms one of the most attractive chapters of the history of the Christian faith in an age of general depravity and departure from the simplicity that is in Christ. There are numerous illustrations.

The second volume of Mr. George Allen's beautiful new edition of Fors Clavigera (5s.) contains twenty-three of the famous letters to working men, in which Mr. Ruskin propounds his views on all manner of vital subjects. As he admits in one letter, they constitute a strange patchwork kind of mosaic, stepping from theme to theme in the most abrupt way; yet there is method in the seeming transition, and through all there runs a clear unbroken thread of lofty thinking and the profoundest reverence for Divine righteousness and love. More stimulating or suggestive reading for the jaded devotee of commerce it would be hard to get.

Songs and Verses, by Jane Young (3s. 6d. H. R. Allenson), are tuneful lyrics on varied but homely themes; they bear the "hall-mark" of the genuine poet. Some of them are real gems of song.

The S.S. Union have issued a finely-printed and bound edition of the late Mrs. Beecher Stowe's immortal tale, Uncle Tom's Cabin. The reading of this story of modern stories will for many a long year keep green the memory of its gifted author, who has now gone to her eternal rest.

The Quiver for August contains many good things, notably a paper by the Bishop of Sodor and Man on "Church Life in Manxland," and "Oddments and Wastrels of London," by Hector Maclean. "Christian Madness" is a suggestive article by Canon McCormick. (Cassell & Co. 6d.)

The Anti-Infidel. Edited by W. R. Bradlaugh, Vol. XI. (1s. 6d. Snow & Co.) If blatant secularism be, as we are fully assured, on the decrease among the working classes, not a little credit may be accorded to the exposé in the pages of this monthly of the hollowness and absurdity of the quibbles and objections of infidelity. Apologetics, as contained in serious volumes, are beyond the reach of the masses, but they can appreciate fully the style in which sceptical statements are handled in these pages. The editor has an up-hill battle to fight, but he maintains it vigorously and well.

What Shall I Tell the Children? By Rev. G. V. Reichel. (5s. H. R. Allenson.) These condensed "object sermons" to young people are far above the ordinary run of such literature. They embody a wealth of teaching and illustration that must have been the outcome of wide reading and experience. As helps to Sunday-school teachers and monitors of the young they are much to be commended.

The Exalted Christ: Addresses and Bible-readings by Rev. F. B. Meyer. (Wheeler. 1s. and 1s. 6d.) The "Mildmay Library," the profits of which are intended to aid the Mildmay Institutions, has started well. No. 1 contained addresses by Rev. Andrew Murray, and now No. 2 appears with a selection from the "acceptable words" spoken by Mr. Meyer at various Mildmay Conferences; those being chosen which had the Lord Jesus Christ as their theme. Thus the little volume is a precious setting forth of the fulness which dwells in Him, and of the resources treasured up in Christ for all believers. We doubt not the book will find a warm and wide welcome.

Messrs. Saxon & Co., Bouverie-street, have added two more to their admirable sixpenny series of "Everybody's Books"—EVERYBODY'S CYCLING LAW and EVERYBODY'S GUIDE TO GIBBS AND DRAUGHTS. They are compiled by specialists, and very reliable.

How to be Well, by Rev. J. P. Sandlands, Brigstock, Thrapston (5s. 6d. of the author), is a comprehensive and popularly-written manual on the principles of physical health. Those who study and follow its maxims must escape many doctor's visits and bills.

THE VILLAGE RECITER, by Rev. Wm. Allen (Culley, 2, Ludgate-circus-buildings, E.C.), is a collection of simple, homely rhymes for popular use. THE PRIZE RECITER, published monthly at a penny from the office of Great Thoughts, gives an excellent variety of poetry and prose suitable for declamation at temperance gatherings.

THE GENTLEWOMAN. Three double-page pictures giving the portraits of the fifty-six grandchildren and great-grandchildren of Her Majesty the Queen will be presented, one each week, with the current and next two issues of the Gentlewoman. This week's issue also has portraits of Princess Maud and Prince Carl of Denmark, in a new form, on embossed card.

THE ASTRONOMY OF HOLINESS, a nineteenth century Psalm, by Arthur Booth Clibborn. (6d. 101, Queen Victoria-street.) Commissioner Booth-Clibborn has, as the title implies, made of "the stars in their courses" an object lesson, and from the forces which govern the heavenly bodies—attraction, gravitation, etc.—he has sought to emphasise the need, in spiritual life, of self-surrender, and of love. It is good to "consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers" (Ps. vii. 3). The Psalmist found it a very humbling and profitable study. It is good, too, to give to love the same pre-eminence which is given to it in God's Word. The reader of this booklet will find original and excellent suggestions, on this matter in particular, both in prose and in verse, and will find, too, many sentiments, strongly put, with which all intelligent Christians will surely be in agreement. The poetry rises above the average, and the case for love is, in some parts, very forcibly and convincingly stated. To certain passages we should take some exception. We especially feel that the attention is too much directed to self, whereas it is rather by "beholding as in a glass" the glory of the Lord, that we are "changed into" the same image. Not only sinful self, but righteous self, and even "crucified" self must be denied, in order that Christ may have all. There is, however, much here to commend. The poem on "Calvary" has some particularly good stanzas, such as—

"Thou centre of all time and space,
Thou throne of law, thou fount of grace,
Thou meeting-point of earth and heaven,
Thou lightning-rod, 'neath skies wrath-riven,
Thou altar, where Christ died for me,
My soul salutes thee—Calvary."

As to exterior, the get up is appropriate, tasteful, and attractive.

Some attention may possibly be paid to a former captain of the Oxford eight when he deplores "the fuss that is made about athletics at the present time." Mr. Heywood-Lonsdale is of opinion that the unnaturally high standard to which sport has been raised at many schools and at Oxford is likely to import professionalism, and thus lower the moral tone. He believes that if too much attention is paid to sport in school days, boys are apt to lose the taste for reading and other intellectual pursuits, and so be less fitted for life's duties. The booksellers say that their business is perceptibly affected by the bicycle craze. Some moderation in pastimes, and a little more attention to intellectual pursuits and religious duties, would be a pleasant turn in social life just now.

One of the signs of the times, at least among the Nonconformist bodies, is the difficulty they all feel in keeping alive denominational literary organs. A weekly paper they may maintain, but anything more purely literary—monthlies and quarterlies—have a slender chance. The readers in the churches browse in any and every field and on every common. The secular magazines which circulate attacks on Christianity and on all belief in God and immortality; and the religious magazines, which are too often a jumble of worldliness and religion: are freely taken into the houses. They cannot be expelled by any denominational competitor, yet their influence is distinctly felt to be hurtful. This seems to throw the churches back once more upon the original way of spreading the Gospel by preaching and praying. The influence of the churches as bodies of Christian men and women and as representatives of our Saviour, must be exercised in lifting up the tone and style of life by the churches themselves becoming more intensely spiritual.

No one can complain that children do not, in these days, get a great deal of attention, not too much, but not always very wise. Their odd sayings have always been an amusement, at least at home, but now they are becoming part of our literature. Messrs. Macmillan and Co. have just published a book on "The Child: its Spiritual Nature," which gives a numerous collection of children's sayings; and in the current number of the Cornhill there is an article on "Children's Theology," also enriched in the same way. We have a fancy that it is the grotesque or "naughty" sayings on religion that obtain the widest circulation, while the deep, tender, suggestive sayings seldom get beyond the homes where they were spoken. How to encourage child-like frankness, courage, and simplicity in dealing with the deepest and most sacred things, while, at the same time, repressing flippancy and irreverence, is just one of those hard questions which cannot be answered in words. That the world is a serious loser of good things by the way in which the originality of children is laughed or frightened down, we are quite sure. The child is afraid to be himself, and quickly conforms to the regulation type of boys and men around him. Few of us seem to have the secret of Jesus in dealing with the little ones.

One of the qualities that needs to be revived in our religious services is a sense of restfulness. "Things are in the saddle, and ride mankind," and this tyranny of hurry and worry and rush has crept into the exercises of our worship, as well as the conduct of our daily business. We need a detached mind, faculties at rest, a heart at ease, in order to give spiritual influences a fair chance to appeal to us, and to affect us with a due sense of their healing and quickening efficacy. Therefore those who conduct worship should endeavour to free themselves of an anxious or hurried mind, and for this there is no medicine like that of quiet and earnest prayer beforehand. Those who come to take part should see to it that nothing is allowed to ruffle the feelings, or throw the spiritual faculties into disorder and fret, before they go to the place of meeting. Gentleness in the home, punctuality in all household arrangements on the Lord's day, a devout and unselfish spirit towards all around them—and an expectant heart—these are the best antecedent conditions of successful worship. We are told to "wait on the Lord," and it is just this waiting attitude that nowadays is most difficult to cultivate.

It is one of the purposes of the Gospel to make the hard easy, and to bring the impossible within the reach of all. Self-reformations are never easy, for they arise out of a divided nature, at war with itself; self-conquest is in the last resort impossible, for the very will needs regenerating and re-enforcing. Through the Saviour's work, all this is changed; for He supplies the soul with motive-power, and motive-power is just that which we lack. It is one of the deepest contrasts between God's work and man's that the latter bears on it the marks of effort, and the former is full of that sense of complete mastery which so satisfies the soul, because effort is lost in victory. As Ruskin writes:—

Is not the evidence of Ease on the very front of all the greatest works in existence? Do they not plainly say to us, not "There has been great effort here," but "There has been a great Power here"? It is not the weariness of mortality, but the strength of Divinity, which we have to recognise in all mighty things; and that is just what we now never recognise, but think that we are to do great things by help of iron bars and perspiration; alas! we shall do nothing that way, but lose some pounds of our own weight."

Has not this a spiritual bearing which it would do us all good to remember and act upon, when we are tempted to do by our own endeavour what we are told to do in the power of God? Is it not the crowning voice of our religion that we will not suffer Him to "will and to do of his good pleasure" in us?

A curious society has just been started under the title of "The Association for the Harmonious Development of Faculties." The aim is laudable, for there are too many people in the world whose growth of mind and heart is painfully lop-sided. But this organisation will never remedy the evil, for, will it be believed, that it aims at its object by cutting itself off from everything theological and (apparently) everything distinctly religious? The harmony its promoters desire seems to be something that excludes the soul in the religious sense. It therefore stands self-condemned, and is foredoomed to failure. No narrower or more fragmentary characters live than those who profess to develop the whole man by the suppression of the most distinctively human faculties. Man is nothing if not religious; and the "full" or "perfect" man can never be found who is not pre-eminent in his religious and spiritual development. It is the great goal of Christian faith to produce such a man; and he can be produced in no other way than by the grace of God.

"Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him, and He shall bring it to pass." To commit ourselves is comparatively easy; it is one effort; to keep on steadily trusting after the act of committal is difficult. Abraham found it easier to leave Ur of the Chaldees than to go on living by faith day by day amid the changing scenes and temptations of life. Most of us are like a man who puts the reins into the hands of a driver, and then keeps twitching and pulling at them at every sign of danger, thus making the danger immeasurably greater. If we had committed ourselves to a guide to conduct us through an unknown land, we should be venturing on destruction if we were to distrust and overrule him and take our own way after all. Under his guidance no doubt the right way will often seem to be the wrong way, and the wrong way the right way; but it is just at such times that he is of the most use. It is at these times that faith in God has its perfect work, and that God vindicates the wisdom and goodness of his counsel. "Commit...trust."

The Great Commission.

WHILE sacramentarianism and sacerdotalism are increasing on every hand, it is a cheering sign of the times that the Convention at Keswick, which has now attained its twenty-second year, shows no indication of waning interest: has lost none of its spiritual force, its evangelic fervour, or its definite teaching of sanctification by faith. Still the thousands throng to the mountain-girdled town "throned on a silver lake," and still the great marquee is filled; although the new pavilion, affording accommodation for many hundreds more, is also packed with people, the majority of whom are young—another hopeful sign.

The teaching is the same as it has ever been. It never was of an extreme or exaggerated character, although a few occasional utterances may have been somewhat open to this objection. The purpose is to present the self-denied, unworldly, holy life—the resurrection life, the normal Christian life, the life of a wholly-surrendered and Spirit-filled being—in terms severely Scriptural and common to all spiritual men.

The massive and comprehensive expositions of one speaker; the classic culture of another; the sharply-cut, mathematical sentences of a third; the child-like simplicity and semi-mystical insight of a fourth; the breezy nonchalance of the missionary; the fervour balanced by sober-mindedness of one; the word pictures of another; the unobserved observance of details by him to whom the arrangements chiefly fall; the less pronounced but not less useful qualities of others—all combine to form a platform influential and unique.

Nothing is more noteworthy than the growth of the missionary spirit in connection with this Convention. At first, when Christ's faithful witness, Reginald Radcliffe, pleaded for a missionary meeting, it was declined. Later on, permission was given to hold one in the tent on the Saturday, but not as part of the Convention, which at that time definitely closed on Friday. Gradually the importance of missionary enterprise asserted itself. A special missionary fund was formed, and missionaries were sent out by the Convention itself. Now it has no more interesting feature than its daily missionary prayer-meeting; its Sunday afternoon missionary meeting of students at Friars' Crag; its "Keswick Mission" meeting on Wednesday afternoon in the tent; its Thursday afternoon missionary meeting at the island in Derwent-water; its Foreign and Home Missionary meetings on Saturday and Monday; all no longer apart from the Convention, but an integral though still a subsidiary and secondary part of it.

That the missionary spirit has become an organic and vital constituent of the Keswick Convention is matter for earnest thanksgiving to the God of Missions, whose people are his witnesses, sent forth to evangelise the world.

May it not be possible, however, that those whom God has so much used at Keswick may lead the Church of this period on to a larger and more Scriptural view of the Great Commission, and of the promise of the Spirit as a preparation for it: "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto Me, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

Here the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon them was the means adapted and necessary to the end required—viz., the witness concerning "Jesus and the resurrection," to the uttermost part of the earth, beginning at Jerusalem. Sanctification, holiness, the deepening of the spiritual life, the filling with the Spirit, abiding in Christ, waiting upon God, and every other term descriptive of sudden or progressive advance in the Christian life, are each and all intended to prepare the believer for his one great function in the world, to be a witness of the Lord Jesus.

If this be so, then the end for the accomplishment of which the teaching is the means should be kept prominently in view. The purpose for which this dispensation of the Spirit is lengthened out, viz., that the Gospel may be preached to all the nations, should not be subsidiary or secondary to the teaching, which is the means to that end.

We venture, therefore, to suggest that a further step might be taken in the path along which the convention has evidently been led of God. At present its force is concentrated on doctrinal addresses. On each of the four days there are a Bible-reading, two addresses in the morning, and three addresses in the evening, each fully of the average length of a sermon—twenty-four sermons. (No one can digest twenty-four sermons in four days.) On the other hand, men whose lives are a missionary romance, whose every-day experience for years has teemed with apostolic interest, like that of M. Coillard, in Zambesia, or like Mr. Ewen in South America, are allowed an altogether inadequate five minutes, at a small gathering on the lake, or when most of the people have left, in which to speak the wonderful works of God, and the perils out of which He has delivered them.

The whole story of the Acts of the Apostles is alive with action and movement. Each address is a résumé of past history, or an epitome of present events. Even the convention called to consider the important question whether the Gentiles must be circumcised, was by one consent interrupted in the middle, and all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to their beloved Barnabas and Paul (men who had hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ), declaring what signs and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them. Peter appealed to what had taken place a good while ago, and James clinched the argument by the inspired quotation of an inspired Scripture; but the interest of the assembly was concentrated on Barnabas and Paul, the men who were fresh from the high places of the mission field.

May not Keswick take a hint from Jerusalem, and give at least as much prominence to action as to thought; to the men who, at the call of the Master, have hazarded their lives for his name, as to those who, equally at the Master's call, have spent more time in the study?

Would it not, to put it on the lowest ground, be a relief to the hearers, if a story of missionary enterprise, home or foreign, should take the place of the second address at the principal morning and evening meetings? A narrative of the wonderful works of God, interposed between two doctrinal expositions, would give savour and strength rather than if the three pieces of food were of the same character.

It was in order that he might be qualified to prophesy, that John (our brother and companion in the tribulation and kingdom and endurance in Jesus) was bidden to take and to eat up the little book, which lay on the pierced hand of the Covenant Angel, whose pierced feet stood upon the land and sea which He had redeemed by his blood (cf. Josh. i. 8). It was in order that they might prophesy—not foretell but forth tell—that Jesus came in vision from heaven to earth, and repeated the last promise He had given before He left earth for heaven—"I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy"—"Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses" (Acts i. 8, Rev. xi. 3).

It was the Great Missionary Himself who, not as Teacher but as Worker, leaving earth, and reappearing in vision, demanded the witness of his people and promised them the needed power. And it needs not only the exposition and exhortation of teachers, but the example and testimony of witnesses and sufferers, to evoke the love and the enthusiasm which transfigure disciples of the Crucified into witnesses of his resurrection. It was Jesus, not as the glorified Teacher, but as the glorified Sufferer, whose appearance and whose words evoked from the conquered persecutor the self-surrendering inquiry, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Paul not only "reasoned out of the Scriptures, opening and alleging that it behoved the Christ to suffer and to rise again from the dead, and that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is the Christ," but his preachings and his epistles are full of his missionary experiences; and his farewell to the elders of Ephesus, who wept sore and fell on his neck and kissed him, is but one instance of many, showing how deeply he stirred the hearts of men, as, like the Master and his forerunner, he spake that which he knew and testified that which he had seen.

If the beloved and honoured brethren who control the Keswick Convention should think it desirable, we believe the hearts of many will rejoice that missionaries, who have hazarded their lives for the name of the Lord Jesus, should be accorded, in coming years, a similar place to that given to the beloved Barnabas and Paul at the Jerusalem Convention. And what applies to Keswick applies equally to all similar assemblies.

A Diligent Bible Student.—A dispensary lately opened at Bhagaya, in the Rajmahal Hills, Santalia, North India, has proved a helpful auxiliary to missionary work. Rev. H. J. Jackson mentions the following case as an example of the influence exercised by this agency:—"One man, a Brahmin, brought his daughter for treatment. She got better, and then the man asked me to sell him a Hindu Bible. He got a New Testament one Thursday, and on the following Monday came to me to explain something in Rom. xv. I said to him, 'You shouldn't begin with the Epistle to the Romans; you should read the Gospels first.' He said, 'I have read straight through from the beginning, and have read up to this chapter.' And this in four days! He often comes now and has talks with me about the Book. He has indeed become a diligent Bible student and is much interested. He is a large cultivator in our immediate neighbourhood, and sometimes I visit him."

Mr. Moody "Resting."

By REV. C. I. SCOFIELD.

UNDOUBTEDLY the supreme attraction of the quiet mountain village of Northfield lies in the unique personality and character of its famous resident, the founder of its institutions, Dwight Lyman Moody. That personality and character have, it is true, made their mark upon thousands of other communities, but Mr. Moody lives at Northfield (when he "lives" anywhere), and it is here that he is seen and felt and heard at his best. And inevitably so, for he is a growth of this soil. Here he was born, and here in youth his nature received its first impress, which it still retains. The visitor does not come into friendly relations with the environment of Mr. Moody's boyhood without discovering that his shrewd practicalness, his humour, industry, and kindness, are local characteristics—in him carried to very high development, no doubt, but, after all, indigenous.

It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that the visitor in Northfield finds Mr. Moody's attractive qualities in their fullest manifestation. Here he is at home, here he is loved and understood, and here he is in the fullest, raciest sense, himself.

It is amusing to see Mr. Moody do what he calls "rest." The day's "rest" begins at five o'clock in the morning with a simple breakfast, and ends seventeen hours later, when, tired and happy, the great evangelist retires for the night. By six o'clock in the morning he may be at Mount Hermon, bursting into the kitchen where the busy cooks are preparing breakfast, inspecting the food, often tasting of every dish to assure himself of its quality; or down at the great barns where the boys are at work, looking over the large herd of cows, scrutinising every detail of the farm, and then meeting the students in chapel with a stimulating talk or tender exposition of Scripture.

Hurrying back to his home, he opens his mail, always immense, and writes or dictates answers. Then he gives attention to the innumerable details of the administration of the three great Northfield institutions—the seminary, the training school, and Mount Hermon school—and to the careful planning of the summer conventions. It has often been remarked that the charm of these great gatherings is largely in their freshness and spontaneity, and this is true of the result; but the throngs who feel and remark upon that charm do not know that it is a result achieved by long months of most painstaking preparation. In nothing, perhaps, is Mr. Moody's genius for command more manifest than in his capacity for details. Nothing is too minute for his best thought, for he well knows how much results may depend upon little things.

Of course, along with this genius for details go remarkable quickness of insight and of decision. When it is remembered that June, July, and August each brings its distinctive gathering at Northfield, it will readily be understood that the preliminary work is enormous. Mr. Moody would find his own industry and capacity inadequate to the accomplishment of all this work, if he had not able and trustworthy lieutenants. These he finds in his eldest son, William R. Moody; his nephew, Ambert G. Moody; and his son-in-law, Mr. Percy Fitt. Each of these energetic and capable young men, trained in Mr. Moody's service and familiar with his methods, is implicitly trusted to execute his plans.

And beside these things, which are local, no inconsiderable part of Mr. Moody's "rest" is taken up with the affairs of the Chicago Bible Institute, the Colportage Association, the Prison Evangelization Society, and with the stream of visitors from every part of the world. During the conventions all his work must go on, and, in addition, the conduct of the meetings. And this is Mr. Moody's idea of "rest." When this is over, his work begins.

But if the charm of Northfield is largely in the unique personality of its famous citizen, it is very far from being exclusively so. The place itself is rarely beautiful, greatly excelling in natural charm hundreds of "resorts" which have become famous, and annually attract thousands of visitors. Northfield is wholly without factories, and is the best type of New England farm village. With its position high above the winding Connecticut, but backed by mountains yet higher, its pure spring water, well-kept hotels and boarding-houses, and its mile-long street with stately old white houses embowered in elms, it lacks no element of attraction.—Sunday School Times.

Mission Work in Johannesburg.

EACH compound has its own police, selected by the compound manager, and given a distinguishing badge or uniform. These men are chosen either because of their being chiefs' sons, and thus invested with a sort of hereditary authority which commands respect, or because of physical superiority. Their duties are to suppress fighting, capture runaway employes, arrest any natives guilty of breaches of the compound regulations, and generally to preserve order. Each policeman is provided with a "sjambok," or whip of hippopotamus hide, six feet long, about one and a-half inch in diameter at the base, and tapering to a quarter of an inch at the tip, the last eighteen inches of which are supple. These weapons can inflict considerable pain, and leave very definite impressions behind them without breaking any bones, and are a great improvement on the knobkerries and assegais in vogue in Natal.

Two of these policemen from Gazaland, both sons of chiefs, and both of grand physique, were laid very definitely on our hearts from the very commencement of our mission. They came to our services and joined our school, and were getting on nicely with their lessons, when one of the officials of the Company, fearing that they would lose prestige with the rest of the natives, so ridiculed the idea of their going to school like children that they both left. One of them then began to take up an antagonistic position, interfering with our open-air meetings by blowing a bugle and calling the audience away to dance, swearing at our scholars, and making himself obnoxious in many ways. We believe he is conscience-stricken, and kicking against the goads. The other has preserved a quiet but dignified retirement, greeting us kindly enough when we meet him, but not coming near our meetings. We are praying for both of them. Their names are Scotchman and Lougone. Perhaps some of your readers will join us in keeping their names before the Throne.

Frequently on Wednesday evenings we have visits and addresses from the sisters working in the South African General Mission. The Lord has been very good to us. We engaged two native evangelists, who have secular avocations, to assist us on the Lord's day, and they brought with them two others, who agreed to work without remuneration. We engaged another from Pietermaritzburg as teacher in our school and as evangelist, and amongst our own congregation found two men who are devoted workers and fairly ready speakers. Four of our men are from the Free Church of Scotland Mission in Natal. One comes from Umsinga (Natal) Lutheran Church, and another from the Moravian Mission, near Umtata, Pondoland—a happy, practical proof of the possibility of working harmoniously on an undenominational basis. The consequence of this blessed influx of helpers is that on the Lord's day we now hold services in the compounds of the Salisbury, Jubilee, and Village Main Reef Companies, besides four indoor and four open-air services in the City and Suburban Compound, and have two evangelists going from room to room and having personal dealing with those who will not come to the services.

On June 1 we went over to Pretoria to give evidence before a Special Commission appointed to revise the law regulating the sale of alcoholic liquors. Ministers from the Dutch Reformed Presbyterian and Wesleyan Churches gave evidence, and besought, amongst other amendments of the law, the abolition of roadside and bottle-store licences, total prohibition to natives, and the fixing of a maximum number of licences for Europeans in towns calculated upon a proportion of one licensed house to every five hundred adults. The chairman of the Chamber of Mines was also there, and the secretary of the Association of Mines, and a contingent representing the licensed victuallers. This Commission presents its report to the Volksraad. The Dutch Reformed Church sent a very representative deputation to interview the members of the Raad on the question, and were very pleased with their reception. We are, therefore, hopeful of some practical result.

Last Sunday we announced that we proposed forming a class for instruction of those desiring baptism, and so gave those who wished to follow Jesus fully (renouncing all heathen customs and making a full surrender) a week to search their hearts before they hand in their names. One young man, a pupil of Robert Mashaba (the Wesleyan native preacher deported by the Portuguese), stayed and expressed a desired to be baptized, but questioned whether, being a Wesleyan, his church would then recognise him as a member. We soon solved that difficulty for him by offering to give him a letter of commendation to the Wesleyan minister here asking him to baptize him.

At our Wednesday-evening service we asked three of the native evangelists to relate the story of their conversion to the audience. I give here the substance of one of the testimonies, feeling sure it will be of the deepest interest to all who are interested in missions to the heathen, showing as they do the absence of conviction of sin, the blindness and indifference of the untutored savage, the value of a stray word, and the great influence of a settled attendance at school in leading up to conversion. Joshua Nahlova, our teacher and evangelist, a fine earnest, consistent Christian, said:—

I was born in the South African Republic, and belonged to the tribe of Ramaplan, residing at Makapau's Poort, near Pietermaritzburg. Rev. Mr. Hofmeyr had a station at Maltitje's, not far away, and was suffering much persecution by the Boers. When I was a lad of about sixteen, living like a wild animal without thought or care for the future, I was travelling with my Dutch master's wagons. The wagons being outspanned and the cattle grazing, I was attracted by the sound of a bell not far away, so being curious I went to see what it meant. I saw natives going into a little house, so went up and listened at the open door. The preacher was a native evangelist from Mr. Hofmeyr's, and he was talking about a woman who, because of disobedience to God, had been turned into a pillar of salt. I had never heard of such a strange thing in my life, and yet the preacher spoke of it as fact, and seemed sincere. Well, I could not get this out of my mind; wherever I went I kept thinking it over.

Shortly after this I went down to Natal with the wagon of a Portuguese trader, who was taking a load of ivory down, and in Maritzburg I met some natives from our part of the country who were working there. They persuaded me to stay and earn settled wages, and I heard that, being in a British colony, my master could not compel me to return with him. When we had gone about ten miles on our return journey I deserted and returned to Maritzburg, where I entered into service. One Sunday, as I was going along the street, a gentleman called me, and, pointing to his school close by, said that services were held there for Sesuto-speaking natives, and that I would be welcome. It was Rev. Allison. Thinking I might hear more about the pillar of salt, I went, became interested, and the next night went to the school. At this time a work of grace was going on in the hearts of many in the school, and by Mr. Allison's advice parties of us used to go across the river into the park at night after school and hold prayer meetings in the open. They taught me to pray, but for nearly two years my prayers were a mere form. Then conviction of sin began to fasten on my soul. I got more and more miserable. When I told my minister he said, "Keep on praying, and the light will come"; and so it did. Slowly, but certainly, the assurance came that my sins were pardoned, and that I was accepted as a child of God. I was baptized in or about the year 1870.

Our school is prospering, although the attendance is not large. Still, there are forty to care for and instruct in the Master's name—a splendid trust! We are now waiting on the Lord to open fresh doors, for more workers are on the way. Brethren, pray for us!

Notes from South Africa.

THE Wesleyans of the Colony are now paying added attention to evangelistic work amongst the coloured people, and an encouraging evidence of the success attained was presented at the last quarterly meeting, when Mr. S. Magan from Thaba Nchu, and Mr. J. Monabali, from Qumbu, two coloured men, were received as fully accredited local preachers. Three other coloured converts were placed on trial as preachers.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse sails to England by the Dunottar Castle on July 22. His visit has been greatly blessed, and the welcome which he has received, ought to encourage other earnest preachers to run over the sea to this delightful country, for the purpose of giving the churches here a helping hand.

The Metropolitan of Cape Colony has returned from a prolonged tour throughout the Colony. His visit has resulted in a quickening of spiritual life.

The efforts to suppress the risings of the natives in Mashonaland and Matabeleland drag on wearily. Day by day fresh horrors come to us over the telegraphic lines. Christian people, both here and in England, may well pray for the time when these horrible butcheries will cease, and usher in a period of peace and concord amongst all classes of people, both black and white.

Among the passengers for England by the Pembroke Castle are Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Silmer and Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Egmines, who for several years have been engaged in mission work in Madagascar. When the French occupation took place, they, with a band of refugees, were ordered by the invaders to proceed to Tamatave from the interior, and leave the country. The returning party spent a few days in Cape Town. Cape Town, July 8.

Troubles in Madagascar.

I have a class for some of the French soldiers who are established in our town, as many as care to come, about twenty-four in all, out of forty. Sometimes the officer in charge comes, when he is not prevented by other occupation. The class is nominally for teaching them Malagasy, and I do this, of course. But our chief text-book is the Gospel of Luke, of which we have copies both in French and Malagasy. They read from the latter, and we talk about it in French. Sometimes one gets a little talk with one and another of the men, all of whom are quite young fellows. My mother-heart goes out to the lads in this far country, with the hard work they do and the hard life they have to lead. So far they have behaved very well, and remain in favour with the people. They have not been here a fortnight yet, however, and may change, but it is to help to keep them in good ways that I am trying to gain their friendship and confidence.

It is a very sad time for the Malagasy Christians, especially the country preachers, teachers and evangelists, now. They are the special objects of hatred and persecution by the insurgents, and many have had to flee for their lives; one young teacher in this district, a faithful Christian, gave up his life rather than deny Christ. The ruffians first shot and then beheaded him, and refused to let his body be given to his friends for burial.

Several evangelists have had their property looted and their houses burned either by the insurgents or by the soldiers sent out to quell the rebellion. But for the presence of the garrison it would be very dangerous for us to remain in our houses at all. Even as it is, we have to take special precautions, at night in particular, to be ready for any sudden attack in the dark. In case of any alarm the soldiers would hasten down to our assistance at once.

But I am more anxious for the natives than for ourselves, especially for those placed in responsible positions by the Government. The native governor of Ambohimanga is between two fires. If he does his duty and reports persons whom he has reason to suspect, he earns the hatred of his own countrymen. If he refrains from so doing, he endangers his head to the French. I have to do all the interpreting between him and the officer here. It is rumoured that our present resident-general is to be removed and a military man sent in his place. He is accused of being too kind to the natives and also to the English, and we hear that a representation was sent to the President of the Republic, signed by all the French citizens in Antananarivo, requesting his withdrawal. It may be that under present circumstances a military man may suit the position better. You see how much we need the prayers of friends at home.

DEAR SIRS,—At present we have a very troublesome time out here. The people are rebelling against the French in several places and murdering many Europeans. It is not only a rebellion against the French authorities, but also a rising against Christianity. The old idols are restored, the churches burned, and missionaries, as well as their faithful adherents, persecuted and killed. Churches and school-houses are burned, Bibles and other books destroyed.

Our Mission in the North Betsileo has had a very severe loss. One of our best stations has been altogether destroyed, and at another, Antsirabe, many valuable houses have been ruined. The station that has been ruined is called Toharano. All the churches belonging to those stations with three or four exceptions (altogether seventy-five) have been burned. At Antsirabe, we had a hospital, a sanatorium, and a leper home, with 300 lepers in about sixty houses. In the leper village there was also a church and a little hospital. All these buildings, as well as the doctor's dwelling-house, have been destroyed.

By God's great mercy all our missionaries and their families have been saved from a cruel death. But for three days and two nights two missionaries, sixteen ladies, and nine children belonging to the Mission were in the greatest danger, besieged by many thousands of cruel men, who thirsted after their blood. All these friends were together in the mission-house at Antsirabe, along with four Frenchmen and some native militia. The four Frenchmen were the means of saving their lives. In the last moment the resident and the governor-general came and saved them all. Terrible destruction has been done. The Mission has lost property worth £5000 to £6000. In those terrible two days, when we thought our friends at Antsirabe were burned alive, it was difficult to keep faith and hope. But the sympathy shown us by all, not least by your countrymen, was a great consolation.—Yours very truly, CHR. BORCHGREVINK.

By A STUDENT VOLUNTEER.

THE fourth annual Students' Conference was held again at Keswick this year from July 21 to 27. Last year the conference followed close upon the Keswick Convention. This time it was decided for various reasons to hold the Conference in the week immediately preceding the Convention. Some objected to this arrangement on the ground that the great spiritual impetus given by the Convention meetings would be lost. This difficulty, however, was met by devoting the opening days of the Convention entirely to spiritual work; and those who were privileged to be present at the meetings on the Tuesday and Wednesday, and who listened to the powerful and searching appeals for a holier walk with God, and a more entire consecration, felt that the Holy Spirit was in our midst, and that He was preparing hearts and minds for the work of the Conference.

The great International Congress held at Liverpool in the opening days of the present year affected more or less the gathering at Keswick. Many students who could not attend both conferences decided in favour of Liverpool. Still the numbers who assembled at the meetings in the Victoria Hall showed a substantial increase on the previous year. Including men and women, the number amounted to some 230. Of these the men counted 150 and the women eighty. The men again lived under canvas. The spot chosen for the camp was "The Heads," a pretty eminence off the Lake Road, and commanding a fine view of the Derwentwater and Keswick on the one hand, and of Skiddaw on the other. Here about a score of tents were pitched, meals were served in a large central marquee on the grounds; and, although the weather proved broken, tent life on the whole was fairly comfortable and decidedly enjoyable.

The meetings were held, for the most part, in the Victoria Hall. Various maps and diagrams were placed around the walls, representing the claims of foreign missions. Their testimony was irresistible. On the platform was a large beam and scales. At the top were the words

"MISSIONARY JOTTINGS."

The observer saw at a glance that the scale to the left "kicked the beam," and on coming nearer the cause was apparent, for in the right scale were set down the sums spent on the various indulgences, amusements, etc., in Great Britain, as over against the amount given for missions. The figures may prove a revelation to some. There is annually expended on

Hunting.....	9,000,000	Cricket & football	£ 3,750,000
Angling & shooting	10,000,000	Yachting, boating,
Racing.....	11,000,000	and swimming	1,750,000
Tobacco.....	17,000,000	Golf and cycling	3,500,000
Army & Navy ..	36,000,000	London theatres	1,500,000
Diamonds.....	3,000,000	Drink.....	140,000,000
Feathers for hats	1,000,000	Hoarded.....	240,000,000

So much for the scale to the right. When over against this one saw set down a paltry £1,300,000 as representing the amount contributed by Great Britain to missions, one felt disposed to cry "shame" on our British Christianity that is annually expending so much upon self and so little upon the cause of Christ among the eight hundred millions of heathen who have never heard the Gospel.

The speakers included Revs. Canon Taylor Smith (Sierra Leone), J. Hudson Taylor (China), E. A. Stuart (London), G. H. C. Macgregor (London), Professor Laidlaw (Edinburgh), Mr. Eugene Stock (C.M.S.), The Misses Gollock (C.M.S.), Mr. D. A. Black (Belfast Y.M.C.A.), and Mr. G. L. Pilkington (Uganda). Canon Taylor Smith addressed the opening meeting on Tuesday. He also spoke several times during the Conference. He was constantly with the students in camp, visited the tents at night to give a parting word of help and cheer, was always accessible to help with spiritual difficulties and give words of counsel, and his work was ever in the power of the Spirit. Many hearts are profoundly grateful to God for the help He has given them through his honoured servant.

The keynote of the opening meeting is found in the Lord's words to Gideon, Judges vi. 14, 16: "Go in this thy might. Surely I will be with thee." Here we have the command and the promise combined. God's commands are God's enablings. Willingness and obedience are the secret of success. Failure and suffering follow sin. God has linked suffering to sin to teach men to avoid sin. We must have humility and faith to be used of God. God tells us to go, speak, act, be not afraid—"Lo, I am with you always." Faithful at Jerusalem, we will have our operations extended to Judæa, from Judæa to Samaria, and from Samaria to the whole world.

On Wednesday Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, Miss G. A. Gollock, and Mr. Gairdner, of Oxford University, spoke in the morning on the necessity of casting out self and a fuller acceptance of Christ. Revs. E. A. Stuart and J. Hudson Taylor and Mr. Williamson (of Edinburgh University) followed on the same lines in the evening. The addresses were all most searching and helpful, and one and all felt that the Spirit was working mightily in the Conference. On Wednesday morning the subject of "INDIVIDUAL BIBLE STUDY" was taken up. The opening address was delivered by Mr. Eugene Stock. Miss G. A. Gollock and Rev. E. A. Stuart followed. Mr. Stock's address was most helpful. He threw out a number of invaluable suggestions. He pointed out that the end of all the controversies about the Bible for the past eighteen hundred years has left the Bible in a stronger position than ever. Rev. E. A. Stuart emphasised the fact that we should study the Bible for ourselves as well as for others. It is a mistake to study it only with the object of teaching. We need to be taught ourselves before we can help others. Keep both departments separate. A plan he found helpful was to transfer whatever he found most helpful in the daily portion to a piece of paper, which he placed on his inkstand as "a morsel of honey" for his soul for that day. He also advised that, while the Bible must be studied as a whole, it is well to make a hobby of some particular book. Miss Gollock, who spoke with great force and directness, gave an account of the "Evolution of her Bible." She first read regularly but indifferently. Regularity combined with indifference she found of little use. Next, she read interrogatively, then sceptically. Finally, she found her Bible reduced to two chapters, viz., Rom. xiv. and John xiv. After a time Jesus spoke to her soul. She began to read affirmatively, and the Bible from cover to cover soon became hers. She began by putting the Book into the witness box, but now the Book put her there, when it taught her the truth about herself.

The next subject discussed was the "Freshmen's Campaign." A word of explanation is demanded by the title. A number of Freshmen come to our universities at the opening of each winter session. It is important to lay hold of them at this time, if possible, for Christ. If unconverted, they may be won to Him; if Christians, their best efforts are needed for the Christian unions in the different universities. This work, if done at all, must be done at once. The devil has his agents in our universities; they are always busy among the Freshmen, and it is all-important that the young men be laid hold of, if possible, in the first week. To do this, a special effort is required. Suggestions as to the best way of making this effort were given by delegates from the various universities.

"Bible Circles" and the "Educational Programme" also occupied a prominent place in the deliberations of the Conference. The "Bible Circle" consists of a group of eight or nine students, who meet weekly or fortnightly for the systematic study of the Word of God. The advantages derived from such systematic study are manifold. It increases our knowledge of the Bible and prepares us for personal dealing with the unsaved. The Bible Circle proves a mart for the interchange of knowledge and of spiritual experiences; it develops system and encourages private study.

The educational programme has for its object the systematic study of missions. At the Liverpool Conference the Student Volunteer Union adopted for its motto, "The Evangelisation of the World in this Generation." Humanly speaking, the task seems impossible; but with God all things are possible, and in adopting this motto another was understood, viz., "In God we Trust." To get an intelligent grasp of the work undertaken is of the first importance, and it is for this object that the educational programme has been set forth. A special secretary has been appointed for the work, and considerable progress can be already recorded. The annual reports of the

and the Student Volunteer Missionary Union were most encouraging. The former stated that there are now in Great Britain sixty-two College Christian Unions, thirty-two formed exclusively of men and twenty-three of women, and five mixed. These represent an aggregate membership of over 1800, of whom not less than 670 have joined this year, and 870 women, 320 of whom have joined this year. Spiritual results are always difficult to tabulate, but one university has a record of twenty-four conversions to Christ through personal work, while there "are evidences of a larger and more unselfish spirit of prayer, a more faithful study of the Bible, a more enduring missionary interest, and a deeper longing for true holiness and spiritual power."

Among the special features of the report might be mentioned the remarkable development of the work among the women's colleges, a development far in excess of that among the men's; and an appeal for co-operation in the work of the Y.M.C.A., wherever and whenever possible, by joining the membership, assisting in evangelistic services, and by commending the secretariat of the association at home and abroad to students as their life work. The distinction between the British College Christian Union and the Student Volunteer Missionary Union is also emphasised. "The Student Volunteer Missionary Union," says the report, "represents a movement on the part of students for Foreign Missions, appealing necessarily to those who already profess faith in Christ, while the B.C.C.U. seeks to widen and deepen the Christian forces at work in the colleges at home, along the lines of prayer, Bible study, and evangelistic effort." The report shows progress all along the line. Since the Liverpool Conference in January, 92 men and 38 women have signed the "Volunteer Declaration." These, with the sixty-seven who signed during the latter half of 1895, bring the total number who have volunteered for Foreign Missions during the year up to 195. Since the foundation of the Union in 1892, 1068 members have joined. Of these 228 have gone abroad, sixty have renounced, and eight have died. The Union has now entered ninety-three colleges. The London offices have had to be enlarged and the staff increased. The educational department has demanded the services of a special secretary. The Word has been carried to the Continent, and Unions have been established in Germany, Scandinavia, Switzerland, and France. The report stated:—"In conclusion, we believe that the most prominent lesson of the year has been the manifestation of the power of prayer. The abundant answers, surprising our faithless hearts, have been at once cause for humbling as well as praise. We would urge on all volunteers the earnest study of the principles of prevailing prayer, and the cultivation of a deeper prayer-life."

One other department of the work of the Conference demands special attention, that among the Theological Colleges. There are seventy such colleges in Great Britain. At last year's Conference it was decided to make an effort to bring them into line with the Student Movement, with the result that at least twelve of the most important of them are now in definite connection with the British College Christian Union. This is progress, but greater things are hoped for, and a travelling secretary was appointed at this Conference specially to look to this department of the work.

The closing meeting was held at the Pavilion on Sunday night. It was a solemn consecration meeting. Addresses were delivered by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Mr. Anderson (general secretary for the British College Christian Union), and Miss G. A. Gollock. It was a time of deep heart-searching, and of much blessing to many present. A united communion service at Crosthwaite Church, on Monday morning at half-past seven, with a parting word of help and counsel from Canon Taylor Smith, brought the Conference to a close.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 9.

"HIS HEART WAS LIFTED UP IN THE WAYS OF THE LORD."—2 Chron. xvii. 6.

SURSUM corda! Lift up your hearts! How beautiful is this ejaculation in the Communion Service of the Church of England, and the response, "We lift them up unto the Lord." I never hear it without the thrill of a holy impulse passing through me. It is possible, and it is meet and right, to lift up our hearts from the sordid cares and pressing responsibilities of daily life, into the calm, serene presence of God our Father.

Lift up your heart to God, as a child its face to be kissed. Lift it up free from mistrust and sinful stain, and unkind feeling towards any. Lift it up in holy joy and aspiration. Lift it up as a censor filled with the hot coals, from which sweet fragrance exhales. And God will bend down to lift it higher, and fill it with his peace and joy and purity.

In hours of depression look up, be lifted, Sursum corda! When the foe is pressing you most severely, look up, your redemption draweth nigh. When the river has to be crossed, when the last farewell must be said, when the flesh fails, let your mind and heart thither ascend, and there continually dwell where Jesus has entered as your Forerunner.

If you would lift up your heart, you must be in the ways of the Lord, as the good Jehoshaphat. You must seek the Lord God, and walk in his commandments. You must take away the high places and groves of idolatry and impurity. Beware of the world's birdlime! Shake yourself from the bands and bonds that would detain you. Jesus says, "Look unto Me and be lightened."

MONDAY, August 10.

"THERE IS YET ONE MAN BY WHOM WE MAY INQUIRE OF THE LORD, BUT I HATE HIM, FOR HE NEVER PROPHESIETH GOOD UNTO ME, BUT ALWAYS EVIL."—2 Chron. xviii. 7.

This was a very naïve confession. Of course, Micaiah could not speak good of Ahab, whose life was diametrically opposed to all that was God-like and holy. Micaiah had no animosity towards the king of Israel; it was not a personal matter with him. He simply read from the page of the future as God opened it to his eyes, and in which the outworking of the king's evil life was written in gloomy characters. It was as absurd to hate him because he read such dark lessons from the inevitable future, as for the Dervishes to crucify their scout who recently brought them the tidings of their defeat at Firkeh.

The Bible, the pastor, the whole collection of Christians, are hated by worldlings for the same reason, because they cannot speak hopefully of their future. It is as though a card-playing crew were to hate the watchman who told them that the course of their vessel was straight for the surf and rocks of the shore. If men will persist in violating God's law, in breaking through the hedge of thorns, and in pursuing their own wild ways, they cannot possibly expect the blessedness of the Beatitudes. However, their hatred against those who warn them is really directed towards God. They are indignant that they cannot have their way; their proud spirit would like to overturn the very order of the universe rather than that they should be thwarted. They cannot endure the contrast between God's children and themselves. Do not be surprised if the world hate you. It shows that you are not of the world, even as your Master was not.

TUESDAY, August 11.

"SHOULDEST THOU HELP THE UNGODLY, AND LOVE THEM THAT HATE THE LORD? THEREFORE IS WRATH UPON THEE FROM BEFORE THE LORD."—2 Chron. xix. 2.

This looks back to xviii. 1, where we learn that Jehoshaphat, though he had riches and honour in abundance, joined affinity with Ahab. Riches and abundance are dangerous things. They usually weaken our character, and incline us to worldly alliances, and it was under their subtle and pernicious influences that Jehoshaphat fell a victim. Ah! what a fall it was to hear him saying, "I am as thou art, and my people as thy people." Well might Jehu take up the rôle which his father had filled before Asa, and protest. But let us seriously question whether, though there are good things found in us, we may not be falling into the same mistake, and sin. Are there not ways in which we say to men of the world, I am as thou art.

There is a great tendency in the present day to boast in the closeness with which we can approach the world without injury. We join in the social life, read the same books, go to the same amusements, talk of the same themes, and it is almost impossible in a drawing-room to tell the difference between the Jehoshaphats and the Ahabs. So also, in our methods of doing good. The real difficulty lies away back in our want of engagedness with Christ. It is of little use to find fault with the outward, as long as the heart is wayward. Love to the Lord Jesus is our only safeguard. Personal attachment to Christ would draw us away from this close identification with the world. May we learn what it is to be crucified with Him, for then the world will be crucified to us, and we unto the world.

WEDNESDAY, August 12.

"HE APPOINTED SINGERS UNTO THE LORD, AND THAT SHOULD PRAISE THE BEAUTY OF HOLINESS, AS THEY WENT OUT BEFORE THE ARMY."—2 Chron. xx. 21.

Dost thou praise the beauty of holiness? Is holiness beautiful to thee? Art thou in love with it as it is presented in the glorious Lord? Canst thou turn from the noise and anxiety of life's battle to dwell on the loveliness of God and of the devout life, and to praise Him whose mercy endureth for ever? It is a rare accomplishment. In each of us there should be the priest-side of character as well as the warrior: the love for what is beautiful in holiness as well as for the strong and active in service.

But the special characteristic of this battle was that the good king put the singers in the forefront of the army, and praised for a victory which was only assured to him by faith. Yet so sure was he of it, that he could praise before he entered into the battle. There is much to help us here in our daily combat for God and truth. Let us fill the morning hour with holy song, in the heart, if not with the voice: let a psalm or hymn be part of the daily reading: let there be the confidence that God is going to bless, which cannot restrain its jubilant expression. So in all prayer, wait on God till you feel that you can praise Him for what you have asked Him to bestow.

When they began to praise, the Lord did all the rest. Before the onset of his Divine reinforcements the enemy fled. His people had but to gather spoil, and then the praise which had anticipated the battle was consummated as they returned, in the valley of blessing.

I have entered the valley of blessing so sweet:
And Jesus abides with me there.

THURSDAY, August 13.

"THE SAME TIME ALSO DID LIBNAH REVOLT FROM UNDER HIS HAND, BECAUSE HE HAD FORSAKEN THE LORD GOD OF HIS FATHERS."—2 Chron. xxi. 10.

As long as the kings of Judah remained true to their allegiance to God they were able to keep in subjection the surrounding nations, but just so soon as they revolted from God these peoples revolted from them. It was as though power descended into them from the source of all power; and when the link between themselves and God was broken, that between them and their subordinates was broken also.

This applies very widely: To our passions. If they master you, rebelling against and revolting from your hand, it is because there is some flaw in your consecration, and you have forsaken to some extent the Lord God.

To our families. When the heads of a home are in perfect unity with each other and God, they may generally expect that their children will grow up submissive and obedient. Their authority will be recognised and honoured. Revolt in the home indicates very often some lapse in obedience and loyalty to God.

To our influence over men. When the soul is in blessed fellowship with God, power flows into it from Him, before which strongholds are overthrown. "I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord," said the prophet. "I am a man under authority, and have soldiers under me," said the centurion.

Give yourself entirely to Jesus. Obey Him absolutely; receive by faith from Him living power and grace; be a channel through which He may pour Himself; and thou wilt find that men and things will fall into line at thy bidding, and thou shalt receive power.

FRIDAY, August 14.

"HID IN THE HOUSE OF GOD."—2 Chron. xxii. 12.

Safe from Athaliah, who would have ruthlessly destroyed him if she had had an inkling of his existence, the young Joash was reared beneath the care of Jehoiada and his wife within the precincts of the house of God. He was hidden in the secret place of the Most High, and abode under the shadow of the Almighty.

There let us also live. Let us know what it is to dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of our life, and all this day. Let us cultivate the life which is hid with Christ in God.

It is well often to remind ourselves that we are in God, and that the film of his envying presence is about us like a wall of thick-ribbed steel. We are in Him as the jewel in the casket, as the chick under the feathers of the hen, as the child in the warm embrace of its mother. And so long as we stay there we are invulnerable. Therefore our great enemy is continually endeavouring to allure us into the open; he knows he can do as he likes with us, if only he can induce us to venture beyond our hiding-place. Therefore, beware of any temptation to worry, to amass this world's goods, or to seek the indulgence of appetite; it is by such lures and baits that Satan seduces unwary souls from their safe hiding. Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.

Oh, the delights of a life hidden with Christ in God! The rarest visions, the fairest fellowship, the most entrancing joys, the most confident outlook on life and the hereafter, are the accompaniments of such a residence. The altar of incense, the laver of daily cleansing, the light of the Shekinah, the holy psalm and song, the great altar of sacrifice, are familiar objects to the hidden soul.

Free from a world of grief and sin,
With God eternally shut in.

SATURDAY, August 15.

"AND ALL THE PEOPLE OF THE LAND REJOICED; AND THE CITY WAS QUIET, AFTER THAT THEY HAD SLAIN ATHALIAH WITH THE SWORD."—2 Chron. xxiii. 21.

This was a great revolution, admirably planned and carried into effect. It was intolerable that such a woman as Athaliah should desecrate the throne and temple. Jehoiada, by his prudence and courage, deserved well of the entire nation in ridding the world of her presence. No half measures would have availed to meet the case.

There are times in every life when strong and strenuous action is inevitable if the cause of God is to be promoted and saved. In many of us there is a willingness to tolerate evil, rather than arouse ourselves to grasp it with a firm hand, and, if needs be, drag it up by its roots. Be strong, yea be strong, is an injunction that has to be emphasised even to men who are greatly beloved. The easiest thing for Jehoiada would have been to shut himself up in the temple, confining himself to his holy duties, and leaving things to take their course. The noblest thing was to come forth, and boldly confront the rampant evil of his time. So God's call rings out for helpers in the great fight against sin. Its notes penetrate into the retirement of Christian homes, to noble women and devoted men, demanding that they should come forth to resist impurity, the love of strong drink, the strong tendency towards extravagance, luxury, and waste. The world is full of Athaliahs, and it does not become the Jehoiadas to remain at their holy rites and services if there is a paramount need for action in the world's battlefield, in the strife against wrong.

A Talk About Bells.

DEAR CHILDREN.—The commonest objects of life often teach us some of the most useful lessons. I want you for a little while to consider the subject of Bells, and as we recall them, of all shapes, sizes and tones, put to all sorts of uses, let us try and learn the lessons they teach. We may hear the merry peal of the wedding feast; the call to service on the Sabbath day; the musical tinkle on the mountain side, or the solemn tones as Big Ben strikes out the hour. Whichever it be, let us remember

1. Though all bells may have capabilities for service; if cracked, there is but a muffled sound in place of a ringing note, and the bell is practically useless; it cannot answer the purpose for which it has been made. What can be done? Ere it can be fit for service it must be made again, remelted, remoulded. Now, just like the bells, you and I have been made capable of some service; it is the very purpose for which God has created us (see Eph. ii. 10); but I am sorry to add God's work has been spoiled; there is a flaw somewhere in our lives; we are marred through sin (Rom. iii. 23), and not one can be used in the service of Christ until born again of his Spirit (John iii. 7).

2. The sound of a bell is deadened and nullified if it is in contact with other objects. Touch it while it is ringing, and the sound is lost. Are you seeking as a follower of Jesus to have the true Christian ring in your lives? Remember, then, that contact with anything or anyone contrary to Christ in the world (bad companions, bad books, worldly amusements, or bad habits), will spoil your testimony for Christ, and deaden your Christian lives.

3. Bells may be of different metals—gold, silver, iron, copper, etc.; but each may be useful, the commonest often used most. You and I may differ from each other in position. We may not all be kings and queens, lords and ladies, but we may all be useful to the great Master—"vessels unto honour" (see 2 Tim. ii. 20, 21), and remember He will be most likely to use those that lie nearest to his hand, and that there will be no fear of spoiling.

4. Bells are of different sizes, from the great Big Ben before mentioned to the little sleigh-bell, yet each has its work to do. Do not, therefore, think you must be big or great before the Master can use you. Remember what the Psalmist says; "Both young men and maidens, old men and children, let them praise the name of the Lord" (Ps. cxlviii. 12, 13), and let your little tinkle of praise be heard in the chorus of notes.

5. Bells are of different tones, from the common door-bell tone to the musical peal, chosen according to what is required. Remember the simple and rough tones, as well as the cultivated and intellectual ones, are necessary to sound out the Gospel message, and to some ears the simple child-like tones are the sweetest of all (1 Cor. xii. 4-7).

6. Bells are used for different services according to metal, size, and sound. The goat-bell would not do for the bell-ringer, or the bell-ringer's bell for the goat. Each in its own place. Now, remember God has chosen you to ring in a certain place, and do not try to fill any other, or it will be to fail. Your voice will not sound like the great preacher's or the saint's nearing the gates of heaven, but God has a chosen corner for you to sound in, and let it be heard there (Acts ix. 15).

Now I want you to find out what is said about bells in Exodus and Zechariah. In the one place they are mentioned as the decoration of the high priest's robe. A golden bell and a pomegranate were to be on the hem alternately round about, and why? Because, when Aaron went to minister before the Lord, his sound should "be heard." If you have begun to serve the Lord, do others know it? Is the golden bell of testimony, and the pomegranate of fruitfulness, heard and seen in all your actions?

In the second place, we find it said there shall be written upon the bells of the horses, "Holiness unto the Lord." Will you let this be written across your lives? Will you dare to let everybody see that you are "separated" for God's service only, and keep in that precious fountain of Christ's blood, open for sin and for uncleanness, which alone can cleanse and preserve you from the defilement and sin of the world? If ye are Christ's, remember "the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." I should like to have a little talk with you about "the Gospel bells," but perhaps another time your kind editor may give me space for that. And now, dear children, when you hear the bells ring, just listen to the lessons they teach, and may your lives, whatever they be, ring true to Christ.—This is the prayer of your loving friend,

One Little Injun.

Two new girls have recently come into our home at Nuyaka. The latest arrival was one of the wildest "little Injuns" whom we have received for some time. The first thing needful for this child was a bath, and when given the soap, she did not know what it was for. After she was dressed, however, she smoothed down her pretty pink apron and laughed with pleasure at the change in her appearance. On sitting down to the table she took her knife and fork into her lap and looked at them wonderingly. Although she could speak no English when she came to school, the girls taught her a Bible verse, which she said perfectly at our cottage prayer-meeting the next Friday evening after her arrival. Indian children are very thoughtful of one another, and are careful to tell new pupils how they must act at the table, during prayers, in Sunday-school, and other places. Our desire for this poor, ignorant child is that she may early receive the love of God into her heart, that it, too, may be cleansed and made new.

It is sometimes hard to get these people to know that the Bible lessons are for them; so after hearing one of the sermons about how to see things to do for God, I was much pleased to know that one girl, who had always been very careless about her work, had determined to sweep carefully under tables, wood boxes, etc.

A Hint.

A red glass makes everything seen through it red,
While blue glass turns everything blue;
So when everyone seems to you selfish or cross,
Perhaps the real fault is in you!

In Genesis xxxvii., xxxix., xl.—

Lo, my sheaf rose and stood upright.
They hated him yet the more.
The child is not; and I, whither shall I go?
He was a prosperous man.
They dreamed a dream both of them.

Think on me when it shall be well with these.

Orphanage in Buenos Ayres.

We thank God that there is now a Protestant Orphanage and Children's Home out here. In 1894 in dependence on the Lord, a house was taken in which to shelter and care for deserted and neglected children. I do thank Him for the testimony this Home is to the fact that He can send all that is needed for carrying on his work. We have now twenty-eight children in the Home, and the Good Shepherd is revealing Himself to many of them, and I am looking forward to the future, when from this Orphanage many shall go forth to be burning and shining lights for Him in this land. We have various nationalities represented in the Home—Spanish, Italian, English, Argentine, Danish, Polish, and Basque. Your readers can praise the Lord with us for his goodness, and we shall value prayer for his rich blessing to rest upon our efforts on behalf of these dear little helpless ones.—Very truly yours in his happy service,

Dr. Barnardo's Emigrants.—The second party of emigrants for the current year, consisting of 150 boys and 100 girls, left St. Pancras station on Thursday, at 10.15 a.m. for Liverpool, en route to Canada. Including these, 456 youngsters have this year been sent out from Dr. Barnardo's Homes to the Dominion; 8257 have in all gone forth, and of these 98 per cent. have been successful. Last week's party sailed from Liverpool in the Dominion liner Scotsman. Prayer is desired for their safe keeping on the voyage.

KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 27 to AUGUST 1.

[BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

WHAT IS KESWICK TEACHING?

By DR. ELDER CUMMING.

And they took hold of him (Paul), and brought him into the Areopagus, saying, May we know what this new teaching is, which is spoken by thee? For thou bringest certain strange things to our ears: we would know therefore what these things mean. (Acts xvii. 19, 20, R.V.)

MANY still put the question, all round us, What is the teaching that characterizes these gatherings at Keswick? and the question has not yet received, for many, a definite answer. I am sure that no one comes here for the first time, who has not been to similar conventions before, without being surprised to find that the strain of teaching is by no means what he expected; and I think at the beginning of this Convention it may be a prudent thing to set forth one or two characteristic points of that teaching on which emphasis is laid.

I begin with saying that this is no new doctrine; we have over and over again professed that it is the teaching of the Evangelical Church from the earliest days; that it is the doctrine laid down in the lives of the saints, and plainly written in their experience, which we have been seeking to explain and enforce. I put it to all whether it is conceivable that the mere addresses of the twenty men who appear from time to time on this platform could possibly account for the crowds which come year after year to this and other conventions to hear what is said. These are all men who are heard from week to week in their own places of worship; and yet when we come together to speak the simple truth from God's Word—not with human eloquence or the power and artifice of human words, but with plain and by no means always pleasant statements—thousands come and find the things which they need. How is it? Obviously, it is not the speakers but the words spoken, not the messenger but the messages which are felt to be needed by Christian people at the present day.

LET ME EXPLAIN THREE POINTS

on which the teaching of the Keswick gatherings is specially emphatic. These points touch, first, the process; secondly, the power; and then the extent, of sanctification in the Christian. (1) The Process of Sanctification. What is said about this is the first characteristic of our meetings here. What is that process? For many Christians there is no such thing, because there is no advance. It is an appalling thing; there is hardly anything so in the Christian Church, than the fact that many Christians are not advancing in holiness at all. Is it not true that some are going back, and that the best days they ever spent before God were the days just after their conversion? Others seem to be standing still, very much where they were a few years ago. If they proceed to examine themselves with regard to any one of their ordinary habits—any one of their customary sins, shall I say?—they can hardly tell any difference between five years ago and to-day. And there are many who never seem to expect any special growth in holiness until, perchance, they become old men or women, or come very near to the shadow of death. Is it not appalling that there should be Divine life in the souls of God's people and it should be making apparently no advance or increase at all?

What are these good people trusting to? Some may be trusting to what is called the natural growth of the soul—that just as the tree goes on getting larger and stronger, and the body grows from the child to the boy, and then to the man, so it must be with the soul; in fact, that when once the Divine life has been formed there, growth must take place irrespective of the man himself. Others trust to self-effort, to a diligent use of the means of grace, to watchfulness over their own heart and life, and taking themselves to task ever and again for the coldness of their hearts. And some trust to prayer, but if you narrowly watch such prayers what do you find? That there does not appear to be any ardent expectation of an answer, that the same prayer is presented in substance year after year without any particular variation. If you ask many a Christian what he prayed for this morning, he would not be able to tell you—so little of earnestness and specific desire was there in his prayer! Ask a Christian if he expects an answer to his prayers, and in how many cases the honest and candid reply to the question would be—I am sorry to say that I do not look for that at all. These are the things to which so many Christians are trusting.

What is it that we teach with reference to sanctification? The very first thing is to look out for the hindrances that have been keeping the Christian back. Wherever there has been and is a present coldness, there is a cause for it, and that cause is not in God, that cause is not in the life itself, that cause is in you; and we urge you to begin by bowing on your knees before God and presenting yourself to Him, asking that He may search and try your heart, and if there is anything wrong, anything that has been keeping you back, that God may make that thing known to you. This is a painful exercise, I know; and at the beginning of these conventions, whenever power comes in, there are sad experiences. I speak in the ears of those who have been here year after year, and of those who have been to other conventions; but, also, I must be speaking to many who have not taken in the real situation, and who have, perhaps, never sat down before God and opened up their hearts and invited Him to come in and see what it is that hinders the growth of their souls. When God is honestly asked to do this, the answer is not long in coming; but the process will be very painful to you, enough to make some flee from the place. When God brings from the depths of the heart the mud and mire, the evil and sin that are there, the process becomes so painful that some flee from the presence of God. But, if you would get any blessing whatever from such conventions as this, you must be honest with the Lord, and ask Him to make known to you what it is that has been keeping you back, what are the hindrances in the way of your advance in the ways of the Lord.

The removal of the hindrances makes a mighty change in the condition of the soul. If you take away the barriers of a dam, the water rushes on, and nothing can keep it back. When your hindrance is made known by the Spirit of God, and you put it away, there comes such a flood of the grace of God into your heart that in one hour you grow more in the Divine life than, perhaps, for ten years in bygone days. It is a wonderful and immediate change, and thereafter the growth of the soul goes on through and in faith, and then the operation of that great law, which the Lord Himself promulgated, takes place—"According to your faith it shall be unto you." But so long as the hindrance is there, and so long as you are keeping there a thing that stops the flow of the Divine Grace, it is in vain to say, "I trust God to do so and so": you are not trusting God, but trusting the hindrance which you prefer to the favour of God. The hindrance, however, being taken away, you go on from step to step, and according to your faith is the blessing and the life. That is the characteristic teaching with regard to the progress of sanctification.

Now as to (2) The Power in Sanctification. You know well that this is exactly where the complaint and murmuring of many a Christian comes in. "I cannot make myself holy. Where is the power to be found by me, that shall take me out of this every-day life of mine, and raise me up to the presence of the Lord that I may live in his sight?" A most practical, and solemn, and needful question! We have teaching concerning and our answer is—You will not find that power in man; you will not find it in yourself. What are you against temptation? Have you measured swords with the tempter, and do you know the power of the spirit of evil in your heart? Do you know what it is to stand face to face and foot to foot with the great enemy in some solemn midnight hour? Then, and then only, you know something of the inherent weakness of your heart. And then with regard to those continual mistakes that Christians are making, arising, some of them from ignorance, many of them from haste, and oftentimes from weakness. Who shall guard me from making mistakes in my spiritual life—mistakes which do so much harm to others, and are continually undoing me in my joy before God? Whence shall I get power? God has the power; He has Himself declared that this is so. See Phil. ii. 13, "It is God which worketh in you, both to will and to work, for his good pleasure." God is the power in the will, and the power in the doing. Are we prepared to accept God and put self away? Self is not the power; God is the power. With regard to this teaching, we go on to say that God offers to be an entirely sufficient power for you. He offers to be a sufficient power to sustain and keep and purify his children. Is it not so? See 2 Cor. xii. 9, "My grace is sufficient for thee." But is that true? Are you prepared to take that saying as true in your experience? Are you prepared to sign your name there, and say, "Yes; that is God's word, and I accept it! God's grace is sufficient for me to-day"? You remember that the Lord elsewhere has challenged for Himself the place of Sanctifier. See Exod. xxxi. 13: "I am the Lord God, which doth sanctify you." If you want to know the power that is to make you pure, "I am the Lord that doth sanctify you." Will you hand yourself over to Christ, that He may take you and sanctify you, as He will according to his own process, and in his own time and way? Are you prepared to say, "I put myself in thy hand, Lord Jesus, do with me as Thou wilt"?

What have we to do with regard to this power? We must consent to it, accept it, and trust from step to step. The Apostle tells us, 2 Cor. v. 7, "We walk by faith, not by sight"; so we advance by faith, and not by effort. God is the power, but we must accept God as the power; we must take Him by faith. He is the power for every individual thing—for work, difficulty, temptation, every hour,

Dr. Marshall Randles, PRESIDENT WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

A CHORUS of approval from all quarters has followed the election of Dr. MARSHALL RANDES, Theological Tutor in Didsbury College, as president of the Wesleyan Conference for the current year. A native of Lancashire, most of his life has been spent in the northern half of England, so that his name is not so familiar to those in the south as other leaders of his communion. Among his fellow Wesleyans, however, he almost runs the risk of incurring the woe that is the inheritance of him of whom all men speak well. By universal consent, at any rate, he is admirably fitted both by natural endowment, by his early training, and by ample experience, for the honourable post which he temporarily fills.

Dr. Randles has served his generation in the Wesleyan ministry and in professorial life for more than forty years. When a lad he was definitely led to decision for Christ largely through the influence of the Sunday-school at Accrington which he attended. At the best, Sunday-school work is attended by many difficulties, and it is encouraging when one hears of unmistakable fruit being reaped in that field of Christian endeavour. Mr. Randles' first inclinations were towards a commercial career, and he had made a very promising start in business life when the call of God to the still higher vocation of a preacher was heard and heeded. In 1850 he entered Didsbury College, near Manchester, the same institution as that of which he is now tutor in the department of theology.

His ministerial life began at Grimsby, and in 1854 he was appointed to Montrose, in the North of Scotland. The Methodists are a somewhat feeble folk (numerically, not otherwise) in those regions, and in his two years' pastorate at Montrose the young minister had ample leisure to perfect his mental equipment. His reputation as a solid and able preacher steadily grew, and he was transferred to circuit life in England, being appointed successively to Nottingham, Lincoln, Halifax, Manchester, Altrincham, Bolton, and Leeds. His work as a preacher and pastor in all these places was marked by great spiritual fervour, while as a man he was held in much esteem by all sections of the Church. He filled the office of chairman of the Bolton, Leeds, and Manchester districts in turn, giving earnest thought and attention to the discharge of the duties connected with such oversight. For sixteen years also he has been a member of the Stationing Committee. His long experience of circuit work, and the knowledge gained in other ways of the usages of the Methodist body, have served to qualify him for the highest executive office that that Church has to bestow.

In 1882 Dr. Randles was admitted into that select body known as the "Legal Hundred." Four years later, on the retirement of Dr. Pope, Tutor in Systematic Theology at Didsbury, Dr. Randles was appointed his successor. During his tenure of that responsible post he has had the opportunity and privilege of influencing a large proportion of the young candidates for the Wesleyan ministry. In view of this it is satisfactory to know that Dr. Randles, whilst possessing an open mind to the influx of any fresh light on revealed truth, holds firmly by the well-established doctrines of the faith. He is not led away by the shadowy speculations of destructive critics. His theology has been described as "an attractive combination of the familiar and the fresh." His address to the Conference after his election as president showed clearly the bent of his mind and his firm grasp of Evangelical teaching as commonly understood.

His work as an author has not as yet been very extensive, but what he has published is of a strong and helpful sort. He was the Fernley lecturer four years ago, his subject being the practical one of "The Design and Use of Holy Scripture." His treatise on "The First Principles of the Faith" has been widely read, as also have been essays on the Atonement and on Eternal Punishment. His writings are all in the line of the defence of the faith once delivered to the saints, and to the fulfilment of that task he brings a vigorous and independent mind, as well as qualities of a judicial character:

On the social and ethical side of the Christian life Dr. Randles has also been active. He acts out the belief that the essential principles of Christianity ought to dominate every sphere of human life. A total abstainer from youth, he has been hearty in his adhesion to all temperance reforms that the needs of the time seemed to demand. All his friends will wish for him abundance of health and strength to go through the arduous engagements of his year of presidency, with the assurance that he will use the high opportunity which it affords for the highest welfare of his Church, and for the advancement of the common faith in this age of questioning and of half-hearted belief in the verities of our religion.

Ever-ready Evangelists.—Regarding the work of preaching the Gospel to the heathen, Mr. McCullagh, writing from the Naas river, British Columbia, says:—"It is cause for much thankfulness to note that our native Christians are always ready—not 'weather permitting,' but whether it 'hail, rain, or snow'—to start off any distance at a moment's notice, without giving a thought to their own convenience, and without the slightest remuneration, to preach the Gospel to their ungodly tribesmen. And this readiness has now continued unabated for more than three years. At the beginning I was afraid this zeal would prove evanescent, but, on the contrary, it has developed into a very solid force which can be relied upon. Not infrequently we find a sprinkling of heathen among the congregation on Sundays at Aiyansh, and it is delightful to see how well these are looked after, both spiritually and temporally, by the Christians during the day."

Mr. Müller's Report.

"LOOKING to the Infinitely Rich One for everything." So writes the venerable Geo. Müller on page 17 of the Fifty-seventh Annual Report of the Orphan Houses, just issued. Though this is the fifty-seventh report, it must be noted that it represents the sixty-third year of the existence of the work. Writing in his ninety-first year, Mr. Müller lets his readers know that he is by no means tired of his mode of life or of the principle on which he set out in the work originally.

It is gratifying to find that the financial trials of the year have been small. Mr. Müller says, "During the whole of the past year, all the needed pecuniary supplies the Lord has been pleased to give. So that in this respect, our trials have been very small in comparison with what they have often been in former years." The donations, as usual, show the same variety in amount, incident, and locality as in former years. A gentleman farmer sends £43 ls. with the following letter: "Again it is my great privilege to send you a cheque, which, please to use as you think best for the Lord. The amount is the highest price realised this year for one of my sheep at the annual sale, and I have considered it to be the right thing to give to the Lord, each year, the value of the best sheep in the flock."

Speaking of the spiritual results of the work, Mr.

Müller calculates that since the beginning of the school work at least ten thousand children have been brought to a knowledge of the Lord, but he says, "From the earnestness in prayer, given by the Lord, during these sixty-two years, I expect to meet in the glory at last more than ten thousand, and far more than twenty or thirty thousand, though at present I have to wait for this sight and to live by faith."

Concerning himself, Mr. Müller speaks most cheerfully, testifying to the possession of as much vigour of mind as when, seventy-one years ago, he passed a University examination in March, 1825. We are sure every reader of this most interesting and edifying report will pray that at his very advanced age the life of God's beloved servant may still be spared, as well as that of his esteemed colleague, Mr. James Wright.

Homes for Working Boys.

THE report of the Homes for Working Boys in London shows there has been progress in the religious part of the work, and cause for great thankfulness to God, when it is remembered that the great majority of the boys have never known the influence of a Christian home. Besides influential gentlemen like Lord Kinnaird and other members of the committee, who visit the various Homes, a number of old boys have addressed the residents at the services held at the Homes, their earnest words on Bible reading, private prayer, and consecration of life having had great weight with the boys.

During the year the residents of the Homes repaid the committee £4252 towards board and lodging. Contributions from the public were £2416. Many of the boys in the homes are from Industrial and Poor Law Schools; others see the notices of the homes in Lockhart's Cocoa Rooms. So far as the committee can ascertain, the necessity for these Homes is as great as ever, and many very interesting cases received during the year are reported where boys have just at the right moment been saved from degradation and crime. The Homes are for honest boys between the ages of thirteen and seventeen, who are willing and able to work and earn their livelihood.

The treasurer is the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham, Deene House, Putney Hill, S.W.; the secretary, Mr. Wm. Denham, 18, Buckingham-street, Strand.

South India.—A Memorial Hall has been opened at Madras in memory of the late honoured pastor of Zion Church, Rev. W. T. Sathianadhan, and his beloved wife, both of whom are remembered with affection, not only in India, but by many friends in England. The opening ceremony was an occasion of great interest, the Bishop of Madras dedicating the hall to the service of God amid a great gathering of native Christians, and not a few Hindus and Mohammedans.

every moment. That is the secret of the power of sanctification.

The last characteristic with which I deal is (3) The Extent of Sanctification. What is it that we teach on this point? I classify the teaching under four heads: First, that the Christian life ought to be one of victory, and not of defeat—a life of continuous victory, not of common defeat and occasional triumph, but of victory all through. The beginning of that victory is that and we must be overcome by Him. Christ must get the victory in us and over us, until we take the place of the abject slave of the Lord Jesus. In almost every one of the Apostolic Epistles you find the writer calling himself the servant, literally the slave, of the Lord Jesus. And you know that in 2 Cor. ii. 14 (R.V.) Paul speaks of God "which always leadeth us in triumph in Christ." In the A.V. it was "causeth us to triumph." True, He gives us victory, but it is by overcoming us—Christ in me—Christ in us.

In the second place, we teach that God is able to give exceeding abundant grace to every soul. Have you ever paused over that remarkable passage 2 Cor. ix. 8, one of those portions of Holy Writ which, although we learn to repeat them, should not be hastily read so as to lose the significance: "God is able to make all grace abound toward you: that ye, having always all sufficiency in all things, may abound unto every good work"? Every second word seems to be a revelation, at which we stand aghast when we come to grasp it in our minds. "Always having all sufficiency in all things"—not once a year, or on a special occasion, but at all times and in all circumstances. We teach that God is able to do that because He has said it, because He has offered it—because it is in the offer and within the possession of every child of God.

Again (thirdly) we teach, on this head, that God is able perfectly to keep a man. "Now unto Him who is able to keep you from falling." Have you understood that word? In the original the idea is "keep you from stumbling." You know the difference between falling and stumbling. Your horse may stumble, and if you are a practised driver you may prevent it from falling. Stumbling is part of the process of falling, not the completed act. Jude does not say "from falling altogether," but he uses the more

AWFUL WORD, "FROM STUMBLING."

What a keeping is this! If you stumble, I take you to witness it is not God's doing. There never was a stumble that you made in your Christian experience that might not have been avoided. Is it not so? You said a little word yesterday; you were provoked, no doubt. But might you not have avoided that little word? Could God have kept you from that stumbling? Oh, yes! You know what to make of it. You were tempted; you let go your hold; you stumbled and fell. God is able to keep us from stumbling.

Once more (lastly) we teach that God can do for you what He did for Paul. The Apostle was a fallen man like you, suffered under original sin, and was guilty for a time in many ways like you. What did God do for him? Look at 1 Cor. iv. 4 (R.V.). "I know nothing against myself; yet am I not hereby justified: but He that judgeth me is the Lord." There is the extent of the sanctification that we teach; and there is the limitation of the extent, which we also teach. A man's conscience may be clear; like Paul elsewhere, he may exercise himself to have a conscience void of offence toward God and toward man. That does not say he is a perfect man. That does not say that God sees nothing wrong. We are not going to repeat in every second sentence here that we do not teach sinlessness. We say it once for all. But we teach, and God grant we may ever teach, that there is for the Christian a depth, a rich extent of holiness which no man and no woman in this tent has yet seen. The greatest saint of God had no more grace than God offers you, and until you can surpass that greatest saint in the purity of your heart, in the brokenness of your spirit in fellowship with God, not till then need you begin to think—where must I stop in this growth of life Divine?

These then, in the process of sanctification, in the power for sanctification, and in the extent of sanctification, are the characteristic teachings of these gatherings. May God grant that you and I may know them, not by a mere grasp of the intellect, but in the precious experience of our daily lives.

LOSS AND GAIN.

By REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

Look at Phil. iii. 15: "Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded; and if in anything ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you." Perhaps the greatest spiritual phenomenon with which we are made acquainted in God's Word, after the things which concern the person of our blessed Lord, is the spiritual history of the Apostle Paul, and it is a history which no wise or thoughtful person can ever afford to set aside for one moment when he has an opportunity to study it, or can afford to forget when he is seeking to glorify God in his own personal history. It is, perhaps, the most remarkable history of any man found in the whole world after the Lord Jesus Christ, and I humbly think that very few of us have been accustomed to weigh the matter as we might, so as to see what that history has of instruction to ourselves. It is full of instruction in every way; and, while the world is criticising the Christian Church on every side, it fails to realise that there have been exponents of God's truth with whom no one can find fault or easily deal.

St. Paul, before his conversion, was a man who was unquestionably set upon seeking for truth. He was remarkable, not simply through his own person and history; with a power of application which very few Jews possessed, he studied the truth, as God had made it known to the only nation that had ever received a personal revelation of God's most holy will; studied it under the most learned doctors, and had the greatest possible opportunity of becoming acquainted with every detail of that religion; and, moreover, he studied it which has been found in very few instances in ecclesiastical or religious history. He tells us that he excelled in the Jews' religion above all his fellows, that he was determined to find acceptance with God, that he looked upon life as having but one object and purpose, and that was to attain to a condition in which God should be satisfied with him. He could challenge any human being to find a single speck in his personal history. As touching the righteousness which is of the law, he declares that he was "blameless."

Much more might be said of his history before he became a Christian, but one point which I wish you to observe is that all these efforts at finding acceptance before God failed completely to bring to him the smallest personal satisfaction. He laboured and he toiled, but he did it in vain. He toiled as one in the fires, but he came out with the conviction that all the refining under the Jewish law brought him no nearer to God. He had, in fact, a sense of shame and pain and hopelessness before God. Suddenly there came the revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ on the journey to Damascus; and from that moment the man who called forth the admiration of all his fellows, gave himself altogether to another experience. He worked, perhaps as never before, with a determination and purpose without parallel, certainly not exceeded by what he had done in his earlier life, before conversion, and all out of gratitude to the Person who had become to him, as he declared, that righteousness which he had in vain been seeking by conformity to the law of Moses; and to such an extent did he give himself to this new experience that he could glory in the righteousness which was now his, the blessings of his daily portion, the power given for the duties of life, and the certainty of eternal glory. These things are not to be laughed at. If any man is asked to explain the history of St. Paul, he is compelled to allow that the change that came over him was remarkable for anybody; but all the more so, because he explains it as the transfer of his whole being from the position of one that sought to establish his own righteousness into the position of one who had accepted and in receiving it had become a partaker of the very life of the Saviour who bestowed the gift. From that moment St. Paul laboured for that Jesus of Nazareth who had given him the perfect righteousness, and life, and the prospect for all eternity; he laboured for Him as he never did for himself; he laboured with a power that convinced his enemies that there was something in him which they did not possess, and so as to turn disobedient men into servants of the Lord Jesus.

The question is—What can our adversaries make of this most striking illustration or example of the power of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ? They may point to us with a calm contempt of our feebleness, and say there is nothing in the Christianity we exhibit to attract them closely to the Lord Jesus Christ. But if you ask them to study the history of St. Paul, and contemplate him, the learned man, of high social status, excelling his fellows in a variety of ways, who formerly stood forth as the bitterest opponent of the Lord Jesus Christ, but who suddenly turned, and became the humblest and noblest and most spiritually-minded follower of Jesus Christ that could be found on the face of the earth—what will they say to this and to the Gospel which is entrusted to us? Let a remarkable man in our day, a specialist, set forth a system of remedy from a certain form of disease, and champion it against another system, and then let him take up the system of the rival who had practised against him; let him turn and confess that the system of the rival was the only true one, and that his own was without any solid foundation or hope for those who adopted it. What would men say? London would be filled with amazement at the event, and everyone would see what honour had been done to the system at length adopted by a specialist who had had such an experience. That, in a word, is what St. Paul did; as the Jew who sought for righteousness, he turned from the Jews' religion to the Gospel, abandoning altogether a creed on which he had leaned in the past with regard to his hopes of salvation.

Every one of us acknowledges theoretically that St. Paul's case is a marvel, and conveys a bright and brilliant example. "Let as many as be perfect be thus minded; and if in anything ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you." Tell me, as before God, what it is you are asking Him to reveal? What was it that so mightily changed St. Paul, so that his life was one of devotion and wonderful service such as has hardly ever been seen in the history of mankind? It was this—that when St. Paul saw the Lord Jesus Christ, being a man of

he was prepared, as the whole of his career shows, to give up everything to get at God's truth if he could find it. His soul's desires and spiritual requirements were all met in the Lord Jesus Christ, and what he saw he adopted and carried out in every point and power of his life, becoming from that moment a perfectly devoted adherent of the Lord Jesus Christ, such as you and I wish to be, although we have often drawn back in regard to the cost.

Are God's children prepared to take the cost; when the cost has been counted, will they accept the life, which St. Paul did, and yield themselves absolutely to God and do their part in turning the world upside down as he did? Are they, so far as they know their own being, up to the point of their acquaintance with themselves, prepared to count the cost; and when they have counted the cost, are they ready to lay themselves down before God and be whatsoever He would make them by the Holy Ghost, through the revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ? I need not say that the Apostle had to abandon the system of self-righteousness or righteousness through the law. I need not dwell upon the effects of the exchange he made, from following after righteousness by law and receiving it by gift—a life of trial and persecution. I am not so much concerned now with his accepting Christ Jesus as his Saviour before God, as with what came afterwards when he had seen the Saviour as the power for his future life, and the one to whom he owed everything, for it is then that he becomes an example for our present consideration. For twenty-one years I have seen people come to conventions and profess to come for a blessing, come to get "it" as they say, which their souls desire. Such people have in many cases gone away from those conventions emotionally affected for a time; but I have seen them go back again to their old life, sink into frivolity, or shall I rather say shallowness of spiritual life, that brings dishonour upon Christian conventions, and cover themselves with shame. What shall we say to this? When the cost has been counted and accepted, and then only, will the power be received and enjoyed, and the blessing become ours from God.

We have seen the transfer of Paul's allegiance from self or the law to Christ; we have seen the transfer of his hope from self or the law to Christ; but now what is a man to do when he takes up the Lord Jesus Christ, and says, "He is my absolute righteousness in the sight of God"? In verse 8 of the chapter open before us St. Paul says: "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Christ." Are we prepared to go this far at once? What things were they that the Apostles thus put aside? They were not the things of life which men call pleasures, not the hopes of life which men call ambitions, or the prospects of life which men call their expectations. It was simply this—and alas! that we should ever recognise anything in ourselves, but herein lies the one high ambition of the soul before really converted—that he should in his own merit stand before God acceptable in his sight.

THIS HE COUNTS BUT LOSS, and says, I throw away my efforts, myself, the man that would take standing before God, and I give my all that I may take Christ Jesus my all, and win Him as the One who in the presence of Almighty God deigns to answer for the poor worthless sinner." Mind, it is not the man who has committed sins, but the man who stands in God's sight as a sinner or sin.

The question is, Where have we taken our standing—upon self or Christ? Have we learned the primary secret of abandoning all things on which we once stood for confidence, and of taking the Lord Jesus, and Him alone, as the ground on which a poor sinner can stand? The Apostle goes on to say that he suffered the loss of all things, counting them as dung, to win Christ. Some think they have done all that is needed because they have sung—

Oh, to be nothing, nothing!
Only to lie at His feet.

When, however, the Lord puts out his hand and touches something, relating perhaps to the outer circle of their affections, it may be merely a matter of the banker's book, they cannot understand it. Then the Lord comes nearer and touches the son of their heart, and then again the very delight of their eyes. What then is their attitude, at a moment when it is the instinct of most men to draw back and say, It is too hard, Lord; it cannot be? I have not been ushered into the secrets of God, but it seems to me that on many occasions the Lord draws near to the soul to test its affections. Having taken that which is on the outer circle, He withdraws, leaving the soul to enjoy its present treasures, and, when that is the case, there is a loss of those treasures which might be enjoyed in Christ Jesus.

St. Paul was a man from whom God took everything in this world that makes life seem dear, in order to enrich him with that which God gives in exchange. "I have suffered the loss of all things," he says; but "I have won Christ, and that is enough for me." On the strength of that he goes on to say—"I count not myself to have apprehended," or attained; but there had come one single thing in substitution for that which he lost or gave up. You will observe that the expression, in four words, "One thing I do," is in the Greek given in four letters only, (h)ende. After we have been willing to give up all for Christ Jesus and his righteousness, then there must be to our soul's eye such an absorbing power in the Christ that it just fills up the vision and becomes everything that a man's heart can possibly desire. Until that has really come about, there will never be such a life of power as God enabled the Apostle to live; and until that comes, attendance at Keswick or any other convention must lead to disappointment. God cannot bless any single soul except in proportion as it has taken a personal Christ, in place of everything else that can be named.

Say, now, what think you of Christ? What say you of Him who came to be, not only our atonement and propitiation, not only our satisfaction in regard to guilt, so that we can stand approved before God, and our satisfaction in regard to the provision of righteousness, but who came to absorb the whole of a man's soul? When Christ Jesus the Lord is the absorbing power of a man's whole being, and his entire satisfaction, then that man can say, "I have come to that condition in which I am perfect—that is, of pure purpose, of full age, of ripe understanding, of complete purpose of consecration, and of thankful, willing heart to take whatever God may give." I understand that to be the teleios condition which a man may know to-day, and in future, although not able to say in this world that he has attained to full perfection.

When he comes to that, a man may say he is reaping a personal reward. To me, more and more, as life goes on to its close, it becomes clear that and the man who lives and dies for one thing is the man who carries weight with his fellow creatures.

Moreover, the men who are seeking to enjoy what they can in this existence are the men at which the world is laughing, and to whom the very devout must point with taunt and scorn. And when this has come about, and our being is yielded over to the living God, then shall we reap what we have sown. You have come for power for service, and have failed to get it. The reason is because Christ has not taken the spiritual vision which He desires to have. Look at verse 21 of Phil. iii., "That the body of our humiliation may be fashioned like unto the body of His glory." Why? Because, Christ Jesus is able to subdue all things unto Himself. That is the first thing we have to experience from the moment we have taken Christ absolutely and have yielded to Him alone.

Let each man speak to God for himself. What do I know experimentally of the Christ who subdues all things? My tastes, my temper, my thoughts, God knows. You know why many speakers are afraid to speak to you? It is because we have to confess, with shame, that we are men of like passions with yourselves, and men of like failures; but we know the theory, and can testify to something of the power that there is in Christ, and tell you that when we made Him the one thing He subdued all things, and He took even the flesh, the wretched vile body of our humiliation, and began to subdue it just so far as we ventured to trust Him. I think that is the first thing Christians need to know, that Christ can subdue the "all things" of the flesh unto Himself. That is the starting-point to the realisation of blessing—that we substitute

THE "ONE THING" FOR "ALL THINGS."

In chap. iv. we read (verse 11), "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." Again, as in the R.V., "I have learned the secret... to abound and to be in want." What must we resolve upon to-day? To be perfectly content with the will of my God; to be satisfied to be empty and still satisfied. If God takes away that which is requisite for my earthly pleasure, He substitutes for it Himself, and I am contented. I have learned to be content in whatsoever state I am.

Note then: First the body is subdued; secondly, the grumbling nature is altogether changed into one of calm and rest in God; and thirdly (chap. iv. 13), "I can do all things (panta ischuo) by Christ, who strengtheneth me." We have begun with the body, and gone on to satisfaction of the soul, and we go into the service filled, and find that whatsoever my Lord commandeth He gives me ability to do, because I have made him the one thing of my life. Then the Apostle says he has all things and abounds. Now who is the rich man? The man of the world or the man who has all things and abounds? Yet when he wrote this St. Paul was lying in a Roman gaol, chained to a soldier, awaiting martyrdom! Yet he was satisfied—SATISFIED—SATISFIED! The body subdued, the will subjected, and the service provided, we should be contented, because learning the lesson of taking Jesus Christ for everything. "Let such as be perfect be thus minded, and if in anything ye are otherwise minded, God will reveal even this unto you."

THE MEETINGS DAY BY DAY.

At length, the Convention is at an end. Day by day, during the early part of the week, fresh visitors arrived and the gatherings were very large. The attendance was full throughout, so far as the tent was concerned, though variable as regards the overflow meetings in the Pavilion. The platform of speakers included all the recognised leaders of the movement, and these were supported by many who are known as regular attendants at the Convention. As usual, there was a large number of ministers in the company, and it was very interesting to see them, and, in fact, the general host, young and old, taking notes of the various addresses. In the course of conversation, one and another who had come on a flying visit, putting in part of their holidays, or who had otherwise made an effort to attend the Convention, said that their highest expectations had been exceeded. Assuredly such workers will return to their labours enriched with ideas, and stirred with noble purpose, as a result of hearing the Bible-readings and expositions, doctrinal statements and appeals, exercises which never went higher or lower than

SPIRITUAL REALITY AND PRACTICAL GODLINESS.

All who take a living and earnest interest in God's work must have witnessed with delight the large proportion of young people at the meetings. The effect of the meetings on their lives, for devotion to Christ and usefulness in testimony, is calculated, with the Divine blessing, to be great and lasting.

There is no need to compare the Convention of one year with that of another; there are no safe criteria by which this comparison may be made. Human judgment is variable on any single effort or meeting. What must it be of a series of efforts and a week of meetings, six or seven deep each day? The man or woman who has been most blessed this year will declare this year's Convention the best in his or her experience. But none the less it is true that the gatherings of years past and gone were a great blessing to many. Confining attention to this year, we note with joy that when, at the close of each day, those who had been definitely profited and blessed were asked to stand, a large number did so, many ministers of the Gospel boldly rising with others, and being commended to the God of all grace, who is able to build up and give to each of his children an inheritance among the sanctified through faith which is in Jesus.

There was, moreover, genuine converting work, too, this being assisted by the various evangelistic meetings carried out under the care of Mr. W. R. Lane. The night meetings in the market-place were attended by large crowds on successive evenings. The "platform" was unusually strong on Thursday and Friday evenings, when Rev. John McNeill preached, supported by Lord Overton, Dr. Harry Guinness, Mr. W. R. Lane, Mr. John McAuliffe, each of whom took part in the proceedings. Needless to say, the Word was preached with ability; more than that, it was preached in reliance upon the Holy Ghost, and with saving power. Many visitors who were attending the Convention stood by, and were ready in due course to say a directing or comforting word to those who had been impressed by the sermon. In many cases the word went straight home, as was evident from the conversations subsequently held in the square. The enemy was aware of the impression made, and in some cases harsh and foolish things were said against the preacher. At this there was rejoicing on the part of Christian bystanders, as it was an evident witness to the effectiveness of the

ASSAULT UPON THE KINGDOM OF DARKNESS.

At the same time, there were some deeply interesting cases of young men and others turning their feet into the way of God's testimonies. On Thursday Mr. McNeill's text was Psa. cxix. 59, 60; and on Friday, Eph. v. 14.

Regarding the various meetings, we are glad to report large attendances at the early morning prayer meeting. Dr. White presided on each occasion, and brief addresses were delivered. Seven o'clock is not everybody's time in the matter of "going to meeting," but it was made convenient by such as wished to seek the Lord early in the morning. At these gatherings the requests of individual Christians were made the subject of united prayer. The next meeting in order, day by day, was the missionary prayer meeting, presided over by Mr. Eugene Stock, and although it only lasted half an hour, it was a season of profit and enjoyment to many. The Bible Readings, from 10.15 to 11.30 daily, were by Rev. Hubert Brooke and Pastor Theodore Monod in the tent, and by Pastor Stockmayer, Rev. G. C.

Grubb, and Mr. Brooke in the Pavilion. Both in the tent and the Pavilion there were two general meetings daily, one from noon to 1.30 and the other from 6.30 to 8.30. At the earlier meeting two addresses were delivered, at the later one three. In succeeding issues we hope to report a selection of these. We append some notes on the various gatherings. In our last issue we dealt with Monday, so we now confine our attention to the remaining days of the week.

TUESDAY, JULY 28.

The Bible Reading in the tent, by Rev. Hubert Brooke, was a heart-searching study of the prophecy of Malachi, with special reference to robbing God by withholding material support from work in his name. In the Pavilion, Rev. G. C. Grubb conducted a study of Exodus xxxiii. 15-16, "If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence; for wherein shall it be known here that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight? Is it not in that Thou goest with us? So shall we be separated, I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth." It was shown that the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ with his people is their distinguishing privilege and mark. Some have no consciousness of the blessed Presence, and so do not realise their riches and power in Christ.

At the noon general meeting in the tent Dr. Elder Cumming answered the question, What is the teaching at Keswick? We report his address on a preceding page. Rev. F. B. Meyer delivered a weighty address on the displacement of the self-life by the spiritual life, in the power of the Holy Ghost. A report of this utterance is in reserve for a future number. In the Pavilion Rev. J. Hudson Taylor expounded Solomon's Song i. 2, "Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth; for thy love is better than wine." Dr. Handley Moule followed with stimulating words on 2 Kings vi. 16, "Fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." At night in the tent Prebendary Webb-Peploe delivered an address, which we report this week, on Phil. iii. 15. Dr. Moule, in chaste language, derived valuable lessons on faith from Mark v. 28, "For she said, if I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole." Pastor Monod's theme was cognate, his text being Gen. xii. in which God's call of Abram and the patriarch's ready obedience to that call are narrated. In the Pavilion the speakers were Revs. G. C. Grubb (on Heb. iii. 7, 8), E. H. Hopkins (on Psa. xlv. 10), and F. B. Meyer, on the stony heart, compared with the heart of flesh.

WEDNESDAY.

The Bible Readings to-day were by Pastor Monod and Rev. H. Brooke. The former took for his subject 2 Kings vii., in which is described the end of the famine in Samaria, on the flight of the Syrian host. The latter studied prophecies concerning the Lord Jesus Christ as appearing in the Books of Moses. The morning general gatherings were addressed by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, on Acts xii.; Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe on the Book of Nehemiah, with special reference to the occurrence of the word "Remember," and in particular to that in chap. xiii. 31; and Pastor Stockmayer on 1 Cor. xiii. 1, showing that Faith, Hope, and Love have counterparts in the fulness of wisdom as analysed in 1 Cor. i. 30—righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. On the afternoon of this day the annual meeting of the Keswick Mission was held, and of this we give some account lower down. The speakers in the evening were Rev. F. B. Meyer, who dealt with sanctification as based on the resurrection and ascension of Christ; Rev. E. H. Hopkins, whose subject was the standing of the believer in regard to liberty and victory; Rev. C. Inwood, who expounded and applied with remarkable cogency and power 1 John i. 9, in which pardon and cleansing are made conditional on confession of sin, and shown to be consistent with the justice of God; Pastor Monod, on 1 Cor. ii. 12, Rev. F. S. Webster, on John xvi. 7, and A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, who spoke of the Divine satisfaction of the hungry soul.

THURSDAY.

This morning Mr. Brooke's Bible Reading was on 2 Peter i., with special reference to the sureness of the prophetic word. Pastor Stockmayer, in a thoughtful address, showed antitypical parallels between "the Second Man, the Lord from heaven," and the first Adam. At the general meetings Mr. Grubb spoke on Rom. i. 1, "separated unto the Gospel of God"; M. Monod on 2 Kings iv. 7; Mr. Webster on 1 Kings xix. 19, recording Elisha's following of Elijah; and Mr. Inwood on Rom. xii. 1, on personal consecration. In the evening Dr. Cumming depicted the memorable scene of the healing of the woman with an issue of blood (Mark v. 23-31); M. Monod spoke on "the simplicity and the purity that is toward Christ" (2 Cor. xi. 3, R.V.); Mr. Hopkins dwelt upon the liberty of sonship (Rom. viii. 21), and related aspects of a free and joyous life; and Mr. Webb-Peploe took up the apostolic benediction in 1 Thess. v. 23, 24. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor and Canon Taylor Smith also delivered helpful addresses.

FRIDAY.

M. Monod's Bible Reading was on John xiv., and Mr. Brooke's on Deut. xviii. 15. The morning speakers were Messrs. Inwood, Webb-Peploe, and Stockmayer, and Canon Taylor Smith. At a young men's meeting at noon, the speakers included Mr. J. Monro, from India, and Rev. John McNeill. Later on, there was a testimony meeting in the tent, when several personal statements were made. Rev. C. L. Pilkington told of a life of joy and encouragement in work for Christ, after experiences of a very different character in far-off Uganda. Rev. G. K. Baskerville outlined a similar story, and pointed out that he was learning the lesson of continual dependence upon God. He gave the company 2 Kings xxv. 30, "His allowance was a continual allowance given him of the King, a daily rate for every day, all the days of his life."

Canon Taylor Smith told a story of guidance, which we hope to give in an early issue. Mr. Hudson Taylor followed with some remarks on the Lord's leading in his case, resulting in deepened experience, enlarged opportunity for service, and signal deliverances from evil men. In the evening the addresses were by Mr. Macgregor, on the incident of Peter walking on the water (Matt. xiv.); Mr. Inwood on Christ's proclamation concerning the Holy Spirit on "the great day of the feast" (John vii. 37-39); Mr. Hopkins on obedience to Christ; Mr. Stockmayer on Paul's "thorn in the flesh"; Mr. Luce on the blessing of the God of peace; and Dr. Cumming on the sufficiency of Divine grace, ever accessible for individual appropriation on the part of disciples of Christ.

On Tuesday and Thursday at noon there were ministers' meetings in the Drill Hall, and in the afternoon of the same days, devotional meetings in the tent. On Wednesday and Friday there were young men's meetings in the Drill Hall. On four days of the week there were ladies' meetings in the Lecture Hall and girls' meetings in Victoria Hall. At the close of the day, from Tuesday to Friday inclusive, there were prayer-meetings in the Pavilion. On Wednesday the case of the suffering Armenians was specially remembered, and on Friday definite consecration was the burden of petition.

The early meeting on Saturday morning was for praise. Mr. Wilson presided, and passages of Scripture, suggested by experiences at the convention, or expressive of spiritual purpose and desire, were given from the platform, and also from the midst of the assembly. The quotation made by Lord Overton was adopted by the chairman (Mr. Wilson) for general rehearsal by the meeting. It was Isaiah xii. 2—"Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust and not be afraid; for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song. He also is become my salvation."

THE KESWICK MISSION.

The annual meeting in connection with the Keswick Mission was held on Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Wilson in the chair. After singing "Soldiers of Christ, arise," the large audience was led in prayer by Rev. C. A. Fox, who commended to the Lord the missionaries labouring in various parts of the great field. The CHAIRMAN read Acts i. 5-8, and then presented the report and statement of accounts.

The financial position on June 30 may be gathered from the following figures:—Receipts during the year (including balance of £1106 in hand at the beginning) £2323 19s. 2d., expenditure £1312 15s., balance in hand £1016 4s. 2d. Out of this sum payments have already been made amounting to £470. Other sums received by the treasurer in aid of various missions, reached an aggregate of £331, thirty-six agencies being recipients. Owing to the inadequacy of the particulars furnished in some cases, it has been decided that in future such amounts, when under 10s., shall be placed to the account of the Keswick Mission.

The report gave details of the movements of several of the missionaries, and noticed an appeal by Rev. J. Gelson Gregson for a worker among the Syrian Christians on the Malabar coast in India. An offer made last year by two ladies to contribute substantially towards the cost of a worker had been repeated, and Rev. E. B. Russell has accepted the call to that needy field. It had been thought desirable to reconstitute and consolidate the Mission Committee.

Mr. Stock read extracts from the letters recently received from various lands. Miss Wilson Carmichael, writing from Bangalore, South India, pointed out the comparative smallness of effort among the Mohammedan population. Miss White, who is in Egypt studying Arabic, has been helping in the girls' school and medical mission at Alexandria. Rev. J. G. Gregson, writing of the Syrian Christians in Travancore, said: "I have roughed it among this people, and will do all in my power to make anyone who comes comfortable. May Keswick, under God, finish what Antioch began, for these people look to the Patriarch of Antioch as their head. It is a very corrupt church—a church that resisted Rome to the death. One of the archbishops of this church was burned alive by Rome, but they are superstitious, and need the simple Gospel."

Canon TAYLOR SMITH called attention to John x. 16, "Other sheep I have," and verse 27, "My sheep hear my voice." He spoke of the leadings of God in his own case, whereby he "heard the voice," and went after the "other sheep." From the moment when he said "Yes" to the will of God, whatever it might be, he had never lost the assurance of the Divine call, and the blessing which follows obedience thereto, notwithstanding fever and other dangers which he had been compelled to pass through. Miss M. GOLLOCK appealed for the Mohammedans of Egypt.

Rev. G. C. GRUBB followed with an account of his Canadian tour, in which he was accompanied by Mr. Millard. He conducted meetings in churches, chapels, and other buildings, and had many interviews with distressed souls. Among others who promoted his mission, he named, in terms of special affection, Archdeacon Phair and Dr. Baldwin, Bishop of Huron. At Kingston, a penitentiary was opened to the preacher, and one of the warders afterwards said that during the night many of the prisoners cried to God for mercy. From the commencement of the mission God was besought to send power while the Word was being spoken, and so it happened that the preaching led to conviction and conversion in many cases without subsequent explanations or personal dealing. At Halifax Mrs. Campbell was taken dangerously ill, but in answer to prayer she recovered in half an hour. In the same city Mr. Millard had a never-to-be-forgotten conversation with a nurse, who for over a dozen years had been an agnostic; after prayer she threw off her doubts, and exercised a simple faith in Christ. This interview came about in a distinctly providential manner, and the outcome is deeply interesting. In a letter to Mr. Millard since his return to England, the converted nurse says: "I cannot think how I ever lived without God. I have no perplexing questions to answer now, for they are all answered by the fact that 'God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son,' etc. I am so glad that Mr. Grubb said that God's love explains everything."

THE MISSIONARY MEETING.

Much enthusiasm was shown at the missionary gathering on Saturday morning. A goodly number of the attenders at the Convention had left the town, but there was, nevertheless, a company which easily filled the tent. Some time before the meeting began, earnest lips were responding to warm hearts in singing "Far, far away in heathen darkness dwelling," "Tell it out among the heathen that the Lord is King," and other missionary melodies. The chair was occupied by Mr. Wilson, and the formal proceedings began with P. P. Bliss's stirring hymn, "Ho, my comrades, see the signal." Prayer having been offered by Mr. WALTER SLOAN, the conduct of the meeting passed largely into the hands of Mr. EUGENE STOCK, who, in some opening remarks, intimated that it has seemed desirable to modify the arrangements which had been followed in previous years.

All missionaries and those definitely accepted for work in the foreign field were then called upon to rise. There was a flutter, and between one and two hundred stood, in all parts of the tent as well as on the platform. Rev. E. H. HOPKINS commended them to the Lord in prayer, asking Him to be their sufficiency and consolation. Special mention was made of the case of Mr. Brockway, of Calcutta, who intended to be present, but who had been summoned to meet his father who had arrived in England in great sorrow, his wife having died on the journey from Madagascar. Mr. Hopkins also remembered the need of Mr. Russell, who is proceeding to labour among the Syrian Christians in Travancore.

This being August 1, many recalled the sad events on that day last year, when workers in China witnessed for Christ unto the death. Mr. Stock referred to the incident, sad but glorious, and read several verses from 1 Cor. xv. The beautiful hymn "Till He come!" Oh let the word," having been softly sung, Mr. Stock referred to the loss of Rev. R. W. Stewart and others, and read a sentence from a letter received from Mrs. Saunders, the mother of the Kucheng sister-martyrs, as follows:—"I am asking every day that the Lord will send ten for every one of the three Australians that fell on that woful day."

In the course of a short address, Rev. H. S. PHILLIPS said that some of the so-called Vegetarians had expressed utter disgust at the violence which eventuated in the massacre. There were many signs that God will bring life out of death among the Chinese. As for the cause of the massacre, he said that it arose in the viceroys sending some soldiers into the district; the seditious party thought that Mr. Stewart was concerned in this, although he regretted it sincerely. Sorrow brings out sympathy, and those lamentable events have evoked much sympathy for China. Mr. Phillips prayed that the outcome of these massacres would be to the greater glory of God. His message to the audience was: "We ought also to lay down our lives for the brethren."

Miss JOHNSON quoted: "God hath chosen the things that are not." Only by realising this humility could workers be sure of the Divine blessing. One of the words most used by God in sending this lady to the Chinese field was 2 Kings vii. 9, "This is a day of good tidings," etc.

With obvious propriety the large audience rose, at the call of Mr. Stock, and sang "Crown Him, ye martyrs of our God," and also the concluding verse of Perrenet's grand "All hail the power." Rev. H. W. WEBB-PERLOE led in prayer, blessing God that those who were so deeply mourned were enabled to glorify Him in their bodies. He prayed that missionaries everywhere may have grace to trust the faithful God, and be enabled to have fellowship with Christ in his sufferings. He commended them all to God for his blessing and support, and prayed that the deaths of the faithful might be God's message of life to many. He pressed China, Africa, India, South America, and other lands upon the compassions of the Lord, beseeching that many new witnesses, men and women, might speedily be sent forth.

FIVE MINUTES' ADDRESSES.

A series of five minutes' speeches followed, by brethren and sisters from the field. "The Jew first" was the order. Rev. A. HASTINGS KELK, from Jerusalem, having quoted Isa. xlix. 14, 15, remarked that the nations want to spew out the Jews. Turkey is tottering to its fall, the land is being prepared for the return, and the prophecy of the Times of the Gentiles is all but fulfilled. Moreover, there is a movement on the part of the Jews, and learned and influential men are contemplating the erection of a Jewish State on a basis which, generally speaking, will be agreeable to great and enlightened ruling powers. These facts make Christian work of the greatest importance, and with its urgency there is large opportunity, especially in Jerusalem. Rev. JOHN WILKINSON followed with prayer for God's people Israel.

Rev. LONGLEY HALL, a worker among the Mohammedans, spoke of the difficulties of work in Palestine, the land of neglected privileges. The Moslems are not idolaters, but they believe that their prophet has won heaven for them. So, to a certain extent, it is a religion formed by the devil as a counterfeit of Christianity. There is nothing more hateful in the Moslem's eyes than a Christian, so that work among them is beset with peculiar difficulty. Hence the need for special endeavour and earnest devotion in work for Jesus among the Moslems. In the face of these difficulties there is much blessing, three gentlemen of position in Jerusalem having just intimated their wish to be baptized.

M. le Pasteur COILLARD spoke of his work in Zambesia. For many years he had lived a wandering life, praying and waiting upon God, visiting regions where all was darkness and superstition. He had been compelled to feel that he was face to face with the evil one, but God was his strength, and in due course his work in the name of Christ resulted in light overcoming the darkness. Finally, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ; it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth."

Mr. BAILLIE, of the South Africa General Mission, said that throughout the whole of South Africa men may earn their living and preach the Gospel. The country is healthy, and in certain departments employment is easy. The land offers free scope for many workers. His message was Matt. xxviii. 19: "Go ye into all the world," etc.

Rev. MCCHEYNE PATERSON, Church of Scotland Mission in the Punjab, said that the greatest obstacle of the work of God in India is not Hinduism, which is now on its deathbed. Mohammedanism is tottering to its fall, and enthusiasts among the mares in terror. Aborigines as well are awaiting evangelization. But there are not enough messengers to take the people the good news.

Miss DAVE, Zenana Missionary, Bengal, gathered, as the leading thought of the Conference, the one duty of obedience. In what is considered a well-manned mission in India, an old Mohammedan said to her, "If what you say is true, how is it that the name of Jesus has been drowned so long?" In the Nuddea district there is a dispensary sadly needing a doctor. In large regions the name of Christ has never been proclaimed. Some wait for a call; the command of Christ is itself a call. She quoted 1 Chron. xxix. 5 (R.V.), "Who then offereth willingly to consecrate himself (or herself) to-day to the Lord" (for the foreign mission field).

Mrs. STOTT bore witness to the faithfulness of God in answering prayer. A man who had for years been a victim of the opium habit had the craving taken away without medicine. When the appetite asserted itself the man prayed, and this repeatedly for three days, when he realised the victory over the sinful habit. In another case, a man, apparently insane, who constantly disturbed the meetings, was adjudged to be a victim of the devil, and in the name of Jesus the missionary ordered the unclean spirit to come out of the man. Afterwards the man thanked the missionary, saying that he had been out of his mind for years.

Bishop FYSON spoke for Japan, and pressed the Divine assurance "I will be with you" upon all who felt a desire for foreign work. He encouraged those who collect funds to advance the circulation of Holy Scripture.

Mr. JOHN LINTON, who is going out in connection with the Toronto Undenominational Evangelical Mission to South America, quoted Ezek. xxxiv. 6, maintaining that it is literally true of the Neglected Continent. In that region thirty-four millions have never heard a plain message from heaven, not because Christ did not will it, but because we did not will it.

Mr. STOCK mentioned many fields of labour which could not be represented by speakers, the list being so long as to have quite a depressing effect upon those who would enter into God's purposes of salvation. He praised God for the Students' Volunteer Movement, maintaining that it is evidently God's work for the present time.

Four brief addresses were then delivered, the first being by Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR, who spoke of progress in China, and the great needs of that million-peopled empire. Mr. JAMES MONRO pressed home mission work abroad as an expression of obedience to Christ. Canon TAYLOR SMITH followed, maintaining, We need (1) to know, (2) grow, (3) glow, and (4) go. Finally, Rev. DAVID HUNT spoke of missionary work (1) in the light of God's kingdom, (2) in the light of the cross of Christ, and (3) in the light of the Lord's return.

Some contributions towards missionary work having been announced, the closing hymn was sung, and, after prayer, Pasteur Coillard pronounced the Benediction.

Dr. J. C. Young, of the Keith-Falconer Mission at Aden, reports his first baptism in the difficult field of South Arabia.

The Wesleyan Conference.

[By a SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THERE was an immense gathering in Hengler's Circus in the afternoon, when Rev. H. Price Hughes, with great force, discussed the relation of the Church to the great masses of the people. They must imitate the Lord Jesus by welcoming the multitude not only to Hengler's Circus, but to the most beautiful church ever built. Hundreds of other services were conducted by ministers attending the Conference in Liverpool and the neighbourhood.

The Representative Session of the Conference opened last week. Dr. Randles gave an interesting address to the assembled laymen and ministers, defending the position of Methodism as a Church. He denounced the attempt to utilise Methodism for party political ends as an egregious and sacrilegious wrong, and in his closing words struck a high spiritual key-note. "Fulness of spiritual life" was the motto which the President gave to the Connexion not for one year but all years.

Foreign missionary affairs received full consideration. It was reported that the appeal made last Conference for a sum of £50,000 to pay the missionary debt of £30,000 and to extend the work abroad, had resulted in promises amounting to £35,000; and the Fernley Reserve Fund had offered to give the last £1000 to complete the effort.

It was agreed to set apart the first Monday in October as a day of intercession for foreign missions. Dr. Jenkins, the veteran Indian missionary, dwelt upon the power of the pulpit in advocating the claims of the heathen world, and it was also recommended that the preceding Sunday should be specially a day of missionary advocacy. A long conversation took place on missionary organisation at home, and the visitation by the secretaries of the mission stations abroad. A series of speeches by Dr. Rigg, Rev. W. Patterson, Rev. H. Price Hughes, Mr. Morgan Harvey, and many others, resulted in a unanimous decision to appoint a fourth secretary.

The most important discussion of the representative session, perhaps, has been that on the EXTENSION OF THE ITINERANT TERM.

This has attracted attention for years, and the largest majority yet recorded in favour of the change was that of last week. Rev. H. Price Hughes moved that an appeal should be made to Parliament to repeal the eleventh clause of the Deed Poll, which declares that no Wesleyan minister shall be appointed for more than three years successively to the same chapel. It is agreed that on the whole the itinerant system has worked well, and it is not proposed to revoke it, but the experience of the great missions in London, Manchester, and other large centres, shows that greater continuity and concentration of labour contribute to splendid success. Mr. Hughes therefore pleaded that the circuit minister should have the same opportunity as himself, and dealt vigorously with various objections to his proposal. He was supported by Rev. James Lewis, a circuit minister of brilliant gifts; Rev. Enoch Salt, the chairman of the Oxford district, who spoke for village Methodism; Dr. Nicholas, an Irish representative; and others.

On the other side, Mr. Shepherd Allen, a devoted Methodist lately returned from New Zealand, urged that the peace of the Connexion would be disturbed by any attempt to extend the itinerancy. He was supported by Rev. John Rhodes, Rev. Dr. Bowden, and others. The venerable Dr. Jenkins declared that by such a fundamental change, Methodism, as they had known it, would practically be destroyed. The secret of their weakness was their perpetual unrest. Mr. Hughes reminded the conference that such doleful prophecies had often been heard before, and he pleaded for freedom from State control and faith in the living Church. There voted in favour of the extension 248 and 119 against.

The Conference has been heartily welcomed by the representatives of other churches in Liverpool. The Bishop of Liverpool has attended several public functions in connection with the Conference, and uttered words of high appreciation of the work of Methodism. A goodly company of ministers, representative of the Nonconformist churches of the city, were received by the Conference, and brotherly speeches uttered by Rev. Griffith Ellis, Moderator of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, and Rev. Robert Lewis, Baptist minister, and by Dr.

Stephenson and Mr. W. Middlebrook on the part of the Conference. Thus are old controversies forgotten and the common principles of the evangelical faith emphasized.

The Conference spoke with no uncertain sound as to the brought to bear upon Primary and Secondary Education. Mr. Perks, M.P., urged that in view of further legislation on the education question statistics should be gathered throughout Methodism as to the number of Methodist children compelled to attend Church schools, the operation of the conscience clause, the use of sacerdotal catechisms and books of devotion, and the disability of Nonconformist children desiring to enter the teaching profession. He denounced the monstrous tyranny to which their children were subjected in some rural districts. It was decided that the information desired should be sought through the Sunday and Day School Committees of the various district synods.

Professor Slater called attention to the encroachments of the High Church party in secondary education also. He gave an instance of a lady whom he knew, who had been dismissed from the position of teacher and lady principal in a college for girls, because she refused to teach the doctrine of the Real Presence, and to say that Luther and the rest of the Reformers were heretics. A committee was appointed to watch Methodist interests in regard to secondary education.

Amongst other matters of importance, it has been decided to transfer the Mission operations in Germany and Austria to the control of the American Methodist Episcopal Church. The gifted Baroness Langenau has strongly urged this course, and it is trusted that the union of the two branches of Methodist work in these countries will lead to consolidation and extension.

An organisation for the special benefit of the youth of Methodism was approved, to be called

"THE WESLEY GUILD."

It was contended that the best features of the C.E. movement, the Epworth League, and the various guilds of the Free Churches had been included in the proposed society. Mr. Hughes desired the alliance of the Wesley Guild with the C.E. movement, so that the evangelical forces might be brought into line.

The Conversation on the Work of God in the representative session was remarkable for an impassioned address from Rev. Thomas Champness, whose noble work by means of evangelists both at home and abroad is so widely known. He earnestly appealed to his younger brethren, reminding them that the future history of England was largely in their hands. He wished to encourage them, for they were doing grand work. He spoke of the providential way in which he had been led to use the "Joyful News Home" for the training of local preachers.

A series of notable public gatherings has been held in the Hengler's Circus, a building that will seat five or six thousand persons. Night after night the vast building has been filled. On Monday representatives of other conferences brought greeting from the children of Methodism beyond the seas; on Tuesday Revs. Hugh Price Hughes and Peter Thompson pleaded the cause of the London Mission; and on Wednesday home and foreign missions were combined, and their claims advocated by Rev. W. Burgess, of Hyderabad, Rev. Thomas Cook, whose evangelistic labours have won triumphs in South Africa and Ceylon, as well as at home, and Rev. Samuel Chadwick, the enthusiastic Leeds missionary. Meetings for working men, and for the advocacy of temperance, have also been held.

On Friday afternoon Rev. G. W. Olver reported that the appeal made at the last Conference for £50,000, in order to liquidate the debt on the Special Mission Fund, and to provide for some of the pressing needs of the mission, had in part succeeded. The total amount promised is £35,000.

Mr. Morgan Harvey, general treasurer, announced a telegram from Mr. William Mewburn, J.P., of Banbury, promising £500 additional. The Fernley trustees had generously promised £1,000, on condition that the whole amount be raised. A member of the Missionary Committee would give £1,000 in addition to a similar amount already given. Another donor, as a thank-offering, gave an additional £1,000. Mr. Peter Wood, of Chislehurst, promised an additional £500. This would leave about £10,000 to be raised to complete the special effort.

Good Work in Berlin.

IT has been my privilege during recent days to see something of the work of God in a rural district of Schleswig-Holstein, and also in the great and growing city of Berlin. In the former sphere of labour I had the joy of fellowship with more than one godly pastor of the Lutheran Church, and witnessed some remarkable spiritual movements outside its borders.

A most important and fruitful work for the Lord Jesus is being accomplished in Berlin under the superintendence of Fraulein von Blücher, a grand-niece of the great Marshal Blücher, of Waterloo fame. Under this lady's hospitable roof I was enabled to see something of the Christ-like enterprises with which she is associated, and of the devotion and self-sacrifice with which they are conducted. The headquarters of this Christliche Gemeinschaft, or "Christian Communion," are at No. 81, Hohenstaufen Strasse, in the Western part of the city. There is a large and handsome mission hall, with several smaller rooms. All the usual agencies of an organised mission church are in active operation.

It is easy to write these words, but what they signify for Germany it is not so easy to convey. Of the obstacles, the opposition, the persecution to which this earnest worker has been subject I will not speak. Her example of patient continuance in well-doing in spite of such is indeed honourable and conspicuous.

On the Lord's Day morning when I was present nearly 100 enrolled members of the Gemeinschaft gathered to observe the Lord's Supper, and I was deeply touched by the marked spirit of prayer and praise manifested. At 1.30 there was a Sunday-school, the children of which are most intelligent and attentive. At five in the evening a men's meeting and a young women's meeting were held simultaneously. At night there was a large and attentive congregation, which completely filled the hall.

It was pathetic to see the love which the people bear for her, whom they regard as their dearest friend. Nearly 100 gathered in the hall on the morning of her birthday, each laden with some token of love and gratitude for her acceptance. That same afternoon the annual excursion took place to the Grünewald Forest. There were held during the day two open-air meetings, beneath the trees, when many pleasure-seekers, not of the company, gathered round. Many hymns from "Sacred Songs and Solos" have been translated into German, and the familiar melodies are retained. They were sung with a sweetness of harmony and a depth of feeling which were most heart-stirring. Open air preaching, properly so called, is entirely prohibited throughout Germany. I rejoiced to hear, however, that Count von Bernstorff is permitted to hold a service in the Grünewald Forest every Sunday afternoon. All who know and value the Fraulein's work seek to strengthen her hands, and I would ask any reader who can do so to communicate with her at Hohenstaufen Strasse 81, Berlin, W.

Pastor Rohrbach continues his noble work at Charlottenburg. This populous suburb of Berlin contains about 140,000 inhabitants, and the spiritual need is great. It was with feelings of deep thankfulness that I witnessed Pastor Rohrbach's work, and I commend it heartily to the sympathies of English friends. His address is: Krumme Strasse 28, Charlottenburg, Berlin.

FRANK COCKREM.

Gressingham, Park-road, Southend-on-Sea.

Punjab and Sindh.—A special Mission was lately held by Rev. Ihsan Ullah, of Narowal, at Peshawar. His clear, plain speaking was blessed to many of the native Christians: "It is seldom," writes Rev. W. Thwaites, "they have heard the dangers and sins of native Christian congregations put so plainly and yet so lovingly. We do rejoice and thank God for his coming among us. Two inquirers, former Mohammedans, received grace to confess Christ in baptism."

Sussex Villages.—The Gospel Mission and Bible Van in connection with the Hurstpierpoint Mission is now among the villages in the neighbourhood of Midhurst. The spiritual darkness of many of these out-of-the-way villages, with a few exceptions where real godly ministers are found, where it is evident Ritualistic and Romanistic teaching abounds, calls for much work for the spread of the Word and pure literature, also of Protestant and temperance tracts.—The Superintendent, Sussex Bible Carriage, Sandrock Cottage, near Midhurst, Sussex.

"A QUESTION FOR TEACHERS."

SIR,—I trust the letter under the above heading by "A Disciple" will be the means of opening your columns to the discussion of what I know many others consider a very important question at the present time. In Northumberland, for instance, men are preaching with great boldness, and in some quarters with apparent success, doctrines which are perfectly startling to Christians of all denominations. A monthly magazine, with a large circulation, further disseminates the views of these teachers.

"To the law and to the testimony." "What saith the Scripture?" should surely be the testing point of doctrine rather than the opinion of any individual man, asserted frequently without any appeal to the Word of God, especially when the doctrines of original sin, the substitutionary work of Christ, etc., are either denied, or so twisted as not to be recognisable. A READER.

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

DEAR SIR,—In consequence of a letter which I have already received from a lady on the subject, and also because of my own close connection with work among public school boys, I cannot help writing a few words in opposition to the words of Dr. Gordon Stables, quoted in your issue of July 23. If the statements made are true, they call for the immediate and earnest consideration, not only of the parents, guardians, and friends of boys, but of the headmasters and housemasters to remedy evils which, according to Dr. Stables, are widespread and general throughout the public school system. There may be, and doubtless are, many difficulties and temptations to be faced in our public schools; nevertheless, I cannot but feel that Dr. Stables has gone to greater lengths in his denunciations than general experience would warrant. I say general experience because his attack is directed against public schools generally, and consequently I hold that his attack is unwarranted. It is unfair to tar all public schools with the same brush, and this is surely what he has done.

My own public school experiences were at Uppingham under Edward Thring from 1880-4. Looking back I can only say that the difficulties I then had to face did much to form my character and fit me for the world's battles of the future. I have thanked God over and over again for the experiences of those years, and do so now more than ever, working as I do from the beginning of each term to the end, among the boys of our public schools. In the light of these experiences of the past, of my present public school work, and of the hundreds of letters I receive from public school boys, I can only say that my experience does not agree with that of Dr. Gordon Stables. While there are, doubtless, "boys who tell their friend the editor things which they would not reveal to the kindest parent or doctor," I venture to suggest that these boys are the exception rather than the rule. My own experience leads me entirely to this conclusion. If I am wrong, then I can only say that Dr. Stables must have lighted upon some public schools which are exceptional in their depravity, and these, I trust, are few and far between.

If I look back on only the last three terms, I have enough argument in solid fact to combat the position taken up by Dr. Stables. I have in these terms come into personal acquaintance with 1000 boys at various public schools, and I am certain that with the exception of certain cases (and these probably through the boys' own fault rather than through the fault of the schools), their public school experience has been and is of the greatest possible benefit to them.

There is another portion of Dr. Stables' letter which I must quote in order to answer it. He says, after speaking about the special evil which he is considering: "Now the vampire quack steps in; full well he knows how he can make a harvest out of their wretchedness. And boys will beg, borrow, or I fear often rob their fathers to pay these harpies that the laws permit to live and get rich." These words to me are quite enough to prove the "alarmist" position taken up by Dr. Gordon Stables. If he had confined his remarks to special cases I would have stood shoulder to shoulder with him against what I believe with him to be the greatest temptation which besets the lives of boys. I am quite willing to acknowledge that many lives are ruined through these lusts of the flesh, but when Dr. Stables includes in his denunciations not only particular cases, but also the whole public school life of England, I assert fearlessly that his anxiety to stem an evil has outweighed his discretion, and that he has committed himself to a statement which he will find it hard to substantiate.

He attacks (though perhaps he has hardly realised it) sixty large and about 420 smaller public schools, and applies his remarks indiscriminately to them all, and to their schoolboy population of many thousands! It is to these teeming multitudes that the "vampire quack" goes with his illicit dealings. On the face of it the idea is untenable! That the quack has many victims among public schoolboys I freely admit. That he affects the majority of schoolboys and haunts every public school I deny. That in every school there are boys who give way to this particular vice I again admit, but that the majority of the boys are drawn into it and ruined by it, so as to make public schools places to be shunned by every true parent, I again resolutely deny.

In our public schools of to-day there is an ever-increasing moral tone, and a very real desire in the average schoolboy to live a true life. Where there is a general atmosphere of vice it is as a rule to be traced to several boys who contaminate the rest, and this condition is exceptional rather than general. There are in most houses of our large public schools, as a rule, a certain percentage of honourable fellows, who put down with a rod of iron anything which affects the true welfare and honour of the school. This has been my almost invariable experience, and I look forward with hopefulness to the future.

There are many agencies at work influencing the lives of boys, and bringing them into closer touch with the Gospel of Christ. The Scripture Union for public-school Boys has done an enormous work in this direction; so also have the holiday meetings which have been so frequent of late years. Both these agencies are under the auspices of the Children's Special Service Mission. Nor must I omit the Universities' Camps for Public-school Boys, which are ever increasing in popularity, so much so that there are nearly 200 more applications this year than last. All these outside agencies, added to the earnest work of headmasters and form-masters during the term time, are bringing in a new era of public-school life, and I cannot help believing, in spite of Dr. Gordon Stables' sweeping assertions to the contrary, that the outlook is full of hope.

I know that Dr. Stables will readily appreciate my bona-fides in thus answering his indictment published in The Echo of July 16. I have no motive in writing other than that of vindicating my hundreds of schoolboy friends, on whose prosperity and true life my whole powers are for the time being centred.—Yours in the cause of Christ,

NORMAN BENNET,
Missioner to Public-school Boys.

WOMEN'S ARMENIAN RELIEF FUND.

SIR,—Very many who are interested in the unhappy people whom Europe has left to their fate in Asiatic Turkey, feel that in emigration lies their only chance of deliverance from total extermination. On April 29, Miss Kimball, of Van, thus wrote:—"We here are feeling more and more that in emigration is their only hope! If only your Government would advocate this! If the money collected could aid them to emigrate, I should feel that we were doing them a permanent good." This opinion is endorsed by the American missionaries all over the country, and recent developments make the necessity even more urgent. It will be well understood that to speak plainly would be to defeat our object, and we must therefore plead in this matter also for a continuance of that generous trust which has for so long been extended to us in connection with our relief work at Van. I may say, however, that a scheme is on foot and a committee in process of formation, for the purpose of helping some of the unfortunate Armenians to make a fresh start in life away from the scenes of their torment, and before the early winter shall make travelling impossible. A well-known member of the Society of Friends, Mr. Edmund Wright-Brooks, of 6, Upper Thames-street, London, E.C., has consented to act as treasurer, and will gladly receive and acknowledge donations towards the "Armenian Rescue Fund."

We have a supply of copies of a book written by Mr. W. Willard Howard—who has twice penetrated into the interior of the desolated regions, and was an eye-witness to many of the horrors. To anyone really interested, I shall be pleased to forward a copy. Mr. Howard tells us that he has written about one-ninth part of the truth in this book, the other eight parts are utterly unfit for publication! A powerful committee—composed of many of America's leading men, whose names are given in the book—has been formed in New York, for the purpose of carrying out Mr. Howard's scheme. Let us join with this sister nation in her merciful project, and work strenuously for the release of a part at least of this cruelly wronged people, whose sufferings are a reproach to every civilised land!

The work at Van goes on, and must be continued whilst the need exists. We have collected and sent to Miss Kimball about £10,000.

Faithfully yours,
MARY HICKSON (Mrs.), Hon. Sec. W.A.R.F.

The Armenian Horrors.

A POWERFUL preface has been written by M. Clémenceau to a volume entitled "Les Massacres d'Arménie," consisting of letters received last year, during the massacres, by Armenians in France. M. Clémenceau, who denounces the inaction of European diplomacy, thus sums up these letters:—

"With despairing monotony, they are a recital of the same crimes, the same horrors, perpetrated by the same methods in identical conditions. The Armenians are invited to deposit their arms, they are threatened with death if they do not obey, the Vali guarantees them full security, and, as soon as they are defenceless, Kurds, Circassians, and Turks, led by redifs, Hamidieh troops, officers of the regular army, if such a term can be used here, rush on the houses, pillage and burn the shops, slaughter all the hated race without distinction of sex or age, violate or carry off the women, exult in the tortures inflicted on the men to make them abjure their faith, pollute the churches, flog or burn the priests, and derisively lead about the new converts, amid the stone-throwing of the mob, after circumcising them and imposing on them acts which attest the renunciation of their creeds. Lastly, when there are no more men to be killed or girls to be violated . . . the survivors are flogged into signing addresses to the Sultan in which they acknowledge themselves to be the authors of the disturbances, declare that those killed have been justly punished, thank the Sovereign for his clemency, and state that their lives and properties are perfectly safe."

After pointing out that these horrors may at any moment be repeated, M. Clémenceau says: "Such events are a perpetual menace to the peace of Europe. If care is not taken, they may some day lead to the independent action of certain Powers and cause a general conflict. What is to be done? Enforce justice for all. The absurdity of the policy hitherto followed consists in claiming a system of favouritism for the Sultan's Armenian subjects without troubling about the Mahometan population. How can the Khalif of Islam be expected to submit to such a demand? He will promise all you please on the understanding that he is not to keep his word. The only way of stopping the antagonism of races and religions in the Ottoman Empire is to ensure to all, whether Mahometans or Christians, the blessings of good government. The Sultan must be made to see that there is no other way of escape than a pacific reform, the establishment of a government of impartial justice and supervision, equally beneficial to all his subjects. If he is incapable of this effort, the armed intervention of the Powers, ever postponed, but finally inevitable, will put an end to a government of corruption and murder." "What country," asks M. Clémenceau, "will have the honour of being the liberating, the humane people? Last century men would have unanimously named France, and truly with the French Revolution we rushed nobly to the task. What are we doing now?"

Somers Town.—Friends of the West London Mission will be glad to learn that a new evangelist has been appointed to Charlton-street, Mr. Winch has already conducted many services, both in the hall and the open air. All who have time and talent at disposal are earnestly invited to join in any of the many departments of work by which we trust our neighbourhood shall be benefited.—The Advance. [709]

Salvation Army Exhibition.

DURING the present week an Exhibition is being held in the Agricultural Hall of the work of the Army. General Booth explained, at a private Press view on Friday, that there has been "some danger lest one or two features of the work, and especially the social operations in this country, should appear to be all that we are doing. This impression has actually led to doubting inquiries as to whether we were still pressing onward, maintaining faithfully and constantly our regular Salvation work among the poor. We have, therefore, thought it worth while to organise, for ten consecutive days, a representation of the Army's operations as a whole, together with meetings led by officers of many nations, and we trust that this exhibition may attract many thousands of persons who have very little knowledge of our ordinary services, and so lead to very great advances in every direction."

The danger attending a panoramic exhibition of this type is, however, that the impression is conveyed to visitors that Salvation Army work is now largely industrial. There are, for example, the printing business, the musical instrument factory, the bonnet factory, and the uniform factory, with stalls where the goods are prominently laid out and minutely labelled. "The Cycle for God" has a show room in the West Gallery; and there are meat stalls for frozen carcasses from Australia and New Zealand. Besides these, there are numbers of things made by Salvationists exhibited with a view to sale.

The foreign mission field of the Army is so large that it occupies about a quarter of the entire floor space of the exhibition. There is a cloud of witnesses from India, many of them native men and women Salvationists, distinguished by saffron turbans and skirts and scarlet tunics, and they have a village to themselves stocked with curious and numerous useful exhibits illustrating life and labour in Hindustan. The great sight in this section, however, is the Zulu kraal, with its live sheep and goats, its huts, weapons, skins and other trophies of the chase. The Norwegian contingent have a hut, and there are Lapps and Norsters in native costumes. Representatives are present from Italy, France, Switzerland, and even Armenia, and as in all instances they wear the habiliments of their countries, the effect of the intermingling is very remarkable.

The bulk of the space is taken up with the operations of the Army workshops at home, or the models of institutions like the shelters, rescue homes, village vans, and lifeboats, all shown in actual occupation or operation. In roaming along the avenues on the ground floor or in the galleries, the visitor passes the rescue headquarters, homes, factories, shelter, crèche, hospital, nurses, and laundry; the men's and women's training homes; a dismal slum street with its defiance of sanitary law, and aids to vice and misery. The submerged are to be seen at various kinds of work, at dinner, and even in their bunks and beds. One of the annexes is set apart for the match-makers, and in another direction are people making "Grace before meat" boxes.

With all this there are constant meetings, of all types from Gospel to consecration services, in progress. Altogether the Agricultural Hall presents a remarkable scene, and it is sure to be visited by many thousands during the week.

The Racecourse Mission.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to thank all those kind readers of your valuable paper for the financial and other help they gave us for the work on Epsom Downs? Our hearts have been cheered and faith stimulated by the prayerful and practical sympathy shown. This acknowledgment has been delayed by my absence in Norway, it should have appeared before. The workers this year had special blessings, and the committee of the Racecourse Mission has decided to go to Doncaster in September, where we expect a great blessing. Full particulars will be sent you shortly. JOSIAH NIX.

Bank Holiday with Jack.—Seldom has the Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, E., witnessed a busier scene than on Monday last, the object being to provide a counter-attraction to the devil's allurements all around. Open-air services were held both afternoon and evening, and, in addition to these, meetings were going on inside the Rest in different rooms in the various languages. The presence of the Lord was manifestly felt in the different gatherings, and who can tell what distant lands may yet reap blessed fruit from the heavenly seed thus sown in the hearts of our sailor brethren during this happy day in the Strangers' Rest?

Christian Endeavour.

RALLY AT KESWICK.

ONE of the most interesting meetings held at Keswick during the Convention week is the Christian Endeavour Rally. This was conducted, as usual, on Friday evening in the Congregational Church, presided over by Rev. W. T. Herd, pastor and president of the Keswick branch. Fifty-two responses were given by representatives from various parts of England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, also from Germany, Philadelphia, India (two), China, Madagascar, and Australia. One brother represented fifty-six societies in Northamptonshire, another seventeen in the Oldham Union, and a third the Scottish Union.

The representative from Preston told how their work was chiefly among the children of Roman Catholics, and all societies reported active evangelistic work and earnest effort on behalf of foreign missions.

One society had a "Chapel Pew Committee," the members paid the rent of two pews and filled them with people whom they persuaded to come in. Two societies had "Bath Chair Committees" in order that they might convey invalids or the maimed to church. In Calcutta they had a "Take your Bible to Church Committee"!

Several societies owed their existence to the Keswick rally of former years, and the sister from Philadelphia said she had felt lonely ever since she came to England, until she entered this meeting.

Prayer, asked for by some in special difficulties, was immediately voiced by someone in the meeting. There was practical help and variety of speaking, such as only Christian Endeavourers can crowd into one short hour.

E. Y. BANKS, Secretary.

THERE is a town in Wisconsin called Endeavour, and the leading school of the neighbourhood is named Christian Endeavour Academy.

Two Endeavourers living south of Grinnell, Io., a girl of eighteen, and her brother, three years older, have organised a Christian Endeavour society in a neighbouring schoolhouse, which has seventeen active and nineteen associate members. A triumph of consecration.

Bishop Ninde has been chosen to succeed Bishop Fitzgerald as president of the Epworth League. We give the right hand of fellowship to him, and rejoice that a man of such marked ability, deep piety, and sweet and brotherly spirit is to lead the organised young people of the Methodist Episcopal Church.—Golden Rule.

The English delegates to the International Christian Endeavour Convention at Washington, report that there are now 46,215 branches in all parts of the world, of which 3733 are in Great Britain. The total membership is nearly three millions. For the third year in succession the "badge banner" given to the country which has the largest absolute gain has been awarded to Great Britain. It is hoped that in 1900 the International Convention will be, for the first time, held in London.

The first C.E. Convention in Siam has been held in Cheungmai—being a conference of the Lao Endeavour Societies. Says Rev. W. C. Dodd:—"It was a heart-warming sight to see these bright-faced, earnest Christians, sitting in God's house, clothed and in their right minds, anxious to learn more fully the way of service to the Master. It was a beautiful sight, also, the people sitting on the immense plain floor of the Cheungmai church, the men on one side and the women on the other, all clothed in white coats and jackets, and with the bright red badges indicating their membership among the Endeavourers, 1896."

Work amongst Children.—Over 14,000 tracts and 1000 Gospels of John have been circulated by Mr. Walter Singer on the sands at Crosby, Seaforth, and Blundellsands during the last month. This work has been carried on for twelve years. Friends wishing to help should write to 28, Aubrey-street, Everton.

Jews in Paris.—We have come again to the end of another year's work among the Jews of Paris. We have not only maintained our work among them, but our sphere has enlarged, and the influence of the Gospel has spread. The Jews participate fully in our services, and join heartily in the singing and prayers. The Bible classes have also been well attended, especially those for the Jewish women. The Sabbath-school is flourishing, and the children have a fairly good knowledge of the Scriptures, and have learned by heart a great number of verses.

Temperance Notes.

MISS MALLET having resigned the secretaryship of the Young Abstinents' Union, Miss Salmon has accepted the vacant post.

The autumnal meetings of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union will this year be held at Dover, from September 26 to October 1.

The Bishop of London gave an "At Home" at Fulham Palace to the delegates attending a National Conference of Temperance Workers.

The Women's Total Abstinence Union has now removed to 4, Ludgate hill, the new building erected by the Temperance Permanent Building Society.

Drunkenness is said to be alarmingly on the increase in Russia. In St. Petersburg drunken people have been arrested wholesale, and set at liberty when sober.

"Wings," for August, contains much good and useful matter, illustrated by a portrait and sketch of Mrs. J. T. Rae, who also gives an article on "The Guild of Good Life."

It is said that clubs are becoming "tied," as well as public-houses. In localities where no more licences can be obtained clubs have been established, and supply the liquors of particular brewers and wine-merchants.

A Temperance Cottage Hospital, established at Loughton, Essex, has closed its first year of successful work. The patients came from all parts, and while some at first pined for alcohol, after a few days on a fruit and vegetable diet, with a plentiful supply of nerve-strengthening wheatenade, the craving disappeared.

A question more than once raised during the sittings of the Royal Commission has been whether a magistrate's clerk who is interested in the liquor traffic should advise in licensing cases. At Rhyl, on Monday, objection was taken to the magistrate's clerk advising the bench on the occasion, as he was the owner of a hotel, the licensee of which was that day to answer a summons charging him with contravening the Welsh Sunday Closing Act.

The annual report of the National Temperance League looks back on the forty years which have passed since its formation, and traces the advance of temperance opinion and practice in every direction. The work of the past year in the Provinces and in London itself is reviewed, with a glance at the Parliamentary deadlock. The pledge-signing crusade resulted in many accessions to the temperance ranks. The financial returns are fairly satisfactory.

A man charged in a London police-court with selling drink without a licence pleaded that as he was the son of a soldier who fought in the Peninsular wars, he was by a statute passed in 1816 entitled to sell without a licence. Such an Act was really passed in that year for relief of the soldiers returning from the wars, and included their wives and children, but it was repealed in 1873. The defendant argued that the repealing Act expressly declared that it should not affect any right or title already acquired. The defendant had been exercising his supposed right for twenty-nine years. The magistrate, holding that the Act had been repealed, inflicted a nominal fine. Notice of appeal was given.

Requests for Prayer.—That the military camps at Kilcooley and co. Kilkenny may during the manoeuvres be blessed through the spiritual efforts made among the troops.

The Bessbrook Homes for Sandwich-Men have concluded their summer camp at the seaside, held through the month of July. They have been favoured with splendid weather, and it has been a very happy time for all concerned. Forty-one men have spent one week's holiday, fifteen have had two weeks, while two have spent three weeks. On the Sunday evenings the large tent has been crowded to overflowing, while the villagers have listened eagerly to the testimonies of the men. We heartily thank our friends who have most kindly assisted us in this enterprise. Without their help we could not have carried it through.

The Bible League.—A most encouraging conference was held at the Y.W.C.A., Torquay, on 28th and 29th ult. Devotional meetings were conducted each morning. Illustrated lectures by the honorary secretary of the League, Rev. John Tuckwell, on "Genesis and the Babylonian Monuments compared," occupied attention each afternoon, and the evening gatherings were given up to addresses on the Full Inspiration of the Bible. The speakers were Revs. A. A. Isaacs, Talbot Greaves, J. Nisbet Wallace, Ed. Lombe, John Tuckwell, and N. W. Thomlinson, and Mr. Levi Powell. A deep impression was made as to the need of testimony in view of the erroneous teaching of the Higher Criticism, and several new members were enrolled. Communications may be addressed to Mr. A. H. Carter, 1, Studley-villas, Hounslow, W.

The Christian.

To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12 Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IT was pleasant to see the crowds on Bank Holiday going out in the early part of the day; it was not so pleasant to see many of them on the return journey in the evening. They were too often drawn by horses that were jaded and worn out; it had been the hardest day in all the year for the animals. And not for them only; the railway men were terribly overworked. One of them, a platform inspector at London Bridge, went home at half-past two, told his wife that the work was killing him, and a few hours later was found dead in bed. One of the jurymen at the inquest thought that extra men ought to be employed. To make a fine Bank Holiday move smoothly, there ought to be a much larger staff of men employed at all great centres of activity, and even then the pleasure of the many will, as usual, be purchased at the cost of the few. But it need not be the cost of too much pain. A correspondent writes:—

At one of the great railway stations a lad of fourteen told me at 8.30 p.m. that he was tired; he came on at 5 a.m., and probably would not leave till 11 that night. He earned eleven shillings a week, nothing extra for overtime.

The Bank Holidays are profitable times for the companies: why should they be times of drudgery for their employés?

Canon Barnett has been exposing an evil connected with the giving of "days in the country" to East-end children, on the ground of mischief caused to them by over-exertion, bad feeding, and overcrowding. The rector of Bermondsey has been roused to defend the practice, which is so growingly popular, and suggests that Canon Barnett must be speaking of ill-managed treats and outings. It is clear, at least, that these excursions need to be very carefully organised, due preparations made to meet all the needs of the little ones, and a watchful oversight kept over their sports and meals, so that all excesses may be avoided. When so safeguarded there is no reason why they may not be made the means of great and memorable benefits to soul and body. A happy memory is itself a benefit; and a child to whom such kindness is shown must be more accessible to higher influences and teachings such as should always be linked with a day in the country for the poor.

The visit of the great Chinese statesman Li Hung Chang to this country is attracting much attention. There is a striking character-sketch in the current Century Magazine from one who knew him well, and who gives a sketch of his career. It is good to hear that though the most distinguished general his country has produced during this century, he is a man of peaceful disposition; it is better still to find that his impression of the various Governments of Europe is that, though armed to the teeth, they all dread the outbreak of war, and that consequently there is small prospect of hostilities for a long time. Best of all are the references to his attitude towards Christianity. Heathen as he is, and intensely superstitious, he has, since the conclusion of the war, expunged from the Chinese Code all restrictions on the propagation of the Christian faith. In response to a vote of sympathy from Japanese Christians after the attempt on his life at Tokio, he sent this message:—"Say to the American nation from me to send more missionaries for the schools and hospitals, and I hope to be in a position both to aid them and protect them."

His Excellency is certainly seeing a good deal of the material side of our greatness; if war ships, soldiers, mills, manufactories, etc., make a nation, then he knows what makes ours. But there are invisible things which embody themselves in quite other forms which have had a good deal more to do with giving us strength and dominion. He knows too much of Englishmen not to know that. And something, we believe, will be done by the Bible Society and the great missionary societies to impress him with the fact that we have a religion which to many of us is more precious than all worldly possessions. This opportunity may be so utilised as to win friends for the Gospel and a freer course for it in China.

The present water famine in the East-End of London, and a serious famine in part of Central India, should remind us of two things—of our ultimate dependence upon God for rain and fruitful seasons, and of the necessity there is to use all our supplies carefully. The pain and loss of the poor, when water fails, are serious additions to their already heavy burdens, not calculable in the whole, but only too well known in each humble dwelling.

The Westminster Review has an article on "Our Young Soldiers in India" which is worth the attention of other than the military authorities. It appears that the most of our soldiers who die in India die young, and that the cause is typhoid fever. The improvements made in the cantonments have not served to diminish this deadly disease; it has, on the contrary, increased. The causes are said to lie in the susceptibility of our young men and to the fact that the condition of India is terribly insanitary; water is impure and the soil is saturated with filth. Our seasoned soldiers, men of twenty-five, are proof against the scourge. The suggestion is made that no man under that age should be sent to India. There is surely a suggestion here for our missionary societies which suffer most by the deaths of their young men. Has not the time come when they should appoint someone to inquire into the causes of the deaths of missionaries in various lands, the ages of the men, and other related points? If there is such grave danger to young men under twenty-five, why not send men older than that?

Mr. William Bryan, who has suddenly sprung into such prominence as the possible President of the United States, is a profoundly religious man of spotless record, whose life has been a record of hard work, simplicity, and perseverance. He is blessed with a good wife, who devotes herself to her husband and children with whole-hearted love, and has been his helpmeet in all his struggles. He is a Presbyterian, and has always been a leader in the movement of the young people in the Church. His chances for immediate election are very uncertain, but he comes in a noble succession of great and religious men who have risen to the highest office in the United States.

In view of the election of the American President, a brave article is published in The Century, entitled "The Portrait of a Public Enemy," in which an unsparing attack is made on "the party boss," the most deadly enemy of popular government. He does without permission what he would never be allowed to do were he to ask for the people's consent. There is no longer any doubt about what the "bosses" do; everybody admits knowledge of it, "but few express indignation about it." This is a bad symptom, and only too vividly reminds us of the way in which our own elections are "bossed" at home by party men, who too often represent all the lowest and basest elements in our body politic, while the rest of the community express no indignation. At the present time, while an election seems far away, the public-house interest has not forgotten that it will in due time come, and we may be sure that every seat will be sought for "the trade." Meanwhile, the Licensing Commission has been hearing evidence, and the drunkenness of our land spreads on every side.

It has been pointed out that whereas, in the first century of Christian missions, a large portion of the work has been done among the lowest tribes, the church is now face to face with the ancient religions of the East, and has a very different and much more difficult task on hand. It is different in form, no doubt, but whether more difficult in fact may be questioned. The conflict has been with the animalism of men, but now it will be with the sins of the spirit, with subtle theories as to God and man and nature; yet underneath the one and the other lies the obstruction in the condition of the heart. The carnal heart, and not mere habits of life or modes of thought, constitutes the supreme hindrance to the truth in every nation. But even taking the intellectual difficulties at their worst, they need cause no anxiety. At the beginning the Gospel grappled with the most rampant sins of the flesh, and with the sins of the spirit, and with the ablest pagan thinking the world has ever known—and conquered. What can Benares, or Calcutta, or Pekin, or Tokio, put forward that Jerusalem, Athens, Corinth, and Antioch, did not also oppose to Jesus Christ? Yet they opposed in vain.

The desire for food is the first and most imperative passion of living things, and it is the last that survives before death. Nature will have no creature in her family that is not hungry; those that refuse to eat she kills. The soul, too, has its hunger; it longs for its appropriate food, it yearns for truth, for fellowship with God, for the grace that God alone can give. But the soul shows a greater power of cheating itself as to what is good for it, than the body. If we eat poison we die out of hand, and if what we eat is not nourishing it speedily breeds exhaustion and disease.

Our spiritual nature, however, would seem to be capable of indefinite self-deception. It can put on an appearance of vitality when it is either starving for want of its appropriate nourishment, or actually absorbing poison into its heart. Men spend their money on "that which is not bread," and their "labour on that which satisfieth not." A spiritual awakening is therefore needful in order that the true hunger may be stimulated for the sources of true delight and life. Not till it is filled with a passionate desire for purity and holiness does it even begin to live; not till its hunger takes the shape of the Psalmist's cry, "As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God," will it be prepared for what God has in store for it. How to quicken spiritual hunger and thirst, then, should be the constant prayer of every true believer.

"How many are there," exclaims one of our most powerful preachers, "who, all their lives, have substituted criticism of the Gospel as ministered by us poor preachers—be it approving or disapproving criticism—for obedience to the Christ and acceptance of his salvation." The disapproving criticism claims to justify itself by its own superiority; but how could a man receive a message who sits carping at the form in which it is spoken? Pride hinders. But perhaps approving criticism is the more deadly form of the two, because complacency with the preacher and his way of putting things may so easily be mistaken for delight in his message and faith in the Master who sent him. How often a minister's heart hungers for one word that should show there is a spiritual apprehension of the truth and a sincere faith in Jesus; bushels of compliments are only bushels of chaff; that one word would be a grain of wheat.

The blessing of youth is joy; of mature life, is work; of old age, is peace. How to sanctify joy so that it may be pure and sinless; how to redeem and hallow work so that it may be noble and unselfish; how to beautify and steady peace, so that it may at last swing like a vessel in the harbour of Divine light and love—these are the gifts of true religion. Without it, youth rushes madly into excitements that intoxicate and yet do not satisfy; maturity misdirects its energies, and labours for that which is not bread; old age slips into its grave in false security or helpless despair. It is thus profitable for all ages as well as both worlds, and is a perfect gift from the perfect Giver. All that we need is wisdom to ask for the grace appropriate to our true need and growth, and a heart that can receive perfectly what is offered so freely. So will our youth be filled with pure ideals, our maturity with noble performance, and our eventide shall be full of light.

"The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." This is a perfect epitome of the life of Jesus Christ, the Gospel in miniature. It gives us the title by which He most loved to call Himself, which makes Him most entirely one with us in our common human lot. It suggests the true purpose and quality of the life He lived—its wondrous self-sacrifice and abounding love. And it puts before us the crowning achievement of that life, the upgiving of Himself for the redemption of the sinful race with which He had identified Himself in all except its sin. Like the burning glass which concentrates a scattered sunbeam on one bright spot, we have here in one verse the essence of all that Jesus was and did on our behalf; and it also brings it all home to us as the pattern to which we ought to conform. "Even as" He was to all, "so" we must be in his service, achieving greatness by humility, and realising our individual salvation in the channels of holy unselfish ministries for the good of others.

One of the dangers we should most guard ourselves against is a benumbing sense of familiarity with the great realities of the Gospel. By repetition the mightiest truths become truisms; their edge and their magnitude grow dull and meaningless through constant contact with the mind. It is a sad fact that those who live in the loveliest scenery are often least sensitive to its charm. It is the city-dweller who visits the mountains and the sea for a week or two in the year who appreciates their beauty and glory best. When we see only one or two sunsets in a twelvemonth our hearts are transfigured by their beauty.

Is this then to be regarded as a reason for less familiarity with the wonder of the Gospel? By no means. For there is a way of so living under its power and influence that ever deepens its hold on our hearts and its fascination for our minds. If we study its mysteries with a believing soul, it will unfold ever newer and deeper meanings; if we practice its principles and its commands with a loving obedience, they will loom ever grander and nobler before our eyes. "He that willeth to do the will" of God "shall know of the doctrine," and his knowledge being transformed into life, will prove ever more and more satisfying. When our hands and feet are consecrated in the service of the Most High, his truth, like the mountains, will be a landscape whose charm can never fail to uplift, and to inspire and to console.

We have received from different quarters copies of a new magazine entitled "Consecration," circulating in the North of England, edited by Mr. W. Nightingale, a Primitive Methodist Evangelist. It contains doctrines which we think the Primitive Methodist body will certainly disown. The "Christian Scotsman," in a special issue entitled "Strange Fire among the Primitive Methodists," exposes these false doctrines on the fundamental verities of the Gospel. While thanking Mr. Robertson for his outspoken faithfulness, we could have wished that the fortiter in re had been more evidently accompanied by the suaviter in modo.

Bibles in Hotels.—Madame E. de Ramsay writes from Wilhelmsro:—"May I put before earnest holiday-seekers a work begun by me twenty years ago, and much blessed, viz., putting Bibles in hotel bedrooms in the most common languages? Younger travellers willing to take up work will find such happiness in it, coming in contact with people in a way never dreamt of. The enclosure of a Bible Reading Union card or notice is also of value; we have got unlikely members through this means."

American Bible Society.—The circulation of Bibles and portions issued by this society continues to increase. These are mainly distributed through the agency of the American Presbyterian Mission, and are all, or nearly all in Arabic. Bible circulation among Mohammedans in Egypt has few restrictions. The following figures show how the work has expanded within the last thirty years:—From 1865 to 1874 the number of copies distributed was 6630; from 1875 to 1884 it was 46,586; and from 1885 to 1894 it was 116,474.

"Much More."

A STORY OF GOD'S PROVIDENCE.

WE are told in Holy Writ that the things which happened unto the Israelites in their wilderness journey "happened unto them for examples, and for our admonition," or teaching, and no less does God intend the experiences of his children in the present day to be helpful to their fellow-believers. It is to encourage some of his tried, and it may be tempted ones, that I desire to put on record the following narrative of his goodness, every word of which can be vouched for as fact.

Mr. K—, a Christian man of business in London, falling into ill-health, was advised to adopt an outdoor country life, and acting on his physician's recommendation, determined to turn farmer. For this purpose he took a farm in Kent. Unacquainted with the practical details of such work, and commencing it at a time, too, of great agricultural depression, it was uphill work, and with a large family to provide for, there were necessarily many anxious moments. Still, aided by a brave Christian wife, all these difficulties seemed likely to be surmounted when a serious and unexpected trial befel them. On rising one morning in the early springtime, Farmer K— found that a dog or dogs had, during the night, ravaged his flock, worrying and killing young lambs to the extent of the value of some £25. This was no light matter, and was a pretty severe test to the faith of both husband and wife; but God through it intended that they should know and prove his fatherly love and care in a manner never to be forgotten, and learn that He, who rained manna from heaven to feed his people of old, had not exhausted his supplies, but had yet unbounded resources at his command from which to provide for his dear children. The summer passed after this loss, and in the early autumn great was Farmer K—'s amazement one morning to see the very field in which the lambs had been killed white as though a sudden snowstorm had silently covered it with a spotless mantle. What could it be? Mushrooms! Yes, mushrooms! There they were, a harvest waiting to be gathered, which they had neither planted nor watered, on which truly they had bestowed no labour. So early in the season mushrooms were scarce, and they readily found a market at prices varying from 21s. per bushel to 10s., as the season advanced. Help had to be hired to gather them quickly, and this gave employment to others at a time when work was scarce.

Finally, when the net result came to be calculated, the proceeds were found to be some £70, nearly three times the value of the lost lambs. Everywhere where the worried animals had been driven, there, even to the very edge of the pond, did mushrooms spring up. What a rebuke to distrust and anxious care. Oh! burdened, downcast children of God, do not let us repeat the sin of Israel tempting God and limiting the Holy One of Israel. Do not let us in unbelief ask the old question, "Can God?" He can! He will provide; it may not be in thy way, it may not be in thy time, but He will never fail thee, nor forsake thee. Some may wish to ask if the mushrooms grew again another year. No; never since has the peculiar experience recurred; a few have appeared each season as a reminder probably, but that is all. God does not often repeat his unusual providences. L. T.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for He shall save his people from their sins.
Unto you is born... a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.
Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.
He was manifested to take away our sins.
Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.
We trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men.
Acts xiii. 23, Matt. i. 21, Luke ii. 11, John i. 29, 1 John iii. 5, Acts iv. 12, 1 Tim. iv. 10.

Personal Work and its Reward.

AT no period in the history of the Church has she had anything like the large number of earnest workers who have yielded themselves to God as at the present day. She has all the needed appliances for preaching the Gospel, instructing and edifying believers, teaching the young, and bringing in the outcast. Yet, a large proportion of our population, especially among the working class, are living in utter neglect of religious privileges.

The tendency of modern life is to concentrate human beings in the great centres of population. Country parishes are being comparatively deserted. Large cities grow, year by year, more vast and unwieldy. In the very neighbourhood of our churches there are thousands of men and women who are despising the great salvation, and never enter a church door. There are also tremendous forces in human nature which threaten the very existence of society; and when vast masses of human beings are brought together, with no deeper fear than that of the law and the police, with nothing like a clear conviction of an impending judgment and an endless future, anything is possible, if only the opportunity occurs.

"The Church, therefore, must do what she can in the strength of the Lord among those who have fallen from much that is good, for her own preservation, as well as a matter of loyalty to her Head. We dare not, without any effort to win men to God, live amid thousands of perishing souls. Something is expected of us, and we must do something. We must get nearer to our outcast brothers and sisters so as to touch their life with sympathy, and inspire it with hope. It is our duty and privilege, as Christians, to bring the light of the Gospel into the homes of the careless, to get into personal contact with those who are living in the world without God, and to realise how beautiful and precious the human soul is by trying to save it.

What is specially needed is that all the work of the Church should be animated and sustained by the character and the power of the Holy Spirit. Whenever Christians have a faint realisation of the presence and energy of the Holy Spirit their work becomes ineffectual. In every emergency, in every Christian work and effort, we must pray for the abundant grace of the Spirit, without which we can do nothing, with which we can do all things. If we look up and press the prayer, as we seek to bring men to Christ, "Come from the four winds, O breath! breathe upon these dead that they may live," we have no reason to fear that we shall labour in vain in the Lord.

While all this is true, the question remains, What is the best way to deal with our lapsed population? How can men and women who know the preciousness of Christ, and are realising in their hearts the power of the Holy Spirit, get alongside of those who are perishing in sin? It is not difficult to say, although it may be very hard to do. What is needed, is on the part of Christians with those who have fallen away from much that is good. Merely handing in a tract at a door, and asking the inmates to attend a meeting, does not usually come to very much. A promise to attend a meeting not proceeding from a quickened conscience is worth nothing, and it is foolish to spend labour in exacting promises in these circumstances. We want men and women touched with the sympathy of Christ, and exhibiting the love of God, to go to the homes of the poor or the careless, not merely or mainly to ask them to come to meetings, but to urge them in earnest to accept of Christ.

If we could only get in all our congregations a sufficiently large number of Christian people with tact, and earnestness, and an eye for the importance of spiritual things, to take an interest in a few families apiece, such as a physician takes in his patients, we should soon see better days. To a physician, who lives for his profession, who is the most interesting? The one who needs him most. The case haunts him day and night, it occupies his attention, and absorbs his thinking. If we in a similar way thought of, prayed for, and visited those who are known to us to be perishing in sin, we should soon see a company of healed men and women coming out of our closes to praise God in the courts of his house.

No doubt, it would be hard self-denying work which no one need think to do with gloved hands; but set about and pursued earnestly and lovingly, it is possible, and with God's blessing can be performed. What is more, it will be found that very often personal dealing is needed to break the reserve that hangs about our lives, and let all the wealth of God's grace which has been gathering in one humble consecrated heart pour forth into another which is waiting empty and hungry all the time. It is when we get near to perishing men and say what may be their Word of Life that we feel that self-sacrifice is a privilege and a joy because done for Christ. This is also what we may call of all earnest work for God. Those who go down among the poor and the careless, and try to understand and help them, are, as a rule, the happiest people. When men are filled with the Holy Ghost they will look on their fellow-creatures with new eyes; they will see in the worst of them souls to be loved and redeemed. That is not all. In such work the heart expands and religion grows more simple and healthy. We are blessed just as we bless. In moral and spiritual things no man is or ever was impoverished by expenditure; no man ever was or is enriched by hoarding. They who give up enjoyment that they may serve God, and man for his sake, receive an hundredfold even in this present life. There are no higher emotions in this world than those which throb in the Christian soul when the wanderer has been brought back to God; for the humblest Christian worker, who is really pained with the sin of men and rejoices in their salvation, is feeling, in his degree, the very passion which bore the Saviour of the world through his sufferings, and which has throbbed from eternity in the heart of God.

Nothing but the knowledge of God's love, taking such possession of a man that his one wish and thought in life is to glorify God, can make him spiritually strong and happy. To be working with God, however humbly; to have a part in that service, which strong and patient men and women in all time have done; to be active and brave in some part of the great field—what strength and joy comes to the worker! To every such worker the Master will say, when the working-day is over, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

JOHN R. BRUCE.

Dealing with Inquirers.

By J. S. HARRISON.

WHEN dealing with the anxious I always use the Bible, and if in my meetings I find persons talking to inquirers without the Book I ask them to be good enough to use it. I do not want the inquirer to rest on what I say, or what someone else thinks, or what anybody feels, but rather to rely on what the Lord says: "To the law and to the testimony!" Sometimes, when in the presence of a large number of inquirers, I have had Bibles given into the hands of each person, so that the passages referred to could be followed. The faith of inquirers must stand not in the wisdom of man, but on the Word of God.

If we are to win souls to Christ, we must seek God's guidance. Whenever I am called upon to deal with an anxious soul, I feel perfectly helpless; so I silently lift up my heart to God in prayer. It is astonishing what blunders are made in this work, and few appear to have the wisdom to lead souls straight to Christ. A minister once said to me, "If anyone comes forward, I shall not know what to say to them." Directing souls to Christ, which at first sight appears so easy, is, after all, a difficult matter, and I believe it needs a special training, a man only gets clever at it by practice. If a man wants to learn how to shoot, he begins by shooting. and if he wants to become proficient, he keeps on shooting. If you want to get souls to Christ, go at it, and keep at it; and as you go on, you will become an adept in the blessed work. We need to lift up our hearts for guidance in each individual case.

My way is to ask the anxious soul plainly, "What do you want?" Perchance the answer will be, "I want happiness; I want to be happy like the rest of these people." "Well," I reply, "I cannot wait to talk to you. I thought you wanted to be saved; that you were tired of sin. Of course, if you get Him you will be happy. But is it Christ or merely a selfish happiness that you are wanting?" On putting a question of this kind, you will find that a great many persons who come forward are not really anxious about their souls' salvation, and it is a mere waste of time to put the way of life before them. In such cases we should rather labour to show them that they are lost, and that they cannot save themselves or help Christ to save them.

One day I sent a friend to talk with an inquirer, and I thought he was doing so. I afterwards asked him how he got on. He said it was a very interesting case—the inquirer wanted to know who Melchizedek was. "Then," I said, "did you talk for three-quarters of an hour as to who Melchizedek was? I think I would have got the inquirer on his knees, and have tried to get him anxious." After I have asked inquirers what they want, I put the question, "Do you know of any hindrance to your becoming a Christian?" If they say, "Yes," then I ask, "Are you willing for Christ to save you from it?"

A man may be engaged in some business calling in which he has to be untruthful; and he will never find peace until he is willing for Christ to give him the power to let it go. One Sunday evening, when preaching at the Polytechnic, I conversed with a young man, who, in answer to my question as to there being any hindrance, said, "Yes; there is a hindrance. I shall have to give up my situation." He was a butcher, and his master sold foreign meat for English; and he had to tell so many lies about it that he could not be a Christian and keep his situation. I then asked him, "Are you willing to give up your situation, and trust God to give you another? You certainly cannot be a Christian and go on lying every day." I assured him that Christ had redeemed our bodies, and would care for him, and give him another place. He said he would trust Christ, and so far as I know he did trust Him.

Letters from S. Africa.—28.

ONE other Mission in Capetown I must mention, that for Destitute Men, at the Highlands, a well-situated house, surrounded by several acres of plantation, overlooking the town and the Bay. It was purchased some years ago by Mr. Newberry as a resting-place for men out of work, and a place of reform for men who had succumbed to the great temptation, drink. It was formerly managed by Mr. Phillips, whose work on behalf of these men led to its purchase. But after some varied and often remarkable providential experiences it came under the superintendence of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis. The former is in uncertain health, and the responsibility falls almost entirely on Mrs. Lewis, a sister of Olive Schreiner, and a lady, like most of her family, of marked individuality. She is a warm-hearted Christian, and deeply interested in the welfare of the seventy or eighty men, some of whom worthily requite her motherly care and kindness, and turn to God; others seemed to me of the class that never did well at home and who do as badly, or worse, in the Colony.

The dormitories and workshops are chiefly of corrugated iron, a very useful material for temporary dwelling-places and warehouses, convenient uglinesses, which, in all stages of construction and destruction, are at once advantages and penalties throughout South Africa.

I have already mentioned "The Political Situation," by Olive Schreiner and her husband C. S. Cronwright-Schreiner—a paper read by the latter in the Town Hall, Kimberley, August 20, 1895, and interesting as showing, before the recent turbulent events, the circumstances which were then leading to the fortunately abortive Raid.

The paper asks and answers two questions:—1. What is the cause of the steady and persistent Retrogressive Movement which has marked our political existence during the last years? 2. How is that Retrogressive Movement to be stayed? The retrogression is manifested: In a narrowed electoral basis. In an endeavour to legalise corporal punishment for the smallest offences towards master or mistress—a recurrence to slavery under a new name; in the Glen Grey Act, which compels even the self-supporting and industrious native to work for the white man for a certain time every year, whether he will or no, and though it be to the neglect of his own cultivated lands; in the alienation from the people of public lands, minerals, precious stones, and even public works, by a small band of Speculators and Monopolists. "Not as in other countries has the Monopolist risen up among us as a growth of our own; he comes from a foreign clime and sweeps bare the virgin land before him like the locust; and, like the locust, leaves nothing for his successors but the barren earth." In the taxation of the necessities of life to an appalling extent (wheat 38 per cent., flour 59, unrefined sugar 107, butter 20, cheese 43, candles 59, paraffin 202 per cent.), while diamonds (forming a monopoly of which Mr. Cecil Rhodes is the head) and the intoxicating liquors, inferior in quality, so largely produced here, are allowed to go untaxed. In every item of this Retrogressive Movement the name of Mr. Cecil Rhodes is writ large, and I cannot be surprised that people unconnected with the retrogression should have told me that they would rather continue under the Boer Government than fall into the hands of the Financier, the Capitalist, and the Monopolist.

I scarcely think that the demoralisation contained in the principle that "every man has his price" has been adequately estimated either in South Africa or in England.

Olive Schreiner and Mr. Cronwright-Schreiner do not profess to be Christian believers, as I understand the term; but in this utterance they take more Scriptural, and therefore more enlightened, views on the racial question, whether as between European and native, or Dutch and English, as well as on many other subjects, than do many who profess to be Evangelical Christians. Olive Schreiner owes, I doubt not, to her early Christian training that which is righteous in her thinking and gracious in her endeavours to establish the principle of doing to others as we would be done by. I must leave my readers to study the remedy for the Retrogressive Movement in the book itself. The ultimate remedy can only be the reign of Christ.

One of my friends at Lovedale, the Rev. D. D. Stormont, writes: "I have read the Recollections of Reginald Radcliffe with great interest, for it recalls to my mind, and makes more vivid again, the traditions of the Revival of 1859.

"You have learned the public marks of grief that our country has shown over the foundering of the Drummond Castle. Many believe—and among a certain class of the common people the belief is strong—that God is sending troubles and plagues upon our land on account of the sins of racial animosity and economic greed. Doubtless, our misfortunes will become blessings if only they serve to curb, in mutual sympathy, the unrestrained utterances of those who play upon racial hatred and contempt."

I confess that I was one of those common people when I was in South Africa, and I am so still. The hatred and contempt manifested towards the coloured races is a crime against our common humanity, and a perpetual insult to the Creator and Preserver of men, whom He has made of one blood, to dwell on all the face of the earth. Even a heathen poet said, "For we are his offspring." And God is jealous for his offspring. (See Acts xvii. 22-31.)

R. COPE MORGAN.

Pharisee and Publican.

By REV. GEORGE COATES.

ONE morning, somewhat early, I was aroused by a knock at the door, and going to see what was wanted found a young woman weeping. In answer to my inquiry as to what was the matter, she said, "Oh, sir, will you come and see a young man? He is my husband, and the doctor says he's dying." She told me where they lived, and shortly afterwards I found the house. It was a working man's home, and in bed lay the husband, evidently at the end of a rapid decline.

"Well," said I, "here you are, then!" "Yes, here I am, but I don't think that I shall be here much longer. I've kept thinking that I should get better, but they tell me now that I shall have to go."

"Well, you know, having to go is the lot of us all; but to whom are you going, and to what?" "I think that's all right," was his reply; "I'm hoping that I am going to heaven."

I told him that I was glad to hear that, and that there was no doubt of his getting there if his hope was centred in Christ Jesus, such hope being the anchor of the soul. I was a little surprised as he replied, "Well, you see, I never did anyone any harm, and I've tried to pay my way and be honest, and I think that as I've done my best, God will not cast me out at last."

"But," said I, "do you feel that you are a sinner?"

"No, I don't."

"Look here, my friend," said I, "God's Word says that you're a sinner, and when it becomes a question as to your word or his, I'll take his before yours." At this he got cross, and said, "You may think what you like, but you won't convince me that after the sort of life I've lived, I'm a sinner."

With that I got my Bible and began to read—"For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." "There is none righteous, no, not one." And then I asked what he thought of that. "Then I'm a sinner after all," was his reply.

"And now, listen again," said I. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Then such a look of pain crossed his face as he said in sorrowful tones, "If that's the case, I'm a sinner, and I'm lost."

"Well, what are you going to do now?" was my next question. The tears came into his eyes as he said, "I don't know; I suppose it will just have to be as it is."

"Yes," I replied, "and this is how it is. 'For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost,' and 'the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin.'" Again and again I repeated the words, then prayed with him, and left him.

I called again in the evening, and found him sinking rapidly, but there was such a glad look on his face. On my asking him how he was, he said, "I'm only a poor sinner, and I'm dying, and am lost, but trusting in the blood of Jesus." When I called the next morning, I found that he had gone to join the countless host who had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Quite different was another case—that of a young man whom I found bowed down in one of the pews in a country chapel, in the West Riding. On my asking him if he was saved, he said, "No, and I think I never shall be." "Why not?" "Why, because I'm such a big sinner." "Not too big," was my answer. "Well, I'm trying to be a bit better, and when I'm a bit more fit, I'll come and be saved."

I asked him if he thought he would get better by keeping back, and he said he thought he should. I quoted the verse:—

"Come, ye weary, heavy-laden,
Lost and ruin'd by the fall,
If you tarry till you're better,
You will never come at all.
Not the righteous,
Sinners, Jesus came to call."

As he still hung back, I said to him, "Now, look here, you work in a coalpit; suppose that when you come home to-morrow, all black with coal dust, you sit by the fire, and when your wife says, 'Now, lad, get thee washed,' you say, 'I'm too dirty to wash just yet, so I'll go and sit in the coal house till I'm a bit cleaner,' what would she think?"

"Why, she'd think I was a fool, 'cause I should niver get cleaner sitting ith coil boil." "Then, is it not just as foolish to stay in the filth of sin, in the vain hope of getting better?"

He soon afterwards found his way to the front, when he earnestly sought and soon found the Saviour; and on my speaking to him before he left the chapel, he said, "Bless 'th Lord, sir, I'm wshed cleaner na' than ivver I was i' my life afore."

The Christian Lifeboat Crew held last week its monthly muster. Miss Child's absence was much felt. The motto for the month is, "For our citizenship is in heaven" (Phil. iii. 20, R.V.). Addresses were given by Messrs. Jay, Blaauw, Farrar, and Luff.

A Notable Mark of Progress has been made in the mission field occupied by Rev. P. Milne, in the New Hebrides. His Christian natives have undertaken to support their own native teachers. These number between thirty and forty. The full amount for their salaries for the past year has been provided on the several islands.

Pastor Khamis.—Rev. W. H. Essery, of the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society, writes to us:—"God lent the Church an axe." So a native preacher in Uganda spoke of another who had been called home—a preacher of ability and character, Rev. Nicodemo Sebawato, one of Mackay's converts, we believe. "God lent the Church an axe," said Rev. Yonasani Kaidzi in his funeral sermon; "the axe had done well its work and now God asked for it back." Rev. W. A. Shedd, of Oroomiah, writes:—"Pastor Khamis is free at last, but he can hardly be safe unless he can escape from Turkey. Our Society has been doing its best for the aged pastor by its influence at Oroomiah, and we greatly rejoice at this deliverance. The pastor's name has been much before the House of Commons and many will be glad to hear the result so far."

THE JOURNEY TO YATUNG.

ON March 27th, we started on good hill ponies along the Lebong road, where we had a lovely view of the beautifully shaded valleys below. Entering the Rungeet road we passed through a large tea-garden where we saw the women picking the tea-leaves into wicker creels. They looked so pretty in their coloured dresses against the dark green shrubs. In twenty-four hours from the time of picking, the tea can now be dried, separated, and packed. The Bombax or cotton-tree enclosing its white cotton in bright crimson pods looked brilliant against a background of faded yellow bamboo. The mango is in blossom, the wild plantain laden with bananas; and the artemisia, or wormwood, grows in abundance on the hill slopes.

After riding five miles and walking two, we reached Dadamtam, 2500 feet high, having made a descent of 4000 feet. Here we stayed for the night in a Dāk Bungalow (rest-house) built by the officials for travellers, for which passes had been secured.

Next morning, as the descent was steep, we walked the first part of the way, and then rode through a thickly wooded valley, at the end of which a lovely view of the meeting of the waters of the Rungeet and Teesta rivers is spread before us. A few steps further on we came to the bungalow at Teesta Suspension Bridge, which is only 710 feet above the level of the sea. It was very hot, so we rested till the coolies arrived before commencing the ascent to Kalimpong, which is at an altitude of 4000 feet. During our climb of 3290 feet we viewed with pleasure the cultivated terraced steppes of the hills around. A breeze sprung up, which was exhilarating after the hot valley.

As we rounded the spur of the mountain, the tall spire of the Macfarlane Memorial Church came in view. The people were returning from the weekly market. One old Lama stood still to watch us, a pitiable sight in his filth and rags. We rode through the Bazar and up the hill to Dr. Ponder's bungalow. Here we were cordially welcomed by Dr. and Mrs. Ponder, of the Church of Scotland Mission, who had kindly invited us to stay over Sunday. On the Sunday morning, I had the unspeakable joy of worshipping in the little church with the natives redeemed from amongst the heathen round about. There were about two hundred present. Rev. W. S. Sutherland preached in Nepali.

In the afternoon we attended the service in English, and heard a helpful sermon on the Bread of Life. In the evening we paid a visit to the little hospital, with its interesting patients, under the loving care of Dr. Ponder's sister, Miss Ponder, who is matron, and Miss Patterson, a trained nurse, from whom they hear the Gospel message.

On Monday we said good-bye to our kind host and hostess, and started for Pedong, a distance of thirteen miles. The road lay along a ridge on the mountain side, gradually ascending until we came to a thick wood, where the trees were beautiful, clad in verdant green leaves, intermingled with bright red berries; then we descended to Pedong, which stands at 4760 feet. On the way we passed by a Buddhist temple. Next day, after going down from Pedong over 3000 feet, we reached the Rushet-Chu (river), and crossed it into Sikkim. The scenery on the latter part of the road is rather bare, but the bungalow is beautifully situated, and just opposite is a richly-wooded mount.

On Wednesday we went on to Rangli Bridge, where, before crossing, I waited for Miss S. Taylor, who had taken a short cut, but was detained in inquiring for a coolie to take the place of the one who was knocked up. We had gone down 3000ft., and after passing through a valley we had an ascent before us of 5000ft. to Sedonchen. The scenery in the valley was superb. Luxuriant foliage overhung the quietly flowing river. A magnificent creeper which we had noticed all along our route grows here in great abundance. Its leaves are large and shiny, of a dark green colour, in shape something like the acanthus. The wild plaintain palm grew on the slopes, as also the wild raspberry cane, laden with ripe yellow fruit. Handsome birds with crimson plumage flew from tree to tree, while butterflies of many colours fluttered in the sun. The zigzag road up the precipitous mountain side was bordered by thick jungle. On arriving at Sedonchen we gladly took possession of the Dāk Bungalow with its two tiny rooms.

Next morning eleven of our coolies refused to go further on, as in their scanty clothing they dreaded the cold of the mountain-passes before us. So we had to leave some of our luggage to be forwarded later, which gave us afterwards no little trouble, and we were glad when it all reached us.

We ascended 5700 feet, to Lingtu, 13,000 feet. The rhododendrons here grow over 40 feet high, and have splendid crimson-and-white blossoms. The tall magnolia tree was covered with its white blossoms. The wild strawberry plant with its creamy blossoms and the sweet little primula dot the valley and hill slopes. The ice plant with its bright sea-green leaves we found on the mountain top.

Numbers of mules carrying wool in charge of Tibetan drivers passed us daily on the road. The tinkling of bells signals their approach, warning us to keep the inside of the narrow path, else with their load of 80lb. on each side they might easily hurl us over the khud (precipice).

We had been walking downhill leading our horses, and had just mounted when I noticed that my cape, kept for the chilly mountain breezes, was gone from the saddle. On trying to turn the horse on the narrow path, to go in search of it, he slipped backwards down the almost perpendicular slope of the mountain, but was stopped about seven feet down by a tree stump. Miss S. Taylor came to the rescue, and held the reins while I got off. We had to let the horse scramble up, and keep clear out of the way of his hoofs while we climbed up ourselves. We laughed heartily at the awkward situation, but realised the truth of the words, "He shall give his angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they shall bear thee up." The cape was recovered a short distance back, and we reached Gnatong in safety. The bungalow was occupied, but we were given the hut that used to be the officers' mess-room when the British troops were there. The caretaker bustled about to get good fires, etc., while we looked round the fort.

The snow is lying on the hills. On a hillock opposite is the little cemetery, the burial-place of a number of soldiers. Here also lie the earthly remains of Mr. Anders Jensen, a devoted member of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission, whom the Lord took to be with Himself last year. The Gnatong fort is at an elevation of 12,500 ft., and is now garrisoned by a small detachment of native police. The women of the place came in to look at us; we could but smile in return for their warm welcome and salaams.

In the morning we passed our little mission hut, which the Lord used as the birthplace of precious souls from amongst the British troops, and went up towards the Derby Downs, so called because the Derbyshire Regiment stormed and took it from the Tibetans in 1888, and on to the Tukola Pass.

On arriving in the Kapuk Valley, we had a good view of the glorious snow-covered mount Kinchinjunga, 28,000 feet. To the right is Bedentzo Lake and the left Kapuk Mountain.

From the foot of Tent Hill we began the steep ascent of the Jelap Pass, 14,340 feet. On reaching the summit we had a magnificent view of Tibet's grand mountains, and came from broiling in the valley to the sharp cutting winds, the ice and the snow, which was then only two feet in the drifts. The road was so slippery that we dismounted, as it was not pleasant to feel as if your horse was on skates. But we soon again got on our horses, as the slush caused by the melted snow was over ankle deep. When I had passed the worst part I quickly got down, as I saw that Miss S. Taylor had been thrown, and her horse was plunging in the deep snow trying to get a footing. For the remainder of the way we walked and leaped and jumped for about seven miles through snow and mud, and over stones and rocks. On the way down there were three mules' skeletons. Our previous experience of the road was bad enough, but to-day's journey was over a mere mule track, in some parts more like broken-down narrow stone steps than anything else I have seen; with occasional boulders and logs obstructing the way, and now and again a swamp.

Near Yatung we were met and warmly welcomed by dear Miss Annie Taylor, and one of her little Tibetan scholars.

BELLA FERGUSON.

Progress in Uganda.

SOME brief extracts from the private journal of Rev. J. Roscoe, one of the C.M.S. missionaries in Uganda, have been sent to us. They afford striking and encouraging glimpses of the remarkable work going on day by day in that country, of which Mr. Pilkington and Mr. Baskerville have also been speaking at many meetings lately in England. Mr. Roscoe's journal describes visits to only a few of the now numerous places where there are bands of native Christians:—

Feb. 17 (1896), Monday.—We came on here, Mulazi, arriving at 3.30. I suppose we have walked eighteen or twenty miles. There was a good congregation awaiting me, about seventy people, and we had a time of heart-searching and yielding. It was one of the most impressive meetings I have ever had, and I felt the Lord was dealing with us.

Feb. 23, Sunday.—A day of great blessing. After the morning service we had an after-meeting, and the Lord worked in the hearts of about a hundred to yield up all for Him.

Feb. 24, Monday.—Ngogwe to Mondo with Martin Hall. Matters seemed very bad at the latter place; drunkenness is killing the work. The teachers said a few people had come together, so we asked the Lord to work, and He did. It was dark by the time the first meeting was over; sixty or eighty were present. At the after-meeting some fifty stayed, and we saw and heard what the Lord can do. It was a holy time, and many witnessed and prayed who had never done so before. Praise God for it all! We have had glorious scenery over the hills by the lake to-day, but none like that in the little church in the dim light of one candle, when souls were before the Lord; there we had a glimpse into heaven.

Feb. 26, Wednesday.—Late last night I went out and could hear distinctly the roar of the Ripon Falls, which were said to be quite close, about two miles distant. We had a splendid service this morning, and numbers accepted the Lord's offer of life. After the service we went to see the Falls. We found they were about six miles distant, but they well repaid the journey. We approached them on a high plateau; our view was from the lake side. We then descended some 200 feet to the rocks over which the water was rushing. The rapids were fine, but the water rushing and boiling; the actual fall is not more than 10 to 15 feet; the width of the stream is about half a mile. There are three huge rocks in the centre dividing the fall into four streams; the volume of water is very great, and the roar tremendous. Below the Falls are more rapids and more falls. Hall wanted to have a swim in a large bay between the two falls. As he was preparing a huge hippo. put in an appearance, and a little later a large crocodile some fourteen feet long; this latter put an end to the bath. In the large Falls were numbers of huge fish swimming about on the surface, evidently awaiting smaller ones which were carried over the Falls. Divers were also at work; it was wonderful to see them in the boiling and seething water, how they were kept from being dashed to pieces was the marvel.

Feb. 27, Thursday.—We had a wonderful meeting this morning, about seventy or eighty present, and all evidently keen. After a time of silent prayer, I asked who were willing to consecrate themselves to God and give up the world's pleasures which are inconsistent with holiness? God worked in the people's hearts, and there were some glorious results. Their prayers were most touching.

Feb. 29, Saturday.—This morning I had a blessed time of quiet. At 9 o'clock we had a service, fully 100 present. At the after-meeting a great many came out for the Lord.

March 2, Monday.—We had an excellent service at 4.45, fully 100, and eighty at the after-meeting. The Lord worked, and we looked on.

March 3, Tuesday.—Qukainka's to Kikoku, fifteen miles. We arrived here at noon, and found the teachers had gone away to a place about slave-dealing, but we got a small congregation together, and had a glorious time. The Lord dealt very definitely with souls, and most of the congregation yielded themselves up.

March 8, Sunday.—Another day of great blessing. I preached this morning, and Hall this afternoon. We had the Lord's Supper after the morning service, and an after-meeting this evening. Some of the prayers were most remarkable ones: both men and women prayed.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 16.

"THE SPIRIT OF GOD CLOTHED ITSELF WITH ZECARIAH THE SON OF JEMOJADA THE PRIEST."—2 Chron. xxiv. 20 (R.V. marg.).

As we put on a cloak or dress, so does the Spirit of God, as it were, hide Himself in those who surrender themselves to Him, so that it is not they who speak and act, but He within them. Have you at any time been conscious of having become the clothing of the Holy Spirit? Remember that cloth or leather must yield itself easily to the movements of its wearer, and not less pliable and supple must we be to the Spirit of God.

When the Spirit of God is thus within us, and speaks or acts for us, we may expect, as Zechariah found it, to come into collision with the entire drift and current of society around us, and to incur odium and hatred. It cannot be otherwise, because the will of man is contrary to the will of God, to which it cannot be subject. Men do not like to be told that they cannot prosper because they have forsaken God, but we have no alternative but to witness against their sins. Does the Spirit clothe Himself with you, my friend, as you anticipate the work of to-day? Are you using Him, or is He to use you? Are you seeking to clothe yourself with his power for some personal ambition, or are you desirous that He should array Himself in you, so that the glory may evidently be his? In the agony of battle, when great deeds are to be done, no one stops to think of the uniform of the soldier, but only of the might beneath it. But for this you must be prepared to pay the cost, and be willing to cross the cherished purposes of men, as the Spirit of God through you witnesses against them. They stoned Zechariah at the command of the king; and years after the Lord Jesus referred to it, for no faithful martyr seals his witness with his blood without some quick glance of recognition from the Master, and some record on the imperishable tablets of his heart.

Amaziah had many good qualities, but he did not clearly see how impossible it was for Israel to be allied with Judah without invalidating the special Divine protection and care on which Judah had been taught to rely. We must understand that God cannot be in fellowship with us if we can tolerate fellowship with the ungodly. We must choose between the two. If we can renounce all creature aid, and trust simply in the eternal God, there is no limit to the victories He will secure; but if, turning from Him, we hold out our hand toward the world, we forfeit his aid. Oh, child of God, let not the army of Israel go with thee. Do not adopt worldly policy, methods, or partnership. However strong you make yourself for the battle in alliance with these, you will fail. Indeed, God Himself will make you fall before the enemy, that you may be driven back to Himself.

But you say that you have already entered into so close an alliance that you cannot draw back. You have invested your capital, you have gone to great expenditure. But it will be better to forfeit these than Him. Without these and with God beside you, you will be able to route Edom, and smite ten thousand men. Would that men knew the absolute deliverance which God will effect for those whose hearts are perfect towards Him.

The soldiers of Israel committed depredations on their way back. This was the result of the folly and sin of Amaziah's proposal. We may be forgiven, and delivered, and yet there will be after-consequences which will follow us from some ill-considered act. Let the young amongst us be especially watchful to seek only the partnership and communion of the Holy Ghost.

"HE WAS MARVELLOUSLY HELPED, TILL HE WAS STRONG, BUT WHEN HE WAS STRONG, HIS HEART WAS LIFTED UP TO HIS DESTRUCTION."—2 Chron. xxvi. 15, 16.

Great and marvellous are thy works, O God, that our soul knoweth right well; and we would show forth all thy marvellous works, and be glad and rejoice in them. Thou hast showed marvellous loving kindness. We would sing to thee for Thou hast done marvellous things. It is marvellous that Thou shouldst have set thy love upon us, that Thou shouldst have watched over our interests with unwearied care, that neither our sins or unbelief or declensions, have diverted thy love from us. Marvellous is the only word we can use, as we think of the condescension of the well-beloved Son to the manger-bed, of the agony and bloody sweat, of the cross and passion, and all for us who were his enemies. But it is most marvellous of all, that Thou hast made us children, heirs, and joint-heirs with Christ. To think that we shall shine as the sun in thy kingdom, that we are to sit upon his throne, and be included in that circle of love and life of which the throne of God and the Lamb is the centre! Surely the marvels of thy grace will only seem the greater when eternity with its boundless ages gives us time to explore them.

The danger, however, is that we should become strong in our own conceit, and credit ourselves with the position which is due to the grace of God alone. Oh for the truly humble spirit of the little child, that we may never vaunt ourselves! The laden ship sinks in the water, the fruit-burdened bough stoops to the ground, the truest scientist is the humblest disciple. Oh to be submerged and abashed for the marvellous help of God.

"JOTHAM BECAME MIGHTY, BECAUSE HE ORDERED HIS WAYS."—2 Chron. xxvii. 6 (R.V.).

There is a lower sense in which this holds good in daily and business life. You can hardly imagine a really successful man being untidy and disorderly. Method is the law of success, and a truly holy soul is sure to be orderly. I do not remember ever meeting one who really walked with God who did not make orderliness one of the first principles of life.

The Lord Jesus would have the men sit down in rows before He broke the bread, and wrapt together his grave-clothes before He left the sepulchre. It was, therefore, in keeping with the whole tenor of his example when the apostle prescribed that all things should be done decently and in order.

Clear handwriting, especially the direction of an envelope, to give the postman as little trouble as possible; the careful folding of our cast-off garments to save the maids needless work; the leaving our room that we have been occupying as little disturbed in its arrangements as may be; the arrangement of papers, and accounts, and magazines, so that we can readily lay our hand upon whatever is required; the adopting of mental order in prayer and conversation, and in the thinking out of plans and purposes; neatness in dress—these are all part of the right ordering of life which makes for its success and comfort, and greatly for peace in the home. They are the habits of the soul that walks before God, and which is accustomed to think of Him as seeing in secret, and as considering all our ways. In this way we may become mighty, and by being faithful in that which is least come to great charges.

THURSDAY, August 20.

"THEY CLOTHED ALL THAT WERE NAKED AMONG THEM, AND ARRAYED THEM AND SHOD THEM, AND GAVE THEM TO EAT AND DRINK, AND ANOINTED THEM."—2 Chron. xxviii. 15.

A great burst of generosity was here, for Israel had every reason to be incensed against Judah for the raid made on their territory. But, instead of pushing their advantage to the uttermost, they returned good for evil, and anticipated the words of the apostle, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him, if he thirst, give him drink, for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head."

Have you in your life people who have done you injury, and against whom you entertain hard thoughts? You do not injure them in return, but you cannot pray for them. So far as you can, you avoid them, you make no attempt to overcome the evil that is in them. But this is the Christ-like way of life: not merely to keep at a distance and give such a wide berth, but by love to destroy the evil, to transform the enemy into a friend, and to create love and friendship where hostility and alienation had reigned. It is God's way, and in this we should be perfect, as our Heavenly Father is perfect.

Will you try it? Will you begin doing kind acts to those who have harmed you? Not because as yet you feel as you would, but because it is right. Then as you dig the trench in right doing, look up for God, and He will pour into your heart the warm gush of affection. If you sincerely will his will in this matter, and exercise faith, God will come to your aid, and as you clothe others and minister to them, you will find their hard heart melted, and yourselves clothed with the beautiful garments of salvation, and of a meek and quiet spirit, which in God's sight is of great price.

FRIDAY, August 21.

"WHEN THE BURNT-OFFERING BEGAN, THE SONG OF THE LORD BEGAN ALSO."—2 Chron. xxix. 27.

This chapter contains a parable of the cleansing of the heart, meant to be a temple for God, but the doors of prayer are unopened, the lamps of testimony unlit, the burnt-offerings of self-sacrifice neglected, and, as the result, grass grows thick in courts which should have been trodden by the feet of Levite minstrels engaged in holy song. If ever that song is to break out again, it can only be after a thorough cleansing and renovation of the inner shrine. You tell me that you cannot sing the Lord's song, then I know you have gone into the strange land of backsliding. You acknowledge that for some time now you have taken no delight in God or his service, then I am sure that the temple is badly in need of renovation.

Cleanse the house of the Lord. Bring out all the uncleanness. By self-examination, confession, and repudiation, be clean of all the filth which has accumulated through months and years of neglect. Resume the position of entire devotion, as a prepared and sanctified soul. Offer the sin-offering for the past, and prepare the burnt-offering of entire consecration for the future. And when that is offered, when you determine to be wholly God's, lay yourself, with all the interests of your life, at the feet of Jesus, for his disposal, then the song of the Lord will begin again.

The music of your life is still, because you are out of accord with the will of God; but when by surrender and consecration there is unison your heart will be filled with songs, without words, and love like the ocean in the fulness of her strength.

SATURDAY, August 22.

"THE GOOD LORD PARDON EVERYONE THAT PREPARETH HIS HEART TO SEEK GOD, THE LORD GOD OF HIS FATHERS, THOUGH HE BE NOT CLEANSED ACCORDING TO THE PURIFICATION OF THE SANCTUARY."—2 Chron. xxx. 19.

A very touching prayer, that opens up deep thoughts as to the progress of the true knowledge of God in Israel, and of the comparative value of heart preparation and ceremonial cleansing. Here were crowds of well-meaning people who had come from all parts of the land in answer to Hezekiah's invitation. Unaccustomed to temple usage, strangers to the temple rites, they participated in the festivities of this great Passover without submitting first to the necessary ablutions. Their heart was prepared to seek God, they were proud of the great past, they desired to stand right with the Lord God of their fathers, but they were sadly ignorant and careless. The only thing to be done was to pray that their ignorances and negligences might be forgiven.

It is thus that Jesus pleads in heaven, and there are many that obtain mercy on the ground of his merit, because when they sin they do so ignorantly, and from want of knowledge rather than from want of heart. The devout ritualist who lays an excessive stress on outward forms, as these made too little; the man who has sensuous and distorted views of Christ, but sincerely desires to be accepted through Him; the soul that touches the hem of the garment as though the healing power were independent of the will power of the Redeemer; the dying malefactor, who, in his last hours, catches at some distorted representation of Christ which is filtered through to him from the chance word of an uninstructed preacher—these are included in the fruitful pleading of the Great High Priest, who has compassion on the ignorant and on those who are out of the way. The heart is accepted, though creed and ceremonial are sadly awry.

Catching Limpets.

TAKING a walk along a lone sea-shore in Cornwall, I saw two strange, gipsy-looking women in a cave, who looked as if they had been there all night. Presently they came out, and with bare feet went upon the rocks, to which thousands of limpets were clinging in supposed safety. But these women had come to get them away from their happy resting-places.

Then I thought of rocks to which boys and girls cling, and from which temptations often take them.

1. The Rock of HOME.—How the little ones cling to it; but sometimes wilfulness, or other evils, take us away; and, like the prodigal, we go off to seek our fortune, or misfortune.

2. The SUNDAY SCHOOL Rock.—There will come along those who will try to tempt us to go pleasure-seeking on God's day; but let us not leave this rock.

3. The BAND OF HOPE Rock.—When out in the world many will tempt us to break our pledge, but let us hold on and hold out.

4. The Rock of BIBLE TRUTH.—Doubters and reasoners will seek to remove us; but by God's help we must "cling to the Bible, though all else be taken."

These women had each a little hammer, and by

they knocked the limpets off before they were aware of danger; and then, once off, the poor things were helpless. Going into the cave after the limpets had gone, I found hundreds of empty shells and the remains of a fire between the stones, showing where the pot had stood in which the unfortunate limpets had been boiled ready for market.

As I walked about I found broken limpet shells among the shingle, for away from the rock the little creatures had no power. Do we not often find men and women, helpless and broken, on the shores of life? When young they clung to home, to Sunday-school, to Bands of Hope, and even to the Bible; but temptation removed them, and they were ruined.

There is one Rock from which nothing can remove us, Jesus. David said, "He only is my Rock...I shall not be moved" (Ps. lxii. 6). No limpet shall pluck us thence.

Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord (Rom. viii. 35-39).

Away from Christ we are powerless, like the limpet apart from the rock; but in Him we may find strength.

Little limpets could cling, and little children can "cleave unto the Lord" (Acts xi. 23). Dead limpets could not cling; so we must have the new life to enable us to hold on to Christ, and however small we may be, He will hold on to us, and we shall grow. What grand sea-baths the rock-clingers had! and what waves of joy break in brightness over all who cling to Jesus! And should rough waves of trial and trouble come, they will not carry us away, for we shall be steadfast and immovable.

Clinging closely to the rock, the limpets became like the rock, one with it. We sometimes sing, "I want to be like Jesus." The only way to be like Jesus is to love Jesus, or cling to Him. Are you a limpet on this "Rock of Ages"? Then I have a little piece of poetry for you.

Little limpet, what to thee
Raging storm or tossing sea?
Waves may come, or waves may go,
Tides may ebb, or tides may flow,
Winds be hushed, or tempests blow,
Still thou carest not.
Oh! when life's rude billows roll,
Thus may faith preserve my soul:
Faith that clings to Christ, the Rock,
When the scoffers rudely mock,
Safe amid the angry shock,
Happy, happy lot!

Clinging, when the day is fair;
In the night of dark despair:
When the stormy billows cast
Briny spray on every blast,
When the floods are rising fast,
Clinging, clinging still.
Finding safety only here,
Only when to Jesus near:
Grasping Him, and none beside,
Fearless of the rolling tide:
While I on the Rock abide,
What can work me ill?

In Gen. xl. xli.—

1. Describe briefly the dreams of:—(a) The butler.

(b) The baker. (c) Pharaoh.

[Children under eight do the first two only.]

2. To whom does xli. 38 refer?

[Children under twelve stop here.]

3. (a) What were the names of Joseph's sons?

(b) What do their names mean?

4. "What he saith to you, do" (v. 55). Of what verse in John does this remind you? By whom and to whom was the latter spoken? On what occasion?

Personal.

MANY thanks for the flowers and the album. The former were sent to the Children's Hospital, Paddington-green; the latter to the Children's Hospital, Shadwell.

FROM THE CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL, PADDINGTON GREEN, LONDON.—The children send many thanks to "Uncle Tom's little friends" for the boxes of heather and flowers which arrived this morning. Each child is wearing a piece of heather to-day, and has a flower for his or her very own. One little girl says she will keep hers until Sunday to send home to her mother who is ill. The matron also sends best thanks.

ETHEL WILLIAMSON AND ARTHUR LLEWELLYN.—As you are twelve years old you must answer all the questions set for that age. J. T. STANLEY.—Thank you for sending the heather; I sent it to a Children's Hospital. MARY PLUMB.—I am glad you have interested your little friend in the "Searcher" and hope he will keep on sending his answers. SCOTIE KREN.—There was a mistake in the name last week. LESTER HANCOCK.—I think I should keep on with the "Bible Searcher" until you find it is too difficult. EZRA MATTHEWS.—I am glad to welcome your little friend in South Africa. FLEEN HILL.—Please thank your mother for sending me a copy of the hymn. JESSIE WEST.—You may explain the questions to each other, but not help with the answers. EDITH COLE.—I am very glad your friend has joined, and hope he will continue. QUEENIE AND LLEWELLYN DALE.—Thank you for your nice letters. I was much interested in the account of the "Cholera Goddess." E. S. HAYWARD.—I was very pleased with your letter.

"BY THE SEASIDE."

Mark iv. 1.

Wn love to recall it—the silvery ripples,
And soft summer breeze gently fanning the sea,
While 'neath heaven's dome, nature's own glorious temple,
The multitude stand beside blue Galilee:
Enraptured they listen; the meek, lowly Jesus,
His face so entreating, his mien so benign,
Is pleading with sinners in words strangely gracious,
And pressing the offers of mercy Divine.
To-day reproduced is the old Bible picture:
On bright English shores happy boys and girls meet,
While He now exalted a Prince and a Saviour
Repeats through his servants his messages sweet;
'Tis Jesus still speaketh: "Forbid not the children,
The little ones suffer to come unto Me;
Of such is the beautiful kingdom of heaven,
And none but the childlike its glories shall see."
Yes, Master; yet more and more honour our mission
In England—nay, honour it over the world!
Let young hearts by thousands be brought to decision,
And praise Thee wherever its flag is unfurled;
Till, when Thou returnest thy children to gather,
Blood-bought, Spirit-seal'd, from the east to the west,
We meet round thy throne to adore Thee for ever,
And sing the new song in the home of the blest.

"Die, but don't deny the Lord," said a mother in Oorfa to her two sons. During the massacre in that city the two young men were caught by the mob, while men with drawn swords, ready to cut them down, demanded that they should accept the Moslem faith. They were firm, and were immediately slain.

Armenia's Agony.

AT last the present policy of inaction as regards the Turk seems drawing to a close. The reception met with in London from many persons of distinction by an American lady missionary last week goes far to prove it. She had been five years at a large city in Armenia, which became one of the worst centres of massacre and outrage, and her story was listened to in a way which showed that longer delay is intolerable. Knowledge of the awful truth must end it.

The nameless horrors which have been, and are being, perpetrated by the Turk on persons of every age and either sex are on a scale so vast that they have probably directly or indirectly swept away one million human beings—so this lady states to me. And what is the misery suffered, through death by accident or pestilence, compared with that created by these indescribable outrages and their consequences? For let it be remembered that these mutilated and tortured men, women, and children are in no way inferior to English people. Some say they are our superiors, taking class with class. Many of the men have great ability, while the women are most modest and often very beautiful. No wonder the consular reports have been hidden by successive governments, for now that they are just becoming known to more than a few, delay cannot continue. It creates a risk of war and further massacres far greater than would be incurred by a bold, open course with righteous unselfishness for its basis.

If our Government is now framing a policy of action, and feels that to wait longer for Europe is impossible, it will strengthen it to repeat what some of us feel. Here, then, is a sketch, if I may be allowed to present one, of what I hope may be considered an irreducible minimum. This is no time for half measures, as sad experience has abundantly proved.

1. Get rid of the evil that weakens our hands. Not only break off our odious and debasing alliance with the Sultan, but return his "wedding present." In other words, let Cyprus be given back at once, either to Turkey or to European control. Then our hands will be politically clean in this very important particular, and we shall have shown at the outset that we are not actuated by selfish motives.

2. Only a nation can help a nation in a crisis like this. As a nation we must rescue the Armenians, for as a nation we are their debtors to an incalculable amount. Private charity is excellent. Let it be extended far beyond anything reached hitherto. It will all be wanted. But let the nation act where private money cannot reach. Our national "interests," real or imaginary, have left the Armenians when otherwise they would have been free, at least from him. Now, therefore, let us do them the miserable remnant of justice—not mercy, may I remind you? I am pleading for only cold justice—which as a nation is in our power. Were the Armenians to become our equals in arms, and were they to demand reparation for the effect of our policy, we could not refuse. Shall we, therefore, stand aloof merely because they cannot make such an appeal? To help them efficiently we must give money, and, if necessary, apply force.

3. We must tell them at Constantinople that we will hold the Sultan responsible if violence continues in any degree, or if emigration be thwarted. We will in either case make him prisoner, and try him for his life, like any other criminal, if we can. A king has been tried and executed before now, and for a vastly less offence than his. The effect of even-handed justice upon the monstrous fanatical religions of the East has been copiously illustrated by the recent history of fakirism in India. Until lately, under cover of imaginary saintliness, Indian devotees practised cruel extortions on the people. But when English judges determined that the same punishment should be awarded in case of crimes committed by fakirs as by others, fakirism ceased to pay. Though in time past these fanatics abounded, it is now difficult to find one who practises it in its extreme forms. So it will be with the Turk. Let him see that the wicked shall not go unpunished, and even though the Sultan call himself the "Shadow of God" his fears will bring him to a stop. These things are

THE VERY LEAST WE SHOULD DO.

They are definite, reasonable, and perfectly unselfish. Our strength would be as the strength of ten as soon as we stripped ourselves of everything that suggested "self." I believe that in this course we should have no little sympathy from abroad, and more powerful allies than one. America would come. So would Italy. I cannot think for an instant that worse than a sneer would issue from a few of the journals of Germany and France, while Russia would not like to hinder us when we are in the right, and when we are unmistakably determined. Besides, she will have nothing to complain of.

But what obvious cause of complaint there is as matters stand just now! Everyone naturally reproaches us for our self-interested policy. Oh, that the Christians of every land would cry aloud against it, and spare not! Let their trumpet be heard with no uncertain sound. Of course, a policy of action will be far from popular with some—but with whom? Such persons perhaps need not be considered.

A few others who, unlike these, are not in favour of doing nothing, and feel seriously moved on the subject, think a threatened stoppage of the Egyptian tribute would attain our purpose. But may I suggest to them that this would not be a very magnanimous way of dealing, even if possible and sufficient; nor, what is more important, would it divest us of selfishness in the eyes of Europe. It is too easy to give out of another man's pocket. No; let us give what costs us something, and may God have mercy on us or on the men who have delayed help so long and kept Armenia where she is to-day.

God's Gifts.

GOD gave me a gift, a golden gift,
And oh! it was fair to see,
As I wondered that He should condescend
To bring such a one to me.
I took it with joy, and thanked the Giver,
And cherished the gift so rare;
And the blessing He gave with it made me rich,
And added nor grief, nor care.

God gave me a gift—and I almost feared
As I reached forth my hand to take
The gift He offered; but I could not refuse,
When He whispered: "For my sake."
'Twas a gift of loneliness, grief, and loss;
And, ah! I shuddered to see
The darksome form, and feel the weight
Of the strange sad mystery.

But the sorrow He sent was the richer gift,
For He gave Himself with it, too;
And the lonely hours, that brought Him near,
Were the brightest I ever knew.
He laid his hand on the aching heart—
That hand of tend'rst love—
And gave, in that dark and saddened time,
A foretaste of heaven above.

So I thank Him much for the golden gift,
And I cherish it day and night;
I praise my God for its beauty rare,
For its wonderful grace and light;
But I thank Him more for the gift of pain,
For the loneliness, and the loss,
For the "treasures of darkness" He gave me, when
He sent me the gift of a cross.

The Neglected Continent.

SOUTH America has come very much to the front of late. It should indeed call forth gratitude to God, and a hearty response on the part of God's children in this highly favoured England. One feature has not been sufficiently emphasised, viz., that the majority of the men and youths—especially in the Argentine Republic—look upon the R.C. system and its priests with utter indifference. In one way, this is a good sign. Yet it has its sad side; for what will this lead to, unless the Gospel is presented? Indifference, atheism, ungodliness!

It seems to me that the responsibility of Christians is very great, and their position a terribly solemn one; for unless something more than is now being done is attempted, the state of those living in South America must become worse; they will be more difficult to influence and more opposed to the preaching of the Gospel. What is being done there might be told in a few sentences; but what might be done would take a long time to tell. Opportunities are slipping from our grasp; possibilities that lie within reach will, in the near future, be in the region of impossibilities. There is a great wave of atheism sweeping over these lands, and to meet that effectually earnest and prayerful work is needed. Oh, that Christians in England would think more of the needs of that dark, priest-ridden, heathen Continent, and show in some practical way that the Master's commission to witness, to preach, is affecting them. "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."

Great wealth is lavished on the churches and chapels here. There are innumerable places for the preaching of the Gospel, but how badly many are attended. Why? Because Christians have no compassion on the multitudes who have no shepherd, but spend their all on themselves and in their own little spheres. Truly, with many, charity begins and ends at home.

Have the 5,000,000 heathen Indians of South America, in addition to all the Roman Catholics, nothing to do with those at home, who have the light, and who are enjoying a free and full salvation? Surely, yes. Are they not our brethren? Why, then, should so great distinction be made between English and foreign work? "The field is the world," said Jesus. It has no divisions in his sight. "The field is white already to harvest." Is there not such a thing as it being too ripe, unfit for the reaper? "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He send forth labourers" into his vineyard."

Ross Bible Carriage.—We pitched our tent on May 16 at Ruarden, where we had much to encourage us at the Sunday services, as many as 500 persons listened. Since then we have visited Clifton-on-Teme, Ballingham, and Malvern, and now we are at Newent, a small town in Gloucestershire, where we are greatly cheered. The attendance has been good at the week evening services and large numbers on the Sunday. During the day we drive round to the surrounding towns and villages for house-to-house visitation, tract distribution, and sales of Gospel literature. At the conclusion of the Newent mission we move on to Drybrook, and thence to Lydbrook. We shall greatly value prayer on our behalf.

True Mission Work.—The Presbyterian Church in America employs no less than eighty Sunday-school missionaries. These are appointed to large outlying districts among the rural population, in the frontier towns, and other places where industrial centres have been opened out in advance of civilisation, where they plant Sunday Schools as a nucleus of Christian effort. During last year these eighty missionaries organised 1,030 new schools, besides reviving again 363 which had lapsed. In these schools 46,674 children were gathered with 5,216 teachers. The mode of operation seems to be for the missionary to go to any place in his district that he has ascertained is in need of spiritual help, visit the families, find out the adult Christians for teachers, and set them to work. He gives away also tracts, books, Bibles, and Testaments. The schools are started as simple Bible Schools, and many grow into churches. Thus a noble work of an omnidominational character is carried on by these eighty brethren.

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

WILL A MAN ROB GOD?

By REV. HUBERT BROOKE.

WE will read a few verses from the first and third chapters of the prophecy of Malachi: "A son honoureth his father, and a servant his master; if then I be a father, where is mine honour? if I be a master, where is my fear? saith the Lord of hosts unto you, O priests, that despise my name. And ye say, Wherein have we despised thy name? (i. 6.) Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed Thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed Me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightful land, saith the Lord of hosts" (iii. 8-12).

Two friends were talking together yesterday afternoon, and one of them said: "Why is it that people so often come and thank a speaker for his address? We do not thank a postman when he brings us a pleasant letter." The other friend said: "Yes; and why are people sometimes angry with a preacher who gives an address which they do not like? We do not get angry with the postman when he brings us unpleasant news." God may have blessed words for you this week, also trying words. It is probably best for you if He has trying things. Will you heed the lesson of this conversation, and expect of God that He will be the speaker during these days of conference? Then you need not mind about thanking those who utter the words, or being angry with them. If the words are God's, listen to them, feed upon them, and obey them. Be sure you do not pass them over because they may seem dry and difficult at first.

I would remind you that the whole series of Minor Prophets has a most wonderful fitness for the present day. If you read them through carefully with the thought before your mind as to the kind of people that were addressed, what is the fault the prophets have to find with them, what is the prospect they put before them, what is it they want them to do, and to have, and to be, what is it that is amiss and how is it to be set right—if you take these things out one by one, and then look out into the world around or into your own heart, you will find, with amazement, that what was true of Israel two or three thousand years ago, is before the Church of Christ to-day. It is the old story that this book is a living word. It is not like old dead histories and dry bones of bygone records, but it is a living word and an abiding word, as true and applicable and personal to-day as when first written; and it is so because it deals with God's great abiding principles, which never alter, but which, when brought and applied to the life of man, will always produce the same result. That is because God always works along the same lines. Sin, suffering, and sorrow always go together; repentance and return to the Lord always precede revival; belief and blessing also are bound together, while disbelief and disaster cannot be separated. God's principles do not change, because He does not change. "I am Jehovah—I change not."

Notice two points which seem to bring the prophet's words into close connection with ourselves. First, the time at which they were written. The opening of chapter iii. reads: "The Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple. . . . Who may abide the day of his coming?" etc. Then look at the beginning of chapter iv.: "The day cometh that shall burn as an oven . . . all that do wickedly shall be stubble. Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and terrible day of the Lord." These words were written to people who were intended to be waiting for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ; and is there a single phrase that more distinctly tells you what ought to be the position of the Church of Christ to-day than "looking for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ"? Servants of God in those days were "waiting for redemption in Israel," "looking for the consolation of Israel"; and as these words applied to them, so they do to us who are also looking for the coming of the day of the Lord.

Not only the time, but the people to whom these words were addressed, tells you to whom they are intended to apply to-day. Look at chapter i.; it speaks of "the word of the Lord to Israel," and the Lord says, "I loved Jacob." These words were therefore addressed to God's chosen people—to the children of the heavenly Father, the servants of the heavenly Master, who were priests in the temple of the Lord, with God's fear in their hearts, God's truth on their lips, God's companionship in their way, and God's blessing on their service (chap. i. 6; ii. 6, 7). They were God's messengers to the people round about, and are described in terms very similar to those employed in the New Testament of the blessed company of believers in God to-day—"a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation." So, whatever may follow in our study of this book, it was written at a time when the coming of the Lord was looked for, and to people who were called the people of the Lord. Now you know what is written here has to do with you.

Let us notice, first, the beautiful and gracious and loving purpose of God, which He unfolds concerning his people. He draws before you in grand large lines just what He wants his people to be, only when you are looking you must look sometimes at those things in which He finds fault with his people. Sometimes if you want to know what one who loves you wishes for you, you find it out in what he finds fault about.

If a father finds fault with his son, and says, "Why did not you come to me?" he reveals his purpose of grace, and shows that he wishes every trouble to be brought to him to share it. When God finds fault, it is not in a carping spirit but with the love of a father, and if you listen you will find out his purpose of grace, and what He will do for you if you let Him.

In verse 6 of chapter i. you find that He intends you to be a people who honour God as children their father, and fear Him with a holy reverence as devoted servants fear their master. In chap. ii. you find that He purposes that you should be a people who are truly the priests of the Lord, who have with Him, who are used in his service, and have the covenant of life and peace in their hearts—who know Him, and rejoice to know Him. Raverting to chap. i. 11, you see they are intended to be a people by whom the name of the Lord is to be made great among the Gentiles. According to chap. iii., He means them to be like gold and silver purified in the fire, and people who can bring pure offerings and sacrifices, and be pleasant to the Lord as in former days; and He means them to be (verses 11, 12) filled with heaven's blessing and overflowing so that there shall not be room enough to contain it. The destroyer and waster shall be rebuked, so that there shall be no let or hindrance to God's blessings, that all nations shall call you blessed, and your land shall be a delightful land. And He puts his seal to it—"saith the Lord of Hosts."

If you took these words to your lives, would it not take you a good long life to live them out? Just think of it. Sons and daughters honouring their fathers; servants faithful to their masters; priests, who have fellowship and communion with God, giving out the messages of the Lord of Hosts; acceptable servants, offerors of pure sacrifices, dwelling in the light and living the life that is blessed and delightful. This is a glorious prospect, and every letter of it true, not one word exaggerated; no hyperbole here, but the truth, letter by letter, word by word, sentence by sentence, to be lived out moment by moment and hour by hour, until He comes. That is the Father's purpose for his children.

Look at chapter i., and see how it shall be possible for such a life to be lived. The first verse reads, "The burden of the word of the Lord to Israel." Then we read, "I have loved Israel." Have you ever thought that God's love for his people lays a burden on his heart? Why is it a burden for Him to love? I suppose it is, as that beautiful old book, DANIEL QUORR, says, because love wants love, and is burdened till it gets it. Is that it? He loves, and loves, and loves, and gets so little of practical heart-warming love in return. He loves you, and that is why He finds fault with you, and why He cannot bear and defilements he sees in his people. God loves to put these things right, that his love may have unmingled flow. If you look at the glories of God's purposes, never be discouraged, because you know that his love is behind his purpose, and where his love has sway his purpose will be fulfilled.

Once more, it is the word of the Lord. It may have been so to the people to whom the prophecy was written. It is almost certain from the dates on the margins here and in Nehemiah that the faults which Malachi found and the evils which he wanted to remedy were those which Nehemiah tried to put down. The strong hand of the ruler and the mighty word of the prophet went together in those days in accomplishing the purpose of God. May it be so to-day—God's word spoken in power, and God's word manifested in the rulers of the world, that the Gospel may be taken to the ends of the [7:35] earth and the revival may come, so that we may see the power put forth that shall clear the way for righteousness to stand forth in the world. God's word worked then and it works now. If it worked a revival then, it can work it now—always on the same principles. There is no slurring over the things that are wrong and bringing a blessing to rest on the top of it. But there must be a breaking up and a blasting of the hard rock beneath, which is the cause of the evil, which can make the blessing come down from above, and the life to be filled with fruit to the glory of God. Let us look in to-day, and like Israel and those who were able to call themselves God's people, let us listen as He pours out the burden of his love to our souls.

Notice verse 6, "A son honoureth his father, and a servant his master." The priests despised the name of the Lord, and, as verse 12 tells us, they profaned it. In chap. iii. 8. we read—

"YE HAVE ROBBERED ME."

There is a tremendous three-fold charge brought home here to those who claimed to have a knowledge of the Lord and to belong to his people. They despised his name in the secret of their own hearts, profaned his name in the sight of the Gentiles, and robbed God of his due. Notice another very important thing. As God spoke these words to them they could not understand them, and they said: "Wherein have we despised thy name?" When He said they had polluted his name they inquired, "Wherein have we polluted Thee?" When, again, He said, "Ye have robbed God," they said, "Wherein have we robbed Thee?" And here is a remarkable thing—it was the people of the Lord, called by the names of blessing that belong to God's people. He had great charges to bring against them, of which they seemed altogether unaware. How often it happens that God, when He would pour out blessing, has to open men's eyes to things which fill up the heart which He wants to fill; and they have to confess and turn out those things before the fulness of his blessing can come in. Is it possible for us that we have not known all those rich blessings which He purposes for his people? That his love has not had room to enlarge itself in our hearts and lives, because we have despised his name in secret, profaned it before the world, and robbed God?

How are we to find out these things? Well, conduct is always the expression of character, and if God finds fault with his people, and says there is something wrong in their character, he generally points to their conduct as the proof of what He says. He finds fault with their character when He says it is that of those who despise his name. He goes on to point out how they did this. They came to his altar with polluted bread. He delights in the pure offerings of his people; they are food to his heart. When He tells them of this, they ask how they have caused pollution. He says: "In that ye say, The table of the Lord is contemptible." Again they brought blind, lame, and sick things, although the Lord told them that nothing which had a blemish was to be brought, and so they despised his name. They were tired of giving things to the Lord. As sometimes you hear, "Another subscription paper! I am sick of them." Is it not the same thing? They said

"OH, THE WEARINESS OF IT!"

They despised his name—which was the opposite of honouring Him; and they profaned it—the opposite of making it great; and they did so by the gifts they brought to God.

If I say character is expressed in conduct, I say it is bound up in consequences; any heart that in any measure despises God's name will realise these consequences. "Will He be pleased with thee, or accept thy person? saith the Lord of hosts" (v. 8). "I have no pleasure in you, neither will I accept an offering at your hand" (v. 10). "Should I accept this of your hand? Cursed be the deceiver which sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing."

For I am a great King, saith the Lord of hosts, and my name is dreadful among the heathen" (v. 14). They brought second-rate things when they made their offerings to God, knowing all the time that He had demanded the first and the best; they took no trouble as to what they brought, but they offered as little as they could, and the result was unanswered prayers, unacceptable persons, rejected sacrifices, and accursed gifts. That is a solemn thing. In chap. iii. it is summed up, "Will a man rob God?" I suppose if any one of us were to speak to another, and say, "Would you dare to rob God?" we should say, "No; God forbid." But this people said, "Wherein have we robbed Thee?" He answers, "In tithes and offerings." Mark this, as it applied to Israel, so that we may know exactly what is the fault—why God is blaming his people. Look at Prov. iii. 9, "Honour the Lord with thy substance and with the first-fruits of all thine increase." "If I be a father, where is mine honour?"

The Lord told them several times in the Pentateuch, "The land is mine and shall not be sold for ever." It could only be sold for a limited period, the user being only the tenant, while God was the landlord. The Landlord demanded—not that He needed, for his are the cattle on a thousand hills—a certain rent year by year, and it was the first-fruits. It was not, as people think, that Israel was to give God a tenth and then it was all done. No; they gave a tenth once and a tenth twice and then a fourth, and more besides; and if you reckon all, including the purchasing of their brethren who were carried captive among the enemy, they handed over to the Lord year by year something like one-third of their possessions and incomes. Sometimes people will call a stingy person but when I see what the old Jew gave to God, I am compelled to say that I should like to see the new Christians doing the same.

Turn to Exod. xxii., and you will notice more than the fact that they gave these dues. You see also the way in which it had to be done. "Thou shalt not delay to offer," etc. (v. 29). The tenth must be the first—not the last. Before the other nine parts were touched the first was to be separated off and given to God. How many a time may we have excused ourselves, or let the thing slip, or have neglected to trouble about the Lord's dues? We intended to give the tenth after using the nine parts, but when the tenth was wanted it was not available to give. Again, Dent. xxvi. 2: "Thou shalt take of the first of all the fruit of the earth." So the first of all that God gave to his people was brought back to Him as an acknowledgment, to honour Him as the Owner and Giver of all. The offerings were to be freely given, proportionately given, gladly given. These were the principles that God demanded upon which his people should honour Him. There are two ways in which you may commit robbery—you may break into a house and take goods, or you may appropriate to your own purpose something entrusted to you by another. These people of whom the prophet writes never broke into God's house and took his things; but, being stewards, and having a knowledge of God's rights as owner, they withheld dutiful offerings. Therefore, throughout their lives there was a blight upon their land, and the rich blessings of God could not descend.

It was a solemn thing for Israel to commit these sins. The words of the prophet have their meaning for us. How shall we come before God, and ask for those blessings which He is waiting to give, until all nations shall be constrained to confess us the blessed of the Lord and call our lives delightful? Shall we look in and see what has shut the windows of heaven and prevented the blessing from falling? What about those tithes? We hear it said so often, "We are under the Gospel, not the Law; there are no rules in the New Testament about giving tenths," and so on. Let us open account-books, and put down on one side what the law demands, and on the other side what the Love of Christ constrains. Shall we be disappointed if the one is much less than the other? The New Testament says our substance is all the Lord's; and if we are to live to-day as He commands, we must bring in the tithes, bring in what God calls his right, and what He demands as his sacrifices. First of all a living sacrifice (Rom. xii. 1), which is explained in Rom. vi. 13 as "yielding your members," as an acknowledgment that you are his. That is the first of the tithes. And if you will be practical, think of it now, during these convention days. Do not run away, and do what you like with your bodies. Do not wear them out, and then complain that you cannot enter into the blessings of God's Word because your bodies are worn out. Remember that your bodies are the Lord's. Then God tells us that our powers are his. This is made clear in Rom. xii. and in 1 Cor. xii., also in Heb. xiii. Your very lips belong to God, and should be consecrated to Him. Hosea says, "Give the calves of your lips"—the offerings of your lips.

That is part of the tithes that God wants. And then there is another simple thing—your money, and that, as well as your souls, your bodies, and your spirits. Sometimes we are so refined, and so elegant, that we do not take care about these minutiae of Christian life; we do not deal with them as God would have us to do. In a series of things which God asks his people to hold and use for Him, we find in Rom. xii. that we are to use for God, prophecy, ministry, teaching, exhortation, and the gift of giving. He that ruleth, and He that sheweth mercy have gifts to be used and dispensed one by one, and God loveth the cheerful giver; and I suppose He is grieved when He sees a grudging giver. He loves a cheerful giver because it is a bit of the family likeness—like Himself. He likes gifts cheerfully given by those to whom He has cheerfully given; yet grudging and delayed gifts are presented out of the abundance which He has bestowed!

How are we to know whether we are giving as the Lord would have us or not? If I had a horse (which I have not) and provided the groom with enough to feed him with, and found that the animal was being starved, I would not blame the horse, but the groom. I should say the horse is starving, and the groom is stealing. In like manner when we see the Lord's beasts of burden, the Lord's messengers throughout the world, starving and crippled in their efforts, I do not blame them, but those who should be feeding them.

Starving, you say, is it possible? Let me tell you it is a literal fact that many clergymen and

MINISTERS TO-DAY ARE STARVING.

In the cold winter a year or two back, a messenger of God's Word went from room to room with a little lamp because he had no coal to burn. And that in our own land! I know the relatives of one man to whose family money was lately left, a little while after he died. When the news reached the home, the widow said: "It has come too late now." That man of God died a gentle, loving, unselfish life of starvation. Is it true that the Church of Christ robs God? You say you know nothing of these things. Have you ever made inquiry? I have, no pastoral charge, so I can speak. In all denominations there are cases that run into the scores or hundreds where faithful ministers are starving because God's people withhold the gifts and say, "Is it our ministry?" That is what the people said in Malachi's times: "Wherein?" etc. And then you say it is an endowed Church, and that your ancestors gave some tithes, therefore you need not. Perhaps they were not your ancestors at all, somebody else's!

And then you look into the world. In one case the president of a missionary society said to a speaker, "Do not ask for offers; we have no money to send men out." Another society raised a centenary fund to God, and wished to send out a hundred more men. They have had to draw in, and those in the field are told that others cannot be sent as the funds show a deficiency. Why? because believers have robbed God. And we listen to statisticians, and hear that so many millions are stored up, and that the money market is and you cannot get an investment. If you look at what is given to God, you find it is less than twopence out of the pound after they have done living and spending among themselves. God tell you who and what it is; but I cannot look out and see God's starved work and not say that it is God's selfish servants who are hindering the work of God by not giving the tithes.

If we look out at home workers say it is the same: it is hard work going round to collect. Now you can see how you stand in relation to God's will in this matter. Is the collector for God's work welcome, or a nuisance, one whom you would like to avoid? Then as to the charges incidental to various ministries, there is no interest in giving to them. Is this not like the conduct of those men who gave polluted bread to supply God's table? I have recently been doing the work of chaplain on the Continent, and the amazing number of foreign coins, debased coins, and coins that would not pass, that have been taken in the collections, have been enough to make one sick; and these were given to God! But how the world looks on. See what the Lord says in the end, "Bring ye now all the tithes into the storehouse, that there shall be meat in my house." He does not mean that you should wait till you get to your old homes before you bring these things out. Shall it be settled in your heart to-day, that as for me and my house we will bring all the tithes into the storehouse—all the tithes, bodies, members, lips, powers, time, talents, and the mammon of this world. Bring them all and remember that they are tithes. I think that is a point where many have gone wrong. You do not find out what is your tithe on the impulse of the moment when there is a moving appeal for funds. It is customary, if we want to secure supplies for the work of God, to send out an eloquent preacher, instead of just sending for money that is ready and waiting to be given. When the tax-gatherer comes round, does it matter whether he is eloquent or dumb?

HE GETS THE MONEY,

or it would be the worse for you. Suppose you commit money to a treasurer and he goes and uses it, and when you ask for an account he says he has kept no account. You would not keep him as treasurer. Is it not a wonder that God keeps us as his stewards? How many young people marry on a certain income, and as soon as the income is increased, up go the expenses also, so that they never have any money for the work of God. It is not emotions that are going to carry out God's work, nor emotional appeals that will secure the means therefor. If you are obedient Christians, if you are loving children, you are bound to spread the light of the Gospel; and if you are wise you will do so, and then He will fulfil his word and open the windows of heaven, and blessing will flow out that we shall not have room enough to receive, and of that blessing others will get a share.

THE OLD LIFE AND THE NEW.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

In the Epistle to the Hebrews, chapter iv., there are four exhortations: The first (verse 1.) is "Let us therefore fear"; the second (verse 11), "Let us labour"; the third (verse 14) "Let us hold fast"; and the fourth (verse 16), "Let us come boldly." That chapter deals with the cause for the exclusion of the people from the land of rest, and should, therefore, be carefully pondered by all those who are conscious that their life hitherto has been one of monotonous wandering in the wilderness. May God grant to-day that your forty years' wandering in the restlessness of the wilderness may come to an end!

In this chapter God lays his hand upon the one point which excludes us from rest; it is given in v. 12—we have not allowed the Word of God to judge us. "The Word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor (or critic) of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Now, if you desire to enter into rest, you must let the Word of God do his work within you, and be the critic of the thoughts and intents of your heart. Therefore, I purpose now to go beneath emotion and action to thought and intention, for you will find that a great deal of our difficulty in the Christian life arises from mistakes about our intentions—"the thoughts and intents of the heart."

One of the first things the Word of God does, is to show you the distinction between soul and spirit. The Word divides between soul and spirit; the division is very slight apparently; but, all the same, it is very deep. That is, it is slight on the surface as the cut of a sabre, but it is deep, right down, cleaving to the very foundations of experience. What is this division? Turn to the 1 Cor. xv. 45, "The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit." So that the soul may be associated most largely with the first Adam, while the spirit may be associated most largely with the Second Adam, the Lord from heaven. Then, if you turn to Luke xii. 19, you have a side-light given by Christ into the

in that marvellous parable—"I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." The soul is that in us which likes to take its ease—"eat, drink, and be merry"—to find its portion in the things which are stored up; it is that part of us which delights in the world, and the things of sense which gather around the self-interest, the self-principle, the Adam, the old nature, deeply entrenched within us all. And you must understand, as by the cut of God's sword, the division between the old and the new, the soul and the spirit, the first Adam and the second, the life that you have in nature and the life that you receive as the gift of God—that division is fundamental, and until that is made, you will be liable to wander in the wilderness of unrest. The Lord Jesus Christ says, in Matt. xvi. 24, 25: "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me. For whosoever shall save his life shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it. For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" It is remarkable that Christ says this same thing four times over in his discourses, and on four different occasions. We are very fond of asking one another if our souls are saved. We ought to ask if they are lost; for there is a sense in which you never will be saved until you have lost your soul. It is only after you have lost your soul in the deepest sense, that you will get the true life. The man who has lost his soul will learn to care for the souls of other people.

I do not say that the soul life is to be extinguished, but that we must reckon ourselves dead to the principle of the self-life, which shows itself in the soul. It is not that the soul dies, but that we die to the principle of self for which the soul stands—the distinction is very important. The whole cleavage between two great schools of thought lies, as I hold, in a failure on one side to distinguish between these two distinct thoughts—the death of the soul-life and the self-principle, and to it, which is quite another thing—and everything is comprehended in that distinction. If you tell people that the soul-life is to die within them, they will be perplexed beyond extrication, but if you tell them there is a process by which they die to it, and pass to the true life, then, by the grace of God, they have a policy of life that leads them to the very Ascension Mount and to the heavenly places themselves.

Please note that (verse 21) our Lord Jesus "began to show unto his disciples" something he had kept back until this moment before the transfiguration. He said to them (see Mark viii. 31), "The Son of man," meaning the representative man, the second Adam, "must suffer." Why? "He poured out his soul unto death," as a man, as the Son of man, the representative man, upon the cross. He seemed to pour out his soul, for the blood is the life, and the life is in the blood; and as the blood of Christ was shed, it was not shed simply as a propitiation for our sins, though it was that, but it was, so to speak, the pouring out of his own holy, pure will, a spotless sacrifice of Himself. And there is a sense in which every son of man who wants to enter into the true life has got to pour out his soul unto death. "The Son of man must suffer many things." When Peter heard this, he was horrified, and he took Jesus and began to rebuke Him, saying, "Be it far from Thee, Lord; this shall not be unto Thee" (v. 22), or as the margin has it "pity thyself"—spare thyself. I was going almost to say that Satan is prepared for you to lop off this or that bad habit, so long as you will not deal with the principle of evil in the soul itself; and thus thousands have come to these conventions, and gone from them, and relapsed, because they have from their life, but have never dealt with the soul, the self-life. If men talk about dealing with the soul, and reckoning themselves dead to the self-life, they are called fanatic, and regarded as going too far—people stand away, and avoid them as dangerous. The consensus of Christian judgment is coming round to see that certain habits must be put away; but when you take to dealing with the self-life, they stand back. You must deal with the principle of the self-life, before you can come into the new life; and when people say "Spare thyself!" they do the devil's work, and talk after the manner of men. "Thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men."

There is a second step, as may be seen from John xiii. 37, "Peter said unto Him, Lord, why cannot I follow Thee now? I will lay down my life for thy sake." Here is Peter proposing to immolate himself. I pray you, catch this thought, which again touches the secret of so much failure. People come and hear that consecration is necessary—the putting away of sin and the surrender of the life to God, and then there comes an intention to consacrate themselves. You hear people saying, "I had a grand time last night; I consecrated myself to God." Consecrated yourself to God? Do you remember certain of Aaron's sons, who offered incense with fire that had not fallen from heaven, and will you contrast that with the offering of the apostles who offered with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven? You know self cannot put self to death. You may put yourself on the altar, but God must send down the fire. You must give Him the will, but God must do the deed. The will is yours, but the completion and the act must be God's. Why cannot I follow Thee now? Because you want to do for your own strength and your own glorification. You cannot get anything that way. Although prepared to die, Peter turned pale before the servant-girl's question. It is no use getting wrought upon by emotionalism and appeals and the intense fervour that sometimes sweeps over a meeting. You will never get it by fighting, and struggling, and wrestling, but it is by being willing, and letting God take what you are willing to give. You cannot make yourself die, and never will; but you can surrender yourself to God, for God by the Holy Ghost to complete the sacrifice.

There is a third step in Peter's life. First, horrified, the Apostle said, "This cannot be." Then, he argued, "If death must come, I will commit suicide." The third step is reached in serene old age (1 Pet. iv. 1): "Forasmuch, then, as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind." The former clause reminds us of Rom. viii. 2—means that there must be a fight—a fight against your own feelings, against the solicitations of the flesh and the devil, against the temptations that men will put before you. Against all these things you are, by the grace of God, to encase yourself, to arm yourself, with the mind which was in Christ. "He that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin." How do we "arm ourselves with the same mind"? The Lord died; He died for sin, and He died to the promptings of sin. He said, "Not my will, but thine, be done." He died for sin as our substitute, to sin as our representative. In the person of Christ God saw us represented, and in the thought of God all the Church, at the moment of Christ's death, did what He did. He yielded his will to the Father; He surrendered his own life to take, through death, the life which the Father gave. He, so to speak, passed out of the world in which He had been a resident, to the Easter or resurrection world, and, in the thought of God, we who believe in Him did the same.

But there comes a moment, a great moment in our life, when we appreciate the fact that He died for us; and then there comes a moment when we appreciate the fact that we died in Him; and that is the moment of identification with Him in whom we died to sin, in whom we passed from Egypt into the land of liberty, and in whom we crossed the Jordan. Is that so? It is so in the purpose of God. I wish it to be so in my own life; I choose it; and I ask the Holy Spirit to enable me to live in the power and faith of this fact. My Lord poured out his soul, his soul-life, unto death; and I now pour out my soul-life unto death, and I live inside the keeping power of the Holy Ghost. I walk in the Spirit; I live in the Spirit; I yield myself to the Spirit.

Thus the Holy Ghost makes real to you moment by moment that which is real to you in the purpose of God in Christ, and which, in the moment of consecration, you chose to be real for you. The Holy Spirit, moment by moment, keeps you in that same mind. You make up your mind that you shall and the Holy Ghost keeps you in the same mind; and whensoever the soul-life, the longing for praise, the chafing against the success of another, and those other evil and horrid things, rise up in your Soul-life, then, in the power of the Holy Ghost, you have armed yourself for it. And as you live so, by the power of the Holy Ghost, He is the critic, and will show you more and more, and show you deeper depths from which the self-life surges up, and there will be a perpetual reckoning of yourself to be dead to the soul-life and its energy.

These successive steps will be in preparation to your reception of the life of Christ. You live in Jesus, and look to Jesus, looking not on death but on life; and as you look on life you are quick to detect the least sign of death. If you live on bad atmosphere, you do not know it is bad; but if you go from Keswick to Lambeth you will soon know that you are in a bad atmosphere; and living in the life of Jesus you will be quick to detect the uprising of the soul-life, the I-life, and by the power of the Holy Ghost you will arm to reckon yourself dead to it. May God help us to do so!

Ladies' Meetings at Keswick.

"DID ever people hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou hast heard, and live?" This was the verse in which lay the strength to face the charge of the Ladies' Meetings this year. For one of those to whom their care was entrusted was disabled from even attending one single meeting, and to the other they were a first step out again into open and audible service after a year's silence and discipline of pain and weakness. Only a verse like this, which told that His having spoken in such solemnity, and the life being yet spared implied that He meant to speak again—only a conviction that the call to come forward was His voice could have made it possible to respond to it and to stand side by side with His children when met to face deep needs in themselves and supplies in Him.

Only a few knew the circumstances, but to those who did it gave a new and deeper hallowing to the gatherings, while all were conscious of how near and real the Presence of God was. Before there was any idea of Mrs. Bannister being unable to be present, it had been agreed that the meetings should be more especially for "Waiting upon God," and less for addresses. We all welcomed this, for the searching and enlightening of the tent meetings made a retreat in prayer a necessity. And the charge so plainly given to the beloved messenger with us last year, Rev. Andrew Murray, of "Wait upon God," had laid hold on many.

FIRST DAY.

We met first on Tuesday at noon. After prayer, Miss Nugent spoke of the intention of the meetings, and gave Mrs. Bannister's message, which was Isa. xxv. and xxvi., but specially xxvi. 9 and 10, pointing out the double word, "We have waited for Him," and the double assurance, "This is our God!" For when the waiting has been true, then we shall recognise the answer, in whatever form He sends it, and joyfully cry, "This is the Lord," even if the kind of response is a surprise. Three things follow true waiting;—joy, salvation, and rest. And how blessed that it can be said, "The hand of the Lord shall rest," telling that He can look forward to a completed work done by Him on his children. Verse 8 of ch. xxvi. was then alluded to; another waiting on the same Lord, but in a different way, "in the way of thy judgments." Even through them we have the blessed reward of waiting, when we can truly say, "The desire of our soul is to thy Name."

A time was then given to prayer, after which the hymn was sung, "My Saviour, Thou hast offered rest," and Mrs. Tottenham said a few words, very brief, but with a message in them which had a grip in it, which laid hold, and was continually afterwards being referred to. It was in allusion to the dryness in our lives, the want of water causing not only personal thirst but solemn barrenness of service. She dwelt on the deeply penetrating words spoken in the tent the evening before by Dr. Moule on "A broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise." He had spoken of the breaking, which might be so complete at one time, and yet never without possibility of petrification setting in again and of the concrete forming anew. How could that be met? Did not we want at any cost to have the heart of flesh and the living water ever springing? She then described an estate without water, and how its owner sent for a man who could discover water if there were any. He found—there was a spring was, but depths of rock lay over it, preventing it from rising. What should be done? The owner had no doubt. "Blast the rock," she said, and the rock was blasted, and the water sprang, and flows to this day, enriching the estate. Are you ready for even that?—for the blasting?

After prayer, Miss Nugent gave her opening message. It was from Num. xxi. 4-18, dividing it thus: Substitution, Sunrise, Song. She laid great stress on the substitution, being in the forefront. Until it was grasped there could be no advance in holiness, no move forward towards the sunrise or song. And this most striking of all the acted parables of atonement with which the Lord Jesus identified Himself came at the close of the wilderness wandering, on the very threshold of the fullness of blessing, telling how that God did not weary of repeating that great essential truth of atonement, even after the Passover, the smitten rock, and other types of it. When it is seen and accepted, then it can be true that we journey toward the sun-rising (v. 11), and the song and springing water are surely found (v. 17, 18). The speaker also pointed out the word, "What He did... in the brooks of Arnon," showing that there was a brook to cross (and more than one!) before the Jordan was reached, and that it might be that some brook had to be stepped over to-day, something so small that we hardly realised it was standing between us and the blessing we longed for! Then may He reveal any such brook which needed to be stepped over now. We then knelt, and a deeply solemn time followed, opening before our God, willingness for even that—the blasting if needful.

SECOND DAY.

The next day, after prayer, Miss Nugent opened with reading Deut. iv. 32-38, but without doing more than showing the inference that if God had been speaking through fire and fear, and yet had spared the life, it meant that He would speak again—He had more to say. Were we then ready to listen? She alluded to the words on "blasting the rock," and told how she had since then heard how the same was done in West Africa, where they had no dynamite. They kindled a fire on any rock they wished to shatter, on the day of the hottest sun, and then, when fiery hot, they poured cold water over it and it split in all directions. By the inward dynamite of his spirit, by the outward providential circumstances of life, He can do that breaking which is to release the spring. Is it not worth while? "We went through fire and water, but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place."

The many requests handed in were then pleaded. After that, Mrs. Michael Baxter spoke. She had been the one to give the Lord's word to the ladies' meetings at Keswick when first originated by Mrs. Harford-Battersby, wife of the beloved founder, and it seemed a beautiful planning and provision of the Lord that in the greatly-missed absence of one of his messengers of the intervening years, our dear friend should be so willingly ready to echo his voice. Her passage was 1 Sam. ii. 7, 8. She began with pointing out that the words "He raiseth up the poor out of the dust," were preceded with "He maketh poor." He has to break before He can build. He exalts indeed, and to a throne—his throne, but He brings low first. And then she spoke of that bringing low, and what it meant practically. Have we taken our place with Christ in death? as accursed on account of sin, as condemned? If we have, then we must remember that we are worthy of no more than He was in his voluntary position of the condemned One, we must account ourselves as a condemned criminal. Does that sound hard? Look at 1 Pet. ii. 19 in the R.V. (margin). The words "this is thankworthy" are "this is grace." It is a kingly place, for it is Christ's place. If we are standing on our rights, then we are not taking our place with Him, we are not identified with Him in his death; we have not as in Lev. xvi. 21 laid our hands on Him, and said "We are one with Thee, one in condemnation, one in death," and unless one with Him in humiliation we cannot be one with Him in his glory.

If we are condemned we have no rights. If property were to be left to a criminal sentenced to die, he could not inherit it. When we say, "I am crucified with Christ," it is taking the place of the condemned criminal, and we have no rights except to suffer with others.

May God show us the dignity of this place! Every manifestation of death is of life power, for when we take this place—our proper place, and are willing to be as low as He was, as despised as He was, then his life will be manifested in us; his Lamb-life will be shown in us, the Lamb spirit will fill us. Have you noticed how much there is of the Lamb in the Revelation? It is the wrath of the Lamb which is spoken of, it is of the Lamb the Church is to be the Bride.

In Rom. vi. 5 we read, "Planted together in the likeness of his death." He took our old man—all we are—into death with Him, but we have to sign our name to it, not by one act of acceptance only, but by taking the place daily, willing to be tested in it, and like James i. 2 ready to count it all joy when we meet the testings. He is taking the trouble to teach us by daily things. When you are held back from service to Him by the will of another; when you are prevented from taking a meeting by, perhaps, the unreasonable opposition of a relative, for instance—will you look upon these and such things as the testing of the place of death, and accept it? He tests in all ways, by weather, by your cook, by your work, by your health, and if you kick against these testings, then you are not proving that you have royal blood; but keeping in that low place, then the Throne is yours, then petrification cannot set in! And it is a safe place, for, as Pasteur Stockmayer said, there is only one man I know of who cannot fall, for he is too low down: he lives at the feet of Jesus. A time of most sacred prayer followed, when one after another surrendered afresh, taking that lowly place. Only the necessary close of the meeting ended it, otherwise it would have long continued.

THIRD DAY.

The Thursday meeting was opened with the hymn No. 4, which suited many present at one time:—

Sometimes I catch sweet glimpses of his face,
But that is all;
Sometimes He speaks a passing word of peace,
But that is all.

And we sang it softly, as the sad voice of some still; but could let glad strong voices loose with the verse, "Nay, do not wrong Him with thy heavy thoughts, But love his love," and

Then shall thy tossing soul find anchorage,
And steadfast peace;
Thy love shall rest on his, thy weary doubts
For ever cease.
Thy heart shall find in Him, and in his grace,
Its rest and bliss!

Much time was given to the requests, many personal, many for work or new workers. After that Miss Nugent spoke on three emptied things (not empty, but emptied, for they had been full before). Emptied hands, a threefold laying of outspread hands, in Lev. viii. The emptied altar at the temple (2 Chr. vii. 1), when God accepted and consumed; and the emptied tomb of the Gospels, for when we had accepted the death with Christ we were to go on to the resurrection with Him; as in Romans vi., the repeated allusion to the fact of being dead with Him was the prelude to the repeated bidding, "Walk in newness of life," "Dead, but alive."

Hymn 193 was sung next, "Buried with Christ, and raised with Him too," after which Mrs. Michael Baxter spoke, and again a deep sense fell over us all of how near God was, and how closely and prevailingly his voice was being heard. Her verse was from Mark xi. 3, "The Lord hath need of him." It was said of the little colt, and it tells us exactly of whom Christ has need—of the one who is low enough and small enough to lift Him, and be hidden itself. What did the crowd see as they saw the procession pass? They saw Christ uplifted, but the colt was hidden. It was too small to be seen, but not too small to bear Him.

This was the penetrating point of the words, and that God gave them, used them, and infused them into the hearts of the hearers came out in prayer. Again, it was only the hour of closing which was, the limit, telling how ready hearts are to "wait upon Him," when we realise whom we wait on, and that He is present, and is worth waiting on, as well as that He has something to give which is worth waiting for.

FOURTH DAY.

"Lord Jesus, Thou dost keep thy child," was the glad assurance which opened the last meeting on Friday. And then prayer followed that the ditches made in trust and obedience (2 Kings iii. 16) might soon be filled with water. The many requests were presented then, one specially for those who were laying the earthly remains of their dear child to rest that morning—the Rev. Colin and Mrs. Campbell—and praise with it for her bright life consecrated here some few years ago, and ever since filled with fruit to his glory; and also again for Mrs. Bannister, that His healing touch might swiftly raise her, and re-endue her for the work of sending others forth.

Mrs. Hath Noble then gave a brief address, asking, "What is God going to gain from Keswick this year?" and then showing three messages from the Acts which had been given after times of revival by Barnabas, in Acts xi. 23; by Paul and Barnabas, Acts xiii. 43; and by them again in xiv. 22. All have the refrain of "continue" in them. And how intensely important this word is to us, for the world is watching to see if Keswick is a reality. References to continue were then given. "Continue in my Love," John xv. 9; "Continue in my Word," John viii. 31; "Continue in Prayer," Col. iv. 2.

Miss M. Gollock then spoke. She with Mrs. Tottenham was in charge of the girls' meetings—on which God very specially set his seal this year—and she began with saying how that two months ago, when in time of strain and humiliation, God had given her a message which she felt was for the Ladies' Meeting at Keswick, although at the time it seemed the most unlikely place possible that she should give it in. It was from Ps. cxxx., a Psalm from the Depths. It was a temporary experience, and one that can be passed through more than once; and it was also a psalm which had no finish to it—perhaps because there could be no answer until the New Testament. What can the place of Depths become, should any here be in such now, or be yet called to go through them? They may be a place of prayer (v. 1); "Out of the depths have I cried." A place of intense supplication (v. 2); of conviction (v. 3); of forgiveness, thank God! (v. 4); of acquiescence (v. 5); of intense expectation (v. 6), not for blessing, but for the Lord; then also a place of self-forgetfulness (v. 7), for even there we may say, "Let Israel hope," and then of bold faith, brave and full (v. 8). Out of the depths—into what? Into union with the ascended Lord, as well as the crucified and risen Lord.

A time of praises followed, one after another uttering their thanks for what had been freshly seen of Him. The few closing moments were used for reading 2 Chron. xx. 26-28; "the fourth day"—our day here—assembled in "the valley of blessing," called so, not because of what they had received merely, but because there they blessed the Lord. Therefore it was called so, therefore it remained so! And the way to go homeward was with Jesus "in the forefront of them." Praise-prayer followed, ended with all together repeating, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing": He the only "Worthy One." And they fell down and worshipped Him that liveth for ever and ever."

PRAYER FOR MISSIONARIES.

On Saturday evening, August 1, we met again for the special purpose of using this most memorable and sacred anniversary by prayer for the dear labourers in China, specially in that province of Fuhkien, where the land has been hallowed and claimed by the offering of His servants' lives. They had joined in their little Keswick; their last Bible reading was on the Transfiguration, their last united prayer was the one of renewed consecration, "Here we offer and present unto Thee, O Lord, ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy, and lively sacrifice unto Thee." And within the next few hours it was accepted, and that great "Emptied Altar" was witness to the world of the deep and appalling need of those millions. The meeting was all prayer, except where Miss B. Newcombe gave an illustration of the ignorance of even the Christian women, and the time was used to pray for them; for the beloved relatives of those martyred ones; and in dedication of self, means, and talents afresh or anew to his service.

It was a time when hearts and lips were unsealed, and the Keswick gatherings closed at his feet for the "other sheep," after having freshly tasted of his love for ourselves. S.

A Missionary on Prayer.

A C. M. S. missionary writes to us:—I find that when you break the power of the "Medicine Man" among the Indians it is a wonderfully long step towards their evangelisation, and the missionary then obtains the place in their esteem and love that is held for Satan by the "Medicine Man" with his rattles and conjuring.

The year just closed has been one of wonderful blessing and answers to prayer. God has shown us that we prayed too little in the past. I am convinced that a great weakness among missionaries is that they make too much effort themselves, and forget that the most potent weapon God gives them is prayer. I only found this out when, baffled and beaten and discouraged, I took it to God and told Him I was beaten, and pleaded with Him, to do that which I was powerless to accomplish. I made the mistake of thinking I had to do the work, when "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit," is God's own word.

I do not mean by this that the missionary or minister is to sit down and do nothing but pray; far from it. The more he prays the more he works, and the stronger he gets for work. We have had marvellous answers to prayer; my weak faith, or courage, can scarce take in or realise the truth of what my eyes see and my senses convince me is so. The *whatsoever*s in the Word are as full of meaning as the *whosoever*s, when we begin to realise the amazing power of this weapon of prayer Christ puts into our hands.

God bless and cheer you for the cheer you bring to others through your valued publications. Sincerely thanking my unknown friend, whoever he or she may be, that sends me THE CHRISTIAN, and praying for blessings on you and your work.

Norway and its Missions.*

By PASTOR STORJOHANN.

CENTENARY commemorations have this year been held in Norway, and even among Norwegians in America, in celebration of the awakening of the great evangelist of Norway, Hans Nielsen Hauge, on April 5, 1796. This young peasant was working in the field, singing a hymn about the tasting of sweet communion with the Lord Jesus, when he experienced a wonderful baptism of the Holy Spirit. In surroundings of rationalistic darkness he became a light for Norway, and in the course of eight years, from 1796-1804, he evangelised the whole country. When he walked about to preach the Gospel he was always engaged in knitting stockings, hoping thereby to set his people an example of doing good with their hands. He had to suffer persecution, and lay in prison for ten years, not being allowed a Bible, or even pen and ink. A genius as he was, he might else, like Bunyan, have given his nation some rich fruit of his wonderful experience. In 1809, when there was want of salt in Norway, the English having blockaded the coast, Hauge proved to be the most able man to make salt out of sea-water; and having performed this for some months he was again put into prison. If his work was blessed, his martyrdom was still more so. He put the stamp of his spirit on the Norwegian religious world, which through him became permeated by a lay-preaching spirit stronger than elsewhere. This spirit met an urgent need, inasmuch as, of all Protestant countries, Norway has the smallest number of ministers.

A thrill ran through Norway during the centenary commemorations of Hauge, and a deep impression was made by reflection upon the amount of good that even one single-minded and devoted man may do for an entire land. The outcome of Hauge's labours has not only been city mission work all over the land, but especially a very great interest in missions among the heathens, dating from 1840. In Zululand we had to wait fourteen years for the first baptism, in 1856. There is a beautiful story of an aged Norwegian peasant working in the field; a true friend of Missions, he was always praying for the heathens. He sees his grandchild running towards him with a leaf of paper in her hand. It must be good tidings, as she is more flying than walking. It was the missionary magazine telling of the baptism of the first Zulu girl!

But we had to wait patiently in Zululand. God granted us a most powerful and blessed work in Madagascar. Great as it is, that work may in the present crisis have a special importance, as the Norwegians, being entirely neutral, cannot be suspected of political motives. It is a matter of thankfulness that the French governor in Madagascar, M. Laroche, is a convinced Protestant; and it is of no less importance that the necessity of learning the French language, and teaching the same to the Madagascar preachers and teachers, has brought our Church and missionaries into intimate connection with the Reformed Church of France, which has now stepped into the field to work together with our mission. Indeed, the whole Protestant French Church will now have to plunge into this field of work to counterbalance the influence of the Jesuits. How cheering it is that God shows us, as here, that He can turn difficulties into means of prompting the evangelisation of the world.

No less wonderful has been the Norwegian mission among the Santals in India. Here God has united Sweden and Denmark with Norway in a common work. Nothing can melt the heart of Christians into the great unity of Christ as prayer and work for the heathen is able to do. The old Viking spirit of Norway shows itself in our days, apart from theansen expedition, in a double way. We have given to America through emigration no less than a third part of our nation, and still our population has grown. The wonderful way in which our emigrants, most thrifty and excellent tillers of the American soil, have managed in this half century, without much help from the mother Church, to build about one thousand churches, and in four Norwegian theological seminaries to educate their own missionaries, shows the genuine Puritan spirit which they took with them from home. The other trace of the Viking spirit is to be found among our sailors. Every thirtieth person in Norway is a sailor, and if you take also the large fishing population along the coast, every twentieth. For our dear sailors we have all over the world a sailors' mission work, as perhaps no other nation has, not even the English. All the four northern nations—Finland also included—work together here, and the Gospel is preached to the sailors in fifty-six out-stations, of which one-half are Norwegians. Sailing ships becoming rarer, we have no room for our 60,000 sailors in our own ships, and it is computed that one-third of the sailors in English ships are Scandinavians, the greater part of them Norwegians; and it is shown by statistics that 23,000 Scandinavian sailors were in the coasting ships of America in 1893.

Although our sailors' ministers seek to reach our sailors on foreign ships as much as possible, they are for a great part thrust upon the care of English and American sailors' missions. Here we want an Evangelical Alliance work pushed forward. At the Alliance meeting in Copenhagen in 1884, of which the blessing never will be forgotten in the Lutheran Church, I tried to call attention to an Alliance work for saving the poor sailors from the frightful evil of the crimping system. America would be the right place for an Alliance meeting to consider this important question, with a view to the enactment of an international law for the protection of sailors from the curse of the crimps and the landsharks. Taken up by the Alliance, it might grow to a special independent movement, in some way like the Sunday question.

Harvest Hymn.

INFINITE bounty now displayed
O'er earth's extended plain;
For man so full provision made
Demands a thankful strain.

What less than an Almighty Power
Could millions thus supply?
What less than love almighty shower
Such fulness from on high?

O that our meaner thoughts could soar
To contemplate such love;
And, with a worthy song, adore
Goodness enthroned above.

Accept, thou God of earth and skies,
The praise we offer now;
Our poor yet loving sacrifice,
As we in homage bow.

ALBERT H. NOLAN.

The National Refuges.—The trustees of the Delmar Charitable Trust have just granted out of the income of the fund for the current year the sum of five guineas to the National Refuges and Training Ships Arethusa and Chichester. This society, whose headquarters are at 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, has, during the past fifty-three years, rescued from destitution no less than 13,879 children.

The Clifton Conference.—Rev. James Omiston, the convener of this Conference, writes:—"For the seventeenth time, I am permitted to notify the assembling of his people at the Clifton Conference, to be held at the Victoria Rooms on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, October 6, 7 and 8. The subject selected is the wondrous counsel of the Lord that even now (Eph. ii. 10) 'the Church' shall be the vehicle of communicating unto 'the principalities and powers in heavenly places' the knowledge of his 'manifest wisdom.' We are invited to confer on:—
I. 'Christ and the Church' (Eph. v. 32).—I. The Bridegroom.—'Altogether lovely' (Song v. 16). II. The Bride.—'Black, but comely' (Song i. 5). III. The Marriage of the Lamb.—'Let us be glad and rejoice' (Rev. xix. 7)."

Y.W.C.A. "Summer-school."

THE Y.W.C.A. "Summer-school" at Cliff College, Curbar, Derbyshire, opened on Thursday last, there being present about fifty secretaries and Christian workers.

Dr. Bullinger commenced his course of Bible study on Friday with a lecture on the figures of Scripture language, pointing out how peculiarities in breaking ordinary laws draw attention to special points in the written Word, as do marks of emphasis, exclamations, etc., in spoken.

His two points illustrated (1) the figure called Asyndeton ("no ands," or no conjunctions) as shown in Luke xiv. 13, Exod. xv. 9, 10, 2 Tim. iii. 10, 16, 1 Cor. i. 30, etc.—sentences which lead us on without pause to a climax (generally some action of God); and (2) the figure called Polysyndeton ("many ands"), when each word is to be carefully marked as containing some important meaning (Luke xiv. 21, xi. 11, 18, xv. 20, 22, 1 Ch. xxvi. 11, etc.). Of such figures of speech the Greeks collected and named some hundreds, but very few now know anything about them.

An hour of Association study followed, led by Miss Kinnaird on "Youth and Age in the Y.W.C.A." In the evening Mrs. Tottenham conducted a helpful prayer-meeting, and Dr. Grattan Guinness gave an interesting "talk" on "The History of Astronomy." On Saturday Dr. Bullinger continued his instruction by a study of the figure called Ellipsis, and the special emphasis conveyed by words left out. He threw much helpful light on such difficult passages as Gal. iii. 20, which is explained by Gen. xv., Psalm xii. 6, and Prov. xxi. 1.

Miss Morley conducted a class on "A Model Y.W.C.A. Secretary," drawing out nine necessary qualifications for such a worker from St. Paul's Epistles to Timothy. A discussion followed on the use of literature. In the afternoon Miss Habershon gave a lecture on the Tabernacle, illustrated by her beautiful model, and full of deep spiritual lessons.

Mrs. Tottenham took the evening meeting, her subject, "Personal Dealing with Varieties of Character." This subject also formed part of the course for Sunday and Monday.

The prayerful spirit which pervades all these gatherings must bring a blessing on earnest study. Walks on the moors and to Eyam—the village so remarkable from its historical record of self-denial in the plague times, 1666—with various excursions, and the use of Dr. Grattan Guinness's beautiful grounds, provide pleasant recreation to weary brain-workers. The arrangements for the students' comfort seem well-nigh perfect.

The Student Movement.

A NOTABLE feature of the recent Students' Conference at Keswick was the appeal made by Mr. D. A. Black, of Belfast, on behalf of the Y.M.C.A., and Miss G. Gollock for the Y.W.C.A. Mr. Black is secretary for one of the most flourishing branches of the Y.M.C.A. in Great Britain, and has had great experience of and most remarkable success in working among young men. He deprecated any desire to disturb the life purpose of those who had devoted themselves to the Foreign Field, but he appealed for at least temporary help for the young men of Great Britain and Ireland to-day. Many of them were drifting and careless, and exposed to the temptations of our towns and cities; a still greater number, perhaps, were opposed to religion. He pointed out that there was no more desirable field for service than this. It was one, too, from which many volunteers for foreign missions had been gathered in the past, and could be gathered in the future.

Miss Gollock appealed specially to the young women. The Y.W.C.A. could afford them either temporary or permanent work. Those around us every day needed to be looked after. She threw out a challenge to the volunteers to offer for local work, and the Y.W.C.A. would provide suitable work for them. She suggested the appointment of an "intermediate occupation secretary" who would organise the workers, and provide volunteers to accompany older workers on evangelistic tours. Miss Gollock's address was highly practical and suggestive, and was followed with deep interest.

At a very interesting meeting at the Students' camp on behalf of the British College Christian Union, £360 was subscribed or promised on the spot.

An Industrial Mission Colony.

By SELMA COLLIANDER, LUND, SWEDEN.

THE British control and development of the natives of India has been widely furthered by the promotion, as occasion offered, of production, manufacture, and commerce. In effectively conducting this policy, signal success has attended the encouragement of missionaries, to direct their efforts to the physical comfort, social elevation, and material prosperity of the people accessible to them, as well as to their religious enlightenment and eternal salvation. An illustration of this kind of governmental encouragement to Christian missionary endeavour is to be found in the opportunities afforded most especially to the agents of the Church Missionary Society and to Messrs. Borresen and Skrefsrud, of the Scandinavian Santal Mission.

In return for services rendered, the English Government presented the Scandinavian missionaries with an extensive district, to be used by them for industrial purposes and colonisation. The colony formed thereon is one of the brightest features of the Scandinavian Santal Mission, and would alone be enough to excite the liveliest interest in the work of the Mission. The colony contains 16,000 acres of the most fertile soil, of which more than half is cultivated, and instead of being impenetrable bushwood, it is now turned into flourishing villages, with a population obedient to the law and easy to govern.

In the Scandinavian Mission Colony the desire of the nomadic Santals for activity and food-winning is met, and they are attended by circumstances calculated to give and to settle them into communities of Christian citizens. There they find employment, and in three or four years secure independence. There also their home-life is re-established on a Christian basis, whilst they are able to keep up communication with their native country. The most difficult task, however, is to excite self-reliance in the Santals themselves, and to guard them against the temptation to loaf on the Colony, and thus to become a burden to it. As most of the Santals are very poor when they get to the Colony, Mr. Bahr, the superintendent, allows them to borrow money at a comparatively low interest from a fund which a missionary friend in Calcutta has placed at his disposal. By this means the emigrant Santals are able to buy buffaloes and provide themselves with food, also cereals for sowing. In about three years they are able, by

to live by their work, to become owners of the buffaloes, and to have a good deal of rice to sell.

Mr. Bahr is a Norwegian. He resigned a lucrative post in the Botanical Gardens in Calcutta in order to work as a leader in the Colony. He married Mr. Borresen's daughter, and in him and his wife the Lord has invaluable workers for the Santal people. The Colony Guma Dura, as it is called, is immensely fertile, and produces both tropical and other kinds of grain, fruits, spices, oil and gum-trees, dye-yielding plants, cotton, and different sorts of timber. For an industrious labourer there is harvest time of some sort or other almost all the year round. Three circumstances exist that ought particularly to increase the interest of Europe and America in the Colony—first, the colonists have begun a very promising mission among a very encouraging people called the Mechs. This has induced Mr. Skrefsrud to repeat the efforts he made with so much success to give the Santals an alphabet and a written and printed language; and, having studied the language of the Mechs, with the assistance of two Mech-men, whom he took to Ebenezer, he has published a grammar and catechism in the language.

Secondly, the Mission has acquired two tea-plantations, which were laid out by Europeans, close to the boundary of the Colony. This has prepared the way for great influence on all the hundreds of heathen Santals, of whom a third part are women, who come up in order to seek work at the missionary tea-plantations.

Thirdly, there is every prospect of this Colony and industry becoming a rich source of income to the Mission, when the tea-plantations shall have acquired a greater extent. Already the tea gathered in these plantations is sent to an agency in Denmark, from whence it is sold all over Scandinavia.

The acquisition of property by missionary agents, or under their guidance, and the establishment of commercial industries under Christian auspices, might constitute a bond around evangelising endeavour that would multiply Christianising labourers, and expand the fields of sanctified endeavour. At all events, the plantations under the auspices of the Church of England Missionary Society, and of the Scandinavian Missions in Santalistan, point to a possibility as yet but little used for the evangelisation of the world, and suggest the query—Are not missionary efforts too stereotyped, limited, and cramped, too exclusively clerical and scholastic?

The work of Mr. Borresen and Mr. Skrefsrud amongst the Santals was commenced by them as laymen, educated chiefly in trade, and practised in handicraft, and it has grown in every direction, spiritually, morally, materially, industrially, and commercially, to the interest and edification of the whole Church of God, and to the demonstration of the circumstance that godliness, in an historical and doctrinal Gospel, accompanied by secular endeavour to give that Gospel a material, social, and commercial effect, is the truest, best, and largest possible elevator of a people, and the most just vindication of Christian missions as the best civiliser of mankind.

Christian Citizenship.

CHRISTIANITY is the law of our life. There is never a moment when we do not need it. There is never an experience from which it is safe to banish it; never a thought or purpose or deed which it ought not to dominate. If you leave it behind you when you go to business or into politics, or lock it up at home when you go on a vacation, or lay it away every Sunday night with your Bible, you will be hopelessly crippled in the higher duties and destinies of every-day life. It would be like binding arm and leg so that the blood could not flow into them.

Some Christians are horror-struck at the idea of associating politics and religion. Politics are so wicked, so defiled, so degrading, that good men must have nothing to do with them. They are not always and everywhere so bad; but why are they ever bad? The answer is easy to find. Take the light out of a room, and darkness becomes supreme. To banish the darkness, you have only to bring back the light.

The great need of the world is that God should be everywhere and constantly present. We want God in our business as well as in our churches; in our amusements as well as in our devotions; in our politics most of all. What are politics? In the language of President Hitchcock politics are "the principles by which nations should be governed and regulated," and are "only a branch of ethics," or rather "a special application of the principles of morality and religion." It is a fair field for Christian endeavour; and we believe that any Endeavourer may be as much "a missionary of God in politics as in the forests of Africa." He should go to the polls or the political convention as regularly, as religiously as he goes to church or to conference or to prayer-meeting. Let us all be not only Christians but citizens; not Christians in the church and citizens out of it, but always Christians, always citizens, citizen Christians, Christian citizens.—N.Y. Independent.

Medical Missionaries.—Dr. W. J. Wanless, in recent missionary addresses in America, contrasted the medical advantages of the United States and non-Christian lands. The 118 medical institutions of the States graduate 5000 physicians annually; yet there are only 400 medical missionaries in the whole world.

Lady Helpers.—Rev. J. B. McCullagh, of Aiyansh, up the Naas river, in British Columbia, is "filled with thankfulness at the evidences of progress and development in spiritual life and morals, and also in civilisation and education. Among other institutions a "White Cross Association" was formed in 1893, consisting of fifteen female communicants. These nurse the sick and attend to their needs. Mr. McCullagh adds:—"These lady helpers of ours can also do a little navy work on a pinch; they cast up a fine level road from the mission-house to the church, a distance of about 600 yards. I had called upon the men twice to make this road, but they shirked the job with one excuse or another. Then the women said, 'Do not ask a third time; if the men do not begin before Monday we will arise and make the road.' And so they did."

Singing the Gospel.

To the Sunday School Times of Philadelphia Mr. Sankey contributes some very interesting reminiscences of the first days of Gospel work spent by Mr. Moody and himself in Edinburgh. As to his own special department of the work, he says:—

The question of the solo-singing, as to its propriety and usefulness, was not as yet fully understood or admitted; hence it was with much fear and trepidation that we entered upon our three months' campaign.

On the third evening, as I took my seat at the instrument, I discovered, to my great surprise, that Dr. Horatius Bonar was seated close by my organ, right in front of the pulpit.

Of all men in Scotland, he was the one man of whose decision I was most solicitous. He was my ideal hymn-writer, the prince among hymnists of his day and generation. And yet he would not sing one of his own beautiful hymns in his own congregation, such as "I heard the voice of Jesus say," or "I was a wandering sheep," because he ministered to a church that believed in the use of David's Psalms only.

It was with fear and trembling I announced as a solo the song, "Free from the Law; oh, happy condition." No prayer having been offered for this part of the service, and feeling that the singing might prove only an entertainment and not a spiritual blessing, I requested the whole congregation to join me in a word of prayer, asking God to bless the truth about to be sung. In the prayer my anxiety was relieved. Believing and rejoicing in the glorious truth contained in the song, I sang it through to the end.

At the close of Mr. Moody's address Dr. Bonar turned toward me, with a smile on his venerable face, and, reaching out his hand, said, "Well, Mr. Sankey, you sang the Gospel to-night." And thus the way was opened for my mission of sacred song in Scotland.

American Workers in London.

At the noon meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday, Rev. W. R. Deming and Mr. Thomas D. Roberts, of Boston, U.S., gave some account of their work at home and their experiences in London. Mr. Deming was formerly the Y.M.C.A. secretary at Boston. He then became the minister of a Baptist church, and has for some years been deeply and practically interested in rescue work, and has been instrumental in restricting the operations of many disreputable persons trading on the ignorance and passion of others.

Mr. Roberts is the superintendent of the Boston Industrial Home, of which the late Dr. A. J. Gordon was president. Mr. Roberts was in his younger days a jockey, well known in Cornwall, but since his conversion has been faithfully and zealously serving God.

Dr. Gordon, in his report of the Industrial Home, the last official writing he ever did on earth, said:—"Mr. Roberts has given eminent satisfaction by his stirring and aggressive policy, and by his personal activity in the business and evangelistic departments of the work; while Mrs. Roberts deserves the highest commendation for the great energy and tact with which she has fulfilled the duties of the Home." A few months later, in April, 1895, Mrs. Roberts was called to her rest, and Mr. Roberts is now travelling with Mr. Deming, giving information of his own and gaining information of others' work.

The Sunday-school Union will hold another "Chautauqua" for Sunday-school workers from August 29 to Sept. 12, at Bournemouth, and a delightful programme has been prepared. Besides lectures on Astronomy, the Art of Teaching, and Life in the East, there will be a variety of other meetings. Rev. F. B. Meyer is to speak on the work of the Holy Spirit; Miss Marianne Farningham on ways of helping elder girls; Rev. Knight Chaplin on the relation of the Y.P.S.C.E. to the Sunday-school. In connection with excursions by road, rail, and sea to the New Forest, Christchurch, the Isle of Wight, Swanage, etc., there will be informal al fresco conferences and opportunities for intercourse with foremost Sunday-school workers, while, as in former Chautauquas, the morning gatherings for united praise and prayer are expected to prove seasons of great blessing. Christian workers who want a maximum of healthful pleasure and congenial companionship at a minimum of cost cannot do better than join the Chautauqua.

Tracts and Their Use.

By REV. R. A. TORREY, CHICAGO.

I THINK that one of the most efficient means of Christian work is tracts. I did not always think so. I was in the ministry quite a number of years before I ever gave out a tract, and I looked upon them with a good deal of contempt. Of course, there are a great many worthless tracts, and much distribution of them that is worse than useless; but this is only a reason why we should be careful what tracts we give out and how we distribute them.

A tract will often succeed in winning a man to Christ where a sermon or where personal conversation has failed. One of the students of the Bible Institute wrote me in great joy that he had at last succeeded in winning a whole family to Christ. He had been working for that family for a long time, but could not touch them. But one day he left a tract with them, and God used that tract for the conversion of four or five members of the family. One of our students held a cottage meeting at a home, and by mistake left his Bible there, and a member of the family found a tract in the Bible which was the means of leading her to Christ. There is one tract entitled "What is it to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ?" the author of which has 1700 letters from people that have been led to Christ by reading it.

A tract has several advantages: (a) It always sticks to the point. (b) It never loses its temper. (c) Oftentimes people who are too proud to be talked with will read a tract when no one is looking. (d) It stays by one. Some years ago a man came into a mission in New York. One of the workers tried to talk with him, but he would not listen. As he was leaving, a card was placed in his hand which read: "If I should die to-night, I would go to—." He put it in his pocket, went to his steamer, for he was a sailor, and slipped it in the edge of his bunk. The steamer started for Liverpool shortly afterward. On the voyage he was taken sick, and as he lay in his berth that card stared him in the face day and night. Finally he said, "Well, if I should die to-night I would go to hell. But I will not go there, I will go to heaven; I will take Christ right here and now." And right there in his berth he did take Christ. He went to Liverpool, returned to New York and went to the mission, told his story, and had the card still in his possession. The conversation he had at the mission left him, but the card stood by him. Thousands of people are won to Christ by leaflets.

HOW TO USE TRACTS.

Another advantage of tracts is to lead Christians into a deeper and more earnest Christian life. It is a great mistake to use tracts merely to win the unsaved to Christ. A little tract on the coming of the Lord, although I do not think it was altogether doctrinally correct, made a change in my whole life. It was slipped into my hand at the first convention of Christian workers I attended. I read it, and from that day to this, the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ has been a reality to me. I believed in it before, of course, but time and time again since, the thought has come to me as a living reality, "Is this what you would like to be doing if Jesus should come to-day?" There are special classes of people with whom this form of ministry is especially helpful in leading them out into a deeper spiritual life, in places where they do not enjoy spiritual advantages. You know some one that is leading a very unsatisfactory Christian life, and you long to have that person know what the Christian life really means. The pastor may not be a spiritual man and may not know the deep things of God. It is the simplest thing in the world to slip into a letter and send to that man a tract that will lead him out into an entirely new Christian life.

Another use of tracts is to correct error. This is a very necessary work in the day in which you and I live. Another use of tracts is to set Christians to work. I wish there were more tracts calculated to accomplish this result.

It is sometimes very hard to break right in upon a person and talk religion. I was travelling on the train once, and asked the Lord to lead me to some one, when two young ladies came in, and took the vacant seat in front of me. I had met one of them before. I took out a tract that I thought would be suitable, slipped it into her hand, and said: "I have something here that I wish you would read." She took the tract and read it, and while she read, I prayed. When she finished, I said: "What do you think of it?" She said, "I wish I was a Christian." I leaned over and spoke with her, and pointed her to Christ. And there on the train she accepted Christ with tears in her eyes.

I think as a rule when you have finished talking with some one, you should not leave him without something definite to take home and read. If the person has accepted Christ, we should always put some tract in his hand to show him how to succeed in the Christian life.

Use tracts when a conversation is impossible, e.g., to foreigners. Send them to people at a distance, especially those living in out-of-the-way places where there is no preaching. Give them to people you meet with whom you could not hold a conversation. For instance, on street cars and other public places people do not like to be talked with, but you can give them a tract, and the tract will talk, and other people will not notice what is going on.

Always read the tracts yourself before giving them to others. This is very necessary. Tracts printed in foreign languages are usually but translations of English tracts, and you can read the English tract. Suit your tract to the person to whom you give it. What is good for one person may not be good for another. Carry a selection of tracts with you. I do not say a collection, but a selection: that is, tracts selected for the different classes of people with whom you come in contact. Seek the guidance of God. This is of very great importance. If there is any place where we need wisdom from above it is in the selection of tracts and in their use after selection.

Seek God's blessing upon the tract after you have given it out. Do not merely give out a tract and there let the matter rest; but whenever you give out a tract, ask God to bless it. Give a man a tract with words and sentences underscored. Men are curious, and they will take particular notice of the underscoring. It is a good thing for a man to have a tract put up in his office. One man had a few words written on his paper-weight. A great many persons who came into his office saw it, and it made a great impression upon them.

Dover Rescue Association.

DEAR SIR,—In garrison towns there is always an especial need for outside rescue agencies (as distinct from homes) such as the association which has recently been started in Dover. The sad features of work of this nature are only too uniform; but in Dover two facts increase the difficulties of the work, at the same time that they make it more imperative.

One is an exceptionally low standard of morality, due possibly in part to the ideas fostered by the working of the former C. D. Acts. The number of husbands and wives living with the wives and husbands of others is quite abnormal and simply appalling; and of parents who have encouraged and lived on the sin of their daughters from a shockingly low age, we have several notorious instances. The police seem powerless to prevent the introduction of these young girls to a life of shame.

The other is the existence and inducements, and facilities for girls who may have got into some trouble, frequently strangers from some neighbouring town or village, to live out in the fields or trenches round the barracks, and beyond the surveillance of the town police. This is a regular thing here in the summer months. Often do these poor girls get admitted at night, unknown to the officers, into the guardrooms, and even into the barracks.

The work of our rescue worker, Miss Quance, a devoted Christian, possessing just the qualities needed for it, is to hunt up such cases in their haunts, and try and get them into our temporary shelter, pending further arrangements for them. Our committee is widely representative of the various Christian bodies here, and our work is quite unsectarian; but it is difficult to raise funds in this not-over-rich town for this "highway and hedge" work, as there is also a local Home here to be supported.

Yours, in Christ's service,

HENRY BAZETT, Hon. Sec.

77, High-street, Dover.

East London Medical Mission.

THE humble work being carried on by the East London Medical Mission, 224, High-street, Shadwell, although not often brought before the Christian public, ministers to one of the poorest centres of East London. For many years it was carried on as an integral part of Dr. Barnardo's work, but for the last two years and a half it has been worked as an auxiliary to the work of Livingstone College, while still retaining its connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes, Dr. Barnardo providing part of the funds.

During 1895, 1,361 new patients were admitted as out-patients, making in all a total of 5,299 attendances. On each occasion the patients have heard the Gospel message, and in a large number of cases we have reason to believe that they have not been accustomed to attend any place of worship. Thus the Mission is a most important evangelistic centre.

In addition to this, the dispensary affords valuable opportunities to the students of Livingstone College for acquiring a practical knowledge of the treatment of diseases, and of obtaining instruction in practical dispensing, and thus this Mission proves to be of great value to both home and foreign missions, a link which is much to be desired in these days when the two are so often pitted against one another.

For a short time a resident medical officer was secured, who visited the patients in their homes—a branch of the work which is almost essential in any properly conducted Medical Mission; but during the past year it has been quite impossible, owing to lack of funds, to supply this much-needed help to the sick poor of the neighbourhood, who are often in great distress and unable to obtain the help which they so much require. The Mission is carried on with the very greatest economy; the total sum spent during the twelve months ending September 30, 1896, will probably not amount to more than £320, including rent, drugs, and expenses connected with the care of the premises. All the medical attendance is given gratuitously, and no charge is made for administration expenses; so that every penny contributed to the Mission is devoted to the provision of drugs, maintenance, and other working expenses.

We really need almost at once £100, and if the Mission is to be rendered efficient in every sense of the term, at least double that amount is required. The treasurer is Mr. R. L. Barclay, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

It is hoped that an opportunity may be given to friends wishing to see the Mission themselves, to visit it during the late autumn, as it is proposed to hold the annual meeting of Livingstone College and the East London Medical Mission together in Shadwell. Notice of this will be given in due time.

C. F. HARFORD-BATTERSBY.

"Can you spare so much?" asked the pastor of a small Protestant congregation in Lyons, when an old soldier brought his three months' earnings to help build a chapel. "My Saviour spared not Himself," was the reply, "but freely gave his life for me; surely I can spare one-quarter of a year's earnings to extend his kingdom on earth."

The Chicago Flower Mission has existed for twenty-one years, and the quantity of flowers distributed has increased from 300 bunches the first season to almost 100,000 last year. The president reports that "the bright, fragrant blossoms sent by kind friends in the country have carried light to 'darkest Chicago.' The Christian Endeavour societies throughout the State of Iowa have organised a flower mission department, and send immense quantities of flowers for us to distribute."

The St. Albans City Mission has been hard at work during the last few months. Well-attended meetings in the open air have been conducted with good results. In view of the winter's work, the committee are anxious to commence something new, and purpose holding Gospel services in a hall in the centre of the city for children and for adults. Another way has been opened for further work by a friend offering a piece of land for the purpose of erecting a mission room. This is in one of the most thickly populated parts of the city, known as Bernard's Heath, and where evangelical testimony is unknown. The committee are endeavouring to raise the sum of about £100 for the purpose of building the iron room. The secretary is H. R. Hobbs, 2, Clifton-street, St. Albans.

The Fatherless and the Widow.

UNDER this title, the St. Giles' Christian Mission has issued its annual report, telling of a large amount of real and resultful work. "The fatherless, the widows, the poor, the oppressed, the suffering, the tempted, the ignorant and them that are out of the way, are and have been for many years, our especial care. We seek to extend a helping hand, spiritually and temporally to them that have need, and we have cause to praise God that we have been enabled to pluck many brands from the burning, whilst relieving the sorrow and suffering which press so sorely around."

First comes the Prisoners' Branch, carrying on true mission work and reformatory effort on behalf of discharged prisoners, released convicts, first offenders, tempted boys, and homeless, despairing women and girls.

Then direct Mission Work amongst the poor and sinful of St. Giles' and Holborn, meeting so far as possible their temporal necessities, whilst bringing to them the glad news of salvation. The Children's Mission including Sunday-schools, bands of hope, children's services, and other agencies for the young.

Lastly, the more recent developments—the Orphanage for destitute, deserted children, and the Seaside Convalescent and Holiday Home for sickly, ailing, strengthless men, women, and children of this poor district.

The whole is illustrated by telling incidents of rescue and conversion, showing how men who have gone wrong have been reclaimed and won to the Saviour; while hundreds of betrayed boys have been saved from the prison taint and a life of crime. All will read these pages with profound thankfulness, bearing in mind that, while seeking to help such to honest lives, "the most earnest effort is made to bring before each individual the way of salvation, and to urge him to flee to Christ as the only Saviour and Keeper. Still, as ever, our confidence is first and foremost in the transforming power of the Gospel."

Moreover, "The experience of years has shown us that the men who are sent to prison are not the chief sufferers. Having done wrong, they suffer justly, but the wife and children at home, who have had no share in the crime, have to bear the heaviest penalty, being left without resource. The straits to which they are being reduced are often most deplorable, and occasionally the despairing mother is tempted to sin for her children's bread. What, for example, was a mother to do, whose daughter was dying of consumption and shivering with cold, fireless and foodless on a wintry day? The father's fault was his and not hers. Hearing of the case—and we make it our business to discover such—we sent timely relief."

But we cannot stay to follow out all the various operations, abundant in result, among the poor, the ignorant, and the sinful. The work in Mr. Wheatley's hands is in full activity, and deserves liberal aid from the Lord's people. Address, Mr. W. Wheatley, St. Giles' Christian Mission, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, E.C.

Work in Mexico.

IN recent letters to Mr. John Mercer, of "Harburg," Fallowfield, Manchester, Mr. Egton Harris writes from Orizaba, Mexico:—

I recently went up to Mexico city to buy paper, etc., taking with me as many tracts as possible for distribution on the road and in the city of nearly half-a-million souls. In the car were about fifty persons, of whom fifteen were priests. As the journey takes from ten in the morning till seven in the evening, I gave to each something substantial to read. The first two hours after leaving Orizaba takes one through one of the most beautiful mountain sceneries of the world, which naturally absorbs all attention. Between the stations the passengers are glad to have something to read. One of the priests (who I found knew me) stood and announced that the books were Protestant and forbidden. The other priests pocketed their Gospels, or whatever may have fallen to their share, but the "common people" read on gladly. I noted some who read on, page after page of Mark's Gospel, till they must have nearly concluded it. I was meanwhile occupied in giving out Gospels from the window, at the stations, or throwing out small rolls of tracts to any we passed on the way. These "flying rolls" have borne fruit on other occasions, and I trust this journey will not be barren as to results.

The printing press is continually running. I have now in the press one of Pascoe's larger tracts which I believe will be useful. For the "Pilgrim's Progress" I have bought about one-half of the paper needed and the cardboard for covers, but have not commenced on the setting-up yet.

Suffering Violence.

DR. J. O. SUMMERHAYES, C.M.S., writes from Dora Ghazi Khan:—The work is going on well both in Ghazi and the villages in the district, where Mr. Day, Padre Izhak, and two helpers, one being in charge of the medicines, have been preaching; they were, however, mobbed severely at a small village, and it seems that but for the nearness of a mosque one or more might have been killed, as the men had evidently come over from a neighbouring town bent on mischief. Mr. Day and the others had only been preaching Christ faithfully. This had had a good effect on some of the chief people who support the Mullah, and we believe that he stirred it up. Padre Izhak was severely beaten and knocked down and trampled on again and again, and Mr. Day was also almost stunned. The people wanted to make them Mohammedans. At last they dashed into a mosque and were safe, and they would not leave until the crowd of 100 to 200 went away.

We all think it best not to prosecute the people. We could easily do so, as our Padre knows the names of several. We reported it, however, to the Government officials, as they were breaking the law in mobbing anybody. The Christians took it wonderfully well, and were willing to preach again next day; anyway, we can thank God for their deliverance from anything worse than a thrashing, and be happy in suffering for his Name's sake. From this little incident you will see that the Word is making progress, and that those who love darkness have actively opposed the light which they found was coming in; and many, I believe, will be more influenced by the behaviour of our Christians under this trouble than by all their preaching, for we have only to prosecute, and, without a doubt, many men would be put into prison; but, like Paul the Roman citizen, Mr. Day does not let his position as a British subject lift him beyond troubles which our native brothers will have to face and are facing bravely.

On the Mackenzie River.

THE committee of the Colonial and Continental Church Society have received a letter from the Bishop of Mackenzie River, in the North-West Territory, Canada, giving an account of a sad calamity which fell upon him and the Mission in January last, and appealing for help, which in a climate so severe as that should be promptly given. The Bishop says:—

"I am very sorry to have to ask the Society's aid. On January 24 our house with most of its contents was reduced to ashes. We had to turn out in the middle of the night, half-dressed, with the temperature outside fifty degrees below zero, and witness the destruction of our cosy little home. Most of the contents of two rooms were saved, but Mr. Webb lost everything. My wife was left without even a change of underwear, and not a single plate or spoon, or kettle, or anything of that kind remained to us. The loss is estimated at £1000. If the committee could make a grant to help us to rebuild the house it would be a great boon, and I should be extremely obliged."

The funds of the society being collected for aid to the living ministry alone, the committee cannot make grants for building purposes, but will be most thankful to receive any help for the bishop, which will be forwarded without delay. The rigorous North-West winter sets in early, and there is no time to be lost. Mr. Webb, who has lost everything, is the society's agent labouring among whites, and also among Indians and half-breeds.

The West Indies.

SIR,—There is a small mission in St. Lucia conducted by a lady from the United States, Miss Symonds, with the help of friends from Barbados and elsewhere. It is doing good work among the negro and coloured population—most of whom are Roman Catholics—and also among the troops stationed here, especially the native West Indians. Several men of the West Indian infantry who were converted at Sierra Leone three or four years ago are regular attendants and fellow-workers.

Miss Symonds also devotes much attention to the seamen of the numerous vessels which call here. There is a great opportunity for distribution of literature; and she would be most grateful to friends who would send her packets of papers with good spiritual teaching. Tracts, leaflets, magazines, Gospels, etc.—all would have their use, in almost any language, especially English and French. Address, Miss Symonds, Soldiers' and Seamen's Mission, Castries, St. Lucia, W.I.

Yours faithfully,

E. R. KENYON, Major, R.E.

Union Church, Ootacamund.

ABOUT forty years ago, a small place of worship named "Zion Chapel," was erected in this South Indian hill station for the use of Protestant Christians of all denominations. It was subsequently called the "Union Evangelistic Hall," and was under the charge of trustees who arranged for the services by inviting the various missionaries frequenting the sanatorium to preach. During the past few years the building has become too small for the increasing congregations, and in 1893 it was determined to build another hall in a more central part of the station. A piece of land near the principal road in Ootacamund was granted by Government, and the foundation stone of the new church was laid by Dr. Henry Soltan in October, 1895.

The services in connection with opening of the church were held on July 4, when friends came from all parts of the Nilgiri Hills to show their sympathy with the work. Mr. Herbert R. Francis, the minister, presided at a devotional meeting held in the afternoon. During the tea hour an opportunity was given for offerings towards the building fund, and no less than Rs. 750, gifts and promises were handed in to the treasurer. Mr. J. Boesinger, of Coonoor, the senior trustee, presided over a crowded meeting in the evening and gave some most interesting reminiscences of the old chapel. The estimated cost of the building is Rs. 17,500, and of this sum it was announced that Rs. 17,200 had been received.

Lepers in South India.

WRITING from Trevandrum, Travancore, South India, on June 18, Mrs. M. D. Osborne, of the L.M.S., says:—

We have just had the joy of our first baptism amongst the sad lepers, amongst whom I have the supreme pleasure of working. He is an old man in the last and worst stage of leprosy. For many long weary years he has been a hopeless sufferer from this loathsome disease; now at the eleventh hour he has found One mighty to save, and in realising God's cleansing power, in his soul if not in his body. He is hopefully looking forward to entering that home where his body too shall be free from all spot and blemish. Through the wonderful keeping power of our Jesus, we have now had the joy of standing and witnessing for Him nearly three years in this heathen idolatrous land, and never before have we known such joy as that which Jesus has so often given us, as we have seen wistful black faces brighten up as the wonderful truth of the marvellous love of God and his only Son Jesus has pierced their hearts.

The caste system of India is one of Satan's tightest bonds on this people, but we love to remember that Satan is a conquered foe, and although he is now in possession of India yet the heathen are promised to Jesus as his inheritance, and our Master will take possession and He shall reign. Oh for the earnest prayers of all his people that we all may faithfully do our part in bringing about this glorious reign speedily.

Notices of Books.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe's Addresses at Mr. Moody's Convention at Northfield last year have just been published by Messrs. Nisbet and Co. (3s. 6d.), in a volume of 202 pp., entitled The Life of Privilege, Possession, and Power. It contains thirteen discourses, every one of which is a repository of very valuable exposition as well as exhortation, addressed chiefly to Christians, but with some occasional pungent and searching words to the unconverted. Their value is increased by their consecutive character.

The Christian Choir. A revised and greatly enlarged edition of this popular hymnal has just been issued. It is both interesting and instructive to note the great advances made in the proclamation of the Gospel through the medium of song since the early days of Mr. Sankey's blessed work amongst us. There is so much latent musical talent in the churches that every congregation might and ought to have its own Christian choir sounding out the message of salvation on all possible occasions. Experience has shown that many careless and unthinking people who will not be coaxed into an ordinary preaching service will willingly go to hear the Gospel heartily and effectively sung. For all such choirs this new issue of a well-established favourite supplies an abundance of fresh and catching melodies written by such composers as Mr. Stebbins, Mr. McGranahan, Mr. Sankey, Mr. Burke, and others less known on this side of the sea. In both notations, 2s. 6d. to 4s. 6d. (Morgan & Scott.)

The Y.W.C.A.

IN Jaffna, Ceylon, a town with 49,000 inhabitants, in consequence of a considerable Christian population, the customs, especially those relating to women and children, are changing, and more freedom prevails. An appeal has been sent to start a Y.W.C.A. institute, and Mr. and Mrs. Trimmer are anxious to collect for this while they are home on furlough. It would be a safeguard in many cases, and a refuge to those who are forsaken by all their relations because they have accepted Christ.

At Darjeeling, India, more helpers in the autumn would be very welcome. The work opens every day. "Time and Talents" has been started, and there is a general expectation that God is going to do great things here. Souls are thirsty, if only they will come to the Fountain of Life. The Gospel meeting at the institute on Sundays grows fuller each week, and some have found Christ there. Letters reach us of continued blessing to those who come for rest and refreshment at the Home of Rest.

As to the Hindustani-speaking branch, a secretary writes from Punjab, India: "Hundreds of young women and girls, who pass out of the Mission schools, etc., but not in Mission employ, are increasing each year in number. Half of our scattered members have come from there, and are married to clerks, railway men, etc. They need the 'link' which our Association gives. I know of several to whom our Association has been of very great value, many who are in isolated places, and workers in lonely stations. Let us continue to help our sisters in their own language; but oh for the workers. The work is the Lord's, but it may be the privilege of our sisters in England to help, and we earnestly seek their prayers in this our time of need." EMILY ESKDAIRD.

The Y.M.C.A.

Mr. FERDIE B. ALLEN, who is relinquishing the secretaryship of the Walsall Y.M.C.A. for ordination, is succeeded by Mr. C. Bytheway, a local member and worker.

The Russian Associations exist at nine centres, and an excellent report is to hand this week of the work they are doing. At St. Petersburg there are 95 members; at Revel, 32; at Mitau, 130; at Jurjev (Dorpat), 39; at Moscow, 45; at Schemacha, 20; at Lodz, 122; at Riga, 245; and at Libau there is a small Association meeting in a private house. Several of the Associations have their own buildings.

The Lydd Association has received notice to quit the Y.M. and S.C.A. Rooms at Michaelmas next, and efforts are being made to obtain a building. An iron building is for disposal for £60, and if no better site for it can be obtained the hon. secretary is willing for it to be erected in the meadow adjoining his house. Many may be willing to help, seeing there are between 2000 and 3000 soldiers here every summer. Address, Mr. F. E. Wootton, Ness Villa, Lydd.

During the past week very successful holiday parties have visited North Wales, the English Lakes, Norfolk Broads, and Leigh-on-Sea, under the auspices of the Hackney Association. Open-air services were conducted by the various parties. Collections were made in aid of a fund for sending London ragged school children to the seaside. The next party to the Lakes will start on August 22. Full particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, Y.M.C.A., Hackney.

Dr. Carl Fries, secretary of the Stockholm Association, writes:—"We had more conversions last session than at any other time since the foundation of the Association. We have organised special meetings for medical students, for the scholars of the higher schools, and for the policemen, twice a month for each, and we have been made glad by their success. We have also had a meeting for hotel waiters; of 125 who were invited, 352 came, and they did not know how to thank us enough; even in their journal they gave expression to their thanks."

Rev. Dr. Charles A. Berry, Chairman-Elect of the Congregational Union, speaking at a Y.M.C.A. delegates' meeting and garden-party at Wolverhampton last week, said the time had come when the relationship between the Associations and the Churches should no longer be the subject of misunderstanding. As he understood the spiritual work of the Y.M.C.A., it gathered men whom the Churches did not and could not reach, brought them to a knowledge of the saving truth, and then passed them on to the Church. How, then, could the relations between it and the Church be other than friendly? Those relations were, he considered, on a solid and permanent footing. If there had been the slightest jealousy against the Y.M.C.A. on the part of the Churches it was all past now.

A correspondent writes from Hankow: "The association started here two years ago has proved its usefulness over and over again. There is quite a fleet of steamers between Hankow and Shanghai, and it has been gratifying to note how gladly nearly all the officers on them have joined us, either as full members or associates. While the gunboats are here the bluejackets use the rooms all the time, and are kept from much harm. So far its usefulness is hindered by the lack of a man who could give undivided attention to its growth and development. It is managed now by three busy missionaries, helped occasionally by some others... God has graciously encouraged his servants, and souls have been saved at the meetings, as well as many a young man just out from home strengthened in his desire to live a Christian life in this heathen land."

Christian Endeavour.

PRESIDENT F. E. CLARK, of the Christian Endeavour Society, has sailed on a year's tour of visitation to Endeavour Societies in Europe and Africa.

"Your presence solicited: Come everybody," was the form of invitation that was sent out for the Texas Convention, and more than 1500 responded.

The invitation to hold the World's Christian Endeavour Convention in London in 1900 has been accepted. A very high authority says there will be at least ten thousand delegates from the United States.

A Cherokee Indian travelled 800 miles to attend the Colorado Convention as a delegate of a Society two months old. At the convention there was reported a large increase in societies during the year. One Society reported fifty conversions through its efforts.

At Dallas, Texas, thirty conversions were the result of the union Sunday school and preaching services conducted June 21 by two of the Exposition Park Presbyterian Endeavourers in the absence of the pastor. Eleven of these converts already have united with the church.—G. C. R.

The Endeavour movement has taken firm root in Madagascar, says The Chronicle. At a Convention held April 20, more than 1300 persons were present. The singing of hymns was interspersed by short prayers, in which one member of each of the great divisions of the societies present led the devotions of the Assembly and also by short passages of Scripture. The Malagasy Christian Endeavour Societies are known as Fikambanan' ny Kristiana Tanora, or "Union of Young Christians."

Irish Notes.

THE late Mrs. Leicester, of Ennismore, has bequeathed £500 to the Irish Church Representative Body.

The late Mr. Wm. Graham, of Tullywinney, co. Armagh, has bequeathed £550 to the Presbyterian Church for the use of the poor in twenty-two congregations specified in his will.

Speaking recently at a great meeting at Ballinamallan, co. Fermanagh, in reference to the spread of Ritualism and ritualistic emblems, Rev. W. T. Noble, of Quebec, said the use of symbol worship sprang from heathen sources and was heathenish in spirit.

Much regret is felt by a wide circle of friends at the death of Mr. John Wakely, D.L., of Ballyburley House, King's County, who has just passed away at the age of seventy-six years. He was a regular attendant at the meetings of the General Synod and was a devout evangelical layman.

The Irish Evangelical Society of London has taken a new departure, and has supplied a canvas tent for evangelistic meetings. In memory of the late Rev. John White, of Belfast, the tent is to be called the "John White Memorial Tent," and is to be for use at various seaside resorts and other places.

A couple of Sundays ago thirty-three adult converts from the Church of Rome were received into communion with the Church of Ireland at the Mission Church, Townsend-street, Dublin, and these were only a selection from a much larger number who have expressed their willingness to secede from the Church of Rome.

A number of earnest Christian workers, in connection with the new Baptist Church, recently organised in the Shankhill neighbourhood, Belfast, are in the habit of holding weekly open-air services for the purpose of bringing the Gospel to the reach of those not in the habit of attending any place of worship. On Saturday, August 1, the workers visited a neighbouring watering-place, Holywood, and there had meetings.

Requests for Prayer.—On behalf of the work of Mr. D. Jackson at the Hyde Congregational Church, Hendon.—For blessing special efforts in the East End of Glasgow.—For deliverance and grace to stand fast for the Malagasy Christians, many of whom are sorely tried by persecution and false brethren.

Personalia.

Mr. W. Menro Collings, evangelist, has moved to Eastbury, Peel-terrace, Gosport.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Kirew, lately of the Children's Refuges, Manchester, find themselves gradually led out in the way of caring for poor boys in their own home. They may be addressed Taxal Mount, Higher Broughton, Manchester.

Mr. Cecil Smith, after a visit to Ich'ang, escorting his sick wife and child en route to Shanghai, has now returned to his work at Hsing-i fu, in Kwei cheo, where some encouragement has lately been granted. Seven new workers have recently gone to this province, while four older missionaries are re-entering it.

An East-end Veteran.—A movement is on foot to present Mr. Charles Montague, the hon. superintendent of the King Edward Ragged Schools and Mission with a testimonial, after more than thirty years of active, persevering service among the poor people of Spitalfields. A "Montague Testimonial Fund," of which Mr. F. A. Bevan is the treasurer has been opened at Messrs. Barclay and Co.'s 51 Lombard street.

Evangelistic Notes.

Norfolk Tent Mission.—A tent mission has been conducted by Mr. C. Chenery, of the Evangelisation Society, at Antingham and Bradfield, Norfolk. The tent has been located between these two villages, people have been gathered from miles round, and it has been surprising to see such large congregations in such a scattered district. Services have been held for more than a month. Much blessing has accompanied these services. Mr. Chenery commences his next mission at Hanworth, Norfolk, on Sunday next.

West Marylebone Mission.—Special efforts have been made during the past week to reach the unsaved in the neighbourhood of Lisson-grove. On Bank Holiday a tea and public meeting was held in Dauntless Hall, when addresses were given to a good congregation. Every other night during the week meetings have been held at the corner of Lisson-grove and Marylebone-road, in which the members of the Open-air Mission have assisted. The attendances throughout have been good and blessing has been given.

Militia Camp, Redcar, Yorks.—During our services in the camp crowds came round to hear the Gospel, and several of the men professed conversion. Almost nightly some stayed for prayer and direction in God's way of salvation. During the day there was a continual run to my tent for matches, buttons, threads, pins, needles, books, writing materials, &c., which were provided free of charge, giving me many an opportunity of personal dealing with the men about their souls. This has been the most successful mission I have had, as far as one can see. Mrs. Draper visited the sick in the camp hospital and did all that she could for them. At the close of the training we had a delightful farewell testimony meeting; some of the soldiers spoke of how God had saved them. A. DRAPER.

Mr. C. Greeno's address is now 75, Markhouse-avenue Walthamstow.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE ventilation of abuses, which is one of the characteristics of the present age, often hinders a due appreciation of the privileges we possess, and of the rate of progress in all social matters. This is borne home with emphasis by a recent article from the pen of Mr. George Howell, on the "working man, sixty years ago and now." It is not until the actual facts and figures are before us that we can appreciate the extraordinary change that has taken place during the present reign in the conditions and disabilities of labour. Not only have wages increased enormously on the whole, but the necessities of life have gone down steadily, the science of sanitation has been born, public health is watched and guarded jealously by skilled eyes, and the awakening of humanitarian principles has made a hundred abuses, silently suffered of old as a matter of course, impossible and loathsome. It is far easier to live a decent and self-respecting life in the latter end of the nineteenth century than in its beginning.

Does this imply a corresponding amount of progress in matters moral and religious? The impossibility of living a spiritual life in unsanitary and degrading surroundings is often harped upon. Do the higher results or accompaniments of the social improvements we have witnessed during the last half-century prove the converse—that a favourable "environment" raises the tone of the individual life, and tends to make men truly religious?

Unfortunately, statistics on this point are not easy to obtain. But if the example of ancient civilisations is to be taken as a warning, we must face the fact that the moment of greatest outward success and comfort is the crisis of national existence, and that without spiritual ideals to balance and inspire the soul, these may become as the pillow on which it sleeps its way to destruction. Physical conveniences and blessings are stepping-stones to one man and stumbling-blocks to another. When they provide leisure for the culture of the higher nature, they are an unmixed good. But what of the man who cares only for the pleasures of dissipation and self-indulgence? To such a man leisure is a snare; it only gives him facilities for self-destruction. It must be confessed that there are plenty of temptations for those who have leisure and a little money, and that with the increase and diffusion of prosperity, these temptations are continually increasing.

In a long article on "Religion and Poverty" in the Echo, the position is maintained that the popular religious beliefs are upheld for the purpose of supporting the rich man out of the poor man, and making the poor man content with his poverty. A story is told in illustration of it that "a parson remarked, it will not do to weaken the poor man's hope in a future life, for it is that that keeps him contented in his poverty." It is painful to read such ignorant and one-sided representations, especially when the Bible is so accessible. In it the getting of wealth is referred to with such warnings and rebukes as may well give anyone pause. The heaping up of money for its own sake is condemned in the severest terms. No words can be more scathing than those which are employed against the rich who oppress the hireling in his wages. And as for the poor, the doctrine of another life is never used to make them contented with poverty, but to enable them to be patient and strong. The Scriptures would, if obeyed, soon remove the causes of poverty. Would not the teaching of a judgment to come produce a good effect?

In our judgments of men of other churches we may sometimes unconsciously do them an injustice; we can hardly do that if we allow them to speak for themselves. Mr. Voysey, son of Rev. Charles Voysey, who abandoned Evangelical views many years ago, and became a free lance in the religious world, has asked for recognition as a Unitarian minister, at the same time declaring that "he was not a Christian, and refused to profess Christianity." The Advisory Committee, before whom the request was laid, thought him "well qualified to do good work as a minister." Some of the ministers protest against this decision, but the Unitarian papers defend it, and say that to oppose it is "to block the broader progressive tendencies of the times." After this we shall surely hear less of the claim of Unitarians to fraternise with men who, above everything, do profess to be Christians and to believe in Christ as their Lord and Saviour. Such fellowship is impossible. What with one movement and another, the men of faith are being unmistakably set apart both for witness-bearing and for work.

What a pity it is that some men get themselves so misrepresented! An impulsive temperament, an unstudied use of words, a defiant attitude, a habit of attacking and denying, brings them into a false position. One would hardly guess that it is Huxley who speaks in these words—"One thing which weighs with me against pessimism, and tells for a benevolent author of the universe, is my enjoyment of scenery and music. I do not see how they can have helped in the struggle for existence. They are gratuitous gifts." Believers of the orthodox school may have made too much of his scornful repudiation of some things. He complained of being persecuted for what he did not hold; but we think he did his best, or worst, to put men on a wrong scent. Had he allowed himself to follow out the thought that there are things which cannot be accounted for by the struggle for existence, that they are gratuitous gifts, he might have come into the realms of a bright and happy faith. So, too, he admitted that he could not account for ethical ideals by the known laws of evolution. How near this is to an admission of Christ as the Light of the world!

"Behold, I make all things new." There is no human power so enviable as that whereby a man is able out of worn-out materials to construct a new machine, or convenience, or work of art; the more enviable according to the contrast between the inadequacy of the means and the beauty and perfection of the result. We call this power genius, and admire it as the supreme manifestation of human faculty. But the world can show nowhere else another Christ, who can make all things new to the soul because the soul itself is created anew. Suddenly a man who has been sleeping in indifference, or blinded by passion, and who has been feeling the sadness and sombreness and dreariness of everything, wakes up to a new conception of everything, because Jesus has touched his heart. There is nothing more wonderful than this in the universe. Were it less frequent it would be more marvellous in our eyes. It is the miracle of miracles.

From the kind of questions which have of late been frequently put to the Government respecting the health of the Army, and from the warm reception given to any reply which seemed to favour the reintroduction of the objectionable system formerly embodied in the C. D. Acts, it is only too clear that we may prepare for a fresh struggle to save the country from a great moral danger. Only the other day a supporter of the Government, and an Army man, asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether he would consider the advisability of appointing a committee next session to inquire into the working of the C. D. Acts with reference to the British Army quartered in India, to which the answer was given that the Government would consider the propriety of "an inquiry, either by committee or otherwise, to decide the controversy as to the facts." The "facts" are alleged to be, by the supporters of this immoral system of regulating a vice which governments should only recognise to condemn, that disease has increased since the abolition of regulation, whereas the Army Sanitary Commission has repeatedly said that the system has been a failure. The obvious willingness of the Government to do something to alter the status quo is a sign not to be neglected.

One serious thing about the present position of this difficult question is, that time enough has elapsed since the great struggle which overthrew Regulationism in this country for a new generation to have arisen which is ignorant both of the facts and the principles involved. Comparatively few members of the present House of Commons know them. A large number of the present generation of Christian ministers are in the same state. Throughout the country generally the laws which once excited intense loathing are not even known by name. Hence it will be necessary, if the contention breaks out again, to begin at the beginning. Happily many of the leaders of the former campaign still survive, and will be found ready when they are wanted. They have never relaxed their attitude of vigilance, and know well how to act.

The Year Book of Philanthropy states that in 1894 nearly seven and a-half millions of money were contributed in the whole kingdom for charitable and missionary purposes at home and abroad. Mr. Burdett, the compiler of the Book, thinks that too large a proportion goes to home and foreign missions as compared with the amount that goes to hospitals. Home missions, he thinks, are starved for foreign missions. We differ from his conclusions. Much is done for home that never goes into the statistics of any society; every church, e.g., that has a right spirit, is a Home Missionary Society, but the money raised and given by it for home work is, to a large extent, untabulated. As to the disparity between the gifts to hospitals and the gifts to missions, why should the religious public be blamed for the omissions of the general public? Why should they be expected to do all our social philanthropy? The blame ought to be saddled on those persons, a vast host, who do nothing for any charity, much less for any mission.

When Mr. Burdett criticises the expenditure upon the management of our societies and institutions, he is on the right track; too close a watch cannot be kept on salaries and all outgoings. He praises Miss Sharnan's Orphanage, which is conducted on the principle of "no voting, no begging, no debts, no funded property." Whether every institution and society can be worked on these lines is another matter. But in the calculation of working expenses it is impossible to get at the facts other than approximately. Much time and money are given that never come into the balance-sheet; even the missionaries of our societies make sacrifices for their work which no compiler of a Year Book can ever trace; and were these sacrifices reckoned on the side of income, as they ought to be, the ratio between income and expenditure would be greatly altered to the credit of the societies.

In his book, "Youthful Eccentricity a Precursor of Crime" (Funk and Wagnalls), Dr. Forbes Winslow draws attention to an important subject. The warning to preachers that their words have a strong influence on young and impressible minds is timely. Anything of an unhealthy kind, exciting, terrifying, arousing the imagination rather than the heart and the conscience, ought to be carefully excluded from the pulpit; and we believe it generally is. Sensationalism is condemned on hygienic grounds, but it may also be condemned on spiritual and moral grounds. The command of Scripture to pastors is to feed their people on wholesome, healthful teaching.

Dr. Marcus Dods, in his suggestive little work on Zechariah—entitled "The Visions of a Prophet"—touches on the meaning of fasting, and the tendency there is to dismiss it too readily as a mere old-fashioned or monkish observance. Certainly, both in the Old and New Testament, some importance is attached to it. Its purpose seems to have been to emphasise the confession of sin by associating it with an act which shows the reality of our feeling. "As a heart bleeding from bereavement cannot turn to food as if there were the same charm in living as ever, so those in whose conscience sin has been asserting its importance cannot but turn from the world and from their usual pursuits and nourishment in extreme bitterness of spirit." It is as a witness to the depth of contrition it was first instituted as a religious rite. Does its disuse imply a less poignant sense of sin? If so, it is a loss we cannot well bear. But if it is only the mode of manifesting our grief that has changed, its neglect has no great significance. The great question is not how we show our repentance, but do we truly and heartily repent? "Mysin is ever before me"—this is the first condition of such a feeling. "There is now no more condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus"—that is its final release in the sense of a perfect forgiveness.

The Humanitarian League, which has been trying for some years to stop the so-called "sports" of stag-hunting, rabbit-coursing, and pigeon-shooting, has now formed a Sports Department for the purpose of dealing with these and similar cruelties. It will seek to educate public opinion by condemning those "sports" in which unmanly pleasure is obtained at the cost of suffering to animals, while supporting all genuine sports in which no cruelty is practised. It will also seek to secure the legal repression of the more debased forms of sport.

Dealing with Inquirers.—2.

By J. S. HARRISON.

I HAVE several ways of putting the subject of salvation before anxious souls. In a general way I dwell upon three main thoughts—(1) What the sinner has done; (2) What God has done for the sinner; (3) How the sinner may obtain the benefit of this work.

(1) What the Sinner has done.—Under this head I bring forward those passages of Scripture which refer to the question of sin, such as "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. iii. 23), "The soul that sinneth it shall die" (Ezek. xviii. 20), "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. vi. 23). There are other passages that will readily occur to the mind. In the matter of sin, it is needful to make it clear that it is not a question of how many sins, but a question of sin. This is a most important distinction, because a person may say, "I am such a great sinner, I have committed so many sins," and they begin to think of their sins. But God puts the whole mass together, and calls it sin. It is not a question of whether they have committed one sin or five thousand sins; they have sinned, and one sin, as certainly as a thousand, will alienate from God.

(2) What God has done for the Sinner.—We turn to Isaiah liii. 5, 6, and read: "He was wounded for our transgressions; He was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with His stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to His own way, and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." Then turn to 1 Pet. ii. 24: "Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree." And again, John i. 29: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." Here we see that God undertook to settle the question of sin, and did it eighteen hundred years ago; in other words, the anxious sinner has not to do with the Sin question but with the Son question. God made an end of sin, but the sinner has to settle whether he will take the Son. God has eternally settled the sin question; Christ took the wages of sin, which is death.

(3) How the Sinner may Obtain the Benefit of this Work.—Consider John i. 12: "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name." Also John v. 24: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth My word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." Are you willing to leave your sin where God leaves it, at the cross? If so, then turn to Rom. v. 1: "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Also Rom. viii. 1: "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit."

In my experience this way of dealing generally meets the case. I find others that are more difficult to deal with. For them we must approach the subject from other standpoints.

Rev. Hubert Brooke.—We regret that the photograph from which our portrait last week of Rev. Hubert Brooke was engraved, was, we find, a clever make-up of the Keswick photographer. We apologise to Mr. Brooke and to our readers for having presented them with an inaccurate representation.

Y.W.C.A. Summer School.

CLIFF COLLEGE, CURBAR.

SUNDAY (August 9th).—Dr. Bullinger kindly conducted a Bible-class this afternoon upon the Epistles to the Thessalonians—a people distinguished by being singled out for (1) almost unqualified praise (i. 2, ii. 13, iii. 9); and (2) for wonderful missionary zeal (i. 8). The secret of their success was the teaching of Paul (1 Thess. i. 9, ii. 1-13: cf. Acts xvii. 1, 2, 3), who held forth (1) the Written Word, and (2) the Living Word. The Scriptures as the revelation of God. The Christ as a Person. Result—the formation of the complete, perfected Christian character as seen in 1 Thess. i. 2 and 9, 10. Dr. Grattan Guinness presided over a Communion Service, and Hon. Mrs. Waller and others gave information as to the progress of the Y.W.C.A. in India. Three years ago there was but one worker, now there are sixteen.

MONDAY (10th).—The figures of language explained included the (1) Simile—a statement of matter of fact denoting resemblance and comparison (Ps. i. 3-16, ciii. 13). (2) The Metaphor, a representation (John ii. 9, xvi. 20, Matt. xxviii. 4). (3) Hypocatastasis, which implies the word or lesson, but as it were puts it out of sight, and leaves it unexpressed, as Matt. xvi. 6, where "doctrine" is implied; Matt. xv. 26, "the woman" implied. Much other instruction followed. Mrs. Moore gave full information as to "a model prayer union," and Miss Denny read an admirable paper on "Mental Culture," its true use and needs, etc.

TUESDAY.—Dr. Guinness, at prayers, gave an outline introduction to Romans, taking the subject in three divisions—Doctrinal, i.-viii.; Dispensational, ix.-xi.; Practical, xii.-xvi. Dr. Bullinger took up the study of Number in Scripture, first tracing its use in botany, physiology, chemistry, etc. The words once used in the Bible have a special importance, as Discerner=Critic (Heb. iv. 12); God's Word, not man's opinion to judge. The Hon. E. Kinnaird spoke on "A Model Y.W.C.A. Branch"; Miss Habershon on "The Tabernacle," and a delightful expedition to Chatsworth (kindly opened to visitors by the Duke of Devonshire) gave refreshment between other meetings.

On WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, the study of Number, as used by God, was continued. FRIDAY taught us much through Dr. Bullinger's treatment of the Names and Titles of God, and gave many side-lights on deeper meanings of Scripture texts. At the Association study and informal evening meetings, subjects of much importance were discussed, and the younger students gained new ideas on the value of literature, art, and science, in aiding a fuller comprehension of the world's needs and the words and works of God.

The keynote of later meetings was "Amplius"—"Wider." On Thursday evening Miss Hodges, Miss L. E. Guinness, and Miss Sorabji, of Poonah, pleaded the cause of missions, and Mrs. Penn-Lewis pointed out the needful inspiration for work at home or abroad—the gift of the Holy Ghost.

FRIDAY.—Hon. Emily Kinnaird spoke of the "Widening Circle and New Centre" (26, George-street, Hanover-square, W.) of the Y.W.C.A. As a stone thrown into the ocean from the Irish coast causes a wave the impulse of which will reach America, so the prayers of a few women forty years ago have now spread into the "World's Y.W.C.A.," an enlarging band of earnest women which will, with God's blessing, become a more and more powerful influence for good. Dr. Grattan Guinness the same morning gave a helpful farewell lesson to secretaries and teachers from Acts xx. 19. St. Paul's example was his greatest power among those whom Christ converted through his means. If we would lead others aright, we must ourselves be full of humility of mind. Serving the Lord truthfully and fully, preaching repentance and faith, pleading, even with tears, that they would receive the gift of God (xx. 19, 21)—such "testifying" will break down hearts and open them to Christ (verses 36-38).

Much of interest might be added did space allow, but we believe that the influence of this representative gathering of Christian women workers will issue in personal consecration to God and a new impulse towards higher and deeper aim in labour, carried on in his strength and for his glory.

How to Prevent the Waste of Grace.

By J. F. T. HALLOWES, M.A.

MUCH as gold is wasted in England, grace is wasted more. If only the special and ordinary times of receiving grace were followed by faithful endeavours to retain it, how much richer multitudes of Christians would be! Now, as it often requires no little worldly wisdom to retain gold, so it needs no small share of heavenly wisdom to retain grace; and, as a great millionaire frequently finds it easier to make more money than to keep it, so many Christians find it easier to gain fresh light, life, and joy, than to keep these divine favours as permanent possessions in their ordinary workday existence. For example, holiness conventions are really helping forward a genuine experience of holiness; but this gratifying result would be far more pronounced and common if the full blessing received in them were conserved. In a country so favoured as ours, this is a front-rank problem of the day. I wish to offer some suggestions towards its solution.

1. Acts of verbal consecration must be translated into acts of literal self-surrender. In the solemn hush of a consecration meeting, or in some hymn of enthusiastic and unreserved self-dedication, Christians are often encouraged to make themselves over to God absolutely; and no doubt thousands do this not simply with the lip but with the response of loyal hearts, a response which is aided by the thought that other hearts are responding thus to God. When the services are over, and the atmosphere they created has also vanished, there must be a determined and honest attempt to bring (in the strength of Christ) the spirit of a nobler consecration to bear on "the trivial round, the common task." If this is not done, the spring-tide of grace will fail to maintain its higher level, its waters will ebb in a disheartening way. Verbal consecration is

A FORCE OR A FARCE.

It is a force if it expresses itself in action; it is a farce if it does not, however deeply the spirit bowed before God.

A fine example of soul-revival, followed by life-revision, is seen in the great religious quickening in the days of Hezekiah. Through the initiative of that zealous king, a Passover was kept in Jerusalem, almost unexampled for enthusiasm and spiritual power. Vast numbers of sacrifices were offered by the priests, aided by the Levites. Praise, prayer, and confession of sin accompanied these sacrifices, and the whole was so hearty and true that there was a general demand for the extension of the sacred festival to fourteen days. Nor did these protracted meetings at all lose in interest by repetition. Higher and higher rose the praise and joy, and Hezekiah's Passover took rank with the best of the days of Solomon. 2 Chron. xxxi. records the important fact that these exhilarating services had a practical outcome in the instant destruction of the visible symbols of idolatry, and in the dedication of the first-fruits for the better support of the priests and Levites.

2. And if, too, special grace is to be retained, it must be utilised for the good of others. Not only act out your promises for yourself in your personal devotion to God, but make use of your additional grace in the interests of others. The lofty mountains of the Lake districts of Cumberland attract a greater rainfall than descends upon the plains, but the mountains receive this larger share not to retain it for themselves so much as to dispense it through numerous water-courses on the lowlands. The economy of nature is also the economy of grace. God gives that we may give. Fresh grace enjoyed must be fresh grace employed, or it will soon cease to be enjoyed. And, indeed, fresh grace makes work for God easier, more interesting, and more effective. For example, the Sunday-school teacher thus freshly anointed will have a larger vision of the truth, a stronger love to Christ and the children, a nobler zeal in their behalf. While some, thus better equipped, are bound to put more work into their lives, all are bound to put better work into them. He who will not do so comes under the law of loss. Do, or you will deteriorate—insensibly, perhaps, but surely.

3. Learn again that if you would keep what the Holy Ghost has committed unto you, you must act as if you regarded all his spiritual baptisms as preliminary. Pentecost itself was in a sense preliminary for a short time after the saints were baptized anew (Acts iv.). I wish there were as great a protest against finality in spiritual development as there is against it in mental development. No one now talks of finishing his mental education, but there are many who act as if they had finished the education of their soul. "Think nothing done while aught remains to do," should be our motto. Every new experience in the Divine life is not to be regarded as a platform on which we may walk up and down in a self-complacent spirit, but merely as a step by which we may mount to some more exalted attainments.

The chief point of the whole matter may be summed up in St. Paul's words in 2 Tim. i. 14: "That good thing which was committed unto thee guard through the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us." You must guard this precious deposit as a worker with the Holy Ghost. Do not expect his vigilance to make up for your remissness. Do not expect your faith even to take the place of watchfulness. Faith looks up, watchfulness looks out, and the man who will not look out properly cannot look up properly. The "look-out" man is absolutely necessary on board ship, and a good "look out" is not less necessary for the soul. "Watch thou in all things," then. The conspirators against grace do not cease their efforts because they have more grace to attack. The babe, the youth, the full-grown man in Christ, have all their special foes whom no degree of development daunts. Eternal vigilance is the law of the Christian's life.

To Christian Endeavourers.

CHRISTIAN Endeavourers! Hand locked in hand,
One is your mission by sea and by land!
Wide as the world is the Gospel ye bear,
Rich in redeeming love, free as the air!

Christian Endeavourers! True to your creed,
Strengthen your brethren, and bid them "God-speed!"
Wide keep the banner of freedom unfurled,
This be your motto—For Christ and the world!

Christian Endeavourers! Do not delay!
Work as your Master did, "whilst it is day!"
Nor till to-morrow leave what should be done,
Ere in the western sky sinks the red sun.

Christian Endeavourers! Fervent in zeal,
Ring out the message with clarion peal!
Yours 'tis no longer your colours to hide,
Speak for the Master, be true to your Guide!

Christian Endeavourers! Look not behind!
Strength for the present day's work shall ye find.
Dwell not on failures, but resolute be.
Still to press onward, unfettered and free!

Christian Endeavourers! Look to the goal!
Seek ye no resting-place here for your soul!
Christ as your Captain, his word as your sword,
Forward! and fearing not, praise ye the Lord!

WM. KITCHING.

Dr. Comandi's Home for Boys.

MANY who read THE CHRISTIAN may not be aware that Dr. Comandi and his wife are passing through great pecuniary difficulties, not from any fault of theirs, but owing to the death of some who were regular contributors, and the inability of others to continue their subscriptions on account of the many bank failures in Italy during the past twelvemonth.

To avoid debt, Dr. Comandi seriously thought of curtailing his great work; but had he done so, and dismissed some of the orphans, they would have been immediately taken into the Roman Catholic seminaries. Money was lent him to prevent his doing this, amounting to £1100, and some of this must very shortly be refunded.

I have heard, through private sources, that Dr. Comandi's health has become much impaired from his denying himself almost the necessities of life, especially during the severe cold in Florence last winter. It does not seem right that God's honoured servant, who many years ago turned from a life of ease and opulence to spend his means and his strength for the temporal and spiritual good of hundreds of orphans in Italy, should be weighed down by this pressure.

I can speak from personal experience, having long known Dr. Comandi, and seen something of the result of his work and influence, not only at the Asilo, but also among visitors to Florence of other nationalities.

Dr. Comandi's address is 6, Via Aretina, Florence. Information regarding the work may also be made to Mrs. Leigh Bayly, Park House, Farnborough, Hants.

[Having known Dr. Comandi and his excellent institution for several years, we warmly endorse Mrs. Leigh Bayly's letter. It would be deplorable if such a work in Italy should in any way be reduced. We trust this crisis may tend to the furtherance of the soul-and-body Gospel which he ministers.—Ed.]

WORK IN SIENA.

About eight years ago Dr. Comandi began Gospel work at Siena. The Lord blessed his efforts, and after some time he was able to found a little church, and to establish a school there. It is not always easy work, however, and the pastor, Sig. Long, as well as the director of the schools, Signora Giannini, who gave up a very good position to serve the Lord in the Gospel at Siena, find it real uphill work.

Dr. Comandi is not able to sustain the work from his general fund. Everyone, however, who has any experience in Christian work, and more especially who has worked among the Roman Catholics, knows how impossible it is to visit the sick, to evangelise the poor, to hold mothers' meetings, and to keep the numbers up at a free day and Sunday-school, without helping the people in a practical way. They are anxious and ready for the Gospel, but yet when their bread is taken away from them because they attend the meetings of the heretics, or send their children to the Protestant school, one can easily understand there are very few who have courage enough to obey the voice of their conscience.

Signora Giannini teaches, visits, and sows the seed in faith. Some three years ago she noticed in her school a young girl of about fifteen who listened eagerly to the "Sweet story of old," and who showed by her bright and intelligent answers that she took in what she heard. The young girl was converted, and made an open profession of her faith. Signora Giannini took her in, and is keeping and educating her, dividing her own small salary with her. The girl has been the means of leading both her mother and brother to Christ, and as she has a good head for studying, she is being trained as a teacher. This is one of the many instances of blessing. The field is white for the harvest. Communications may be addressed to Signora Giannini, at Opera di Evangelizzazione di Siena, Viale Curtatone 5, Siena. A. R. K.

Work among Hop-pickers.—Hop-picking will soon be upon us again. We are arranging for work amongst the pickers as usual in mid-Kent. Last year, in addition to addresses, visitation at the bins, and distribution of thousands of Gospel books and tracts, we had several lantern services. We should be glad of help in the way of tracts, books, etc. These may be addressed to me, care of Mr. James Baldwin, Ivy Hatch Plain, Sevenoaks, Kent.

Blessed art Thou, Simon Bar-Jona.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IT was a great moment in thy life, perhaps the greatest, when the Master spoke thus. It seems to us, as we regard it down the vista of the ages, as though it were the beginning of a new chapter in thine experience. Thou wert blessed, because thou sawest deeper into the Master's true nature and dignity than any of thy companions; blessed, because thy words announced the truth, on which, as on a rock, his Church was to be built; blessed, because at the same moment the Lord entrusted thee with the keys of the Kingdom. Surely these great words will for ever make memorable thy sojourn, for those brief bright days, at the foot of the mighty Hermon. Blessed wert thou, Simon Barjona!

Canst thou tell us thy secret? We, too, long to recognise our Master's glorious nature, as the Son of the ever-living God; so that, amid the many voices that are ever speaking around us, our faith may never falter. Men around us admit that He is no ordinary man, they liken him to the Baptist, to Elias, Jeremias, or one of the prophets; they declare Him to have been a mighty teacher sent from God; they yield Him homage such as they give their heroes and prophets, but we are confident that their plumb-line has not touched bottom, and that there are still unexplored depths of glorious fulness in the Son of man; but how may we know them for ourselves? Must we simply take it on thy affirmation, or may we see Him for ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world?

Moreover, we long to know more of that structure which our Master called his Church, and which, founded on the truth which thou spakest, is to outlast the ages and defy the assault of the invisible world. What building can this be! What bond is strong enough to unite men, though the heavens should fall?

Besides, we would fain have the power of those keys, that we may unlock door after door of knowledge and privilege to such as are eager to enter. There are the chambers of peace and of knowledge, of love and of hope, of patience and service, of which the is it not possible for us, too, to have the power of the keys, so that what we bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and what we loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven?

"All these things depend on whether ye can truly appropriate the words, which elicited approval from the Master's lips, when to his inquiry, 'Whom say ye that I am,' I answered and said, 'Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God.'"

But how camest thou to say as much?

"It was not the work of a moment, but of months. When first we found Him, we thought Him no more than human, certainly one of the noblest and best of woman-born, but to be ranked with the Baptist, whose preaching had first attracted us from our homes and fishing at Bethsaida and Capernaum; but the more I knew of Him the more sure I became that He could not be such a man, if He were not more. The first evidence of absolutely supernatural power which startled me occurred in my own house, when one Sabbath-day, after preaching in the synagogue, he came in to rest from the noon-day glare; at the time my wife's mother was laid low by a violent fever, before which her strength was ebbing. We told Him of her, and without ado or hesitation He went to her side, took her by the hand, and lifted her up. This startled me, but as others of our prophets had done the like, I thought only that a great prophet had risen up among us, like those of olden time.

"But shortly afterwards it broke on all of us that

He was more than a prophet; there was something in Him that could not be explained, that made sin hateful, and allured us to long for God and heaven and a holy life. The first time this came to me was on the lake, when, notwithstanding the hot noon sun, He brought such a shoal of fish into our nets, we thought they must have broken. I was so powerfully impressed by his quiet majestic words on that occasion, and by his mastery over the depths of the sea, that it seemed as though God had come into my life, and I fell down at his feet asking Him to leave me, I was so deeply conscious of being a sinful man. It seemed to me that I was in the presence of no mere prophet or teacher, but of the great Lord of Creation, the Owner of the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the sea. Certainly I never felt as then my own vileness and nothingness, or knew so truly what Job meant when he cried, 'I have heard of Thee, with the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth Thee: wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.'

"But this was not all. There was a more remarkable stage in my experience than either of these, after he had summoned me to be an apostle. I shall never forget it. It was on the evening of the day after the feeding of the crowds, when He had made five barley loaves and two small fish suffice for 5000 men, besides women and children. We were in the white synagogue in Capernaum, every corner of which was crowded with people; many of them were those whom the Master had fed the night before, but others were townsfolk, greatly excited by what they had heard. After the ordinary service, all eyes were directed to Jesus with eager anticipation, and He might have done anything He chose. On the night before, He had escaped from them with great difficulty, so resolute were they to make Him king; and if He had given them the least chance, the standard of a greater revolt would have been set up on the spot than even the Maccabees raised against Rome. But, instead of this, He rebuked them for seeking Him because they had eaten of the loaves, and said that He was the Bread of God. I marked their faces fall. They exchanged significant looks, curled their proud lips, hissed bitter words between their teeth. But the Master hardly noticed their interruptions; He went on speaking the most wonderful words I had ever listened to about Himself as the manna, and how the Father had sent Him, that He lived by the Father, and that the Father would draw all unto Him. And as He spake

HIS FACE SHONE WITH A WONDERFUL LIGHT, as though He were looking into the very depths of heaven. But the people were disappointed, and would not listen. They turned away and went out in crowds. Many whom we had begun to reckon on as steadfast friends did the same: they went back, and walked no more with us. And as evening darkened in the building, it seemed as though we twelve were left with Him alone. In the morning He might have mounted a throne; at nightfall He could only count on us, but never before could He have counted on us so completely. I remember that He turned to us and said, with a touch of infinite sadness, "Will ye also go away?" My heart was stirred within me; it rushed across me how brave, and true, and noble He was, and deserving of better treatment; the spell of his wonderful words was fresh on my heart, and I compared Him with all the Pharisees and Scribes I had ever listened to; and before them all I cried, "Lord, to whom shall we go; Thou hast the words of eternal life, and we believe, and are sure, that Thou art the Holy One of God. (John vi. 69. R.V.)

"But this was not all. That He was a Prophet, we knew; that He could work great miracles, we were sure; that He was the Holiest of the Holy, we had every evidence from close intimacy with Him in the most private hours, as well as from his words. But I had never gone further, fool that I was and slow of heart, but it seems to me that my eyes must have been holden, or I should assuredly have known Him. Still, my heart was deeply exercised, though He never spake of Himself, or told us who He was. I seemed often to catch a glimpse of something in Him the like of which I had never seen in the face of any. I know now that it was the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, and that I was beholding the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, but it was as though mine eyes were but partially opened.

"This, however, was not all. It was like the dawn that I have often seen breaking grey over the hills around the lake, but which leads on to the clear shining of the day. Six months before He was taken from us, the Master took us to rest for a few days with Him. We had been meeting with increasing opposition and hatred, and were in need of recruiting. He chose Cæsarea Philippi, partly because of its being situated so near the Lebanon, and partly because, being a border city, it was further removed from the hatred and intrigues of our foes, though they hated Him without a cause. One day He turned to us, and asked who men said He was, and we told Him. He did not seem disappointed that their notions were so vague and conflicting; but followed up his inquiry by another, the answer to which he awaited eagerly, as though some great matter depended on it. Then I spoke for all the rest. In that moment the whole history of my association with Him flashed before my mind as they say life does before a drowning man; it seemed as though I was being conducted from scene to scene; and the over-mastering thought grew stronger on my soul, that this was none other than the Son of God, of whom David in his Psalms, and many of the Prophets spoke. With this suggestion, everything that I had known of Him harmonized. It was the one explanation that seemed to give to all his words and works. Every mist rolled off, all dimness dropped away from my eyes; I was as certain as though I had seen it written across the sky, that He was the only-begotten Son of the ever-living God. And He smiled, and told me that it was even so; and that I had been led to the truth, not by my own reasoning or imagining, but by the direct reading and revelation of the Father. I know not why it should have fallen to my happy lot to be the first to receive so great a revelation; I was only a very simple man, and the Master seemed to recognise this, when he addressed me as Simon Bar-Jona, but to me, who am less than the least of all saints, was this grace given, that I should know the true dignity of the Master, and recognise them as the Son of the living God."

And may we hope to know Him thus? We shall know, if we follow on to know the Lord. His coming forth is prepared as the morning. Wait on God and keep his way; be much in the attitude of expectancy and prayer, like the good Cornelius, whose alms came up as a memorial before God. Study the records of the Master's life, until He shall seem to live again before you, in all the radiance of his matchless beauty. Above all, seek the aid of the Holy Spirit, whose office it is to take of the things of Christ and reveal them to those whose hearts are perfect towards Him; then knowing Him you shall be incorporated into his Church, and be able to open to others, by teaching and example, the doorways into the heavenly kingdom.

An Indian's Prayer.—The story of the Kucheng massacre, a year ago, in due course found its way to the C.M.S. Missions amongst the Indians in the far north-west of the Dominion of Canada. At the first service held after the news had been received, a Christian Indian prayed, "Say, again, dear Jesus, 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. O Gracious Spirit, Thou art not quenched by blood; let it make thy garden-soil strong to grow Chinese believers in!'"

Troubles in Madagascar.

WE are tried, but not cast down nor in despair. What is good, what is of God, in the work, "cannot fail." We know that, though much that seemed so promising seems now withering away. A month or two may, however, bring great changes for the better. All is in great uncertainty at present, and we cannot tell how things may go from week to week, or even from day to day.

We are in the midst of stirring, trying times just now, such a state of things as we have never before known in our day in this land. There have been insurrections all round the capital of late. They began out west with the murder of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson; then they spread south, then east, and gradually north, and then north-west, and as I write the east and north are all still upset, and in a seething state of discontent and insurrection. In the Ambohimanga district, out of 25 chapels only five remain unburnt, and from one of them all the thatch has been taken to ensure its safety from incendiaries. This fact marks the character of the rising. It is anti-European and distinctly anti-Christian. Heathen people from the north here have stirred up all the evil elements and smouldering heathenism in this district. The bad folks have coerced and threatened the mass of the people, and tempted them with promises of spoil and plunder; and so it comes about that the best of the people have had to flee for their lives here to Ambohimanga, or to Antananarivo and neighbourhood. Teachers, evangelists, preachers, and pastors are objects of special persecution, and many have lost their all for the Name, and some their lives as well.

I have been much cheered and encouraged in this sad state of things by the cheerfulness and courage with which some of the people have borne for Christ's sake. They make no complaint. One good pastor told me he felt it a great joy to have had his house sacked by the rebels, and to have nearly lost his life in the good cause—for he barely escaped with his life the night his house was attacked. And a young preacher from this town who was staying in this good pastor's house that night escaped through the window, and though twice shot at, and once blinded with the smoke of the gun, which was fired close to his face, escaped without injury almost by a miracle. One of the rebels seized him as he was escaping; there was a tussle in the dark, but the young man succeeded in throwing his opponent, and so got safely away. These two men, the pastor and his young friend the preacher, were specially obnoxious to the enemy because of their courage and persistency in preaching Christ in the markets, and their open declarations of the folly of heathen superstitions, and idolatry in all its forms.

In a town to the north of us in this district where there was a church and school, and where a young Christian man lived who for several years has been both school teacher and a preacher, the enemy came by night introduced by a bad man, a confirmed heathen and the head man of the district. The poor young fellow took refuge in a hole under the floor of his house, which he had dug for a hiding place. The rascals assured him of his personal safety if he would come out to them, and he, himself a truthful young man, believed their lies, and gave himself up. He was cruelly murdered, speared to death and then decapitated—a real martyr for Christ; the poor young wife was stripped naked by the rebels, and sent off in that condition to wander where she would. The rebels refused to allow the teacher's body to be taken for decent burial. The poor young wife, we hear, after such indignities has lost her reason, and is wandering aimlessly about the country. We are making efforts to get her here to Ambohimanga. She is heart-broken, poor young thing; and no wonder, after such treatment.

The French at the end of the war tried to disarm all the natives. They were told to give up all guns and ammunition at certain centres, where officers were appointed to receive them. The best of the people loyally obeyed; the bad ones retained their guns with a view, no doubt, to such rising as is now taking place. The result is that the good and loyal Christian people are defenceless, while the heathen seem to have a great number of guns and a great quantity of ammunition. One of our teachers tells me that on the Saturday before the fall of Antananarivo he saw the people breaking open whole cases of Snider cartridges that had been unused, and carrying them off about their persons as best they could. No doubt a great number of cartridges got distributed in this way. They would be sold cheaply, and got into the hands of untrustworthy people, who are making use of them now

TO UPSET THE COUNTRY.

At one station of the Norwegian Missionary Society, where the missionaries had left their wives and children while they went four days' journey south to their annual conference, an attack was made by a large force of 1500 rebels, led by a famous brigand called Ranitèsimisarakana, on whose head the French authorities have set the price of 1000 dollars. Fortunately, there were three French men at this station and thirty native militia. These defended the place for three days against overwhelming odds, being all gathered together in the Mission House, which, fortunately, was a tiled building. The town, hospital, dispensary, leper establishment, schoolroom, etc., were all burnt.

Imagine the agony of the situation, seventeen ladies, nine children, two aged missionaries shut up for three days and two nights, while this fighting was going forward, with the certainty of unimaginable atrocities if the enemy should succeed. The ammunition was nearly expended when help arrived; the rebels were beaten off with the loss to all of over 300 of their number, and the defenders were saved! Thank God for such a deliverance. We all rejoiced with our Norwegian brethren when the cloud of dread anxiety lifted, and we heard that the dear friends were safe. But what a time of awful anxiety they all passed through!

Here at Ambohimanga we have a garrison of forty French soldiers stationed, in charge of a lieutenant. But for this force neither we nor the best of our people could remain here. Most of the missionaries in the country are obliged to live in Antananarivo. Only last Monday at mid-day we watched a village being burnt by the rebels about three miles away, and later in the afternoon saw a great crowd of them (our lieutenant reckoned them at 1000) on the hills two or three miles north of us. The lieutenant with twenty of his men had gone out to keep them in check till help could arrive. He succeeded in doing this, killing several, but at sunset had to retire to rest his men, leaving

THE ENEMY STILL ON THE HILLS.

On his way home he passed our house and called to warn us to be specially careful that night, as tomorrow he expected help, and would then drive off the enemy. He assured us if we were attacked in the night, the ringing of the big bell, or the sound of a shot, would be enough to bring him down with half his men to our help. In the meanwhile, and before he could arrive himself, he would fire down from the town into our yard in front of the house and so disperse the rebels. He gave us instructions to retire to the north rooms of the house, as he would be firing on the south, and his Lebel rifle bullets could pierce the walls of our house at that distance. We were to be specially careful not to pass near doors or windows while his firing was going forward. We had a peaceful night, and all passed off quietly, through the mercy of God. Mr. Peake was staying with us that night. We watched the enemy's fires from our verandah in the moonlight with our glass, for they were burning houses in the night. At one a.m. it appears the reinforcements came up, and a force was at once marched in the night to get behind the enemy and cut off their retreat if possible. The next day one of the soldiers came to tell us that many of the rebels had been killed, but they had got off with all their guns. To-day, again (Friday), our soldiers here have been North trying to find the enemy, but without success.

A strange experience for us after twenty-three years of peaceful missionary life here, going where we liked without the slightest fear or danger all over the country, and looked upon by the people as their friends! No doubt in time all will settle down again, but the present is a sad and terrible time for us all, and a stern testing time for the Christian Church in this land. Many have fallen away; great numbers have been coerced or tempted to go over to the rebels against their better judgment and knowledge for fear of dear life, or to save their possessions; but many remain true, and these some of them notwithstanding the loss of all things. As I watch some of the good men taking refuge here, and hear their prayers, men some of them whose houses have been destroyed and all their cattle and goods carried off, I cannot help realising that even such a time has its compensations, and believe that out of this terrible trial in the end good must come.

Anna finds her knowledge of French most useful now. Last Sunday she went up into the town with her concertina and some hymn books (the McAll hymn-books you so kindly sent), and sang hymns with the soldiers, who gathered around and greatly enjoyed the singing, joining heartily therein. The special favourite was: "Who is on the Lord's side?" sung in French, of course, most heartily. In the intervals of singing she read a tract to the men: "Incidents of a troubled life," by Henry Reed, of Tasmania, to which and which they much enjoyed. This morning (June 26) a young soldier, who cannot write, came down early, and had a lesson in reading and writing; we also wrote a letter for him.

Thanks for all your kindness about Rajamaria, the young student. He is thinking of getting married soon, he tells us, and if that takes place it will foreclose the question of his going to England. Yesterday he took the money for his mother's redemption, which has already been negotiated for with her owner; so that now the whole family is free—thanks to readers of THE CHRISTIAN. There is still a considerable sum over what was required. This will be a most grateful help for rebuilding the burnt churches, when the insurrection is over, and the people can return to their villages again; and for helping in other much-needed ways. I suppose it will be right for us so to use it. J. PEILL.

Self-Denial Week on behalf of the work of Dr. Barnardo's Homes is to be held next week, Aug. 16-22. It is hoped many will deny themselves for a few days for the sake of the little waifs and strays. The new issue of "Night and Day" contains many suggestions as to the forms of self-denial which may be practised.

The Protestant Governesses' Home seeks to help struggling governesses needing seaside rest or waiting for engagements, who cannot pay, or only able to pay a little; to give pecuniary help, also good clothing. A small house is greatly needed; carrying on the work in apartments is most inconvenient. Funds are necessary for expanding this effort to reach our silent suffering sisters. It makes one's heart ache to be unable to give the necessary help. Sad cases continually crop up. The distress amongst aged and elderly ones is very, very real. I shall be glad to receive orders for plain and fancy work; some being slightly invalided are glad to earn money that way. Several have been received free this year extending over a period of twelve weeks; others have been able to pay a little.

"HE DID IT WITH ALL HIS HEART, AND PROSPERED."—2 Chron. xxxi. 21.

THIS is the right spirit in which to do our life's work—not waiting to be urged to it, or doing it languidly and perfunctorily, but willingly, gladly, enthusiastically. The heart stands for the emotions and affections. It tells of the love of the life, and its directions, so that what the furnace is in the factory, that the heart is in the economy of our nature. Doubtless the heart of the good king was set on God, and whatever he did proceeded from a heart on fire with devotion and consecration, so that all his actions were inspired and prompted by a strong personal attachment to the Almighty Lover of men.

How easy life is when this is so. Whatever is good, and right, and true, becomes a luxury to the heart that loves God, and does all in and for Him. This is what the apostle calls being perfected in love, and such a state is consensuous with the baptism and indwelling of the Holy Ghost, one of whose earliest fruits is love. Why should we not now claim a baptism of love? We have been too phlegmatic and formal. Let us now, in the words of Charles Wesley, cry night and day

Jesus, thine all-victorious love
Shed in my heart abroad.

Is not the Holy Spirit the Spirit of Love? And is not He promised to those who by faith claim Him, to become the Purifier and Indweller of their poor loveless hearts? Ask that the stony heart should be taken out of your flesh, and a heart of flesh substituted. Then you will love all the day, and your religion will be as easy and natural as love can make it.

MONDAY, August 24.

"FOR THIS CAUSE HEZEKIAH, THE KING, AND THE PROPHET ISAIAH PRAYED AND CRIED TO HEAVEN."—2 Chron. xxxii. 20.

It was the indignity done to Jehovah that stirred these two holy men to the heart. Not that their lives, and the lives of their people, and the beautiful holy city, were in danger, but that Sennacherib spake against the God of Jerusalem, as against the gods of the people of the earth, which were the work of the hands of man. Oh that we were possessed with a similar zeal for God, so that we might look at sin as it affects Him, and lament over the awful wrongs which are continually being perpetrated against his holy, loving nature! What an argument this would give us in prayer!

This constitutes a special reason why we should plead for a special revival of religion throughout our land. Men speak and act so shamelessly, as though God had abdicated his throne, and was hardly to be taken account of. They sin against Him with so high a hand, and treat his laws with so much contumely. Are there no Hezekiahs and Isaiahs who will pray and cry to the God of our fathers to do again the great works He did in their days, and in the old time before?

And the Lord would save us, and guide us on every side (22). There never was a more conspicuous and glorious deliverance than when the angel of God wrought for Israel against Assyria. The Lord became a place of broad rivers and streams across which the enemy could not pass. As the mother bird settling down on her nest, He covered the city with his wings. And the great fire of the foe was left for the beleaguered garrison. Pray on, beloved; the Lord will yet come with a strong arm.

"WHEN HE WAS IN AFFLICTION, HE DESOUGHT THE LORD HIS GOD."—2 Chron. xxxiii. 12.

So long as this story stands on the page of revelation, no sinner need despair of mercy. There was hardly a sin possible to man that Manasseh did not commit. "He did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, like unto the abominations of the heathen, whom the Lord cast out before the children of Israel." And he made his people do worse than the heathen.

Then came awful sorrow. Bound in fetters, exposed to consummate cruelty and disgrace, he was carried to Babylon, and thrust into the dungeons, where other captive princes were immured, with little chance of liberation or permission to revisit his native land. And there the Spirit of God did his work. He humbled himself greatly and prayed. What tears, and cries, and bursts of heart-broken penitence were his. How those walls were saturated with the breath of confession, and those stone floors indented by his kneeling at perpetual prayer! And God came near to his low dungeon, and heard his supplication, and brought him again.

Yes, and He will do as much for you. The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth from all sin; the grace of God is exceedingly abundant with faith and love; all sins and blasphemies are forgiven to the sons of men. Turn to Him with brokenness of soul, and He will not only forgive, but bring you again; and give you, as He did Manasseh, an opportunity of undoing some of those evil things which have marred your past. For the rest, it is good not to wait for affliction to bring us back, but to abide in Him for love's dear sake.

"AND HILKIAH ANSWERED AND SAID TO SHAPHAN THE SCRIBE, I HAVE FOUND THE BOOK OF THE LAW IN THE HOUSE OF THE LORD...AND SHAPHAN READ IT BEFORE THE KING."—2 Chron. xxxiv. 15, 18.

It is supposed that this was the Book of Deuteronomy; though we have no sympathy whatever with a modern notion with respect to its discovery. In our judgment that book is rightly ascribed to Moses. Apparently, however, it had long been missing, and the young king was filled with horror when he heard the list of evils that were associated with apostasy. "He rent his clothes."

We should read the Bible with a particular application to the days in which we live. It is well enough to accept its statements as being generally true and credible, but it is better to realise their pertinence to ourselves and our circumstances. Josiah turned the lantern on the evils of his time, and saw how God was feeling with respect to them.

The Bible is a book for all time. What it said, it says. What it was, it is. You tell me it was written so many centuries ago; but I reply the ink is still wet on its immortal pages. They have been read and pondered by generations, but their eye is not dim, nor their natural force abated. Sin is the same, man the same, God the same in all ages. And the Bible's claim to be God's Word is substantiated by the fact that it is possessed of the same perennial freshness, as the sun, or the spring, or the ocean, or the faces of the little children. Would that we might daily read it as we read the newspaper, damp from the press, with our Father's great message to us!

THURSDAY, August 27.

"PREPARE."—2 Chron. xxxv. 4, 6, 10, 14, 15, 16.

No great court function can be carried through successfully, without careful preparation. And Josiah's passover was so vast and rare a success because of the large amount of previous preparation, as is described in this chapter. The priests and Levites were prepared by careful washings and ceremonial rites. The course of the sacrifices was ordered, according to the law of Moses. The routine of sacred song and praise was also provided for. Nothing was left to hap-hazard or chance.

We are taught to rely on the promptings and inspirations of the Holy Spirit, and it is certain that He would use us more on special errands, if we were to trust and obey Him better. But these extraordinary ministries should not lead us to a life of hap-hazard. We should prepare ourselves for service so far as we may, laying our plans, anticipating the calls and exigencies of coming days, and preparing for the demand which almost certainly will be made on us. We may have to give our special words and addresses and arrangements to the winds, but we shall always need that preparedness of heart which is necessary for those who are to be used of God.

Remember what is said of the vessels that were purged from uncleanness, sanctified, meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work. Be always in your own place, clean so far as you can be, filled with the Holy Ghost, with the handle of your life stretched out towards the Master, so that at any moment He may lay his hand on you, and use you for his holy service.

FRIDAY, August 28.

"RISING UP BETIMES."—2 Chron. xxxvi. 15.

What a touching and graphic phrase! How did God yearn over that sinful and rebellious city! Sending his messengers, "rising up betimes, and sending"—like a man who has had a sleepless night of anxiety for his friend or child, and rises with the dawn to send a servant on a mission of inquiry, or with a message of love. How eager God is for men's salvation!

From God's eagerness, might we not learn a lesson of anxiety for the souls of men? We do not long after them enough, or rise betimes to urge them to repent. Did we realise what heaven is, or hell, what men are missing or incurring, what our duty is, as saved ourselves, we should rise up betimes.

But if God rises betimes to seek men, should they not do the same to seek Him? Think you not, that when Adam heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden at morning prime, he would be up and away to meet Him on the upland lawns of Paradise? Can we wonder that our Master would rise up a great while before day, to meet his Father on some unfrequented height? Let us not cling to beds of sloth when God is awaiting us, let us heed his loving remonstrances, that we may be saved in the overthrow of the world, and let us, like Lot, pass on the word to others enwrapped in fatal slumber around us, bidding them before the sun rise to escape to the mountains lest they be consumed.

SATURDAY, August 29.

"THE LORD STIRRED UP THE SPIRIT OF CYRUS."—Ezra i. 1.

There were many rays focussed on this spot. In the first place, it had been definitely foretold by Jeremiah that the captivity would only last for seventy years; in the next place, Daniel, having learned from comparison of dates that the allotted time had nearly expired, had set himself to pray. Also, if Josephus be credited, the aged prophet had showed the young king the predictions of Isaiah in which his own name was clearly mentioned: "Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden...he shall build my city, he shall let go my captives, not for price nor reward, saith the Lord of hosts."

God is the fountain-head and source of all spiritual blessing and of all those great movements for the uplifting and enlightenment of mankind, which have swept from time to time over the world. Go to Him when you want to reach the heart of kings, prophets, and people. In prayer we can touch the spring of all the stirrings that the world needs.

But it is not enough for God to stir men, they must obey. It appears that only a comparatively small number of captive Jews obeyed the divine stirring and came out of Babylon with the chief of the fathers. The call resounds for volunteers, but only a few respond; the inspiration breathes over us, but only some are susceptible to it. God works to will and to do, but only certain of the children of men work out what He works in. Whenever there is a divine stirring abroad let us rise up and go.

The Sand of the Sea.

I HAVE no doubt that many of you dear children for whom I am writing will be going during this holiday month to the seaside. Shall I tell you what I think you will do there? You will pull off shoes and stockings, and run about with bare, brown feet on the soft warm sand, and in and out of the little racing white waves. You will take spade and pail, and build sand castles, and stand upon them as the tide comes in. You will write your names upon the sand, and watch the waves come up and wash away all trace of them.

In these things you will have to do with the sand—you will walk over it, sit upon it, and play with it. Now on this quiet Sunday afternoon I want to talk to you a little about this same sand. We will fancy that we are sitting on the seashore, you and I. Let us take a sharp-pointed stick and print upon the sand—thus:

S hifting.
A ncient.
N umberless.
D angerous.

Can you think of any word which describes sand better than this one—shifting? I am sure you will all have noticed that sand moves about very easily. Take up a handful, and it will slip through your fingers. If you try to walk up a sandhill you will find it very difficult, because the sand will slip away from under your feet, and will hinder you. If you build a sand castle it will not last; if you write your name on the sand, it soon gets wiped out, or washed away. Sand is unstable, shifting, unsteady. When our Lord Jesus was on earth, He told the people a story illustrating the shifting character of the sand. He spoke of a man who built his house upon the sand. Now it is all very well to build a castle upon the sand to play in, but none of you would think of building a house to live in there. You would call any man very foolish who did such a thing, would you not? Jesus called this man foolish, too. Very likely he got on pretty well in his fine new house, so long as the sun shone, and the winds were still. But by-and-by the rain began to fall in torrents, and the wind to blow in strong gusts, so that the house, having nothing firm to rest upon, came down like a pack of cards, and "great was the fall of it." Now the foolish man had lost his house, but it was his own fault, was it not? He should have built his house upon the rock, instead of upon the sand. It takes a hard hammer to break rock—if you step upon rock your feet stand firm, if you carve your name upon rock it will remain for centuries.

Now I want you, dear children, to build your lives on the rock and not on the sand. Christ Jesus is the Rock, the Rock of our salvation. We shall be safe, safe for ever if we trust Him, if we rest on Him. But if we trust in anything else for salvation, such as our own good deeds, or our prayers, or our Bible-reading, we shall find that we have been trusting in the shifting sand.

Another thought about the sand. It is ancient. We speak sometimes of a thing being "as old as the hills." We might as reasonably say "as old as the sand." It was just the same in Job's time as it is now, and the Book of Job is the very oldest book we have. I daresay you have noticed in carrying pailfuls of sand to make turrets for your sand castles that sand is very heavy. Now, Job tells us that he is in great trouble, and that if his trouble could be put in the balance and weighed, it would be heavier than the sand of the sea (Job. vi. 3). And Solomon says, "A stone is heavy, and the sand weighty, but the anger of a foolish man is heavier than them both" (Prov. ix. 27).

Again, the sand is numberless. Take up a handful, and try to count the grains. You cannot do it. Think of all the many handfuls which lie upon the shore before you; think again of all the other sea-side places round this and other coasts, and you will see at once that it would be impossible for any man to count the grains of sand. Now listen to the promise, the wonderful promise which God gave to Abraham. "I will surely do thee good, and make thy seed [children] as the sand of the sea, which cannot be numbered for multitude." But Abraham's children forgot God, and wandered away from Him, so that He could not keep all the promises which He had made to them. Listen again to the sad words which He put into the mouth of one of his prophets: "Oh, that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments; then had thy peace been as a river, thy righteousness as the waves of the sea, thy children also as the sand."

There is one very wonderful text about sand in the Psalms. David is talking to God and praising Him for his goodness, and he goes on to say, "How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them! If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand." When you are away from your friends, you like, do you not, that they should say in their letters, "I often think of you?" And is it not good to remember that God, who is our Very Best Friend, so often thinks of us—so often that his thoughts of us are more in number than the sand?

Once more, sand is sometimes very dangerous. You have heard of the great sandy deserts where men are sometimes lost, and where they wander for days without food or water. And in these deserts there are occasionally terrible sandstorms. A strong wind lifts the sand in clouds, and drives it rapidly along into the faces of any men or animals who may be near. Then they are blinded and suffocated by this hot, dry sand.

Even on our own coasts there are quicksands where people may be lost. These sands are far more shifting and unstable than the ordinary sand. If you place your foot upon them it sinks in. If you were to walk into one, you would be drawn down and suffocated in the sand. Sin is like such a quicksand. If you once step into it, it is hard—very hard—to get out again. Only one can draw us out if we get in, and that one is Jesus Christ our Saviour. Let us pray to Him to keep our feet far from the quicksands of sin, and to lead us safely on our journey to his heavenly home.

Though storms and quicksands deep
Through all my passage lie,
Yet Christ will safely keep,
And guide me with his eye.
My anchor, hope, shall firm abide,
And I each boisterous storm outride.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 33).

- (a) The butler dreamt of a vine with three branches on it, bearing ripe grapes, which he pressed into Pharaoh's cup and gave it to Pharaoh.
- (b) The baker dreamt he carried three white baskets on his head, in the uppermost basket were cakes for Pharaoh which the birds ate.
- (d) Pharaoh had two dreams; in the first he stood by the side of a river out of which came seven fat kine, and after them seven lean kine, and the lean kine ate the fat kine, and after they had eaten them were as thin as before. In his second dream he saw seven full and good ears in one stalk, and after them seven withered ears sprang up and devoured the seven fruitful ears.
- (2) As Joseph had interpreted, in three days the butler was restored to his butlership and the baker was hanged. The seven years of plenty were followed by seven years of famine.
- (3) To Joseph.
- (4a) Manasseh and Ephraim.
- (b) Manasseh, "forgetting"; Ephraim, "fruitful."
- (5) John ii. 5 ver. Spoken by Mary the mother of Jesus to the servants at the marriage feast at Cana of Galilee.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 34).

I. Find the following texts; learn each by heart; write out texts, giving chapter and verse, from memory.

II. Take one word from each and form a well-known precept in Proverbs. Learn it, and write it out from memory, giving chapter and verse.

1. Those that have not sought the Lord, nor enquired for Him.—Zeph.
2. To him that knocketh it shall be opened.—Matt. vii.
3. It is time to seek the Lord.—Hosea x.
4. Come unto me, all ye that are heavy laden.—Matt. xi.
5. Thou art my God, early will I seek Thee.—Ps. lxxiii.
6. He shall give his angels charge over thee.—Ps. xcii.
7. Seek and ye shall find.—Matt. vii.
8. Forbid them not to come unto Me.—Matt. ix.

Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world (John i. 29).

John the Baptist gave this beautiful name to Jesus when he wanted to introduce Him to the people. "The sin of the world" was a very heavy burden for God's Lamb to carry away, but

Jesus bore it all,
All to Him we owe.

Village Tales.

III.—THEIR HEROINE.

SHE and her mother had come to the village about three years after Miss Priscilla, and when she was first seen at church someone remarked that she was beautiful, and that she looked good, but they should not think she had much endurance.

"She is young," Miss Priscilla had remarked, "and perhaps has not had much to endure yet; but if it is necessary, our Father will give her just all the endurance she needs, for she is his."

And so it proved to be. Day by day she grew into their hearts more closely, for all saw the gifted, lively girl growing into mature womanhood, following her Lord fully, sacrificing herself cheerfully to the simplest mode of life, serving moment by moment her aged mother and others, never speaking or thinking of herself, but with gentle manner and singleness of heart, brightening many lives, and adorning the doctrine of Jesus Christ her Lord. Then love came to her, as it comes to all women, and she grew only more lovely under its spell, and more gentle to all. "Ah," said some, "surely now she will receive the earthly reward of all her love and patience! She has been a good daughter. She will make a noble wife and mother."

But others, who saw farther, thought differently. "She will think first of what God would have her do," said these. "She may never marry, for her mother is a great care to her." "Twould be a shame," said some, "if she did not wed; it is natural, and she needs a good man's protecting love. She will grow old, and when her mother dies she will be alone in the world."

"Need she be lonely because she is alone?" the others asked.

But very soon all speculation was set at rest. It was known that she had had to choose one of two ways. The man whom she loved wanted her alone; he was not so placed that her mother could still receive her care under his roof.

"You must go, dear," said her mother. "I shall not be here long, and I fear nothing. The Lord will provide for me."

But she did not go. She explained to him how it was. She told him she should never love another as she loved him, but she felt she should please God best by staying with her mother, and she asked him not to wait, but to take another to wife, which he very soon did. Then her beautiful hair began to show streaks of silver; but the children loved her more than ever, and her brave smile cheered them, and young and old spoke of her, when she was not near, as a heroine. It was a big word for simple village folk to use, but they could think of no other; and though there was no Scripture warrant for its use, and it savoured somewhat of the circulating library, they retained it, its subject losing nothing in their reverence or regard thereby. Then it was discovered that she had a talent—something by which those who possessed it were generally lifted above the common lot of men and women, and took their place, courted and admired, among the world's gifted few.

"I should lose so much of her," said her mother to a friend, "if she were to use this gift. And yet I must not be selfish."

So she stayed, using her new-found treasure only for those who might be helped by it in her village life, and desiring nothing better if, by so doing, she could glorify God the more. Day by day the exactions of home-life increased for her.

"She is a living epistle of God's grace," they said; "no one but she could endure and do as she does, chafed by petty restraints, and girt about by hindrances enough to vex a saint."

"You forget," said Miss Priscilla, "that she feels no chafing, and what appear to be restraints and hindrances to us, are the instruments used in the perfection of her character."

Then her mother became hopelessly invalided, and when it was proposed that a nurse should attend her, her daughter settled the question in her own way.

"My mother is a sacred charge to me," she said, "and surely you would not rob me of the joy of ministering to her when she needs it most, and when I need occupation more than you can know?"

That was how they caught a glimpse of her heart and its wound; but it was the only time, and it was sacred to them. After her mother's death she became prostrate; the shock of severance settled upon her in a melancholy sadness.

"I am of no use in the world," she said, "I have lived a dull, useless life when I might have done so much! Others achieve something, but my life has been wasted."

They knew, then, that her body was at fault, and that a great temptation had come to her; they loved her more than before, and sent her away with the minister and his wife to find health among the Alpine beauties of Switzerland.

Dark doubts assailed her—she saw only chaos before her, and her Saviour became as a reproach to her. She could not pray, and every promise of Scripture seemed only to mock her.

"If I had only used my talent as others have used theirs," she argued with herself, "all might have been different."

Just then there came to the hotel where she and her friends were staying, an Englishman, known as an enemy to Christianity, and he, attracted by her sad beauty, and crown of silvern hair, sought her society, and gained it, on one condition.

"You refuse to accept the truth of God," she said, "and just now I am under a cloud, nearly as dark as your cloud of unbelief. But let me tell you all I can about it, and promise me not to say anything against what is my most precious possession, and I shall be thankful for your kind forbearance."

She said afterwards that she never knew what could have led her to tread upon such dangerous ground at such a time.

"It is all very wonderful to me," said the traveller when he had heard everything, "but the most wonderful thing is the desire it has given me to look into those things which are as life to you, for I should be so happy in helping you."

Together they studied the Scriptures, he always seeking to put the most helpful light upon everything, and she daily growing better in body and mind, until one day he came to her and said:

"Why, do you know, I have gone into these things so strongly from your point of view that, all unknowingly, I have come to believe them! I could not give them up now."

"But," she said, "we do not live by things, nor by words, but by the Spirit which is of God. Are you firm enough for that?"

"Wait and see," said he, "it is all so new to me."

In the joy of this revelation, she found her old self, with many newer attributes born of sad experience, and the delight that comes with renewed health, and assurances that, however far we seem to have been from God, He is ever with us in love.

The village rejoiced in fitting style when the beloved trio returned in the best of health and spirits. To see their "heroine" once more like herself was indeed happiness. "We can't do without ye, so don't ye ever go fer to say as you're no use in the world, dearie," said old Molly.

"I will not think that again," she replied, "for I have seen that God may use the very humblest to his glory."

"Truly," said the minister, "his ways are past finding out; He brings light out of darkness, and order out of chaos, and shows us that a heart yielded to Him in the little, wearing, seemingly humdrum things of life, is braver, nobler, and filled with higher aims, than one which is content to do only

'some great thing,' even though it be for Him." The traveller proved the reality of his conversion to Christianity by drawing many after him into the light and love of God.

"Dear," she said to him, when they had been married five years, and two children romped about them, "I once said I should never love again—that was years ago."

"Did you think," said he, "that when Love Himself is in the soul, there can be any limit set to love? He would hold but a small place in any heart which could refuse love, even for the hundredth time, when He offers it."

"Yes," she answered, "I understand that now."

Her beauty now is chiefly in her smile; her hair is very white and much thinner; she has done no great thing, as the world counts greatness; but she shines for God in her home, before her husband, her children, and her friends, who still call her their "heroine."

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

LIKE many other agencies, the Barbican Mission to the Jews finds anxiety as to supplies, although the workers have much encouragement in their labour. The new report gives very readable information concerning the Jews and their spiritual condition. Some extracts will afford an idea of the scope and character of the operations of the Mission, of which Herr C. T. Lipshytz is director:

"The principal item under the head of expansion is the opening of a station in Alsace: the Mission combine with the Rheinische-Westfälische Verein für Israel to maintain the work. With Colmar as the centre of operations, Pastor Littwien, a Hebrew Christian of nineteen years' standing, has entered upon very promising service. There are in the south of Germany a large number of Jews, who have for many years been neglected."

"The work in London has proceeded without cessation. The evangelistic services in the Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C., on Saturdays and Sundays, have been well attended. Men from many lands have heard in their own tongue the story of the love of God in Christ. The word of prophecy has been unfolded to our brethren; and week by week we have, after the Apostolic precedent, reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, 'opening and alleging that the Christ must needs have suffered and risen from the dead' (Acts xvii. 3). Our meetings are never characterised by the disorder which was common in mission efforts a few years ago. The men see that we mean their good, and they listen with encouraging attention."

"Every evening Jews gather round us in the Bible Class, and, after the reading of Scripture, there is discussion and conversation on the Divine teaching. There has been a good attendance at the night school, and the men have gladly availed themselves of the opportunity to improve their knowledge of English. In the Reading Room there are daily newspapers and periodicals in English and quite a number of Continental tongues. In the Sunday-school, Holy Scripture is read and explained, and hymns are sung with much pleasure."

In the work among women and children Mrs. Lipshytz is exercising a wide-spread influence. The Converts' Home is a place where many have thrown off Rabbinical fetters and stood up free men in Christ Jesus. The distribution of Scriptures and Gospel papers is an important adjunct of the Mission, and has led to some remarkable cases of inquiry with lasting results. A young man, who was an inmate of the Home, in order that he might be rescued, at least for a time, from influences hostile to the new light that seemed to be dawning upon his mind, was at length helped out to America. On arriving at New York he wrote:—"While under your roof I had a glorious opportunity of studying the way of salvation. I could never leave off reading the Scriptures, and rejoiced in the exercise. You delivered me from temporal ruin, and helped me, by the goodness of God, to become a new man. I have now an opportunity to earn my daily bread, and am able to live as one in whom the grace of God is manifested."

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

A PERSONAL TESTIMONY.

BY CANON TAYLOR SMITH.

I WAS a boy of eleven when God first revealed Himself to me. It came about in a very simple manner: there was a praying mother and a loving Heavenly Father, so the work was done! Not that there was no struggling and no reserve, for there were six months of struggling and six months of reserve, this latter arising from the fact that I did not want my mother to think that I had not been a Christian before. During those months I often cried myself to sleep, looking for Christ and not finding Him. Then the text came to me, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, He will give it you." I asked for peace and I got it, and that peace and the assurance of sins forgiven, I have never lost from that day to this.

I do not know that I was much used of God until I was fourteen, and then I had my first convert. I was so rejoiced at having been a means of blessing to the soul of another, that I went home and prayed, "Lord, now lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace!" I wanted to die lest the convert should fall. The Lord did not answer that prayer, and I am not now desirous to depart in peace until I see more of the Saviour's glory on earth.

Step by step the Lord led me. About thirteen years ago, while living in London, I learned of the Mildmay Conference. All through my Christian life I have had a longing to know more and more of God,—a hungering and thirsting after righteousness. I did not know what it was to be filled then. Early in the year referred to I heard that the Mildmay Conference would be held in June, and that great blessing, and joy, and peace had been experienced in believing by Christians who had attended in previous years. I waited most anxiously, and God answered prayer, giving me the desire of my heart in a very peculiar way. The very night before the Conference I met with an accident. I was going round the dining-room table in the hall of the college when I knocked my knee against an oak bench, and bruised it so much that it began to swell, and I had to go to bed. I never attended the Conference that year, but whilst on my back I was led to read quite through the Epistle to the Romans, and I received such a blessing and such a rebuke that I said, "Lord, if this is the result of a bruised knee, give me a broken leg!" Just through reading that Epistle, without comment, steadily, quietly, personally, I was blessed; and I commend the same exercise to you. Since then the life of faith has been a gradually unfolding reality—the sun of righteousness rising with healing in his wings.

Little children have been my teachers. God's messages to me with regard to the life of faith have been all through little children. There is no big man in the church, or in literature, of whom I can say, "This man helped me immensely." I believe literally in the words, "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings Thou hast ordained strength," and perfected praise. The first command of the risen Lord was, "Feed my lambs." While visiting in the parish, when I was curate at Norwood, a little boy came running to me. I prayed, "Lord, guide me to bless this child." God guided the child to bless me; putting his arms round me, he said, "I love you." I said, "How do you know?" Then gripping me round the neck, the little one said, "Because I want to get as near to you as I can." I asked myself whether I wanted to get as near to God as I could, or as far away as possible. If I want to love Christ, I must get as near as possible to Him.

Some time after that there was a service for children, and I was reading to them that portion of Scripture which describes our Lord's meeting with his disciples in the upper room, when he said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." I asked the juvenile audience, "What do you think the disciples did when our Lord said that to them?" A little tot sitting right in front said, "I suppose they received Him." Thus, in speaking to others about the blessed life, I heard those words, little knowing how much they would influence my life.

Coming to two years ago, I went from Keswick to High Cliff camp, to work amongst the boys. The officers were willing to trust God, and I saw the Spirit working as never before or since. We were led—the officers—to sanctify ourselves for the sake of the boys, and the result was, instead of having to go after them, and argue with them, and convince them, that Christ might convert them, we trusted God's Holy Spirit, and it was marvellous how they seemed to break down, and to come in. God gave us the most difficult cases, such as seemed unwilling to have anything to do with spiritual things. One boy with whom I had conversed said to me: "Now we must allow ourselves to be worked by Him." This was that young man's idea as to the future, now that he had given his heart to the Lord. I give that word to you: "Now let yourselves be worked by Him."

I do not know if you know anything about "stewing," if you have experience of—"whose service is perfect slavery." With me in days gone by Saturday night was a great trouble—with its preparation; and Sunday night was worse—with its reflection. I wanted to preach my sermons all over again, and make them more acceptable to the people. I trusted God for "perfect freedom" in regard to sermon delivery and after-thoughts. I bear witness to the power of the Holy Ghost to deliver from anxiety. It is a matter of taking Christ simply.

You ask me what my experience in Africa has been. Just this. Several times, when down with fever—and that is a time to test God's keeping power, when you have to set your papers in order with a view to approaching death, and make arrangements so that your friends may know your wishes—I have enjoyed perfect peace. But it is a more solemn thing to live than to die. I believe that Sierra Leone is the key to the Soudan, and that God is going to pour out his Spirit among the people there, so that we shall see wonderful things on the West Coast.

A LESSON IN OBEDIENCE.

BY PASTOR THEODORE MONOD.

Let us go back to the book of Genesis, an old book, but the very newest book we can read. It fits our needs, just as much as any other book does. It is the book of ages, the book of sources, of origins. There we find, among others, the history of him who has been called the father of the faithful. We read in the 12th chapter of Genesis: "Now the Lord said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."

Now remember that at that time there was no special nation belonging to the Lord. The Lord was even then, at that very moment, beginning to set apart a people for Himself. To create that people, He had to make first of all a family, and, to make that family, to select one man. But that man was neither more nor less than another man! Since the flood there was only one kind of people all over the world, and those people were very far from God, generally speaking. Here and there there might be one who had an open ear, and a heart prepared, and there was one amongst them, Abram, and the Lord spoke to him a very strange thing. "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee." God does not even tell him the name of the land, or how he is to get there. "Get out." "So Abraham departed." Now this is the word. It is a marvellous word in its great simplicity. The Lord said to him, Depart; so Abram departed. Now then, when the Lord does it go on in the same fashion? So you did it? That is the question. "So Abram departed, as the Lord had spoken unto him." We might as well take it in the New Testament where we have a synopsis of it. In Hebrews xi. we read: "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed, and he went out, not knowing whither he went." Abram might have done a great many other things than the simple thing of going out because God had said, "Go out." Of course, Abram had some spiritual appreciation. He listened, he must have listened, or he would not have heard the voice of God. He listened, and he heard, and he understood, and he assented, and very likely he was staggered by the greatness of the promise made to him, that all nations of the earth should be blessed in him.

SAYS SOMETHING TO YOU,

Who was he? Nobody. Yet all nations were to be blessed in him! He was to leave his kindred, and his country. Yes, and he might have taken a very long time to consider that. He might have talked about it considerably. It was something to talk about. He might perhaps have written a song about it. It was a very fine subject for a song. There have been songs written about it. He might have sung "Onward, faithful Abram, go!" and then have sat down. I have seen such things. Well, he did not do that; that we know. He might have prayed about it. That is good; it is always good to pray. And then he might have remained where he was. He might have held meetings about it, large meetings, annual meetings. Why not?

As someone has suggested, Abram might have had the command of God and promise of God engraved, perhaps at great expense, on a large rock, so that all people might read it, and say, "There is God's command and promise." And they might have had great gatherings around that rock, festivals around it, and wondered how God talked to a man. They did not. But he heard the voice of God, and did not doubt that God had spoken to him. He knew perfectly what God had told him to do, and he might have celebrated the event, and got others to praise the Lord for his goodness to speak to the children of men, and then have gone no further. But, mark you, he would not have been called the "father of the faithful" if he had done so. What is it that he did? He obeyed; and the one thing that God asks of us is to obey, and if we will not obey, all the talking and singing and even the praying goes for nothing. God said to his people by the prophet, "When ye multiply your prayers I will not hearken unto you." Why? Because "your hands are full of blood, because you are not willing and obedient." "If ye are willing and obedient, ye shall eat of the fat of the land." Are we willing and obedient?

You ask me, "Obedient to what?" Oh, it is not for me to tell you; you know it well enough—too well.

YOU TRY NOT TO HEAR;

you know perfectly on what point you are disobedient, with (what shall I say?) a certain kind of piety. There are many ways of being disobedient, but only one to be obedient. In a very impudent kind of way one may say, "No," to God; but, as Christ has pointed out in the parable, one may also be disobedient in saying all the time "Yes." One may be disobedient to God most courteously, most piously; but he is disobedient for all that. One may be disobedient by constantly putting it off to another month, or year, or week, or day. "Not now, Lord." And then we lose the blessing and promise, and we may lose more than that; we may lose the faith altogether. We may lose our souls, because after a little while a man must agree with himself, and if his conduct does not agree with his faith, then he will make his faith agree with his disobedience, and he will say, "It is all moonshine; I do not believe in these things."

Now, mind what you are about. If God tells you to do a thing, do it. There is one thing that I know God tells you to do, each one of you. "This," said Christ, "is the work of God, that ye should believe on Him whom He hath sent." It is an act of obedience to believe in Christ. So much is it an act of obedience that Christ said that when the Holy Spirit should come, He should "convince the world of sin." Why? Because they are murderers or thieves, or liars? No. "Because they believe not in Me." That is the great disobedience, that is the great sin, and the root of all other sins. You are bound not to refuse your trust to the Son of God. He has redeemed you by his blood. He asks only for what belongs to Him, and if you keep yourselves from God you are robbing Him. How long will this last? Who has not to God? "Consider your ways," see whether or not you have closed with Christ. Have you indeed touched Him and found forgiveness and peace in Him?

Then again, "This is the will of God, even your sanctification,"—that you should consider yourselves as set apart, as much set apart as Aaron was set apart, as much set apart (mind this) as Christ was set apart; and we were set apart in Him when He was set apart. Chosen in Him, dead in Him, risen again in Him, ascended in Him, hidden in Him, and ready to be manifested in and with Him. Now then, have you accepted that place? What stands so easy to read in your Bibles as that Christ has given us everything by giving us Himself; that there is nothing to seek for outside of Him? When He says "Abide in Me"—some people say this as if it meant to shut yourself up in a small room or prison—when He says "Abide in Me," it means in the breadth of the heavens, abide in God. It means all things are yours, for ye are Christ's. "Abide in Him." You think you are going to be shut up in a cage? If you be in Christ, it means that the cage is open, that you are free. Do not be afraid of what God tells you to do. Do it.

You remember the centurion said, "I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me; and I say to this man, 'Go,' and he goeth; and to another 'Come,' and he cometh; and to my servant, 'Do this,' and he doeth it." Oh, I thought, can the Lord say as much of his army, of his people? Would He not be obliged to say to most of us at times, I daresay of all, "I have said, 'Go for Me,' and they would not go, and 'Do this,' and they would not, but they go on praying and singing." Oh, how sad it is, how awful it is. Is it not time that all this should come to a close? We are asking God to make a new beginning for us, a new beginning of the inner life of each one of us, and He is ready to do it. Do not say, as a kind of excuse, what is so often said: "You speak to faith hath saved thee." That was his most gracious loving way of putting it. We perfectly understand what it meant; it was that she had touched Him with the confidence of despair, knowing that He could heal her. Let us think for a little while of this—that the power of faith means the power of what faith touches, that great faith is just faith in a great Saviour seen as such.

Faith is one of the most frequently mistaken words in religion. It has been debated over and over again what faith means; but assuredly it is true that it means in religion what it means in life—that to have faith in Jesus Christ is the same thing, as to the meaning of the word, as to have faith in a man who, humanly speaking, can cure your body, or in a man who, humanly speaking, can set straight your affairs, or in a man who, humanly speaking, can inform your mind. It means in its very nature a trust, not in theory, but in practice; and as it is in religion, so also it is in everyday life. We want to have great faith, a faith that groweth exceedingly—an uncommon thing to know, an uncommon thing to see. What shall be the means? Shall we dive into ourselves, and from some store there expect to bring the unexpected treasure of faith? Shall we look in, or down, or around for faith? It was not so that the woman in her utmost need looked for it and found it in the miscellaneous street throng on that day. Her faith was great, because it was revealed to her inmost soul that here at last was a means, living and moving, and walking and loving, for the staying of her life-long plague. "If I may touch but his clothes I shall be whole."

If we want great faith we must see Jesus Christ large; so we must put ourselves, by the grace of God, in the way of Jesus Christ being revealed to us large. God must do it. How much time we lose in quest of faith—in other means of getting it than a larger sight of Christ. Let us give more and more time to "Consider Him." Let us open our Bible, again as ever new, because it is the one authentic account from beginning to end of Him. Let us take the blessed Book as if we had never done it before, and interrogate it about Jesus Christ. Use, if you will, method and honest ingenuity about it;

HAVE YOU MEANS OF BIBLE STUDY.

Take, if you will, sometimes, one narrow but deep portion of the Word, and dig out of it all, or what seems to be all, that it says of Jesus Christ. Take that golden chapter, that wonderful epistle, that paschal discourse, that high-priestly prayer—take types and shadows and mighty prophecies of Jesus, and let them all contribute straight from the Word to give you a truer perspective and scale of Jesus Christ. Many and many a moment that would otherwise be spent upon a weary and unprofitable aspiration may be employed to golden purpose on "considering the Apostle and High Priest of our confession," just in Himself.

At times of spiritual dryness and dearth, I have found a blessed health through setting myself to think during a few minutes' walk alone, or in wakeful moments at night, not of anything complicated in character and statement, but of the names and titles and the glorious offices of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is a rather a humbling confession to make, but I suppose other minds beside my own need such simple helps. I have found it a help to take the alphabet, and string upon it, letter by letter, the jewels and the pearls of what the Bible says of the Lord Jesus Christ; and I can humbly say that in such looking up and looking out a fire kindleth, and the cold heart gets to feel there is something to warm it still. There is the Lord Jesus Christ in his unimaginable fulness to meet the needs, to be the sinner's supply, to be the guilty one's righteousness, to be the abjectly weak one's strength, and to be the triumph over the Paul and Abram. I am not Paul, I am not Abram." What made Abram to be Abraham? The very fact that he believed and obeyed. He was not Abraham before he did that; he was Abraham after it, and because he did it. And when one speaks to you, not of this ancient time, but of our time, and says, "Mr. Moody received the Holy Ghost, as he tells us, on a certain occasion in New York, and the Spirit filled him with strength and joy," you say, "That is Mr. Moody!" Not at all; that is what makes him to be Mr. Moody. You do not know what you will be when you are filled with the Holy Ghost. You will have a new name, as Abram did, and lead a new life, even a life of faith and obedience to the glory of God.

GREAT FAITH: WHAT AND WHENCE?

By REV. H. C. G. MOULE, D.D.

IN Mark v. 28 it is thus written: "For she said, If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole." These were the words of one who was hopeless after innumerable failures, who was helpless of further devices of relief, and was bankrupt, for she had spent all that she had. And she said, "If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole." Not, "If I may do something desperate;" not "If I may cast about anywhere in the dark, with what I call faith," but "If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole." The narrative makes it plain, surely, that the emphasis lies in the word "Hrs." She might have clutched at the garment of St. Peter, but she would not have been the better. She might have gone the whole round of the holy apostles, and been nothing bettered, but only more hopeless still. "If I may touch but HIS clothes, I shall be whole."

The power of faith to save lies not in itself, but in the object that it touches. The merciful Lord soon turned round upon her, and said to her, "Thy thought of death, where by every instinct of nature it is a most awful thought. Wisdom, even righteousness and sanctification and redemption, a great threefold ray, shines out of Him again.

But whatever you do as to details, do this as the thing—"Consider Him" with purpose of heart. Not a mere curiosity of Bible search, not a pleasing and beautiful occasion for making helpful Bible marks, but because it is because it is the bread of life, and here is the desert to eat it in; because here is the brazen serpent of salvation, and the poison is all about; because here is the Lord's work to do and the Lord's witness to bear, and the Lord's burdens to carry, and it is impossible to do anything of it all without a large and gloriously manifested Saviour on whom to rest.

Let us be of good cheer. Have we been prostrated? He lays his right hand upon us and says, "Fear not." The Apostle says: "When I saw Him I fell at his feet as dead. He laid his right hand on me and said, Fear not." Why did He say "Fear not," and not "You are an Apostle," not "You are a martyr, a confessor suffering for Me," not "You once lay on my breast," not "We were once as a man that talketh to his friend"? No; He said to the beloved disciple who had been admitted so close to Him: "Fear not, I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, and have the keys of hell and of death." Not one word about John, but "Fear not," and all the rest about Himself, in that Divine, blessed, unapproachable, adorable egotism of Jesus Christ, who must glorify Himself for the very salvation of us sinners.

Look unto Jesus. If you want to be absolutely at rest about the support, for instance, of your body when it needs repose or when walking, you are abundantly safe when you are asked to lie down on the side of the mountain, or when you are asked to walk from place to place along the well-made high road. You have great faith in the mountain and great faith in the road, because they are so great that you do not think about them at all. The object is so large and so adequate, that your trust is complete. It is so entirely co-extensive to you that you rest when you want and march when you have a mind, with a perfectness of trust because its object is so great.

Look unto Jesus Christ, the Rock of Ages, and rest with a faith that forgets itself in Him. Look unto Him; the way and the life, and go upon the faith that looks so difficult when you begin to think about yourself and your trust, but which will be so easy when you recollect that it is but the Lord in disguise with his will for you and his power in you. "If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole." I am hopeless, I am helpless, I am bankrupt, I am a lost being in the world, unable to generate a victorious condition of things out of myself; but He is strong, and I see Him somewhat as He is, and if I may but touch (as I may, and as I do) his clothes, I shall be whole.

Work Among Hop-pickers.

As Mr. Heley, of Wing, with whom for thirteen years we have visited the hop-yards of Hereford and Worcester, owing to ill-health and other calls, will not be able to undertake a fourteenth mission, may we ask help of any Christians interested in this work, that funds and tracts may not be wanting to enable Mr. Jones, of Shepherd's Bush, and myself to do as in former years?

Last season we visited 150 yards, reaching 12,500 men and women. Good tracts, etc., are the chief need, and could be sent to us direct, care of Mr. P. Clissett, Stanley-hill, Bosbury, Ledbury; or care of Mr. Turner, Woodlands, Eardiston, Tenbury. We, with other friends, have given our services; but as we believe in paying our way, this entails some expense, toward which the Editor will be glad to receive aid.

WILLIAM LUFF.

Very, Very Peculiar!

ABOUT fifteen years ago I was asked to speak at the great Mildmay Conference in London to those who were in doubt about their soul's salvation. Four weeks later I spoke upon the spiritual life at another convention at the seaside. I arrived in town just in time for the meeting, and after making the address I was asked by the vicar to find my way to the parsonage. After some trouble I found my way to what I was told was the vicar's house, and groped around in the dark, feeling for the bell. Suddenly I touched a human hand. I said, "I beg your pardon." A lady's voice answered, "It is Mr. Webb-Peploe, is it not?" "Yes," I replied, "but I do not know to whom I am speaking." She said, "A month ago I heard you speak at Mildmay on 'the reason of the hope that is in you,' and by the blessing of God I have been walking in it ever since."

My text this night had been from 1 Corinthians x. 13: "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." I asked her if she had heard the address.

She replied, "Oh yes, and I have come a long way to hear it."

Then I said, "Now you can pass forever, I hope, into that life of victory, that life of peace, that life of perpetual power and prosperity, that life of unbroken fellowship with God, which I have been daring to trace as the inheritance of the believer!"

She replied, with a pitiful tone—I could see nothing but the gas-light reflected in her eyes—"Oh, I would to God it were possible! but it cannot be with me."

"Why?" I asked.

"Because of my circumstances," she replied.

"But I thought I spoke about circumstances, and said that God was stronger than circumstances."

"Yes," she said, "you did; but mine are such peculiar circumstances."

"I thought I spoke about peculiar circumstances, and said that God was stronger than they."

"Yes, you did; but mine are such very peculiar circumstances."

"I thought I spoke about very peculiar circumstances, and said that God was stronger than they."

"Yes," she said, "you did; but mine are such very, very peculiar circumstances."

I replied, "I did not speak of very, very peculiar circumstances; but do you mean to say that they are stronger than God?"

"Well, sir," she answered, "I cannot say about that; but I know that I cannot expect victory and joy."

Then I said, "Let us tell God so. Do not look at me—for I can see that you are doing that—but look up to heaven and say these words with me: 'O God, I thank Thee with all my heart and soul that when I was a poor lost sinner the revelation was given me that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, and not imputing unto them their trespasses, and that I now claim peace with God through the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. I thank Thee, Lord, for this with all my heart. And now I wish I could live a holy life; but, Lord, my very, very peculiar circumstances seem to make it impossible for Jesus Christ to give me constant deliverance. I am very sorry, Lord, that Jesus Christ is not strong enough to meet my very, very peculiar circumstances; I wish He were, but it seems that He is not; and so, Lord, I am now to look for a life of failure; I expect it, because Christ is not strong enough. O God, I wish Christ were stronger. Amen.'"

I waited and then asked, "Why do you not say it?"

"Why," she said, "that is rank blasphemy!"

I replied, "That is exactly it; and yet you have been saying it in your heart, but you dare not say it with your lips. It is no worse blasphemy for me to say it out loud than for you to say it within. Say it out loud."

She said, "I dare not."

I added, "Nobody else would; let us say something else then." I repeated the first part over again, and then said, "Now, Lord God, I thank Thee with all my heart and soul that Jesus Christ is a very, very peculiar Saviour to meet the very, very peculiar need of a very, very peculiar sinner, in her very, very peculiar circumstances, and to bring her very, very peculiar soul through all the very, very peculiar difficulties, under which she, in her very, very peculiar circumstances, may be called to pass through her life. I accept perpetual deliverance from a very, very peculiar Saviour. O, God, I thank thee. Amen."

She said, "Is that all? Is that all? Thank God, I believe it."

And instead of coming into the vicarage, she went down the steps into the darkness; but she went into a light that no human being and no devil in hell can touch. And, brethren, that is all—a very, very peculiar Saviour to meet your very, very peculiar need, however much you have to say that you who are a very, very peculiar sinner.

Now, everybody is a very peculiar person; I never met any one who was not; I never met any one who did not excuse himself for being a failure as a Christian on the ground that he had very peculiar difficulties; but if you will remember that Jesus Christ died for you as if there were not another soul on earth, and that He was the omnipotent Son of God as well as the perfect Man, and that He is now in heaven on the right hand of God, with all power in heaven and on earth, then you will begin to see that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is true when it teaches that men can live a life of victory and power and unceasing joy.

FROM "THE LIFE OF PRIVILEGE, POSSESSION, AND POWER." By Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe. (s. ed. Nisbet & Co.)

"My Time is not yet Come."

(St. John vii. 37.)

By THE AUTHOR OF "THRESHOLD SERVICE."

AND Thou didst ply thy common task
Within thy humble village home;
Didst learn life's ways, didst questions ask,
Obediently didst go and come.

And Thou didst view with steadfast eyes
The plain routine of night and day,
And in those thirty years nowise
Thy heavenly power didst display.

Thou didst withhold thy speech Divine,
Because thy Father bade Thee stand
In silence; and Thou wouldst not shine,
O Sun of life! upon the land.

Because thy Father bade Thee hold Thy glory back, till Thou shouldst be Strong from obedience so controll'd,
That strength was centred all in Thee.

It cost Thee all that Thou couldst give!
It cost Thee all of love, of will!
Thou didst give all thy life to live
So cramped a life, so blankly still!

The lesson stern was learnt by Thee
Just as I learn it here to-day;
To do was easier than to be,
Inaction was the hardest way.

But Thou hast proved the problem, Lord;
Thy way was best; I bow and learn.
Within my will thy strength afford,
Within my will, oh, shine and burn!

For Thou art of all life the Key.
Through Thee I cannot miss the clue;
Now is the time to learn to be,
Hereafter Thou wilt bid me do.

Northfield in 1896.

THIS fair mountain village, which Nature has set in a frame of imperial loveliness, is, as usual in August, crowded with visitors. They fill every nook and corner, and they strike their tents on the hillside. We meet in the street the country farmer, with his wife and children, driving over the hills to the "Auditorium," where for sixteen days services are held. Fine carriages roll by with their fair and well-dressed occupants, showing that the rich and the poor meet together, and are intent on one errand. Thus the annual conference, now in session, attracts men from various countries, who come here not simply for a spiritual blessing, but to be enriched by a few days', or weeks', stay in this charming town. After a year's absence we come back to find the "Auditorium" built near the "Betsey Moody Cottage"—a name to be held in everlasting honour—light, airy, cheerful, holding thousands, a protest against the dimly-lighted dark cathedrals and churches which it was the joy of our fathers to build. Mr. Moody does not believe in "the dim religious light" which depresses one even at the entrance of the world-famed cathedrals. Neither does he believe in a religion of gloom and sadness. Light, joy, cheer, gladness, he desires to see stamped on the faces of Christians, and exemplified in their lives. The "Skinner Gymnasium" at Northfield Seminary is the tribute which a silk manufacturer pays to one branch of woman's education; other plans are in the mind of the founder.

No sooner is one enterprise well under way when another takes possession of his soul. One day at the Conference he made an appeal on behalf of the young men in our penal institutes: a company of law-breakers that, by statistics, are increasing frightfully. His plan is to provide, as funds come in, for religious reading, books, pamphlets that are published in attractive style, and written in vigorous language, which will by their excellence win readers who are not usually specially hungry for anything that appeals to their intellectual nature. He has already done a good work in this line, but is anxious to do far more as funds are supplied.

Another enterprise of which he is the father, and which starts off, as all Moody's enterprises do, with a fair degree of success, is the "Colportage Library," published by the Bible Institute Colportage Association in Chicago. Over 400,000 volumes have been issued, comprising thirty-two books. These are issued one every two weeks in English and in foreign languages. Already they have had translations in German, Swedish, Norwegian, Spanish, Hindustan, and other languages. Mr. Moody's idea is to put these at such a low price as not to deter the poorest household from securing a library, and thus to drive out the pernicious dime novel. He would silence the voice of the siren by sweeter music.

As usual at these summer conferences, the visitors will not allow Mr. Moody to be hid. Revs. F. B. Meyer, Drs. Pierson, R. A. Torrey, H. C. Mabie, W. Chapman, may take an active part, and are cordially welcomed by everybody, but "D. L." must be heard. No one ever tires of him. Mrs. William Moody (Major Whittle's daughter) is one of the sweet singers of a younger generation, while the old favourites, Sankey and Stebbins, are the leaders of the great choir at this conference. The two Schools are overrun with applicants, and every available space is occupied. The original terms of admission are adhered to, £20 a year, thereby necessitating the raising of a large sum yearly to carry on the blessed work.

S. E. BRIDGMAN.

Northampton, Mass., August 4.

On the last day of July Mr. Moody opened the Conference with an address on Humility (Matt. [760] xi. 29), showing that the lower the Christian goes the brighter he shines. His address was full of homely but effective illustrations. His eulogy of John the Baptist brought tears to many eyes, and his reference to the humility of David, who says nothing in the Psalms about his killing the giant of Gath, caused a smile. He said if a man should kill a giant now, a volume would be written, at once, and publishers would rush for the privilege of bringing it out, and the man would insist on being introduced to every audience as the great giant-killer.

SCHOOL FOR BIBLE STUDY.

Mr. Moody is seemingly never satisfied, and each year he gives his guests more than the year before. Now it is a kindergarten for the juveniles, again a camp for the young men, or a special conference for the young women. This year among other attractions is the Northfield Summer School of the Bible. For many years Mr. Moody has been requested by ministers, evangelists and Christian workers to provide, in addition to the great conventions, facilities at Northfield for systematic study of the Bible. Now it is felt that the time has fully come for the beginning of such work, and the school was opened on July 6 and will continue until August 24.

On Saturday (August 1) addresses were given by Rev. R. A. Torrey and others. Early on Sunday morning a good many had gathered in the Auditorium for a season of prayer with Mr. Moody. Many at the close expressed an increased desire to live nearer to Christ, and one young woman, moved by the earnestness of the meeting, sought Christ for the first time. People began to come together as early as 9.30 for the morning service, at which Dr. Mabie, the secretary of the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, and Mr. D. L. Moody were to speak. The large choir, which assembled some time before the services began, sang many of the new Sankey and Stebbins hymns. The Scripture lesson was from the eighth and ninth chapters of the Book of Esther, and Dr. Mabie gave an exposition of the passages contained therein. Mr. Moody followed on the promises of Christ, and Dr. Wilbur Chapman on the Holy Spirit.

Large meetings were held on Monday morning, afternoon, and evening with such speakers as Mr. Moody, Drs. Wheaton, Blanchard, and Mabie.

One of the most important of the addresses on Tuesday was given by Mrs. Seymour Houghton, of the New York Evangelist, on "The Literary Study of the Bible." A warm welcome was given to Rev. S. A. Selwyn, whose first address (on Matthew xvii. 19), was much enjoyed. Dr. J. M. Gray, of Boston, followed with a thoughtful address on "The History of the Holy Dead"—an examination of the teachings of the Bible with regard to the future state.

Wednesday was largely devoted to evangelistic operations and the discussion of plans for the evangelisation of New York. The needs of the city were presented to Mr. Moody, but it was found that he was fully acquainted with the situation. He recognised, he said, the vital importance of the suggested conference, and would give the invitation careful consideration. In discussing the proposed movement, he said, among other things, that he had the deepest sympathy with the working people living in tenement houses, and added that a great responsibility rested upon those who took the churches away from them, and then gave many of them poorer living accommodation than is given to cattle. If Mr. Moody decides to go to New York, it is the intention of those inviting him to have him speak every morning, and have other speakers and singers associated with him in the afternoon meetings. The evening services will be held in various churches in New York, Brooklyn, and neighbouring cities.

A New Home of Rest for Christian workers and others was opened on July 29, at Chesnut House, Thicket-road, Sutton, Surrey, springing out of, but not connected with, the Y.W.C.A. This home will be carried on in simple faith in God for the supply of all its needs.

Students in South Africa.

THE World's Students' Federation Movement has been rendering a splendid and blessed service to South Africa during the past week by holding a Christian Conference amongst students at Stellenbosch, thirty miles from Capetown, one of the great educational centres of the colony. The initiative of the work was taken by Mr. Luther D. Wishard, of the World's Students' Federation Movement of America, who has travelled almost throughout the world in pursuit of evangelical work amongst students, and Mr. Donald Fraser, one of the leaders of the movement in the United Kingdom, who is en route to missionary labour in far-off Livingstonia. They have been, however, loyally and devotedly assisted by many evangelical ministers, including Rev. Andrew Murray, and the professors of Victoria College and the Dutch Reformed Seminary at Stellenbosch. The students also threw themselves into the movement with much earnestness, and it is expected that the five days' conference, which was largely attended, will result in a real spiritual awakening in the great centres of South Africa.

At an opening meeting on Friday, after an impressive address by Rev. Andrew Murray, Mr. Wishard spoke of the best methods of work amongst students. The best time for reaching their hearts and bringing them to a definite decision for Christ, was when they came back to the colleges at the beginning of the New Year. In America the work had been greatly blessed by getting some prominent student to take up the cause amongst his fellows, and when taken up in prayerful earnestness it had always spread with the most blessed and encouraging results. At the meeting on Monday Mr. Murray spoke on the efficacy of prayer in the work in which they were engaged.

Mr. Donald Fraser spoke on five important points:—(1) The value of a holy life; (2) the importance of personal dealing; (3) how to organise personal work; (4) how the work is to be done; and (5) hindrances to the successful completion of evangelical labour, during which he gave many valuable hints to workers in the Lord's vineyard. Rev. A. Daintree spoke on "Devotional Study of the Bible," and gave six direct lines of thought, which ran through the whole Bible:—(1) The vision of God in his holiness; (2) the vision of Jesus Christ in whom dwells the fulness of God; (3) a purifying process needed before holiness can be imparted; (4) the holiness of God effects a clean heart; (5) the Lord Christ comes to dwell in a pure heart; (6) how this purifying process can be carried on.

Rev. Andrew Murray delivered an inspiring address on Mark xi. 24, taking the five verbs in the text to teach a lesson in prayer—desire, praying, believe, receive, and shall have. On Sunday morning Mr. Murray preached to a large congregation on "The God of my life," and Mr. Wishard addressed a meeting of young men on "The Power of Personal Dealing." In the evening Rev. Mr. Lennox, one of the missionaries at Lovedale, spoke on missionary work, and Mr. Fraser concluded with an address on "The Call to Missions."

Monday was a very full day, all the meetings being largely attended. Mr. Lennox spoke on college prayer meetings, in which he threw out some useful hints and suggestions. In the afternoon, Mr. W. G. Sprigg, the secretary of the Capetown Y.M.C.A., an indefatigable worker and earnest spiritual teacher, delivered a telling address on "The Claims of the Y.M.C.A. on College Men," in which he made a strong appeal to young collegians to become actively attached to the Association. Rev. Ernest Baker spoke on the administration of the Holy Spirit. The Conference was brought to a conclusion on Tuesday evening. Undoubtedly the work done was of a permanent character.

The Pastors' College.—The Free Evening Classes for Christian workers held at the Pastors' College, Temple-street, Newington, S.E., will be resumed on Tuesday, August 25, the subjects being Theology, Greek, Latin, Logic, Literature, and Short-hand. Those desirous of joining are requested to write to the undersigned, enclosing a stamped envelope for a reply.

Leaving the Zambesi.

IN letters describing his departure from Zambesi, Pastor Coillard says:—

On October 30, three years almost to a day since my arrival, I left Lealui, the anthill of Loatle, which had become so dear to me, and, borne in a litter, I left all alone for Sefula. A very melancholy journey and a very painful one. It was the first time in my life that I found myself tossed about in a litter, which every step of my bearers caused to jolt. And then the litter broke, and had to be mended several times; then came the night, a violent storm broke out, the wagon which had preceded us was sunk in the sands at a distance. We reached the station in the middle of the night. I spent two days at Sefula. Besides our purely personal experiences, the farewell meeting was a ray of sunlight, being very numerous attended and interesting.

The dear Adolphe Jallas accompanied me as far as Seoma, and Mr. Goy came to meet me in the vicinity of Katima-Mollo. In spite of all the care which had been taken to make my canoe as comfortable as a canoe can be, the journey tried me very much. It sometimes seemed to me that I should never be able to reach the end of the first long stage at Kazungula. To fall sick, alone and without medical care, in this country is a cruel thing. In our ignorance we do our best. We often combat the symptoms and ignore the nature of the malady. God is merciful to his children. He has been that to me, for, besides the Jallas and Goys, He has caused me to find among my boys not only an affection that I knew already, but a devotedness which I little expected, and which never failed. Semonji especially has been to me, foreseeing or guessing my needs, ingeniously tempting my appetite, and making my sick room look gay, doing everything eagerly, gladly, and without noise. He has never left me, night or day, and in the evening, when he spreads his mat at the foot of my bed, one should hear how he pours out his heart in supplication, asking for a little improvement, a little slumber, for "his father, that old servant of God." And in the night he is immediately up at the first call. What should I ever have done without him? What should I have done if he had got tired of his service?

I spent three weeks at Kazungula, awaiting the wagon which was bringing my luggage from the valley. It has come at last, and in a few days we shall cross the river. What a difference between the crossing to-day, and that of 1884! Then there was not a soul in this vast country who knew even the name of the Lord, not one who prayed to Him. Divided into two bands during the crossing of my luggage, we used, in the evening, to answer each other by singing "Come to Jesus," and our voices were lost in the desert without an echo. To-day, let us acknowledge, to his glory, that the Lord hath done great things. This very station of Kazungula, with its large village, where everything is so prosperous, is a witness of it.

In spite of the departures and of the fallings away, which have so often grieved us, we have at present seven European missionaries, four ladies, six evangelists and their wives, all devoted to our dear mission, all united in the intimate bonds of one family. We count five flourishing stations, and upon each of them a larger or smaller number of Zambesians who profess to have found the Lord. Here to-day are sung the praises of God, and prayer is made. But what fills me with joy and gratitude to God is especially that school of evangelists, which we have confided to the care of our dear brother, Adolphe Jalla, with ten pupils. And then, here are Mr. and Mrs. Jalla, who are going to rebuild the ruins of Sefula, and to open there at last our industrial school. Are these not gleams which announce the dawning of the day when the glory of God shall shine into this country, and the darkness of heathenism flee away?

Describing his journey from Kazungula, M. Coillard says:—The track of the road, as in all that country, was nothing but a frightful bog, into which our oxen sank up to their bellies, sometimes before they could make a single effort to pull, and our waggons sank, all four wheels at once, into the endless mud. It was then necessary, to help them, that our boys should carry our small luggage on their backs, with our provisions. We only advanced by doubling our teams and dragging our waggons, one after the other, from mud-hole to mud-hole, so that we were often separated for days together. Ill or not, it was impossible to remain indifferent to difficulties which threatened to put an end to our journey. In this way, out of health, exhausted, sleeping but badly, eating little, I sometimes asked myself if I should ever reach the end of a journey so full of adventure and difficulty.

But who can weary of saying it: The Lord is good and faithful. How his presence lights up the darkness, and how communion with Him gives strength! What lessons He teaches us amid difficulties, and how many blessings He causes us to find in our trials! It is then that we learn "the songs in the night." Do you not think that it must be an angel who watches beside our pillow, and who, in a slumber agitated and interrupted, comes and whispers his message from on high into one's ears,

A PROMISE, A PRAYER, OR A THANKSGIVING.

"My grace is sufficient for thee." "Be careful for nothing." "He takes care of you." "Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me."

These are the songs in the night, and for him who learns them in the Lord's school, external circumstances become transformed and sanctified, and even the desert, its solitude, and its impracticable bogs, become so many Bethels. I bless God for having passed through this experience. From Patamatenga to Buluwayo the journey has been much less difficult. The rains have entirely ceased, the bogs have dried up, the pools contained water, and the road was good. We left the deep sands on quitting the Palapye road, and we travelled over sure ground. The country is wooded, with open spaces here and there. But it is still "the bush," the thorny thickets of which obstruct the road, and catch hold of the tents and our waggons. Nothing, absolutely nothing, in this arborescent vegetation reminds you that you are in the tropics.

From Patamatenga—a mass of ruins—now a farm, as far as Buluwayo, a distance of more than 300 miles, we did not meet a living soul except some Masaroas or Bushmen, who wander in these woods. What is the future of this land? Will it ever be inhabited or colonized? At present, in these vast spaces where silence reigns, broken only by the jolting of our waggons and the cracking of the whips, something undefinable catches hold of you. You feel so small, so impotent, so lost.

Work in Montorfano and Omegna.

THE project for building a new church and school rooms in the little Alpine village of Montorfano, North Italy, has now been carried to a successful issue. A neat and solid edifice has been erected, sufficient for the needs of the place, and all expenses have been covered by the generous gifts of friends.

We have now another building project in the same neighbourhood. In the thriving little town of Omegna, on the lake of Orta, for some years now the zealous Italian minister, Signor Gaspare Cavazzutti, has ministered to a small mixed congregation of foreign Protestants and converted Italians. He has, moreover, made the town the centre of an active and successful evangelisation in the villages and hamlets that stud the exceptionally populous valleys and mountain-slopes round about. But it has been altogether impossible to obtain any longer in the town either a hall for the services, or a residence for the minister, and there has been absolutely no alternative, but either to abandon the station, or to build. In faith, Signor Cavazzutti has decided to build. Some £500 have already been contributed. The blessing of God on the enterprise was signally shown in the acquisition of the site, admirably located, and the only one possible. The entire erection, comprising church with appurtenances and minister's residence, is to cost altogether £840. About £340 then remains to be raised. The outlay is fully justified, by the necessity of the case, and the good work which, from Omegna as a centre, is being done through the whole of that populous, active, and industrial district, for Omegna and the neighbouring Gravellona are the seat of thriving cloth and paper mills.

The Ragged School Union.

"THE Ragged School Union is a Christian, non-sectarian organisation, designed to bring brotherly sympathy and uplifting ministries to the street child primarily, and, in a less degree, to its parents, or other denizens of slumdom. The methods adopted and the agencies employed in this crusade against poverty, vice, and godlessness, are varied enough to meet every need of body, mind, and heart."

Thus clearly the aims and methods of this Home Mission Union are defined in the new report. The operations detailed are diversified enough to touch the poorest and most ignorant at every point, to help and save both young and old. Beginning with the children, the Ragged School workers find access to the adults, who prove willing to go where their little ones have found true friends. Some 200 local Ragged School Missions are affiliated with and aided by the parent Union, and each of these is a centre of evangelistic and benevolent effort in a poor district. It is significant of the concentration of Christ-like endeavour in this great enterprise to find that "there are 4,887 voluntary teachers in the local schools, besides a large number of workers in various auxiliary departments. There are, in addition, seventy-nine paid teachers, exclusive of the staff at headquarters. To this army of devoted fellow-helpers must be added the members of working parties, the visitors of the cripples, the workers of the Flower Mission, the local friends at the Holiday Homes, and the superintendents of the cottages, making altogether a devoted army of considerably over 5000 workers directly associated with the Society."

Apart from these local missions, there are several important branches for which the R.S.U. is fully responsible, and which exist for the benefit of the poor and needy all over the metropolis. These include seven Holiday Homes and numerous country cottages, to which 6,680 children were sent for a fortnight's holiday last year.

The Home Cripple movement has extended in a very remarkable degree during the year, and some 7000 afflicted children are now on the books of the Union, and under the care of its visitors and voluntary helpers. "The visit of a Christian lady with a scrap-book or toy at regular intervals, the periodical call of the kindergarten teachers on the brighter children for lessons, the assistance of clothing to the thinly-covered bed or badly-clothed body or feet, the information how and where to get the medical advice or the surgical instrument, the occasional gathering to tea and entertainment at the neighbouring mission, the joyous holiday at the sea, and, best of all, the attempt to impart some religious instruction, and to reach the heart of the child in the Saviour's name, are all significant of much to the child's unhappy lot. The council rejoice to know that by the efforts put forth hundreds of afflicted children have found their condition more endurable, and their lives more sunny, as well as more lasting good effected in not a few cases."

The Clothing and Barefoot Fund meets the need of the ragged and shoeless in any part of London. Not only are the little ones clad against winter's cold, but youths and girls are enabled to find work and aid in the family's support. Gifts of new and second-hand clothing are in constant request.

Moreover, the Ashley Mission, Bethnal Green, and the Shaftesbury Welcome Mission, Battersea, with its interesting work among gipsies, as well as cripples, are maintained by the Union.

Varied as these agencies are, they are but a portion of the far-reaching operations going on under the wing of the Ragged School Union. The field is wide, and the work is great; but a larger income is urgently wanted. With more means much more could be done to overtake the crying needs of the ragged and neglected children of London. The report may be had from the secretary, Mr. John Kirk, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Danish Missionaries.—The Lutheran Church in Denmark has sent two missionaries to Manchuria, hitherto occupied almost exclusively by the Irish Presbyterian and the United Presbyterian Missions. The field is wide, and the two Presbyterian Missions are giving a cordial welcome to their Danish brethren, and allotting to them a great district as their own. The two missionaries from Copenhagen have been touched by their kindly reception, and they propose to work their district on the lines which have already been signally successful there.

The Open-Air Mission.

THE many friends of the Open-Air Mission who have seen the great yellow sheet in use by its preachers this summer—their “Plan of Special Week-evening Services”—as well as others who have not seen it, will be interested to learn how the meetings thus arranged are progressing. They began with an exceptionally large service at Tottenham on May 23, and on almost every week-night since a strong band of evangelists has gone forth to some place of vantage in or near the metropolis, often to such distant suburbs as Wimbledon, Barnet, Grays, and Kingston-on-Thames, with happy results. Frequently two bands have been occupied on the same evening, besides the many instances in which one Gospeller has gone forth alone to help some weak cause.

The abundant labours of these devoted men of God, who freely give time and strength to his service—“the love of Christ” alone “constraining” them—have not been in vain. A rich reward of blessing has come to themselves as well as to the souls of others. The leaders of the meetings have reported to the central office concerning the evening's work and we at headquarters have thus been greatly cheered in hearing of definite spiritual results from time to time. One such report came to hand a few days ago concerning an open-air service at South Tottenham:—

“A very good service, with about 300 listeners. Much opposition, as before, but many friends to take our part. As usual, the opposition brought us a large audience; many were very attentive, and God blessed the Word to some. A father and son were much impressed. They came with us to the hall after the service. The father was in agony of mind over the burden of his sins. After explaining the Gospel to him, we all knelt down, and prayer was offered by three of the brethren. Then the man confessed himself the sinner, the greatest sinner. I shall never forget his appeal to God to have mercy on his soul, and to save him from hell. I have had to do with many under conviction, but never heard such a cry, broken with sobs and groans. It lasted about fifteen minutes, and after a few straight questions to him he fully accepted salvation, sang with us ‘Praise God, from whom all blessings flow,’ rose to his feet, and, smiling through his tears, exclaimed, ‘Oh, how different I feel now to what I did when I came in here!’ A link in the chain of this man's conversion was that during the day he and his son, while driving in the city, had been thrown out of their vehicle, and the father felt it to be a warning from God, as he had for six years felt the burden of sin.”

I need not say with what deep thankfulness we receive such evidences of the presence and power of God working in our midst. We earnestly ask that much prayer may be offered for the large number of services yet to be held, and the committee also beg for a larger share in the gifts of God's people towards the support of his work.

FRANK COCKREY, Secretary.

Warrington.—The Ragged School Mission reports good work done among the poor children of the town, in the way of Christian teaching, clothing, and relief. The superintendent is Mr. James Skelton, 111, Lovely-lane, Warrington.

The L.C.M. and Cabmen.—The London City Mission Magazine for August has interesting details respecting work among the cabmen of London. For more than fifty years special missionaries have been set apart to labour among these men, and the result has been most encouraging. Not only have numbers during these years been won to Christ, but of late quite a missionary spirit has risen up among a certain portion of them. There are now nearly 15,000 licensed cabmen in London, of whom it is said some 3000 are tectotlers and a large proportion of these latter attend a place of public worship. Moreover, there is a Christian Cabmen's Association, which possesses 200 members. The London City Mission has, at the present time, four missionaries at work among the day cabmen and two among the night cabmen. Thus, by night as well as by day, its missionaries are carrying the light of the Gospel to this special class of men. They meet with them on the cab-ranks, in cab-shelters, at the railway stations, outside the Houses of Parliament and places of amusement, and, in times of sickness, in their own homes; and seek by faithful personal dealing to win them to Christ.

Notes from Amoy.

AT the present time we have in Amoy an energetic and large-minded Tao-tai. The Christians have sought to take advantage of his open-mindedness for bringing before him some of the best books issued by Christian missionaries. Some of these books bear on China in particular; some of them refer to different nations and the civilisation of the West; others to the responsibilities of intercourse between China and the Western nations; to the awakening of mind and conscience necessary to salvation; and to crown all there was a new Testament. The books were received with courtesy, friendly inquiries were made by the magistrate, and earnest advice given against the mistake too often committed of Chinese seeking the secular advantages of Christianity without any regard to its best claims and influence.

I am sorry to say that this place, like so many others, has suffered from continuous epidemic. It is difficult to know how many have died, for people pass away in China without the registration of the West. A feeling of self-humiliation has impressed the people hereabouts, and the Christians have again been trying to seize their opportunity. In times of pestilence, and other trouble, the idea prevails that these things indicate the anger of heaven. Very many affecting methods are adopted by the heathen to propitiate the power supposed to be more ready to show judgment than mercy.

The Christians have prepared a sheet tract stating, as clearly as possible, that the woes of life are not for men's destruction, but in order to bring them to repentance and salvation. It is understood that a copy of this tract is to be personally taken to each shop, and if there is an opportunity for intercourse, it will doubtless be welcomed by the distributors.

I have been visiting one of the remarkable men of China. He lives in the territory recently won by the Japanese. He welcomes their advent, has entered into their citizenship heart and soul, has made a two-months' visit to Japan, has vigorously stated his strong conviction that God is working throughout that teachable country, through the various means adopted by missionaries, such as large schools both for boys and girls, museums, libraries, and news-rooms, and all the institutions of Christianity. This friend is full of passionate earnestness because of the slowness of China to learn. I have encouraged him not to despair, and have shown him ways in which his zeal, liberality, and literary power may find leverage in China. It is quite impressive to hear him argue as to the good that would come if only all Christians, high and low, would witness for God according to opportunities afforded. “Why,” he says, “do not all Christians impressively set forth the evidences of God's power in creation and the proofs of his government from the fact that the nations which honour Him are honoured by Him? After this we might go on to the deeper truths of sin and the Saviour.”

Shelter for Homeless Men.

MEDLAND HALL is open every night for homeless and penniless men. Three-halfpence per man per night covers all expenses, including rent, bedding, food, attendance, etc. A gift of two guineas practically endows a bed for a homeless man for twelve months, and furnishes him with necessary food to help him in his search for work. No one under the influence of drink or otherwise undeserving of help is admitted.

The Sunday evening services show a total attendance of 11,502, and all the men present at these services have remained for the night, with the exception of 3702, who were obliged to leave on account of limitation of sleeping accommodation.

The hall has been full every night, with the exception of fifteen Saturday nights and seven other nights. Over 10,000 men have been turned away owing to lack of room, in addition to the 3700 on Sunday evenings, but nearly all have been supplied with bread. The bread given away during the six months amounted to 7740 4lb. loaves, or nearly fourteen tons; fifty men have been sent to situations previously provided in Canada, and hundreds have been helped to employment at home.

Mr. E. Wilson Gates, the superintendent of the work, appeals for help, which may be sent to him at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

Jews in Johannesburg.

DEAR SIR,—Johannesburg has been so prominently on the public mind of late in connection with its political and dynamite troubles, and its spiritual needs so largely referred to in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN, that I feel your readers would be interested in an account by an eye-witness of some of the efforts of the workers of the South African General Mission to reach these needs.

In the providence of God I find myself on a visit to Johannesburg, and have been welcomed by the members of the S.A.G.M., with whom I am staying at present as one of themselves. During the few days I have been here I have given myself up to attend all their meetings and see all that is going on in connection with the work.

A new departure is a special meeting for Jews on Friday. This commenced (before my arrival) last Friday week, when the Jews were invited to come and hear addresses in the Judeo-Polish tongue, and in English. A number attended, and a Christian Jew, of some experience in the same kind of work, delivered an address. There was, I am informed, a good deal of excitement and angry dissension over the contention that Jesus Christ was the Messiah. Last Friday, after waiting half-an-hour, none of the Jews turned up, so we resolved to hold an open-air meeting in their quarters.

Our singing soon gathered round us a motley crew of the poorer Jews, mostly Poles. Our Jewish brother at once launched out in their own language, maintaining that Jesus is the Christ. This was greeted with shouts, yells, and hisses, and a general stampede of the majority of the Jews. But this in no way detracted from the success of our meeting, because the disturbance only drew a greater crowd, and the other Jews, seeing the people gathering round, returned. Our brother was much helped in persisting in speaking despite many interruptions. The circumstances were strongly suggestive of that other scene when the Master Himself was greeted with shouts of derision, and cries of “Away with Him! away with Him!”

At the close of the meeting one or two Jews expressed deep interest in the matter, and walked up to the hall with our brother, engaged in earnest conversation. Please pray for these meetings, that the sons of Israel, who from so large a section of the community here in their seeking for hid treasure, may come across the pearl of great price, and sell all to possess it.

The class of Jews which the S.A.G.M. seeks to get hold of are mostly of the refugee class from Russia and Poland, and might be defined, as a better class Polish Jew with whom I travelled to Johannesburg confessed he was, “lax Jews.” Of course there are varying degrees of laxness, and the gold fever, which so infects the majority of the people here, is conspicuous in them. Unhappily they are the chief proprietors of the low drinking shops, provided chiefly for the natives, where all kinds of inferior liquors are sold at enormous profits. They are even customers of the Mission bookroom, and for Bibles too, but not for their own perusal. They buy them in the native tongues to sell again.—Yours faithfully,

ROBERT H. FALLON.

Johannesburg, July 24.

Castletown, Isle of Man.—A well-attended Convention for the deepening of spiritual life has been held at this beautiful spot in Mona's Isle, presided over by Rev. J. M. Spicer, vicar of Malew. Spiritual addresses were given by the chairman, Mr. S. Campbell, Canon Hopkins, Rev. A. G. Waley, and others.

Heathen Delusions.—Dr. W. E. Cooper, writing from Dumarua, North Bhagalpur, Bengal, says:—“The Hindus have strange ideas as to what constitutes salvation. A fakir in Kuparia told me that his highest ambition was, after death, to enter heaven on a horse. It was upon the mode of transit that he laid most stress. Though a religious teacher, he knew absolutely nothing concerning sin and righteousness. Is it any wonder that the common people are ignorant! Other gossains, living in a quiet hermitage at Naraha, said they simply worshipped Hanuman as their fathers had done before them; that they did not derive any real benefit from what they worshipped, but performed their ceremonies, in behalf of others, as they had been taught, and in this way obtained a living. I told them it was wicked to deceive others by teaching that which they knew to be useless, and then sang and explained some Christian hymns, and preached to them and to others who had come to listen, and they gave me a good hearing.”

Letters to the Editor.

"PETER NOT THE ROCK."

DEAR SIR,—Permit me to say a word or two in defence of Mr. Meyer's view.

1. It is too commonly forgotten that "Peter" was not the name originally given by our Lord to Simon, but "Cephas."

2. "Cephas," so far as there is evidence to show, never meant stone or a stone, but always rock.

3. When "Cephas" had to be translated into Greek, petra was manifestly unsuitable as a name for a man, being a feminine noun. It was natural, therefore, that the masculine petros, almost identical in sense, should, for the sake of the form, be chosen in preference.

4. A parallel case is found in Acts xii. A young girl's parents wished to call her "Rose." But the Greek for "Rose," rhōdōn, is neuter. They therefore preferred the more appropriate feminine form Rhōdē (already employed by Apollonius), bearing the same sense. More familiar to us is "Rhoda," the Latinized form of the same word.

Brentwood. R. F. WEYMOUTH.

DEAR SIR,—I had not intended to write again on this subject, but it seems needful to attend to the letter of Mr. Burn. If it had occurred to me that any of your readers were not aware how many of the highest authorities in the Christian Church have maintained that our Lord intended Himself when He said, "On this Petra I will build," etc., I would have given references.

Out of regard to your space, I will limit myself as to number. Jerome and Augustine, the two foremost among the Latin Fathers, both held that the Lord meant Himself when he used the word Petra. Jerome was the most learned of the Latin Fathers, being specially skilled in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. He laid the Church under obligations by his careful revision of the Latin Scriptures. Now, I quote from this specially qualified witness. "Thou hast exalted me upon a rock, that is to say upon Thyself, as the following passage declares: 'But the rock was Christ. Petrus was derived from Petra, the rock, whence the Lord said, Thou art Petrus, and upon this rock (Petram) I will build my Church.' And in another place, the floods came and the winds blew and beat upon that house and it did not fall, for it was founded on the firm rock, which is Christ."

Augustine was the greatest teacher that the Church produced during fifteen centuries that elapsed between the apostle Paul and Luther and Calvin. Listen to the words of Augustine, the great controversialist and logician. "I say unto you, thou art Peter because I am Petra the Rock; thou art Petrus, for Petra the Rock is not from Petrus, but Petrus is from Petra; for Christ is not so called from Christian but the Christian from Christ. I will build my church not upon Peter whom thou art, but upon the Rock whom thou hast confessed."

Let us listen to one more great teacher. John Owen, the mightiest of the learned Puritans, says: "The expression is varied to declare that whatever be the signification of the name Peter, yet the person so called was not the rock intended. Had he intended the person of Peter, the gender had not been altered, Christ would have said upon this Petros I will build, etc." "The person of Christ is the foundation of the Church, the rock whereon it is built."

With regard to the passage taken by Mr. Burn from Dr. Edersheim, it is unfortunate that Dr. E.'s quotation from Isaiah should be so imperfect. A half quotation, like a half truth, is dangerous. Isaiah li., 1-2, "look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged. Look unto Abraham your father, unto Sarah that bare you," etc. The reference here is so manifestly to the progenitors of the Jewish nation, and not to the founders of the Jewish Church, that it is marvellous how anyone can misinterpret it. If we are to take Abraham as the rock foundation of the Jewish Church we must also (according to Isaiah), take in Sarah, his wife. In this case the parallel will be, not Peter, but Peter and his wife, with whose name I am not acquainted.

It has been shown that men most learned have held that Peter was not the Petra, but it is not in my power to make any reference to the logical conclusions of those illiterates of whom Mr. Burns speaks. Peter never was Bishop of Rome; it is scarcely possible that he ever entered it.

As to the successors, so-called, of Peter at Rome, their story is the most stupendous falsehood ever palmed on the credulity of men.—I am, yours truly,
Rock Ferry. JOHN HUNTER.

ARMENIA'S AGONY.

SIR,—The article of Mr. F. W. Crossley's in your issue of this week strikes a keynote on this awful subject, which is finding, and will find, a response in thousands of consciences as well as hearts throughout the length and breadth of the land. God grant the "policy of action," of unselfish action, may at last be at hand. "We have been verily guilty concerning our brother," let us promptly repair the wrong. The conscience of Europe is awaking; it only awaits the leader!

L. K. SHAW.

AN APPEAL FOR SYMPATHY.

SIR,—Rev. Hubert Brooke will have done great service to his fellow labourers if, by his Keswick address, he can stir up a more liberal spirit amongst the laity towards their ministers. Few seem to care how, or on what, the minister lives. Threepence a service for seat in church, and perhaps a pound for an Easter offering, is the most that is given by well-to-do Christians for his support, and the vast majority give nothing at all. What large sums are spent in trips to Keswick and elsewhere for holidays, and how little given to God's servant! How thankful some of us would be for a few pounds to help the holiday, or to buy books, or to pay the doctor's bill.

The Master only knows the cares of some of his servants who try to serve his Church. I can neither sign my name nor enclose my card, for obvious reasons; but, Sir, if Christians only knew how low their ministers are sometimes brought when illness or other troubles come to them, they would be more thoughtful. I have myself sold nearly every theological book worth having in my library, and, though the vicar of a large parish, I know what it is to be without a penny.

But evil is wrought by want of thought,
As well as want of heart.

Yours truly,

AN EVANGELICAL VICAR.

THE BEAM AND SCALES ARGUMENT.

DEAR SIR,—At the recent Keswick Convention there was shown on the platform a large beam and scales, weighted on the one side with the figures showing sums spent in Great Britain on amusements, and on the other with the total contributions to missionary work, viz., £1,300,000.

This is not by any means an original comparison, though the device was new, for, as readers of THE CHRISTIAN know, the same or similar contrasts have been presented in missionary papers for many years back.

But in all such illustrations there is a fallacy which I have often wished to point out, and which, if perceived, would, I think, prevent similar calculations from being used in the future for the laudable objects in view.

In order to make a true comparison of the kind, is it not evident that unless the persons, the spenders on both sides, are the same, alike in numbers, or otherwise strictly comparable, the sums spent by them respectively convey little of true value to the mind?

For example, it would be valuable to show the relative sums spent by any selected number of worldly men on their amusement, and by a like number of truly pious men on missions.

Better still would be the gain if it could be shown how much is spent by the actual contributors to missions on their own amusement or recreations on the one side, and this £1,300,000 spent on missions on the other.

But to compare the sums spent by the Christian community on God's work with the sums spent on amusement by the many times more numerous votaries of pleasure seems to be unprofitable and vain.

The fallacy, therefore, that lies at the root of the argument is the suggestion that we are looking to the average Briton to send the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ to the heathen; that the men and women of the world who support the theatre and the racecourse, who people the yacht, and cricket, and football, and golf clubs, are the people whom God holds responsible to evangelise the world.

Let the missionary bodies recognise that though unconverted men will sometimes give, and give largely, to their work, in the main and in the long run the real channels of supply are the truly earnest and living souls who form the flock of Christ. Then the funds will flow in more regularly and liberally.—Yours faithfully,
G. F. TRENCH.

THE WEST INDIES.

SIR,—Kindly permit me in few words to endorse the letter in last Thursday's issue by Major Kenyon. In the narrative I gave in July's Chart and Compass of my voyage to the West Indies I detailed the work carried on by Miss Symonds in St. Lucia. She is a native of the Isle of Wight, but working under the auspices of the Christian Workers of the United States. She deserves all that Major Kenyon has said, and I would only add that there is great need for such work as she is doing all over the West Indies, so it is quite cheering to find one post at least so well held.—Yours faithfully,

HENRY D. GRANT, Admiral.

Coombe Lodge, Liss, Hants, 15th August, 1896.

Countess Schimmelmänn's Work.

On July 14 the Countess held a very interesting meeting at the small village Vraa, within about twenty miles of the Skaw. Although in the midst of the hay harvest, the farmers and peasants came from miles round in the afternoon, and gave her a most hearty reception. The following day at Aalborg a Bible reading for Christians in the afternoon, and a public meeting numbering from 1500 to 2000 in a hall lent by the Socialists. The audience listened with most marked attention to the Countess's stirring address, lasting an hour and a quarter. The power of God was there.

On the 17th, at Randers, a large meeting was held in the music-hall, the Bishop opening and closing with prayer and exhortation, the pastors of the Inner Mission and of the Methodist Church also cordially helping. Here, as elsewhere, the Countess has been instrumental in bringing together Christians of various schools by holding up the Lord Jesus Himself as the one centre of attraction. The next day at Aarhus, a large meeting in the evening, with tokens of blessing. The day following an afternoon meeting, at which the Methodist pastor and a medical doctor as well as the Countess took part.

From the 21st to the 30th the Countess remained at Copenhagen, with the exception of three days at Hoelbeck to arrange some matters concerning her house there. During that time paid a visit to the town of Hillerød, where a very large and enthusiastic meeting assembled at an hour's notice. It was to a large extent composed of believers, who were most cordial in expressing their thanks for the visit. On the 26th an organised attempt was made to kidnap the boys Otto and Willie, who were, however, rescued by two of the yacht sailors and a number of onlookers. The enemy is evidently at work, but God overrules all. On the 27th a meeting of German sailors on board the merchant ss. Venizia, of Hamburg, and afterwards a very crowded meeting of about 2000 in the Methodist church. Riveted attention throughout, and many remaining for conversation. Almost the whole of the following day the Countess was engaged in receiving and speaking to persons who had attended this meeting.

JOHN MCCALL.

Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute.

THE Indian and Colonial trooping season is about to reopen, the first transport sailing from Southampton at the end of this month. We require Gospel portions, tracts, and "woollies" to any extent. We ask God's people to assist us as they are able.

Let it be remembered that Miss Sarah Robinson's Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute has done the troopship work from the beginning of its career, twenty-two years ago, and does it still. Though the vessels now go from, and return to, Southampton (instead of Portsmouth), our workers, male and female, seven or eight in number, attend all embarkations or disembarkations there. The coffee-bar in the troopship shed, sanctioned and approved by the military authorities, is worked by us. Over and over again it has proved its value to the convenience and comfort of our soldiers and their families. The Gospel message is proclaimed to groups and to individuals throughout the troop decks. Not a woman is left unvisited, and words of comfort and cheer are spoken.

From August till March or April our need continues as regards troopship work. Letters and parcels should be addressed to Superintendent, Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

SIDNEY SMITH, Hon. Superintendent.

France: its Evangelisation.-3.

IT is very likely that many of our countrymen are not familiar with the beauty of many parts of France, nor the special attractions which cheap living, combined with a charming climate, might afford to many families of limited means, and there is an abundant choice of such spots in all parts of the country where Christian influences might be of untold blessing. For instance, the province of Lorraine has some very pretty scenery, and in the Meurthe et Moselle the mountains are very fine and peculiar, while its valleys, forests, rocks, and waterfalls approach to the scenery of Switzerland; its magnificent forests equal those of Norway. The Vosges mountains between the Rhine and the Moselle reach to the height of 3314 to 4705 feet. Then there are many mineral springs in the Vosges and neighbourhood.

Dauphiné has scenery of first-rate beauty and grandeur, especially in the north part of it. The valley of the Isère combines the mountain forms of Switzerland with the luxuriant vegetation and rich foliage of the southern slopes of the Alps.

Grenoble is a striking city in a very romantic situation, and the road from it to Briançon is through a magnificent Alpine pass. The province contains the highest mountains in France, Mount Pelvoux being one of the most remarkable.

The Riviera, with its variegated slopes and charming coasts, is so well known that it is not needful to describe it. It may be as well to note that both the Hautes and the Basses Alpes are the poorest, the smallest, and least inhabited departments of Southern France.

But the Pyrénées has some of the finest scenery in France along its 270 miles, bordering France and Spain like a mighty wall; the general sunny climate banishes perpetual snow to 9000 feet, and its slopes have a richness of sylvan decorations over these mountains unparalleled in Swiss scenery. Heights are crowned with verdure to the very top, and precipitous rocks tufted with brushwood, but the charm of the Pyrénées is the vast forests, and its meadows and carpet-like lawns are most charming. Mineral springs of all kinds abound; the principal are Caunterets, St. Sauveur, Barèges, and Bagnères de Bigorre in the Hautes Pyrénées, and Eaux Bonnes and Eaux Chaudes in the Basses Pyrénées, and Luchon in the extreme South of the Haute Garonne. Many pleasant reminiscences are connected with Bearn, now the department of the Basses Pyrénées. Jeanne d'Albret, the mother of Henry IV., exercised a most salutary influence, so that Bearn became a most moral province, and the truth of Christ was widespread. Henri Pyt, the agent of the Continental Society of London, evangelised in the province from 1822 to 1830 with very great blessing.

Leaving the interesting country of the South, we have the singularly flat country on the West, bathed by the waters of the Bay of Biscay, and where is the fortress town of La Rochelle, long the headquarters of the Protestants; the dyke thrown out into the sea by Richelieu at the time of its siege in 1628, to prevent the supplies and succour of England, is still seen at low water. If we add to the characteristics of France its well-known north-western coasts where so many English families resort, its favourite Riviera, and its alpine rocky wall on the East, there is diversity enough to suit the tastes of our English peripatetic people.

Immediately on crossing the Loire we enter the genial sunny climate of the Midi, dividing the country in two, reminded by "the French castles along the Loire, memories of a state of society that has passed away" (Lecky on "Democracy and Liberty"). Orleans, on its banks, is celebrated by the exploits of the Maid in 1429, whose statue, by the Princess Marie of Orleans, stands in front of the Mairie.

Amongst the most prominent districts of French scenery is to be noticed the country of the extinct volcanoes in and around Auvergne, presenting very striking and peculiar scenery. Their mountain groups are most singular and uncommon, many of them crowned with the castles of the feudal ages.

Another remarkable mountain district is that of the Cevennes, a moral extinct volcano, where the struggling forces of the Camisards, led on by the baker's boy Cavalier, again and again discomfited the Dragoons of Louis XIV.

It greatly assists the comprehension of the country as a whole if we trace the course of its rivers from their different water-sheds in the Vosges, the Cevennes, the mountains of Limousin and Auvergne, the Alps, the Pyrenees, and others. Sixty-four of the departments of its eighty-nine take their names from rivers, others from the configuration of the country.

Calvin was a Frenchman, and loved his country ardently. He was born in Noyon, Oise, studied law at Bourges, and received his first Evangelical impressions there; subsequently he proceeded to Poitiers, and near the town is the cave of St. Benoit, called Calvin's Grotto, where he opened his mind fully to a number of thoughtful cultured men, and then asked them to join him in prayer, and as Florimel de Reymond narrates, "he prayed with much vehemence." Whilst at the height of his usefulness in Geneva, he trained many young men for evangelisation in France, and sent in some years thirty or forty of them thither, and by his letters strengthened the young churches. Speaking to the young men under his teaching, he exclaimed, "Are there none here who will go and enlighten those whom the Pope has blinded?" Yes; they went, and often to almost certain martyrdom. It is an interesting fact that those esteemed Christian men who are directing the Société Evangélique de Genève are mostly the descendants of the Huguenots, who fled thither from papal persecutions in France.

Amidst these interesting scenes there are whole departments most destitute of Gospel teaching, and if a line were drawn from Dunkerque to Beziers on the south, right through the centre of France, Paris excepted, very little evangelistic work is done compared with that nearer the frontiers. France is in every respect an inviting field to the Christian traveller who wishes to combine with his or her summer trips, in beautiful and healthy regions, an earnest desire for the furtherance of the Gospel of Christ. There are many whole villages turning away from Rome and looking out for someone to lead them onward in the truth. The evangelist fails. It is just the occasion for the judicious Christian traveller to step in, and he would soon find out on the spot in what way he might be a help. With good knowledge of French, with savoir faire and Christian sympathy, he would be sure to make his way. In some circumstances one might accompany a colporteur or evangelist on his route, who would be cheered by the fellowship of a Christian friend; not a few would be glad of it. Some of the most lovely traits of Christian character are being seen in our dear French people, and what an unspeakable privilege to be used in bringing light to them by means of the blessed Word of God. GEO. PEARSE.

Dr. Griffith John's appeal for two additional missionaries (noticed in our last issue) was addressed to the L.M.S., not the C.M.S.

A Useful Reminder.—Dr. Barnardo states that "an instructive and pathetic custom still prevails in Munich. Every destitute child found begging in the streets is arrested and carried to a charitable institution. On his arrival he is photographed—dirty, ragged, and all. After being maintained and educated, when he leaves the institution to begin life, the before-mentioned photograph is given to him, and he is required to make a solemn declaration that he will keep it as a reminder of the wretched state from which he was saved and of the kindness shown. The charity has received many gifts from its reclaimed waifs."

Home of Industry Emigrants.

MR. JOSEPH MERRY arrived at the Home in Ontario in safety, with the interesting party of ninety, mostly boys, and entirely orphans, on the eleventh day from sailing. He calls to praise the Lord for the innumerable mercies, both in times of sickness and in health. On the whole it was a fair voyage; not much need of overcoats, except when sailing through about one hundred icebergs of all imaginable dimensions.

The Gospel's subduing influences were over all, and seen in obedience to rules and kindness towards each other; except in the case of a puerile laddie, whose brief life of nine years had been spent from pillar to post, and his daring always met by the birch rod. He could not at first be kept from roaming over the ship and getting into mischief, so our young matron devised the plan of locking away his clothes. Even this failed, for at early dawn the steward found him on deck watching the sailors, only in his shirt. We trust that some kind and firm farmer will give him plenty of work, and that in due time he will become a useful man away from the temptations of our great city for young boys.

Dear Christian workers, ere these lone young children are swept into the great submerged mass, let us rescue them whilst they are in the years amenable to loving Christian care.

Some think that emigration means slavery, all through ignorance; we know of noble young men supporting their widowed mothers, and as earnest Christians living beautiful lives.

My cry continually is—Show the people, O Lord, how to save the children whilst they are young; Love for them alone will do this, when they are left orphans and homeless.

Mr. Merry's letter is full of cheery news, that over forty of the ninety had found ways opening for them already; all this calling forth our gratitude in answer to the prayer that has followed them from many a heart.

And it is with heartiest thanks to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, for not only many an anonymous gift in the past year, but that the boxes were well filled. Hours of industry must have been spent over shirts and stockings, frocks, and underclothing, which may well make the Canadians ask why all this devotion and love was expended upon such children. Yes, our only answer is that "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto Me."

We are busily repairing and asphaltting the children's playground, hoping to be ready to begin rescuing again in a few weeks.

With a heart overflowing with praise and gratitude, yours in His service whom we all love,
ANNIE MACPHERSON.

Sailors at Constantinople.

DURING a fortnight's stay in this city we have had an excellent opportunity of seeing the splendid work which is being carried on among the sailors who pass through this port. For some years the work was conducted by Miss Green-Armytage, single-handed; now she is joined by Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Haire, whose coming will mean a new departure on more vigorous lines. Mr. Haire was formerly an officer in the mercantile service, and is, therefore, peculiarly fitted to deal with sailors. At present, however, his work is seriously retarded for want of a suitable launch, in which to reach the ships which lie in the harbour at great distances from each other. With a small sailing-boat, such as our friend now possesses, it is simply impossible for him to reach the whole of the great number of ships which anchor here. In the winter time, owing to the strong winds and currents which prevail, the work is attended with great peril, as well as difficulty.

A larger boat has been recently given, which could be utilised for his work if it were fitted with a petroleum engine. To do this would cost in all about £90. We are so impressed with what we have seen, and also with the need, that we venture, through your columns, to appeal to those who love "Jack" to help our brother carry out his project. Mr. Haire's address is The Rest, Constantinople.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE find it increasingly necessary to request our friends to write their communications and contributions as concisely and tersely as possible. References of purely local interest are not appreciated at a distance, and therefore such details, though of much interest to those on the spot, are not appropriate for a paper whose chief circulation is necessarily, for the most part, outside any one locality.

Sometimes friends feel slighted if they are replied to by the aid of the type-writer. But if they knew what a tax it is upon busy men to write a large number of letters, they would surely be thankful that they find this relief.

It scarcely seems necessary, and yet it is necessary, for us to say that our reference (August 13) to Mr. Bryan, the Democratic candidate for the U.S. Presidency, had no political significance. To say, as two correspondents say, in effect, that a man cannot be a bimetalist and an honest man, appears to us very like trifling, though we are not partisans of the "Silverite" policy.

We direct attention to the striking sermon on Armenia, by Canon Hicks of Manchester, which we publish on another page. Some letters in our correspondence columns are also worthy of attention. The complete failure of diplomatic methods in bringing relief to a cruelly oppressed and persecuted people must have some lesson to teach the nations, in the mind and providence of God. Let the Christian churches therefore earnestly seek his face and guidance, entreating Him to interpose, through some of the channels at his disposal, for the succour of this unhappy people.

The multiplication of first-class, well-conducted Temperance Hotels, would be a national benefit. Many total abstaining travellers go to other inns, because there are so few temperance houses where they are made comfortable. They do not even inquire for them because they do not expect to find them. It is really the duty of total abstainers to support Temperance Hotels, otherwise it is impossible that they can exist. Persons who are not total abstainers, but who do not require alcoholic stimulants in their journeyings, will find such houses economical as well as comfortable. Business firms would do well to encourage their travellers, especially the young men just beginning their career, to seek out such houses. The demand for them would lead to the supply where they do not at present exist.

The English Churchman, in an article on "The Lambeth Conference," says:—

The Church Congress programme for next October is very tame when placed by the side of that of the approaching Lambeth Conference. Yet, in one respect, Shrewsbury will have the advantage over Lambeth. At the former the discussions will be in public, and reporters will be admitted; while at Lambeth everything will be done in secret, and representatives of the Press will be excluded. There are, we venture to submit, no sufficient reasons for this dread of publicity, and if the Bishops wish to secure the confidence of the laity in their proceedings, it can only be by throwing their doors wide open, so that Churchmen may know the real opinions of the Episcopate on the burning questions to be brought before them.

Substituting other terms for "Bishops," "laity," "Churchmen," and "Episcopate," the above remarks are worthy of attention. There are other councils and committees where "strictly private," cries for abolition. "If we walk in the light as He is in the light," "The Light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not."

Why, however, should laity have a small "I," and Churchmen a capital "C," seeing that the so-called laity are the "flock of God," his "heritage," literally, his clergy, of whom the elders among them are to take the oversight (the episcopacy), not constrainedly, but willingly? nor yet with a view to base gain, but earnestly; nor yet as lording it over the heritage, the clergy, the portions entrusted to them, but becoming patterns of the flock. See Alford on 1 Pet. v. 1, 2—a passage calling loudly for consideration at the coming Church Congress and Lambeth Conference.

Rev. C. Silvester Horne has been telling, in The Independent, the members of Young People's Societies a few wise and useful things about John Calvin. He counsels them to believe that Calvin's strength lay not in his denial or depreciation of the freedom of the will, but in his fundamental doctrine of the activity of God. He "was overwhelmed with the conviction that God was seeking man, laying hold of man, singling every man out and dealing with him. The hope of the world to Calvin lay in the activity of God." That truth was Calvin's power, and he was powerful, a good deal more so than the men who take his name in vain without understanding the secret of his influence. How grossly he can be misrepresented may be seen in a sentence in another of our contemporaries published last week. "The whole pamphlet is written in this style, and is really a curiosity as a survival of the old barbaric Calvinism 'naked and not ashamed.'" There is a vital difference between barbarism and the truth that God is dealing with every man in righteousness and love.

The St. James' Gazette has been publishing a correspondence on "The Decline of Churchgoing;" some of the correspondents think that it is owing to organs and choirs usurping the place of the congregation in the service of praise. The music is so frequently changed, or the singing is so fast, that the congregation can take no part in it. The vicar of Babacombe says that he has always found that when the congregation are considered, and are encouraged to join "even if necessary at the expense of a little musical accuracy, the result is the happiest both for the church and the people." The root of the choir difficulty is in Christians getting others to do what they ought to do themselves, as a privilege and a joy; hence come envyings, jealousies, strifes, and every evil work. It is a direct incentive to trouble when an unspiritual man is appointed organist and choirmaster, and with dissatisfaction in the choir, how can churchgoing be promoted? Men want peace on the Day of Rest at least.

We called attention some time since to the good work done among the fishermen who crowd to Stornaway at a certain time of the year. A similar work, Rev. Arthur Gray writes in The Methodist Recorder, is done for the 8000 strangers who congregate at Fraserburgh and Peterhead in the months of July and August. For years past the Free and the United Presbyterian churches have exerted themselves to meet their needs, but this year the Baptists, Congregationalists, and Methodists, have also sent "Deputies" to look after their own people and to evangelise the crowds. The union which obtains among the workers is hearty, and the results thus far gathered have been encouraging. "Several seekers have found the Saviour." While the men are cared for, several deaconesses and ladies of leisure also devote themselves to the welfare of the girls who are engaged in fish curing. The united meetings, in which representatives of all the churches take part, are the best attended and the most useful.

The annual report of the Commissioners in Lunacy is of a somewhat alarming character. Insanity is evidently increasing at a faster ratio than the population, the increase during the last year being 2356, the largest on record, while the percentage of recoveries is lower than in previous years. This terrible scourge is mainly due to the high pressure of civilised life, the excitements of money-making, the craving for pleasure when rest is needed, and the spreading craze for speculation, with its terrible fascinations and frequent disappointments. The foolish notion that insanity is a purely hereditary disease is responsible for much reckless neglect of its causes and symptoms. One of the most difficult evils to remedy, it is one of the easiest to prevent. A simpler habit of life, a calmer frame of mind, a spirit of contentment and quiet—these are the best safeguards against the breakdown of the reason. If more people were "content with such things as they have," there would be fewer inmates in our asylums. It is significant that a large proportion of the insane come from the "leisured classes," or from those whose burdens are self-chosen. It is clearly not work that dethrones the reason, but unhealthy excitements and needless and godless worry.

The recent pacific utterances of the Prime Minister on the relations between this country and the United States gave universal satisfaction; the address of the Lord Chief Justice last week at Saratoga before the American Bar Association was received on the spot with great enthusiasm, and has awakened corresponding feelings on this side of the Atlantic. The fact that the feeling in the two countries should have given rise to such words of international good-will from men holding the highest and most responsible offices under the Crown is even more satisfactory than the words themselves, excellent as they were. As Lord Russell pointed out, the most powerful agent in any nation is the public opinion in it, and the public opinion on both sides of the ocean is strongly in favour of a court of arbitration for the settlement of all disputes between these kindred peoples. It would fill them both with joy if the court were established at once; the statesmen who shall find the necessary skill and temper for doing it will be revered by them and by good men in every land as long as the world stands.

The leading men of France are becoming alarmed at the remarkable falling-off in the increase of the population in that country. Statistics show that during the last decade the population has been practically stationary. Meanwhile France has entered on an era of feverish colonial expansion. These two facts are mutually destructive, for colonies are never prosperous except in connection with countries whose people are increasing at a greater ratio than the means of sustentation. But more alarming are the causes of this stationary character of the French people. It is due either to a serious failure of racial vitality, or it is a witness to widespread social immorality. That the latter is rampant in France is a patent fact to anyone acquainted with the state of Society across the Channel, and it is no less clear that this is largely due to the State-regulation of vice. This is a result far from that aimed at by the promoters of this evil system; but it is nevertheless its logical outcome. Purity is not a quixotic virtue, nor a mere counsel of perfection; it is one of the foundation-stones of social well-being, and an essential condition of progress, physical as well as spiritual.

An interesting pamphlet has been issued by the promoters of the St. John's Ambulance Association, detailing the excellent work done by that institution in the work of saving life, and of rendering first aid to the wounded. Classes of various kinds have been established throughout the country for the purpose of teaching the best methods of help in cases of accidents occurring far from medical aid. This work of mercy in behalf of the unfortunate is one in thorough harmony with the spirit of Him who cared for men's bodies as well as their souls, and who healed their diseases as well as their spiritual ills. Many a life hanging in the balance has been saved through the resources of those who have been taught by this Society how to give help in the hour of sudden need. The time will come when it will be held essential that all should know how to render such help. The old proverb, "God helps those who help themselves," is not more true than that He helps those who help others.

The leisure of this holiday month ought to lead to deeper meditation in Divine things, and the meditation should yield a rich harvest of holy thought and feeling. Too much of our thinking is done under pressure of work. It is to meet a demand—the sermon, the address, the lesson. When we think and meditate with no immediate work in view, our minds and hearts move more freely, and things come to us, instead of our going to them. The best things come in quietness. If the modern man, as Mr. Herbert Spencer says, is, through his passion for work, becoming incapable of rest and reflection, there ought to be one exception to the type, the Christian; indeed, we cannot imagine a Christian who is incapable of rest and reflection; as well say, that he is incapable of reading the Word of God and of prayer.

The tendency of this busy age is to look on all time as lost which is not spent in doing something; it needs to learn that much depends upon our getting something; getting is the preliminary to doing and giving. In religion getting is first in point of time and importance; "I will bless thee, and make thee a blessing." The whole secret of success on the part of naturalists and scientific men is in the habit of observing, looking, listening; then comes comparing and theory-building. One of them says that he has "lain for a whole week without stirring from one spot, for this is the only way to find out what really goes on in nature." If he could do this for the sake of knowing these visible things in the lower ranges of nature, surely a similar attitude of lowly and patient attention should mark believers who would know the deep things of the Spirit.

There are "golden hours" in the experience of all true believers, during which the realities of the Spirit-world grow near and vivid to the mind, and the sky of the soul is bare of clouds and mist; when doubts and fears seem impossible, and the Invisible Christ is "nearer than breathing," and "closer than hands and feet." These are times to be enjoyed with humility, and to be remembered with gratitude. The great mistake most of us make is to look back on them with regret, and to fret because they are so transitory and rare. We could not bear them as a constant possession, for it would be impossible to attend with due earnestness to the daily duties of life while under their excitement. Peter wished to build three tabernacles on the mountain-top; Jesus instead took him down to the valley, where there was work to be done. Angels' food is good for us when overborne and exhausted; it is for us to go, like Elijah, in the strength of it, "forty days and forty nights into the wilderness." We should rejoice in "the King's face" when it beams on us, but the King's commands may be equally performed when that vision is a memory and a hope.

A Scotch fisherman said, when referring to his conversion, "I was born in the fire, and I canna live in the smoke." How true it is that the kind of spiritual birth through which the soul passes usually affects all its after-life. The man who, at the first, has a rich experience of the love and power of God in his salvation, seldom falls into doubt or walks long in the mist. To be born in the fire of a great and genuine revival is sure to leave its mark in burning zeal, fearless courage, buoyant hope, and abounding labours. Souls who have been through such bright flames cannot live in the smoke of doubt and uncertainty and worldliness. It is not necessary to question any one's personal religion when we say that, while it is a good thing to have men converted, it is best to have them well converted—"born in the fire."

Roger Bacon, that great Englishman of the middle ages, attributes human ignorance to four causes: (1) Servile deference to authority; (2) traditional habit; (3) neglect to train the senses to observe; (4) the disposition to conceal our ignorance. All these causes have only too much influence in religion even among professedly Christian persons. Authority weighs with Protestants as well as with Roman Catholics; there are other masters than Christ. Habit suits our idleness, and we are unwilling to be disturbed and driven out of our customary grooves. Negligence in observing also falls in with our idleness; the determination to notice and to think almost goes with the heroic type of man, but all Christians should have something of the heroic in them; they should take the same trouble as did the Bereans. Concealing ignorance is a lack of candour, and a Christian should face the truth.

There is much truth in the contention of Dr. Stuckenberg in The Homiletic Review that the real cause of a great many of the crimes of this generation is the teaching which has long been in vogue as to the nature of man. An effort has been made "to reduce him to a machine, to subject him wholly to the mechanical laws of nature, and to make him as helpless in the relentless grip of physical processes, as is the stone, or the tree, or the brute." The condition of men has been treated simply as the outcome of certain blind forces, an evolution, and no account has been taken of human freedom and responsibility. "Thou shalt" and "Thou shalt not" are obsolete forms of words with too many, just as the solemn fact of man's responsibility to God, which they symbolise, is pushed away from sight. Moral forces cannot be appealed to to correct the ills we feel; we must wait for the evolution to unfold some other condition; whether better or worse we shall see. Moral restraints cannot hold men, for why should men restrain themselves if they are only a portion of an enormous machine which grinds on for ever? Dr. Stuckenberg gives an illustration of how these materialistic views pervade the minds of a considerable section of the criminal class in Bavaria, an illustration on which, perhaps, he hangs too much; but we are persuaded he is right in his main contention.

Professor Hellriegel, who died recently, discovered that some kinds of seeds have not only the power of multiplying themselves, but also of fertilising the ground in which they are sown; in harvest it is richer than at seed-sowing. A beautiful likeness of the process which takes place when the good seed of the Kingdom is sown in the heart, and takes root, and springs up, and bears fruit. It makes the heart richer with its own nature. Any promise which is in us the seed of prayer makes the heart prayerful; one act of devotion not sufficing. Any word of tenderness received makes us tender not only for once, but when that kind action has been done, we are, in our very being, enriched with the nature of God.

Pillows for Dying Heads.—The Missionary Review relates an incident of a native teacher in the New Hebrides, who lay dying, and as he felt his strength ebbing away he asked his wife to read to him. She opened her Bible, and read in the native language from John xiv., "Let not your heart be troubled." He thanked her, and after awhile said, "Have you another portion for me?" She searched and read, "There remaineth, therefore a rest for the people of God." Growing yet weaker, he asked for another pillow for a dying man, and from the Psalms she read, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." The old wife has a coloured skin and frizzly hair, and her whole library consisted of a hymn book, a catechism, the Pilgrim's Progress, and the Bible, but she knew how to choose soft pillows for dying heads.

Lord's Day Observance.—The Select Committee of the House of Lords on the subject, having reviewed the evidence given on both sides, rejected a report submitted by Lord Hobhouse, which exhibited the strongest animus against the Lord's Day Observance Society, and accepted the report submitted by the Bishop of Winchester. His main conclusion is "that while the phraseology of the earlier Act is now inappropriate, and the alteration of such phraseology, if practicable, would be advantageous, the existing law, as laid down in the two statutes 21 Geo. III. c. 49, and 38 and 39 Vic. c. 80 (the Remission of Penalties Act) corresponds substantially with the wishes and sentiments of the English people, and that any material change in its general provisions would be harmful rather than advantageous."

"Questions for Preachers."

A FEW weeks ago "A Disciple" asked in these columns whether it was right, on a public evangelical platform—before a promiscuous audience, most of whom are not competent to form a judgment—to affirm doctrines which are not definitely stated in the Word of Truth, and which, because they cannot thus be demonstrated, give rise to endless controversy. Perhaps I may mention some doctrines or questions as examples of what were referred to.

For half a century or more a controversy has raged (I use the word advisedly) as to whether the church will pass through the great tribulation at the end of this age, or will be secretly raptured before it commences. Scriptures are quoted and inferences drawn on either side, but the contending parties are as far off agreement as ever. If the question were of vital importance might we not expect the Spirit-inspired Scriptures to have unmistakably settled it? In the absence of this, is it desirable to divide Christians on the subject?

It is affirmed that the British nation and Israel are identical; that the Saxon is Isaac's son; and "Twenty-seven Identifications" are extant, to prove this identity. One statement of the Book to that effect would have settled the question. But that statement has not been made. Is it worth while, in the presence of a sin-stricken world, to occupy the few short years of our testimony in this discussion?

It is contended that the endless existence of members of the human race is conditional upon their receiving Christ as their Saviour. A prominent evangelist is said to have propounded the view described as Conditional immortality to a large number of young men, while identified with a platform which certainly does not maintain it. Is this fair or courteous to those with whom he is in association, or is it honest in the sight of God? On the other hand, I have heard an honoured evangelist describe "the burning marl of hell," and many other such expressions have been used, more in the past than at present. Is it not enough on these subjects, on which so little is revealed in detail, to "preach the Word," without restricting it on the one hand, or giving the rein to a lurid imagination on the other? Are not the words of the Lord Jesus and his apostles, used in the proportion, and addressed to the classes to whom they spoke and wrote, more convincing, and more convicting, than any arguments or imaginations of ours?

It is coming to be taught, and it was taught by a highly-esteemed brother to the students at Keswick, that the 144,000 of Rev. xiv. are a firstfruits out of the church; that while the church is his body, these form the bride of the Lamb.

We know from definite Scripture statement (Jas. i. 18) that "He begat us with the word of truth that we should be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures," but we do not know by distinct statement that those 144,000 are firstfruits out of the firstfruits of his creatures.

We know from Ephes. i. that the church is "his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all," but we do not know from Scripture that the bride is nearer and dearer than the body; Ephes. v. 22-31, ending with, "They twain shall be one flesh," seems to point the other way.

We know that "the dead in Christ shall rise first," and that "we who are alive and remain to the coming of the Lord shall be caught up with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we be ever with the Lord" (1 Thess. iv. 13-18); but we do not know by definite Scripture statement, though it is inferred by some, that only the firstfruits of the firstfruits are to be so caught up. Is it wise to throw these divisive interpretations upon a congregation chiefly of young men and women, who will certainly find them contested by others whom they hold in equal honour with the speaker? Is it wise to propound them before any congregation?

Are there not abundant facts, doctrines, and illustrations, unmistakably affirmed in Scripture, sufficient to make fully known the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God, without introducing arguments and inferences which cannot be proved, and inciting to controversies which grow into animosities among preachers and teachers themselves? And is it not desirable to consider that a strong position is weakened by the addition of a weaker one? If no chain is stronger than its weakest link, is any proclamation of the Gospel stronger than its weakest declaration? M.

"A Poor Person's Man."

HE was not rich. Sometimes it is the rich who are generous, but less often than we suppose; for in order rightly to compute generosity it would be necessary, perhaps, to know something of what remains, as well as of what is given away.

Neither was he great, as the world esteems greatness. He wrote no letters after his name, there was no brass plate on his door, his home was singularly unpretentious, and rash would have been the adventurer who would hazard a bid for his wardrobe.

He never amassed a fortune, and never would have done so had he lived to the age of Methuselah (not a fortune on earth, I mean; of "treasure in heaven," it is supposed there must be considerable).

Those who ought to know spoke of him as a man of remarkable intellectual power, but it was in the simplest Saxon that he swayed the hearts of men, and induced them to act according to the dictates of conscience and the Word of God. Nor was he ambitious; his greatest enemy could not have accused him of being "in the fashion"; his wife was homely, and his children were content to occupy the same station in life as their grandparents had occupied before them.

He never dreamt himself a hero, and never posed as a martyr, yet it is said that he knew what it was to be "persecuted for righteousness' sake."

His name was not to be found on subscription lists, though it was an open secret that "everyone" went to him who needed money. You could not propose a vote of thanks to him, and even at the quiet mention of personal thanks you found yourself talking to the air, for somehow, somewhere, he had vanished.

He was "peculiar," people said; and he certainly was peculiar. So peculiar that, by some means or other, he was often in the minority; whilst his "friends" were nearly all of them needy persons. It was the weak and distressed who gathered round him; it was the friendless and despised whose cause he espoused. Very "peculiar" indeed was he if the attempt were made to disparage in his hearing the absent, or to criticise the humble worker for Christ.

"No manner," some said that he had. Certain it is that he did not take off his gloves at the right moment, the reason being that he only troubled himself with gloves on such occasions as weddings and funerals. Sometimes he forgot to raise his hat, too, and this, of course, was unpardonable; excepting that his head seemed the only convenient place for it, his hands were full. Nor did he wait for introduction, any more than did the good Samaritan himself, if a stranger needed any of the "oil" or "wine" at his command. "No manner," it is true. But then he never said harsh things, nor did mean ones.

It was "peculiar," too, that he seemed always to be "going that way" if one wanted an errand done. There was, almost always, "just room for another" if his swift steed and ungainly vehicle passed a weary pedestrian; room on occasion for basket, bundle, baby, bonnet-box, and all. It was never inconvenient to do any kindness in his power. You could not appeal to him at the wrong time on behalf of any righteous cause, or any obscure sufferer.

"Oh, it makes no difference to me, if the case is really a needy one. This money is not from my share of the concern," he would hurriedly explain, rushing off to escape acknowledgments. But what proportion of his income was thus dedicated it is probable that One only knew.

He never patronised. There was about his kindnesses the fragrance of flowers freshly cut, with the dew of the morning still upon them. Busiest of busy men, he literally was found "working with his hands the thing that was good" throughout the week-days, that he might have to give to him that needed; and the Lord's day found him busy still. Not in spacious buildings, not to fashionable congregations (though sometimes sought after by such), but in isolated villages and in antiquated halls he loved to break amongst the weary and the hungry-hearted the bread of life.

Thinking of him, one was reminded of those peerless words in which the Divine Lord announced his own mission: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach the Gospel to the poor; He hath sent Me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, the recovery of sight to the blind; to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord" (Luke iv. 18, 19). Yea, and blessed are they who, as really as he did, follow that bright example—even afar off!

If there were many to whom this lowly life was a rebuke; if there were many to magnify the mistakes and shortcomings which mar the fairest copy of the one great Pattern, yet were there many, too, to love and honour; many to rise up and call him blessed for his work's sake.

But of all the descriptions ever given of him by those who the most delighted to speak of his kindness, there was none which ever seemed to me as true and as beautiful as was the simple title awarded by a poor, aged, lonely widow in a linen bonnet, when she said, "He was A POOR PERSON'S MAN."

To mention the name of one who scorned flattery and studiously avoided publicity of this kind would seem almost an insult; but I think that, even in heaven, the kindly, happy eyes would kindle with new pleasure at the knowledge that he was remembered on earth as "a Poor Person's Man."

"Get Thee Behind Me, Satan."

By F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IS this thy voice, my Master? But a moment ago Thou caldest me blessed, and now thou biddest me begone. It hurts me sorely to hear these hard words, and meet so great a change in thy behaviour.

"It is not I that have changed, but thou. When thou spakest before, thou wert blessed indeed, for thy words bore the impress of my Father's mind; and through thy lips I heard again the words He spake at the Jordan, when the Heaven was opened, and the air trembled as the Holy Spirit rested upon Me. But what thou sayest now, dissuading Me from death, is not his voice, but Satan's. I know it well. It is often speaking to my ear; and therefore I bade thee begone, as I bid him. I had no alternative, not for a moment can such a thought be harboured in my heart as thou suggestest. Spare myself! Never, if mankind is to be saved!"

But why is the thought that Thou shouldest spare thyself so evil? I meant it only out of love. I cannot endure that Thou shouldest suffer, so gentle, so pure, so eager to alleviate all suffering, and pacify every moan of pain: nor can I see why my desire that Thou shouldest be saved from the fate Thou hast foreshadowed, by being crucified by the Gentiles, can be of Satan, or lie as a stumbling-block before thy feet.

"I will tell thee, and in telling thee will unfold the secret of many a shadow that ye may have seen pass across my face, the sign of a struggle which was rending and tearing my heart. From Eternity I elected to save men, and for this I became man. All through those early years, before I knew you, and which I spent in Nazareth, my thoughts turned towards this, without which I could not be perfected. And always two methods of securing my cherished purpose suggested themselves. The one was in harmony with the notions entertained by all the nation of my people, though I am persuaded that it is not of God but of Satan, not of heaven but of men. It is because thy words savoured of this that I bade thee begone."

What method was this, Master? I am at a loss to read thy meaning.

"Thou knowest that I have power over the elements, over disease, over the animal creation; with a word I can hush the storm and multiply food to feed thousands; now I might so use these gifts as to attract the unbounded admiration and gratitude of men. Ye saw some signs of this that night when I fed the 5000; a little more and they had made Me king, and been my abject slaves. Why not accept their homage, and mount the throne of the world? Why not emulate the great world-conquerors, and become the ruler of mankind? Would not this enable Me to check injustice and wrong-doing, to avenge the poor when he cried, the needy, and him that had no helper; to maintain the cause of the widow and the orphan, and to deal out even-handed justice? Would it not be a great achievement to bring about in all the world the reign of Righteousness, Justice, and Peace?"

Yes, beloved Master, this is what we wish for Thee. We have often spoken amongst ourselves of such a consummation to thy life and work. The crown of the world would well become thy brow, and Thou wouldst introduce the golden age of which all the prophets have spoken. When wilt Thou restore the kingdom to Israel, and let us sit with Thee on thrones, judging the twelve tribes. Then from Jerusalem shall go forth the law to all mankind, and the isles should wait for thy word.

"Again thou speakest as a man, and savourest a mere worldly policy. Thy suggestion is a stumbling block to Me. It is thus that Satan has often spoken. After my baptism, I was driven by the Spirit into the wilderness, and when I had fasted forty days the tempter came to Me. He took Me up into an exceeding high mountain, and showed Me all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time, and the glory of them, and promised to give me all if I would perform one act of homage. The temptation moved Me to the depths. One act of worship, and the world would be in my hand, to administer for the benefit of man! Would not this be self-sacrifice indeed? The adversary suggested that if I would not accept his challenge, and do this act, I preferred Myself before men, and the glory of my fellowship with the Father above the salvation of the race of Adam! But I perceived the falsehood of it all, I knew that he would not keep his word, I saw that I could not use for the benefit of man power which I had received from the hand of his greatest adversary, I knew that no real help to the world could accrue from disobedience to the elemental rule of worshipping God, and serving Him alone: so I bade Satan begone, as I have done many times since, when he has approached Me with similar suggestions. But I did not expect that he would get thee to his side, and speak them by thy lips. In this rash and unpremeditated speech, thou art doing his work, and putting a stumbling-block in the path of my obedience."

But why, O blessed Lord, is this method of winning world-power, apart of course from doing homage for it to Satan, so abhorrent to Thee? Surely Thou couldest save men from the evils of injustice, oppression, high-handed wrong, poverty, and disease.

"These are not the greatest ills that vex mankind. They are but symptoms of a disease which has struck deeper, and is eating out their heart. There the evil must be dealt with and quelled. Here the root principles of the world's miseries must be met. Besides, man is under the dominion of the Prince of this world, and he must be destroyed, and his power brought to nought, before they can be at peace. None of these things can be gained by the method of worldly power. Circumstances might be improved for a time, but the condition of heart would remain unchanged, and ultimately this would assert itself again in worse and worse disaster."

What, then, is that other method for the world's salvation of which Thou speakest?

"The way of death. Strange though it may appear to thee, no salvation is possible, unless the Saviour is prepared to die; the power to communicate life is only given to Him who has poured out his soul unto death; the devil that has the power of sin and death can only be quelled by One who dares expose Himself to the worst that he can do, and amid all never loses his supreme trust that God will not leave his soul in Hades, or suffer his Holy One to see corruption. This is the way of nature. Unless a corn of wheat falls in the ground to die, it abides alone; it has no power to pass on its life; but if it submits to be torn to pieces in the heart of the earth, it bears much fruit, and its life is reproduced in thousands of seed-corns. This is also the law of sacrifice. It is only through the death of myriads of lambs, that Israel's sins are remitted, and the national life preserved. This is also the law of human life. The martyrs have been the greatest benefactors of the race. Their death has been the death-blow of the greatest wrongs that have afflicted men. Therefore I said that this is the way of God, and rebuked thee, because in dissuading Me from death, thou dissuaded Me from the Divine and only method of giving life. If I spare Myself I cannot achieve my life-purpose; if I save Myself I cannot save; if I put from Me the cup of death I shall never be able to put to the lips of man the cup of salvation and thanksgiving. The Son of Man must be delivered into the hands of men, and they shall crucify Him, and the third day He shall rise again, and give eternal life to as many as the Father hath given Him."

But, surely, Master, in speaking thus, Thou art foreshadowing not only the path which Thou must tread, but that in which we must follow.

"It is even so. He that loveth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life shall find it in the lives of thousands to whom he has been the messenger of God. If ye desire to follow Me in the regeneration of the world ye must be prepared to be derided and hated, to be reviled and persecuted, to be accounted as the refuse and off-scouring of all things; by many various forms of death, ye shall be put to death; through darksome dungeons, amid the averted faces of those whom ye have sought to help, ye shall come to the stake, the cross, the wild beast; like corns of wheat, ye shall fall into many fields to die; ye shall be stoned, and sawn asunder and slain with the sword; your blood shall flow in rivers, as that of beasts slain in the altars of the world. In these days, love not your souls, but lose them; measure the success of life by its apparent failure; count your gains by your losses, and your triumphs by your sacrifices. From tears, and agony, and blood, crops of blessing will stand thick in the harvest fields of the world. Ye must drink of my cup, and be baptized with my baptism, if ye would sit with Me on my throne, and share in the love and gratitude of the saved."

Ah, Master, our hearts quail before such a prospect: how shall we be able to bear such an ordeal? Even now we cannot bear to think of thy sufferings, but how shall we be able to maintain the fight when Thou art gone, leaving us as sheep amidst wolves!

"Fear not, for I will be with you: I will not fail, nor forsake you. You may be troubled on every side, but you need not be distressed; perplexed, but do not despair; persecuted, but never for a moment forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed; always bearing about in your bodies my dying, that my life may be manifest in your mortal body: so death will work in you for the life of the world, but I will be with you, all the days, even to the end. I soon go my way, as it is written of Me, to the cross and the grave, that by death I may become, as none other can, the propitiation for the sin of the world, destroy him that hath the power of death, and rob death of its sting and the grave of its victory, and so rise to become the Resurrection and the Life for evermore. Fear not them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do, but fear the fate of those who care more for themselves than for the world of men, which can only be saved through suffering, tears, and blood. In endeavouring to save themselves, they shall lose both themselves and it."

Till He Come.

CHURCH of the Lord arise;
Work on, for daylight fires;
Press on to win the prize,
Till Jesus comes.

Look o'er a world of sin;
Who'll go some souls to win,
Who'll help to call them in,
Till Jesus comes?

Some of our loved ones' feet
Now walk the golden street;
These we must wait to meet,
Till Jesus comes.

Hast thou a heavy care,
More than thy heart can bear?
Let Him the burden share,
Till Jesus comes.

Is thy path rough and steep,
Causing thee oft to weep?
Trust, for thou canst not reap
Till Jesus comes.

Still darker grows the night;
Still fiercer grows the fight;
We walk by faith, not sight,
Till Jesus comes.

Lord, we have heard thy call;
Low at thy feet we fall;
Take us, we yield Thee all,
Till Jesus comes.

The Word of God.

Y.W.C.A. BIBLE READING ON JOHN I. 1,
By the AUTHOR of "THRESHOLD SERVICE."

THE above verse translated quite literally is this: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was toward God, and the Word was God."

We are familiar with the idea conveyed by the Authorised Version, which gives "with God" instead of "toward God"; but I think we can gain much help by considering the literal expression, which sheds a new and even clearer light upon the ineffable union between the Father and the Son. Before the world was, the attitude of the Son towards the Father was ever one of devotedness. As one has said, "His face is not outward, so to speak, as if He were merely revealing, or waiting to reveal, God to creation. His face is inwards; his whole person is directed towards God...He appears to find his very Being in the intensity of bliss with which He receives all that passes in the mind and heart of God."

And as the revealed Word, his whole Divine self and will were bent towards his Father's will regarding man, so that when He came into the world He was the living expression of the Father's character of love, the summing up of his meaning. "He that hath seen Me, hath seen the Father," He said, when speaking of this entire oneness. He has many titles, but this of "the Word" is the clue, or key, to the mystery of the message. A name was chosen which should give the idea of a Sent-One in perfect harmony with the Sender, and with respect to those to whom He was sent, it implies definiteness, finality, sympathy, and command. It was a message from an All-powerful, All-good Father, to a race that had ceased to comprehend not only their claims, but their needs, and the Messenger was Himself the message.

How can we understand this? The only illustration that is in the least adequate is that of the response of the solar system to the influences of the sun. Each of the heavenly bodies, and our earth among them, may be said to be toward the sun in entirety of submission. Every atom of matter in every planet is ultimately commanded and penetrated by the sun, whose compelling force evokes undeviating obedience to laws perfect in harmony and ceaseless in operation; and we may quite accurately say that our system is toward the sun, just as the Psalmist says the eyes of servants are "unto the hand of their master (Ps. cxliii. 2). But the Son of God is "toward" his Father in an infinitely closer manner, for the union is not one of force, but of love. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father doing; for what things soever He doeth, these the Son doeth in like manner. For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth Him all things that He Himself doeth" (John v. 19, 20).

This complete union of purpose, power, and affection is yet further emphasised in the eighteenth verse: "The only-begotten Son which is in the bosom of the Father." In this the present tense is used, as it is also in chap. iii. 13: "The Son of Man which is in heaven." While on earth it was always now with our Lord as regards his union with the Father. There was no break in the mutual interchange of sympathy, if I may use such an expression. The wills were one, and even in that moment of supreme self-sacrifice, when on the cross our Lord cried, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" it was still "my God." There was no letting go on the side of the will of Jesus from the will of the Father, who for a brief instant consented to let the Son realise to the utmost end of thought the penalty of becoming man.

This unspeakable love between the Father and the Son is the origin, the archetype of all that is pure, all that is lovely in human love. It lies at the back of all human relationships, and gives them their sweetness and dignity. There was a wonderful calmness in the Lord Jesus, which sprung from his satisfied love to his Father. Being at rest in Himself, He gave rest. Loving to the full and being loved to the full, He could pour out on sinners the whole stintless wealth of his heart. It comes out in his words and actions over and over again, till in John xvii. He unveiled his innermost desire, and revealed the secret of his life—a secret of love. "O righteous Father, the world knew Thee not, but I knew Thee, and these knew that Thou didst send Me, and I made known unto them thy name, and will make it known; that the love wherewith Thou lovedst Me may be in them, and I in them" (John xvii. 25, 26).

Such love as that, between God the Father and God the Son, is beyond our feeble powers of realisation. The Son was ever "toward" the Father in such absolute devotedness that He alone among men could say in very truth, "I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart." (Ps. xl. 8.) Right down in the very core and centre of his will was the Father's will, and He had meat to eat that none knew of. And the eye of the Father was ever bent in tenderest satisfaction upon this child of man who was "the beloved Son," so that Jesus could speak of "abiding in Him" as of a perpetual fact—the fact, indeed, of his life. It was this abiding which gave Him a compelling force that was irresistible with those who raised no barriers between Him and their inmost selves. When Jesus spoke to those who believed, the closed gates in man's nature were unlocked, and the very simple relationship of the child towards the parent became possible, and the new birth took place. Becoming "a little child" implies entire dependence upon a father, and this was what Jesus taught, and as it was his own life principle, He imparted it to those who were in vital union with Himself. For this was the unbroken union with the Father's will which from all eternity had been the life of the Son.

What it cost so to humble Himself as to take upon Him the form of humanity, we begin dimly to apprehend when we think of the plenitude of heavenly intercourse before the Incarnation. Was not that the secret of the "emptying Himself" spoken of in Phil. ii. 7? The Cross came afterwards, but first of all there was the inconceivable self-sacrifice involved in putting on the straitened bands of human life. We are so accustomed to our limitations that we fail to comprehend in the faintest measure what they must have meant to the All-powerful Son of God, who voluntarily submitted to their thrall, and in meekness bore their constraint from the swaddling bands of babyhood to the linen cloths of death. The self-restraint of the Incarnation is an aspect of the mystery that astounds one. Think of it! He had made the worlds, yet at his birth He was homeless. He had designed the star-systems, yet He learnt at Nazareth the simple secrets of patching garments and filling wine-skins. He had created the fruits of the earth in all their beauty, yet He must wait by the roadside while food was bought for Him. He, the origin of the sense of justice in man, must stand before Pilate and be condemned.

But beyond all this there was the slow, dragging suspense of the human career, which if He had taken his power for the sake of self-deliverance might have been ended without the shame and the Cross. The temptation in Matt. iv. is based entirely on this. By the manifestation of his divinity He could have reversed a physical law and made stones into bread. But He refused, because as man He had no authority to overstep God's bounds, and by a single autocratic act condense into one many processes of nature. By casting Himself down from a pinnacle of the temple, He would have established Himself at once as the great prophet of his nation.

But man dare not tempt God, and the Son of Man would not coerce faith and hasten by one second of time his people's moral welfare, excepting according to the will of God, who desires the exercise of the individual free will. Finally, He would not obtain from the powers of evil that kingship over the hearts of all mankind which death alone could give Him the right to win. Man must worship God alone, and wait his time for the complete and triumphant working-out of the world's salvation.

But there was yet another limitation; the chief of all, namely the separation from the seen presence of God by reason of the veil of the flesh. He prayed as the end drew near with intensity of longing, "And now, O Father, glorify Me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was." That was the cry of a heart hungering for the supreme love of its life. Nothing but the Father's own self could satisfy that longing, and the out-flowing of God's presence was the glory of eternity for which the beloved Son yearned. The world had not known the Father. The Son had not only met with constant misunderstanding from sinners, but his life had been spent among persons who, even from a religious point of view, were under a total misapprehension about God, attributing constantly to Him thoughts that were impossible to Him. "These things will they do because they know not the Father nor Me" (John xvi. 3) was his condemnation of their blindness. How it must have smitten his heart of love to meet with this spirit, for the thing He was ever pressing home to them was that by receiving Him they would "know and understand" God to be their Father also! "For this is life eternal, that they should know Thee, the only true God, and Him whom Thou didst send, even Jesus Christ" (John xvii. 3).

This is a truth which our souls also need to feed upon. To know God, to know Him as revealed in Jesus Christ, to know his message, is a life-long lesson, measured, that is, not by time but by eternity; and the child-like heart alone, which is "toward" God in implicit obedience and devotedness, can receive these things that transcend the finite limits of merely human understanding. Let our prayer be to be shown more and more what the Father is to the Son, and what the Son is to the Father, that we may have fellowship with God and with his Son Jesus Christ.

Our Soldiers in India.

MANY of your readers must be interested in soldiers. Hundreds of families in the British Isles have a link with India, through sons or brothers out there. Occasionally I receive papers and books from England for distribution among the men. They are always most readily received, especially in the military hospitals. There must be many who would be glad to feel that they were taking a personal practical interest in British soldiers by passing on their copy of THE CHRISTIAN every week, when they have themselves read it. Some might even make up a monthly parcel of papers, such as Graphic, Home Words, Illustrated, etc., not forgetting papers for mothers and children.

We have also the beginning of a nice little library in the vestry of the garrison church. Bound annuals are always sought after. In fact we are able to circulate a quantity of wholesome reading in hospitals, married quarters, and prayer rooms; after Bible class, guild, and children's meetings in cantonments, and at a fort five miles away. Parcels of books, even books that are not "bran new," will be very welcome, and may be sent (post fully paid, please) to me

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 30.

"THEY SHOULD NOT EAT OF THE MOST HOLY THINGS, TILL THERE STOOD UP A PRIEST WITH URIM AND THUMMIM."—Ezra ii. 63.

It must have been a great disappointment to these people to find themselves excluded from sharing as priests. Their names were not on the register, and so they had to wait until the priest could adjudicate. The mere inference of reason was not enough; they needed the direct corroboration of the anointed priest.

So in our life it is not enough to rely on the inference of reason, or to allow our Christian standing to be determined by the evidence of a document. We must seek the direct witness and testimony of the Holy Spirit. How many Christians there are who have no experimental knowledge of what the Apostle meant when he said that the Spirit witnesseth with our spirit that we are born again. They are always referring to inference, and the testimony of others, and therefore their consciousness varies, and they cannot eat of the holy bread of God. But when the Spirit of God speaks through the Urim and Thummim, and certifies that we are the children of God, and gives us the white stone with its new name, and reveals Christ as dwelling within us, we have immediately boldness to enter into the holiest of all, and to eat of the holy things.

Assurance is needful before we dare to appropriate the things which are freely given us of God, but that assurance may be had in the presence of our great High Priest, speaking to us in the Holy Spirit, who seals and authenticates us as God's.

MONDAY, August 31.

"AND THEY SET THE ALTAR UPON ITS BASES."—Ezra iii. 3.

This is the first thing that must be done before there can be any temple-building or other enlargement of success. It was well that the returned remnant made this their care, it augured well for their future. The new start that God Himself was giving would have been invalidated without that altar, which meant forgiveness for the past, and renewed consecration for all future time.

Where is the altar in your life? Where the burnt sacrifice which betokens entire surrender of consecration? It cannot be too often insisted on, that since Christ died for all, all died in Him. We were not only saved by His death, but we must appropriate and identify ourselves with it. We must look up to God and say, "I desire that this death should be mine, to the world, to sin, to the flesh, make it so by the power of the Holy Ghost, that in Him I may be hourly dead unto sin, but alive unto Thee."

Perhaps that last clause will help some souls most. Do not perpetually dwell on the dying side, but think much of the living side. Yield yourselves to live God's life, which is the life of the Son of God in the surrendered nature. Be very sensitive, and "quick of scent" to every movement and prompting of the Holy Spirit, and so you will find your energy drained away from self to Christ. A maple tree planted on a barren soil sent out one of its rootlets to a richer patch not far away, and ultimately all its roothold was there, and it was bodily moved and transferred from its first position to this more salubrious one.

TUESDAY, September 1.

"LET US BUILD WITH YOU."—Ezra iv. 2.

At first the world does its best to intimidate the Church; then it asks to be permitted to join with it. A most subtle temptation this. The child of God is greatly inclined to yield, the proposal seems so harmless, and so likely to be a means of blessing to the poor, hungry, weary world. But there is only one condition on which the world may be admitted: there must be regeneration, submission to the cross, not simply a recognition of God, but a willingness to give up all for Him—conditions which the world will not consider for a moment, and so its heart is filled with bitterness and gall, and it sets itself to hinder where it had professed willingness to help.

There are five things of which we are expressly bidden to beware; they are five phases of an unequal yoke; fellowship with unrighteousness, communion with darkness, concord with Belial, part with an unbeliever, agreement with idols. Let us beware of these things, and cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. There may seem to be great loss of needless sacrifice in dispensing with the help of Rehun and Shimshai, but if once we were to accept their help, we should discover to our cost that they were our adversaries still, and that their only desire was to retard our efforts. A few thoroughly consecrated people with God will do what great crowds could never effect without Him.

"THE EYE OF THEIR GOD WAS UPON THE ELDERS OF THE JEWS."—Ezra v. 5.

It was a delightful thought amid obloquy and opposition, like that which the Jews were at this moment encountering, to know that God was watching them with jealous care. We are reminded of the words of the Psalmist, quoted and authenticated by the Apostle Peter, "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears open to their cry, but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil." And he goes on to argue, "Who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" The Jews certainly found it so, for the efforts of their enemies to induce them to desist from their work of temple-building were rendered nugatory and ineffectual by the special care exercised over them by their Almighty Friend.

It may be that you will have to encounter hatred and opposition in doing God's work, but be sure not to look at these things, but steadfastly to Jesus. Must you not watch the foe? No; you could not make a greater mistake. You must look away to the face of Jesus, and you will find that He, like a good shepherd, is carefully looking lovingly down on you, and watching the stealthy movements of your foe. His rod and staff comfort me; with the one He will make a way through the thickets, with the other He will smite down my mightiest foe.

THURSDAY, September 3.

"THE LORD HAD MADE THEM JOYFUL, AND TURNED THE HEART OF THE KING OF ASSYRIA UNTO THEM."—Ezra vi. 22.

Yes, the hearts of men are in the hands of God, and He can turn them whither He will. There are many instances of this in Scripture. God gave Joseph favour with Pharaoh, and Moses with the Princess, and Daniel with the King of Babylon. If certain matters can only be settled by reference to great men, kings or men of affairs, make the application, and then betake yourself to prayer, believing that as He inclined the heart of Darius, in the present instance, so He can do as He will among the armies of heaven, and the inhabitants of earth.

That unkind overseer, that vexatious member of your home-circle, that great man whose help you so greatly need—these are accessible to God's Spirit, if only you are intent on seeking his glory, and doing his will. But you must be able to show, as these Jews could, that your cause is identical with the cause of God, before you can claim, with unwavering faith, his interference on your behalf.

This is what our Lord meant when He said that prayer must be offered in his name. Name stands for nature. Our prayers must be in harmony with the Christ-nature within. Then when the answer comes let us thank Him, and separate ourselves still further from the filthiness around us, and keep the feast with joy.

FRIDAY, September 4.

"I WAS STRENGTHENED, AS THE HAND OF THE LORD MY GOD WAS UPON ME."—Ezra vii. 28.

It was no small work that the good Ezra had undertaken. To lead a great expedition across the inhospitable desert, to convoy the sacred vessels and a large treasure of gold and silver, to set magistrates and judges over all that great district beyond the river, was no slight task, and he needed strength. But in the simple language of his heart the good hand of his God was upon him, and that was sufficient to nerve and strengthen him.

We are reminded of the veteran, who, when charged by the Duke of Wellington to take a difficult position, turned to him and said, "I will go, sir, but first give me a grip of your conquering hand."

Think, soul, of what that hand is, which holds the waters in its hollow, and spread the curtains of the sky, and was nailed to the cross; that brought blessing with its touch to so many weary sufferers, and now holds the mysterious book, sealed with seven seals; that caught Peter, and lay lightly on the heads of the little babes. That hand is strengthening thee for that work, for which thou hast no natural powers, but to which thou art evidently called. Go forward, it holds thee, it guides thee, it empowers thee. Thou blessed, gentle, mighty hand, I kiss thee, and am strong.

SATURDAY, September 5.

"WATCH YE, AND KEEP THEM, UNTIL YE WEIGH THEM AT JERUSALEM, IN THE CHAMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF GOD."—Ezra viii. 29.

They were taken care of by God, whose presence across the wild desert made it needless to ask for an escort of soldiers; but they had to take care of the precious vessels of his house. It was a reciprocal trust. So it must be with us, as comes out in 2 Tim. i. There are two deposits, as the margin shows. We deposit ourselves, and all we are and have, with God, whilst He deposits with us his sacred Gospel, the vessels of which we must be prepared to defend with our blood.

How safe are they who commit their all to God! Faraday was asked, when dying, on what supposition he depended as he contemplated the other world, and he replied: "I am relying on no supposition, but on a certainty; I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded He is able to keep that which I have committed to Him."

But let us be true to our trust. The sacred Bible, the holy doctrines of the Christian Church, the Day of Rest, the house of God, the ordinances of the Lord's Supper and Christian Baptism—these are some of the vessels which have come down to us, and we must hand on intact. Oh! what joy it will be when we reach our destination, and can resign our trust, and weigh out the deposit, and hear the Master's "Well done."

Metropolitan Tabernacle Flower Mission.

—We should be very glad to receive flowers for our Mission. What with the dry season and the loss of some who have helped us for many years, and are now obliged to give up sending, we have been very short of flowers this summer, and we do not like to see the disappointed look on the faces when we enter the wards with empty baskets. They should be sent off in time to arrive by ten o'clock on Wednesday morning, and should be addressed "To the Bible Flower Mission, Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington Causeway, S.E." Even bits of ivy or evergreen and berries are most thankfully received when flowers are not to be had. LOUIE A. HIGGS, Hon. Sec.

Cheering Fruit.—Rev. R. D. Bannister, of the Alliance Mission, Murtizapur, India, has good news to tell of awakening interest in the Gospel in his district. In Murtizapur itself, a wandering gossavi of the Lingaet caste, who has been to every sacred shrine in India, has now surrendered to Christ. He voluntarily took off his sacred thread, and asked to be allowed to eat with the missionaries. Mr. Bannister expects to baptize this man and two Maags on his return. This month also he has been out among the villages, and in one place finds a movement towards Christianity among a party of weavers, who were first impressed through a Testament obtained some years ago.

Words in the Sand.

IT was the last day of the seaside services. Alice sat on a seat on the cliff, swinging her feet and gazing thoughtfully out over the sea. Some hundred feet below she could see the children and nurses, numbers of them, playing or reading on the sands, and away to the right, still untouched by the incoming tide, were clearly marked out the words:—

CHOOSE YOU THIS DAY.

Alice looked away hurriedly and brushed her hand across her eyes. How the words haunted her! I am afraid she even whispered, "Tiresome things," under her breath. "I never felt like this before," she said to herself, "and I've been at heaps of children's services. I've always felt all right afterwards and forgotten all about them!"

Again her eyes were directed towards those words, "CHOOSE YOU THIS DAY." She noticed one wave had crept up very near them, and she imagined how soon it would all be quite washed away and the sand as smooth and even as ever. She couldn't help thinking that was like the effect of previous seaside services on her heart. All washed away!

"I wish Ned had come out," she thought on. "If he had I shouldn't have sat here and been so gloomy. I just won't go down to the afternoon meeting. By the way, I promised that girl I would. How silly of me. There's the 'Choose' covered by a wave now. I'll just sit here until it's all washed away; then, perhaps, I shall have a little peace."

Meanwhile two people were walking down towards the beach together. Evelyn Archer had her arm linked through her brother's. "Did you notice that child in the blue-striped frock this morning, Frank?"

"The one who had tears in her eyes at the end? Yes."

"Well; I have just been praying and praying for her ever since; and so especially asking that she may be led to come up to the afternoon meeting. I wonder if we shall see her there?"

"Look, Evie, do you see? Our text is just being washed away."

"Yes; only 'this day' left. Those words are significant, aren't they?"

"Very."

"What are you going to speak on now?"

"It has just come to me. See how those words are all being washed away, because they were put there by human hands. Shall I take 'I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts,' and 'Heaven and earth may pass away, but my words shall not pass away'?"

"Grand!"

"This day! God grant it may be the deciding day in some hearts."

Alice was climbing down the cliff. After all she had not been able to wait for all the text to be washed away. Those last two words remained. It was no use struggling, she knew; there was only one thing to do, and the one haunting thought in her mind was, "If I do, what will Ned say?"

Such a favourite plan of the enemy's. Such an old one, one wonders that it is not almost worn threadbare, and useless, but yet it has its power.

She took her place with the other children, and almost started as Frank Archer commenced saying:—

"I have been watching the words we wrote in the sand being washed away. They were washed away because they were only written by man. You know, children, how many things people have spoken to you that you have completely forgotten. Now I want to speak to you to-day about words God writes, not on the sand, but on the heart. Do you know how sometimes two or three words out of God's Book stick to us, and we can't forget them—"

Oh how eagerly Alice listened. "Well, that means God has written them on our hearts, and nothing can wash them away. Look at that verse, Eccles. iii. 14: 'I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever.' So if we feel to-day God has written any word on our heart, let us obey it at all costs, whatever it may be."

By the time that meeting was over Alice had yielded to God's voice. At the end those who would decide to give their hearts to the Lord Jesus were asked to stand. Now Alice had caught a glimpse of Ned in the crowd, and the struggle was a great one; but she rose, and the one hope in her heart was that Ned would rise to. She summoned courage at last to look towards him. No, he was sitting still, and their eyes met. Well, she had taken the step at all costs, and she meant it.

Afterwards Alice, scarcely knowing what she was doing, walked towards him, and he to her. Their hands met in a close grip.

"Alice, I am glad," he said.

"Are you? Ned, I thought—"

"It's all right, now; isn't it fine?"

"Ned, I wish you had stood, too."

"But I did this morning; didn't you see me?"

"No. Oh, Ned, it was so hard—"

"Yes, I know it is; but it's jolly easy when you think of his love."

Boys and girls, as you read these words, perhaps you also have been at seaside services; perhaps you are going now. Is God speaking to you? And have you stood up, in your heart at least, for the Lord Jesus? You will find it easy when you think of his love.

Thank you for the flowers. ETHEL WALLS AND EVELYN AND ARTHUR JONES.—I am very pleased you are continuing with the "Searchers." JULIET HAINES.—Your paper is in time if it is posted on Wednesday. Many thanks to several of my little friends for their interesting letters. "JOHN."—It is necessary to put more than one name, as it would be impossible to identify you by that. Your paper was well done, but you put Jacob's sons, not Joseph's. CHARLOTTE CANE.—I will have the name altered on my list. It was a pity you did not finish your competition paper, as it was well done as far as it went, and if it had been finished would probably have gained a prize. JANET GARRETT.—As you will have seen from the "Foreign List," I have several nieces in South Africa, and your papers will be acknowledged with theirs. You may use a reference Bible, but not a concordance. The questions may be explained, but no help given in answering them. A gentleman writes:—"My nephew is blind, but is being taught at the Royal Normal College, Upper Norwood. He wishes to join your Bible Searching Class, as his sister is a member. I send you his paper. I read the questions till he has learnt them, then I read steadily on in the chapters, and he notes the words and verses. I just lend him my eyes."

UNCLE TOM.

Three Things we Require.

THE three great things we all require are wisdom, decision, and promptness. There is a suggestive fable in one of the ancient books. A gentleman owned a fish pond. One day he let the water flow off into the river close by, in order to catch the fish more readily. Three of the fishes held a conference to decide what to do; their decision was to swim out into the river with the flowing of the water. One decided to go at once—wise before the time. One to remain as long as possible—wise just in time. The other thought any time would do, and was caught—wise behind the time. Numbers of people act like this with regard to God's salvation. Some are wise before the time. Some are wise just in time—and many are wise when it is too late. C. E.

Wanted!

"MEN wanted!" "Boys wanted!" We often see these notices in shop windows and other places, and we can see it in the Bible too. It is the great notice from Heaven. Men wanted; Women wanted; Boys wanted; Girls wanted. All wanted for Jesus and for Heaven. The Gospel advertisement is sounding all around us. Here is an acrostic which shows us what is wanted:—

W ISE HEADS.

A TTENTIVE EARS.

N EW HEARTS.

T ONGUES UNTIED.

E YES OPENED.

D ECISION.

We can be wise, like Timothy, attentive like Samuel, loving like Lydia, praising like David, faithful like the healed man; and active like Matthew. Decide at once to follow Jesus.

A. B. C. Text for Little Children.—C.

Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. (Matt. xi. 28.)

"Rest" is a comforting word even to little children, and this is the first time it is mentioned in the New Testament. The first time in the Old Testament tells of the dove that found "no rest." Jesus said the loving words of our text; no one but Jesus could. He knew how often He felt tired carrying that great burden of "sin of the world," and He knew that if we carried our own sins, we would be "heavy laden" indeed, so He called us to Himself and said, "I will give you rest."

I heard the voice of Jesus say,

Come unto Me and rest;

Lay down, poor weary one, lay down

Thy head upon My breast.

Scripture Puzzle.

My first is in stupid, and also in wise,
My second's in hate, but not in despise;
My third is in musing, but not in thought;
My fourth is in pleasure, but not in sport;
My fifth is in wicked, but not in bad,
My sixth is in mournful, but not in sad;
My whole is one who for truth was bold,
And who is well known as a prophet of old,

Village Tales.

IV.—A PSALM OF GRATITUDE.

THERE was one person in the village who, at the end of three years, still baffled Miss Priscilla's powers of persuasion and insight into character. This was Ebenezer Lucock, who owned the quaintest and prettiest cottage, and the largest and most prolific garden in the place. He was a regular church goer; hardly ever missed a prayer or missionary meeting; never said or did anything that could, with justice, be censured by mere humanity, and was never known to be satisfied, or to give thanks to God or man in all his life.

"'Tis clearly a case of mistaken identity," said the minister, laughing, one day. "When they were passing names round they got mixed, and so Ebenezer received the wrong one."

"Seems like it a little," laughed Miss Priscilla; "but that is only because we see on the surface," she added thoughtfully. "Perhaps while some of us are wishing that Mr. Lucock may be less of a grumbler, more given to look at the bright side, delighting in almsgiving and charity, we ought just to take him to God in the piece, along with ourselves, and definitely ask that He will glorify Himself in us, that others may see and take knowledge."

The little seed dropped into good ground—nothing more was said about Ebenezer; only people began to look more kindly at him.

Then the minister went for his first holiday, and when a stranger came to take his place for the first Sunday, circumstances so fell out that Ebenezer Lucock was asked to allow the preacher to stay with him over the Sunday.

"I can't receive him," he grumbled. "I've no wife, and never had a minister in my house all the years I've lived. He'll want no end of entertaining, and I'm not used to it. Besides, look at the inconvenience to me! Why should I do it?"

"Because you are one of us," was the answer. "Matters are so just now that none of us can have the minister, and we look to you, in the name of common hospitality. We would not ask you, only there is no other way."

At this Ebenezer was wroth, and out of very contrariness said the stranger should come to him. So it was settled.

As the stranger and his host walked round the pretty garden in the cool of the Saturday evening, the former said, "You have a little paradise here! What a blessing to a tired Londoner after the feverish life of the city. I am sure you send many home rejoicing."

"You are the first," said Ebenezer, "and you'll be the last. I've struggled enough to keep things going for myself, let alone providing for strangers and such like."

"But if you are a Christian," said the minister, who was also a man, and felt nettled by what the other had said, "you must remember the words of the Spirit's command, 'Use hospitality one to another without grudging.' It is a beautiful privilege."

Ebenezer snorted; then he espied an offending currant-bush. "That'll have to come up," said he, giving it a vigorous tug. "I've given it a fair trial and every care, but 'tis barren of fruit, and seems to influence the other bushes too."

The stranger smiled. A smart retort rose to his lips, but he kept it back, saying to himself, "But for God's mercy, some of us would have to 'come up.'"

At this moment Miss Priscilla entered the garden. "I have come with greetings to you from those who are sick," she said. "Some of us who would have welcomed you are laid aside by illness. I give you welcome in their name."

The minister—he was young—thought he had never seen such a sincere and sweet smile as Miss

Priscilla's. He made a suitable reply, and finding that Ebenezer had left them, he smiled mischievously and said, "Ah, I can see you think differently from our friend Mr. Lucock. What a churlish old party it is!"

"And yet—God's merciful 'yet' for all of us—our Father loves him, and doubtless has sent you to him for some purpose so wise and beautiful that we may all rejoice together at the end, marvelling at our Lord's goodness," said Miss Priscilla.

Then they talked long and thoughtfully, and when Ebenezer came out and told his supperless guest that he would find his candle and matches ready inside, the latter was able to bid him "Good-night" with such a happy, brotherly smile that the "village curmudgeon," as someone had once called him, thought within himself—

"H'm! Seems a right-minded kind of young man. I might have offered him some supper after all. But as it is late, perhaps he would prefer to rest. Yes, yes; and I want to be alone now."

The preacher took Heb. xiii. 2 for his text on the Sunday morning, and some of his congregation thought within themselves: "Poor Ebenezer! The young minister has found him out."

The next day the minister was supposed to leave, but he stayed on at the cottage, and when Ebenezer had plainly said, "Well, young man, have you no duties elsewhere?" the "young man" had replied, "My duty is here just at present, so long as you will allow me to remain." Ebenezer received such a shock of surprise that he could find no reply to make. On Friday the stranger departed without a word of good-bye or thanks to his host.

"The preacher gone?" Ebenezer asked of his housekeeper.

"Yes, sir, he had an early breakfast, and when he was going I asked him if he would leave a message for you, but he said no—you quite understood; as you never gave any thanks, he was sure you would not expect any."

"What!" thundered Ebenezer. "And I had actually begun to like that young man and gave him freely of my best."

After that it was noticed that he grew moody, and when the young minister was spoken of in his hearing, he would become uneasy and shuffle away out of earshot. Just then Miss Priscilla wrote to her young friend: "Your visit is not forgotten and is bearing fruit. Our dear brother is suffering, and feels our Father's hand laid upon him in chastening. We need to be very real and instant in prayer." Then the minister returned from his holiday, and, missing Ebenezer from the prayer-meeting, he went to see him.

After inquiries, and some general conversation, the minister said: "You are in trouble, dear friend; can I share it with you?" "No; as 'tis one of my own making, I must bear it alone," answered Ebenezer. Then he blurted out: "Fifty-four years I have cumbered the ground, calling myself a Christian, and yet I've done nothing but shut myself up from God and man." The minister's eyes glistened; he put out his hand to the other man: "This is good news," said he, warmly, "for if you feel like this, I, as your minister, bring you a message of comfort from God—'If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.' He will do this for you."

"Ah, yes," said Ebenezer, "that is what I want—forgiveness, not comfort. Minister, for more than fifty years I have accepted God's great goodness to me as a matter of course. When my selfish comforts have been interfered with, I have grumbled; when neighbours have needed what I could have given, I have witholden it; when the Church has needed me, I have kept in the background, all the time taking my share of its privileges; when any have been sick, I have never visited them; when the children have asked for flowers, I have sent them empty away; when money has been wanted, I have given grudgingly and meanly; health, means, time, opportunity—all have been mine, and I have never used them to the glory of God. But He sent his servant here to teach me a lesson—you have doubtless heard how he stayed, and left?—and by God's help I will learn it."

A humble man is a teachable man, and Ebenezer learned apace. He and Miss Priscilla became great friends, and when apple harvest began, no one was surprised when all the village received a warm invitation from Ebenezer Lucock, to meet an old friend at a garden-tea on a day named.

The young minister was the "friend," and he was very much there, gathering posies for the children and their mothers; filling their baskets with the ripest fruit, until some of them said:—

"Oh, sir, what'll Mr. Lucock say? He do set such store by his things!"

"Say?" laughed the minister. "Why, they aren't his to say anything about. He has given himself and his belongings to God—so you see!"

Such a happy day it was for the village, and for the young minister, and the older minister, and for Miss Priscilla, and most of all for Ebenezer Lucock, whom the children heard singing as he helped in the apple harvest:—

Follow with reverent steps the great example
Of Him whose holy work was doing good;
So shall the wide earth be our Father's temple,
And each long life a psalm of gratitude.

M. B. GERDS.

"Sally."

"FATHER says you take her in, 'cos her mother's a-dyin', and there a'int nobody as 'll look after her?"

Such was our first introduction to Sally. Of course, we took her in, a veritable slum baby, almost loathsome from dirt and disease. "What a state to send a child in, to be sure," one remarks. Yes, but then her mother is dying. There seemed a strange look on the face of that babe of twenty months. Its pale, serious features, large far-away eyes, and patient submission to the necessary soap and water were weird and unnatural; one seemed to miss the usual kicking and screaming that in general accompanied the ablutions.

Hours roll on, feeding time goes by, Sally neither eats nor sleeps; other little ones are called for, but no one comes for Sally, no one wants her now her mother's dying. This mother—she did not bear the best of characters; a dirty woman—a drunken woman, some said, her one redeeming trait, her love for Sally. 'Tis true she might have kept her cleaner; her very caresses were dirty ones, but Sally missed them.....

At last a knock, and a shoeless, hatless mite of six summers asks for the little one, and hastens with it through the darkness to its wretched home? One of the old houses in East Lane, where each room has its separate family, where dogs, fowls, and children seem to make the entrance one common habitation, and where sunshine and flowery breezes never come. In the corner of a room at the top, on a tumble-down bedstead, lies the dying mother. Three or four boys and girls are crouching over a handful of fire, and they, with the half-dazed husband and father, are the only other occupants. The poor woman is past earthly aid, her wandering utterances have long since ceased, and the stillness of death seems already in the place. The sudden entrance of the child with the absent Sally rouses the last spark of life, the thin arms are stretched forward, the hoarse voice whispers "My baby," and Sally is motherless.

She was brought to us again next day, the little wan face seemed to be paler and older. Her life troubles had begun early. Some stranger hand had tied a row of black beads round the little neck, poor Sally's only mourning.

The above is a true incident of the Walworth Crèche. The Hon. Superintendent is Mrs. F. Kinghorne, 18, Wilson-road, Camberwell. K.

Mrs. Harrison Lee.

THIS Australian lady, now on a visit to England, was born at Daylesford, Victoria. Her father was a Devonshire man, and her mother's people hailed from Cornwall. After the death of her mother, which occurred when she was eight years old, she was consigned to the care of an aunt who had not realised the duty of temperance. Therefore it was thought advisable to place the child under the care of another relative living at Enoch's Point, an isolated mining settlement on the Great Dividing Range. At nine years of age she was deep in Milton's Paradise Lost, and to it she traces her first awakening to an inner life. Always a pet among the rough miners, she would enter their rude huts and read a "Bible bit" to them, receiving as reward "a lump of pudding," or any other thing considered by them a delicacy.

At the age of nineteen she was married to Mr. Harrison Lee, and taken to his home in Melbourne. Her first bit of Christian work there was Sunday-school teaching. This led to district visiting, and she did not spare herself. Waifs and strays were gathered into her house and lovingly taught of the Saviour who was so dear to her. Many of these waifs are now Christian workers in Australia. A serious illness caused her to be "off duty" at times, and made more apparent a weakness of the spine with which she was troubled. The latter continued for seven years, and during that period much necessary rest had to be taken, which was probably part of the training required to fit her for higher service. Then came healing by the Great Physician, and after that eight years of happy service, when labour was joy, and difficulties simply incentives to greater efforts.

She became a deaconess in Church of England work, but finding it hampered her slightly in service for all sects and classes, she severed the tie. Since that time the Church of England has claimed her services equally with Non-conformists, the Salvation Army, and societies of all descriptions. For years she has taken four services every Sunday—a morning sermon, united service for children in the afternoon, an evening sermon, and a great mass meeting of all sects after evening service hours. Once she actually preached seven times on one Sunday.

In 1884 she signed the temperance pledge. Experience in Christian labour had opened her eyes to the need of such a step, and she resolved to "bind herself that others might be free." Later she became an active worker for the Women's Christian Temperance Union. Her visitations among the slums also forced upon her the necessity for social purity work, and by pen and speech she aided the cause in a thousand ways. Part of the temperance work has consisted in organising model meetings for the officers, secretaries, conductors, and members of Bands of Hope.

For the last six years Mrs. Lee has been working under the auspices of the Victorian Alliance, but has also aided kindred organisations whenever opportunities occurred. Owing to the great land boom, and consequent reaction, and failure, and depression, the income of the Society has fallen considerably, and for the last four years Mrs. Lee has, with others, struggled heroically to keep the great work of temperance going. The Victorian Alliance is a union of every branch of the temperance movement; therefore moral suasion and educational lines, by means of literature and other methods, have as large a share of attention as its political propaganda, though the latter is stoutly supported. Thousands have signed the pledge at Mrs. Lee's meetings, where she advocates legal suasion for the liquor seller, and moral suasion for the drinker.

Much of the work has been done in the power of simple faith in God. At one time Mrs. Lee started for the wilds of Gippsland to contest licences, with a railway ticket to take her the first part of the way, and half-a-crown in her pocket. A wild tract of forest had been selected to be cleared, and the liquor sellers were petitioning the governor for a poll, where the men might record votes in favour of the liquor supply. It was thought that if Mrs. Lee could go among these men and persuade them to do without licences in South Gippsland, great good would result. In some cases there were many miles to travel from section to section, and this had to be done on horseback, as there were no roads made. After numberless difficulties the sight of tents and bark huts would gladden her eyes, and before long she would have an audience round her. In many parts men refrained from voting for the licences, and so the evil was kept out.

At another time she had not sufficient money to take a through ticket, so booked part of the way, and organised missions all along the route. The receipts from the first mission enabled her to travel a bit further, and thus she proceeded in faith, confident that funds would be forthcoming for the next onward journey. And they were, until she reached Brisbane, where she was expected by friends.

A fortnight's mission at Charters Towers was entered upon with very prayerful preparations for some weeks before it arrived. Many miners attended the meetings there. They are such readers and clever debaters that it is difficult to tackle them, especially as the meetings are largely attended by publicans and their friends; and as Mrs. Lee always invites questions and discussion in her public meetings, it places the lecturer somewhat at their mercy. In one street there are eighteen drink-shops, and a proprietor of one said he thought it a bad week if on Saturday night alone he did not take £500. Everything is dear there—beer sixpence a pint—which makes the takings appear larger than in some places. Instead of failure, Mrs. Lee was helped in a wonderful manner. Some of the worst characters in the place signed the pledge, and afterwards gave evidence of a change of life.

Through the urgent entreaties of friends Mrs. Lee is now taking a short rest with relations at Ilfracombe, and her bright, energetic secretary, Miss Mathers, is spending the time with relatives in Scotland. The latter says:—"The one impossible thing to arrange in Mrs. Lee's programme is rest." Official engagements compel Mr. Lee to remain "on the other side." From him she receives help, encouragement, and strength in combating the many difficulties which beset her path. His unselfish willingness to spare her from the home, where they are so united, is, he says, "repaid when he sees the vast amount of good which is being accomplished through her, and amply repays him for the sacrifices he joyfully makes for her sake and the sake of the work she loves better than her life."

Mrs. Lee has no children of her own, so she claims all little children as specially hers, seeing the need everywhere of women who shall be "God-mothers." She desires that through her efforts here "many women may be raised to holiest heights of consecrated motherhood, and that this nation may learn what great things God can do through weak instruments." The text of all her missions is, "Love much, work much, trust much."

"He Wept as He Read."

To all who have been crying to the Lord on behalf of the city of Wanlisien, in Si-Ch'uan, the following from Mr. Leonard Thompson, will be read with much interest:—

"You will be glad to hear that our teacher 'Charles' has been out-and-out converted, and has written his name as an inquirer, wanting to be baptized. His conversion is just like that of a man at home, a complete turn round. He was at service yesterday, read the chapter, and was most devout in his manner, and acknowledged to all the guests who came that he was a Christian. To-morrow his idols, ancestral and Confucian tablets, are to be burnt here. This man has been free from the vices so common to the Chinese; he neither drinks wine nor smokes opium nor tobacco. He has prided himself on his morality, and yet, through the working of God's Spirit, he has been in an unhappy condition on account of his sins, saying that he has broken each of the Ten Commandments, that is, taking the spiritual interpretation of stealing, killing, etc. He wept as he read the account of our Lord suffering on the cross, and marvelled that it was for him. This seems a most real case of conversion, and an answer to the much prayer going up in various places. A new era seems opening up for Wanlisien.

"At the burning of the idols he bore faithful witness to the conviction as to the truth of the Gospel, and also of trusting to Jesus alone for salvation. This man will no doubt turn out a splendid evangelist in the near future, when better instructed. A large audience would have been present at the burning of the idols, had it not been for the heavy downfall of rain at the time. As it was, a good number was present. After the Sunday services this man has another meeting in his own house, and he with a helper carries it on for an hour or two, giving an evening meal to several who attend.

"You may be sure our hearts are full of joy and praise to God. The interest in the work is deepening, and shows no signs of dying down. Last Sunday, although it was raining, there were over 100 at the evening service. Miss Littler has a class for women, and there are manifest signs of blessing."

Since Mr. Gully accepted the Speakership he has been a total abstainer, while on duty, saying that wine makes him drowsy and impairs the strength of his voice.

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

WAITING FOR CHRIST.

By PASTOR STOCKMAYER.

THE Lord Jesus has been made unto us from God wisdom, and wisdom, according to the Revised Version margin of 1 Cor. i. 30-31, comprises both righteousness and sanctification and redemption. What God has joined together, let no man put asunder. Righteousness without sanctification—works without love—faith without works, each of these alone is a dead thing. When reading 2 Cor. v. let us not stay on that most holy ground, "Christ died for us"; no man, no angel, can lay any other foundation than that, which stands for ever. Let us not stay there, but go on. Christ died for us—for what purpose? "That they which live should no longer live unto themselves, but unto Him who for their sakes died and rose again" (verse 15), that we may live that glorious, that alone desirable life, with every breath of our lungs and in every moment of our days. The Apostle Paul, writing to the Thessalonians (first Epistle i. 9) concerning the manner of his entering in among them, says:—"Ye turned unto God from idols"—that is conversion, righteousness. Idols are vanity, and vanity is self-life, living unto self and not unto Christ. The Thessalonians turned from the vain manner of life handed down from the fathers for a double purpose, and we must not put the two things asunder—to (1) serve the living and true God, and (2) to wait for His Son from heaven.

Peter concluded his first discourse at Pentecost (Acts ii. 38)—"Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." In his second discourse he went a step further, and said (chap. iii. 19, R.V.), "Repent ye, therefore, and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out, that so there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; and that He may send the Christ who hath been appointed for you, even Jesus." The Holy Spirit is given to all who, through repentance and faith, receive remission of sins; it is bestowed as a gift for sanctification and service. Then the believer is in a position to "wait for God's Son from Heaven."

When did the early Christians expect Jesus to come? Turn to 1 Thess. iv. 13-18, and you see at once that they EXPECTED JESUS EVERY DAY.

They were mourning for those who had departed, those who had gone before them, not as is common to-day, because there is a void place at the table and in the home, but because they thought such would not share in the glory of the coming of the Lord. With them everything had a relation to the expectation of the Lord Jesus; and our waiting for Jesus is not real until everything, joy and mourning, is viewed in the light of that blessed hope. So it was with the Thessalonians, though with a mistaken impression. Paul met the error by telling them, Do not think that the deceased ones will come short of anything at the Lord's appearing; they will not be left behind, but will precede us. When that time comes the dead will rise first, and then at once we and they shall be taken up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. So comfort yourselves; not, however, as we comfort ourselves in the fact that the departed have "gone home," but that they will have their share in the coming of the Lord.

When the Apostle rectified that mistake, he was very far from saying that the advent would not occur soon. Did he say—Many may die; indeed, shall die? No, not at all. How was it, then, that the Church lost the attitude of waiting for Christ, which is indispensable for a full, real, Biblical Christianity? The reason is very simple. If it is useless to talk of sanctification to those who are not yet justified—if sanctification can only be built on the ground of righteousness, and on Christ our righteousness—it is equally impossible to speak of redemption where there is not true sanctification, for redemption affects not only the soul, but the body, which will be transformed at the coming of the Lord. It is not possible to wait for Jesus in a Biblical way without true sanctification. Righteousness issues in sanctification rightly understood and rightly used; and sanctification rightly used issues in redemption. It is not separate, but organic; and as you cannot know what sanctification means until you are justified, so you cannot go from righteousness to redemption except by way of sanctification.

When you come to the fine linen and the Bride of the Lamb, and the marriage feast, there is no more a question of only imputed righteousness. "The fine linen is the righteous acts (dikaiōmata) of the saints" (Rev. xix. 8, R.V.). Here we have, not imputed righteousness, but righteousness of life. The Apostle Paul is very clear on this point, for in 1 Thess. v. 23, 24 (R.V.), he says: "And the God of peace Himself sanctify you wholly; and may your spirit and soul and body be preserved entire, without blame, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." "Without holiness (sanctification) no man shall see the Lord." Sanctification, taken in its fullest meaning, through the Holy Ghost, is the only way by which the Bride may be made "without spot or wrinkle," and be presented to the Bridegroom. The Apostle knew that the Holy Ghost would never present to the Lord Jesus Christ a Bride whom He (the Holy Ghost) had not succeeded in transforming into the image of Christ. With what disgust and horror Adam must have revolted at the very thought of associating with himself any created being of those that were brought before him that he might name them? A companion suited to him must be taken from his own self, and when he saw such an one, he readily exclaimed "This is bone of my bone, flesh of my flesh," recognising immediately that which was of his own nature.

"A man shall leave father and mother." The Lord Jesus Christ left his father's house to get a bride; and when you see the King you understand that the daughter of earth must first be made partaker of the Divine nature, that the Bridegroom might recognise in her his own flesh and bone, created by the Spirit of God, taken out of his pierced side, as Eve was taken out of the side of Adam. Here is

TYPE AND ANTITYPE.

The time will come in which will be formed, not by human hands, but by the Spirit of God, a Bride in which the Fulness of God will recognise his own self so completely that she will be "the fulness of Him who filleth all in all" (Eph. i. 23).

It is a great mistake to close the Bible with the Epistles of Paul. From the Old Testament to the New there is progress in prophecy and its development; from the Gospel to the Epistles there is the same, also from the Epistles to the Revelation. That which had been (in the Old Testament) one in perspective, falls (in the New Testament) into two. The seers saw the first and second advents of Christ on one platform, and there was nothing said of the thousand years. Later on, there is a further separation and an unfolding. The Apostle Paul knew that the Church must be prepared to receive Jesus as the Bridegroom, and so he engaged all his life and power to bring her from the childhood of Pentecost to manhood in Jesus Christ. He knew that Jesus had gone down (Eph. iv. 8-13) into the depths, that from his Father He might receive gifts—apostles, teachers, preachers, pastors, ministers, etc.—to bring that mysterious being called the Church out of babyhood to manhood—even to the measure of the stature of a fullgrown man in Jesus Christ. These gifts of the risen Lord were "for the perfecting of the saints unto the building up of the body of Christ," that body to be built, and to grow year by year until He may come and the Spirit may present to Him a pure virgin—"till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full-grown man."

The Apostle worked with all the powers of a Divine energy, to present every Christian, every justified one

COMPLETE IN CHRIST.

And then, when he left the battle-field, he wrote (Phil. ii. 21). "All seek their own, not the things of Jesus Christ." Even the workers sought their own interest, and there was no one to stand with him in his first answer before judgment (2 Tim. iv. 16). Yet he did not know discouragement, but saw with the eyes of his spirit the falling away, the going back from the attitude of preparing for the coming of the Lord. So it was no more a question of the Lord's return. The Apostle departed, having worked faithfully, but having failed to bring the Church to manhood in Christ.

There were other efforts to revive the Church. There was a time when the West cried to the East for help. John realised what Paul knew, that the Church could not go on only serving and no longer waiting for the coming of the Lord. As it was with Daniel, the Old Testament prophet, so it was with John: both understood the fall of Zion. The prophet lay for three weeks fasting and crying, and then the heaven was rent and light came. In like manner, do you think that the twenty-two chapters of the Book of the Revelation have come from heaven without preparation in the instrument? In the Old Testament the word "came" to such an one, but in the New there is a deeper and more organic relation between the spirit of the prophets and the Holy Ghost. I can see this man who had been exiled, humanly speaking, by the Roman emperor to the island of Patmos, but who in reality had been exiled by the Head of the Church, to plead the interest of the Church.

In Rev. i., comparing verses 2 and 9, you will see that the Apostle was exiled for the very purpose of receiving a revelation for the Church, "for the Word of God and for the testimony of Jesus." This was the man about whom the Lord said: "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" As Paul in Troas received a call through that night vision towards the West, so the waves of the ocean now brought to the seer in Patmos a call from the East, from Asia Minor, a similar request, "come over and help us." This was the man of whom the disciples inquired, as he lay in the bosom of the Master; he had launched into the Spirit of God, into the depths of the spiritual glory of Jesus Christ. He saw the glory of Christ in the past eternity, and his Gospel begins as none other does. Now he receives an appeal to HELP THE FALLEN CHURCH.

In earlier days he was told to "ask the Master"; now there is communicated to him a great secret. Like every true prophet, John knew the mind of God, and was assured that He would not leave the Church without ability to serve, and without preparation to wait for Jesus. How will the Bride wait, if she does not make ready for the marriage? The Church must wait for Him who is to deliver the whole creation that groaneth. If we do not travail with the entire creation, it is because we have forgotten our duty to creation.

For years, perhaps, the seer said "Lord, hast thou no more a message for us?" I am convinced that we should not have had the last book of Scripture, the Apocalypse, if the Church had yielded to the exhortations of Paul, and gone on to manhood in Christ Jesus. It was the true and definite ministry of the Holy Ghost to lead the Church into all truth. This is very clear from John xvi. 13. How could the Spirit perform its ministry when the Church was doing that which the Apostle Paul described as "grieving the Spirit?" If the Church did this terrible thing, how could she wait for the coming of the Lord?

The Lord Jesus spoke to the multitude in parables, and explained the secret things to his disciples. Jesus Christ, on going away, left everything in the hands of the Holy Spirit; but if the Church grieves the Spirit, He is silenced, and then what must be done? What happened is this: Jesus appears again, in order that his people may be made to know what the Spirit no longer could say directly to the churches. In this book the Lord addresses the churches without parables, in the same style as the writings of Paul. In the seven letters, sent down from heaven, not through the Holy Ghost, there is one characteristic common to all. With all the variety, according to the standing and condition of the Church, there is one identical line going through them. The unfaithfulness of Israel of old finds its counterpart in the condition of the churches of Asia. The messages are very different one from another, and at length Christ leaves the church and speaks to the individual—"He that overcometh, he that hath an ear."

In what epistle is the most glorious promise given to the overcomer? It is to those living in the Laodicean church, the lukewarm church. There was no church in which, humanly speaking, it was so impossible to overcome. In no other condition are you so directly thrown back upon Jesus as in such depressing circumstances. Christ is equal to the most impossible situations, and will give the believer victory over all hindrances, even to the redemption of the body. Such overcomers go on purifying themselves from everything that is not of Christ, and will at length know what it is to be transformed from glory to glory as they wait for the Christ's appearing a second time unto salvation.

FORGIVENESS AND CLEANSING.

By REV. CHARLES INWOOD.

If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness (1 John i. 9).

No matter how large the number of our sins, no matter how great their magnitude or how awful their turpitude, God has made provision for their complete forgiveness. All this has been done at tremendous cost, Jesus Christ bearing our sins in his own body on the tree. Pierced and insulted, mocked, and crowned with thorns, and spit upon, He trod the winepress of the wrath of Almighty God; coming under the power of the world's curse, until the awful load broke his heart on Calvary. The most costly thing in the world is sin, and it must fall either on the sinner or his substitute.

It is of supreme importance that we should get from God complete pardon for all the sins He has disclosed to us. There is pardon for all. "As the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear Him." What a wonderful text, especially for Christians. Astronomers can tell us of stars so distant that the light travelling for thousands of years has only just reached the earth. You cannot measure the height of the heavens, and yet God tells us that as the height of the highest heaven is above the earth, so great is his mercy. God has made ample provision for the complete and glorious pardon of all the sins which are marring, staining, your Christian life. There is more than that. We need more than pardon; we also need cleansing, which means more than forgiveness and goes further. And, according to the text, God has made full provision for this as well as for pardon. Forgiveness is something that takes place in God's heart; cleansing is something which takes place in mine. Forgiveness deals with acts of transgression and the guilt which relates thereto; cleansing deals rather with inward dispositions from which the outward acts spring. Forgiveness deals with the punishment of sin; cleansing with its defilement and domination. Forgiveness restores me, a sinner, to a righteous relation to God; cleansing fits me for communion with God.

BLIGHTING AND PARALYSING

Cleansing "from all unrighteousness," from whatever is sinful in motive, in choice, in desire, from all sinful lusts and habits, from all love of sin, from all secret desire after sin,—this means cleansing from all sympathy with sin, a being so cleansed that fellowship with a holy God becomes real and natural and delightful and unbroken, in a heart of intense and growing moral sensitiveness, and in the presence of the light of God Himself.

Is it not suggestive that though the word "all" is not in that part of the text which deals with pardon, it is in that regarding the cleansing? Probably the reason is because it seems so much harder to believe that God can cleanse us from all unrighteousness than that He can pardon our sins; and perhaps it is because God knows that we find it harder to trust for cleansing than for pardon, that He makes that part doubly strong for our encouragement. When you come up to that expression "from all unrighteousness," do not seek to measure it, but get down, and in the light of God's own Word, pray the precious prayer of the saintly Murray McChesney, "O God, make me as holy as a saved sinner can be." The cleansing is as complete as the pardon, and as instantaneous, and both rest on the same ground. We must look at the promise, not in the light of ourselves, but solely in the light of the unchanging faithfulness of God Himself.

Pardon and cleansing both lead us to the one fountain. As the blood of Jesus Christ is the one and only ground of our justification before God, so also the blood of Jesus Christ, applied by the Mighty Spirit, is the one agent in God's hands in cleansing from all unrighteousness. Turn away from conceptions, from views, from experiences, to which alone washes the black heart white and clean. If pardon for all the sins we have discovered is possible to us; if cleansing of the heart from all sin is possible; if victory over the power and love of sin is possible—then upon what condition may this blessing be mine? What a joy it is to be able to tell you that there is absolutely no bar on God's side to the pardon of your sins or the cleansing of your heart! But there is one condition—"if we confess our sin." That looks very simple at first. I used to think that it opened a very easy door into this blessing; but I confess it does not look so to me now. It is a very searching test. "If we confess our sins"! Pardon is no easier to the Christian than it is to the rebel. God will not deal with the sins of the Christian in a way which will lead him to think lightly of sin, or will lead him to imagine that God thinks lightly of sin in his children. If God hates sin in those who do not love Him, I imagine He must hate it still more in those who profess to know and love Him. So He says, "Confess"; not a partial or halting, or hesitating confession, nor an apologetic one; but the confession of a soul that has deliberately come into the strongest light that God pours upon a soul, and of a soul which, powerfully convicted by the Holy Ghost, makes a full and specific confession, in fact, "a clean breast" to God. Deliverance from the guilt and power of sin waits upon your honest confession.

If we confess our sins, then what? "He is faithful and just to forgive," etc. In other words, if we are prepared to make an honest, broken-hearted confession, we may rest upon the faithfulness and righteousness of God to forgive and cleanse us. Do not think of your feelings, do not think of your faith; the faithfulness of God is the only answer you can give to the suggestions of the devil or to the fears of your own heart. Look away from the sin, shame, misery, and heart-break, right to God Himself, and let his faithfulness fill the whole circle of your vision, until you grow blind to feelings, to faith, to experience, blind to all but the loving faithfulness of the God who never breaks his word.

God says this word. Do you believe it? If you do not, then I dare not hold back from you one of the most awful texts in the Bible—"He that believeth not God, hath made Him a liar." Make confession to Him at once, and fall back upon his promise. Say: "O God, thy promise is enough for me. I dare to believe that here and now Thou dost pardon and cleanse even me.

"Precious, precious blood of Jesus,
Now it makes me whole,
Now it flows in mighty cleansing
O'er my soul.

"Precious, precious blood of Jesus,
Ever flowing free,
I believe it, I receive it,
'Tis for me!"

REV. E. H. HOPKINS

ON THE KESWICK MOVEMENT.

Some of us look back to the early days of 1873, and we have been tracing the different stages through which the Holy Spirit has been leading us in this movement. It is the Lord's movement: we see how He has been educating us, how He has been teaching us that one of the most blessed things is the rest of faith. Dear Canon Battersby stepped into it; I remember the evening so well. We had been reading about the nobleman whose son was sick, and who had come fifteen or twenty miles with a very heavy burden. He had a very real faith, not in the doctors, but in Jesus of Nazareth, and he took pains to find Him out, and he said to Him, "Come down, ere my child die." "Go thy way, thy son liveth." The man believed the word that Jesus had spoken, and he went away. There is the resting faith. He did not see or realise anything; he had received no message, he was many miles away; but he had the word of the Son of God, and he rested on it, and went away without the burden.

You are all believers, but some of you are only seeking, and are very restless, very anxious; you do believe in Christ, but you have got a heavy burden. "Be still," and let the burden go, let yourselves go right down in Him, the Almighty God. "Be still and know that I am God." Canon Battersby stepped into the rest of faith; it was the opening of a little door into a new region, and then other blessings followed. I beseech you, if you are without this rest of faith, listen to these words of your God—

Why be still? Because there is so much restlessness. What does it come from? Often from pride, the desire for pre-eminence, the desire to be great, to be somebody. Then there is so much impatience. You do not like to be reproved, you feel inclined to resent it. Oh, for stillness, and to be so occupied with God that man sinks into nothing! And then there is so much false energy; there is the energy of youth, the energy of a strong will, the energy of natural enthusiasm. All this must go. "Cease from it," says God—

You say: "I am a Christian, but I feel it is all dark. I want to follow the Lord." Well, what does God say? "Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God." That is still—ness. Just be quiet. There is a father with a number of children prattling round him; they cannot hear what he says, but he calls them to come to him and sit and be quiet, and then he talks to them. So many of us are filled with our own own activities and plans; we are so impatient, we cannot hear God's voice. Let Him speak. Be quiet, and wait upon God.

REV. G. H. C. MACGREGOR
ON THE LIFE OF VICTORY.

It is perfectly true what you say: you cannot shake yourself free from evil things in your life. Peter could not have made his way through that prison (Acts xii.). Herod knew how to build his prisons, and he made them strong. And you cannot get out of your prison. You have been trying to break off your fetters by your own strength, and to wrestle with the guards, and to beat your way through that door—that is why you are so weary, and find the Christian life terribly hard.

Will you learn that you cannot keep that temper, and put away that proud heart, and keep that finger of mischievousness back? With all these things you are utterly unable to deal. Will you just sink down in utter nothingness before God and cry, "O God, I long to be holy; I know I must be holy if I would see Thee, and yet I cannot be holy"? Will you sit down in absolute despair and cry, "My God, Thou must do it"? for it is when we come to an utter end of ourselves, and give the battle up as hopeless, that we are ready for God to step in, in the marvellous power of his love and grace, and to do the work that sets us wondering and praising all our life.

REV. F. S. WEBSTER
ON THE LIFE OF DEVOTION.

In the case of Elisha the new life (1 Kings xix. 19) meant a life of devotion to Elijah. He went after him and ministered unto him. From that day you never found Elijah without Elisha being near, and years afterwards he was known by this honourable title, "Elisha, the son of Shaphat, that poured water upon the hands of Elijah." I ask of you a life of devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ, not the following afar off of Peter, denying the Lord who bought you, but such a life that your one thought day by day, week in and week out, is this:—"I belong to Jesus, I love Jesus, I am all for Jesus, I am the servant, the bondsman, the personal attendant of the Lord Jesus Christ." Oh, beloved, you may pour water on the hands of Jesus, you may give Jesus to drink, you may refresh Jesus, you may make glad the heart of Jesus. He waits for your service. As Joshua ministered unto Moses, as Elisha ministered unto Elijah, so you may minister unto Jesus Christ.

But if you want to minister to Jesus, you must keep close to Jesus. It is not by philanthropy alone; there must first of all be the love of Christ, then all that you do in his name is done for Him and done to Him. And then as a follower of Elijah he was separated from the old life. It was a life of separation, this new life to which Elisha was called. He had to bid good-bye to the life on the farm, to the father's counsel and the mother's love. It must be so; though in the world, we are not of it. There must be separation; it will come in the right way; as we follow Jesus He separates us from the world. Elisha's was a life of toil and hardship; his master was rejected and hated, and he shared his lot. You cannot be the Lord's disciple unless you carry the Lord's cross.

Advances in China.—The Christian Alliance declares that "among the signal blessings of the year are three remarkable advances in China. The first is the entrance of four missionaries into Eastern Tibet. The second is the remarkable opening of the long-closed province of Kuang si, where already we have several stations. The third is the advance into the great province of Hunan. God seems, at last, to have broken the barriers down, and two of our young men are now preparing to enter that opening door and plant the standard of Christ in the long-closed province of Hunan."

Students in South Africa.

IN our last issue we gave a brief report of the Students' Conference recently held at Stellenbosch. A correspondent there sends some additional particulars of much interest. He says:—

Stellenbosch is a quaint little Dutch town, about thirty miles from Capetown, and easily reached by rail. Founded more than two hundred years ago by the Dutch governor, Simon van der Stel, it at once attracted to itself a number of Dutch settlers, whose ranks were reinforced by the arrival of the French Huguenots, banished from their native land on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685. In Stellenbosch the Dutch Reformed Church of South Africa is specially interested, for its theological seminary with thirty-seven students is there. The Cape University is represented by Victoria College, which gathers to its class rooms students from the Cape Colony, the Dutch Republics, and Natal. These educational institutions have given Stellenbosch a name and a reputation far beyond the limits of S. Africa. Alumni of both institutions have from time to time continued their studies in several of the older Universities of Europe, where they have acquitted themselves with credit to their South Africa alma mater. No place, therefore, could have been better chosen for the first Christian students' gathering. Two seminaries for young ladies, equally well known as centres of education, served to swell the ranks of the Stellenbosch contingent.

Christian work is not unknown in Stellenbosch. The venerable Prof. Hofmeyr, the Nestor of South African professors, and his colleagues at the Theological Seminary, Professors Marais and de Vos, with the pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church, Rev. J. H. Neethling—brother-in-law to Rev. Andrew Murray—have for years devoted much of their time and energy to the students gathered there. A flourishing Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Association, a Bible-class conducted by Prof. Hofmeyr, unique in character, attendance, and spiritual result, are special characteristics of the work among students; while a well-organised Christian Endeavour Society has kept them in bonds of true Christian fellowship with the members and the pastor of the Dutch congregation. Work of a missionary character has been carried on for years.

Apart from individual effort put forth by the various associations, a students' missionary society has been in existence for some time, the object being the creation and maintenance of a missionary spirit in both colleges and the support of a missionary in the foreign field. A past member of the society, Rev. A. M. Hofmeyr, receives that support, and his mission-station, situated in the Umvol district, Natal, gives great promise of successful work.

Many denominations were represented at the conference (which extended from July 24 to 28), the speakers having been carefully selected by the committee of management. The students represented twenty-eight educational institutions, scattered over South Africa, even far-off Bloemfontein, capital of the Orange Free State, having sent its delegate. Racial and denominational distinctions were forgotten, and as the impressions deepened under the stirring addresses of the various speakers, the hidden unity underlying all differences of dogma and of creed became apparent.

The consecration and decision meetings were deeply interesting. To find student after student rising and testifying to what he had experienced during the Conference made some of the more reserved among us tremble. But to all of us it was a most hopeful sign of the stability of the work. We praised God, though it was with fear and trembling. At one meeting £42 was collected on behalf of the South African Union—a large sum when the character and the personnel of the gathering is taken into consideration. The response was so hearty that those who organised the Conference will "thank God and take courage."

Much prayer was made for this Conference. Now that the desires of many hearts have been fulfilled beyond all expectation, and the earnest cry, "the young of South Africa for Christ" has been answered in the mission of Messrs. Wishard and Fraser, we recall the words of the Psalmist: "The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

Mr. Wishard has left us. Mr. Fraser remains to visit other colleges and to organise the work at other educational centres. The future is in God's hands. What we need is a travelling secretary and organiser. Will Christians in England and America pray for this land of Good Hope, and this work of Good Hope, with its wondrous possibilities and its glorious promises of a blessed future?

THE EVANGELIST.

The Forgiveness of Sins.*

YOU say you trust God for answers to your prayers for necessary things, and are content, when He does not answer as you desired, that it is better you should be without it. Well, that shows faith in God, and confidence in God, so far as it goes. But you are "sure if you died you would not go to heaven." And you ask, Why is that? Is it not because you have not accepted for yourself personally the great salvation which God has provided in Christ Jesus, his only begotten and well-beloved Son?

Eve definitely listened to the lies of the tempter; his deceit and disobedience entered her heart, and she acted in accordance with her faith in the serpent, and obeyed him, and disobeyed God. The Satanic nature took possession of her. She died toward God, and was born again in an evil sense, born from beneath, and thus became a child of the wicked one; and, as Adam and Eve could only transmit their own fallen nature, we read in 1 John that "Cain was of that wicked one."

But though Abel was born with the same fallen nature, he retraced the path that his parents had trodden—repented, turned to God, believed Him, was born again in a good sense, was born from above, became a child of God, confessed himself a sinner, brought a lamb and offered it up in his own stead, a sacrifice to God, looking on, however dimly, to the Lamb of God, the seed of the woman, who should, in God's due time appear, to bruise the serpent's head, and to bear away the sin of the world, and deliver them who, through fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage (see Heb. ii. 14).

I trust and believe that Adam and Eve had, before Abel, come back to God, and become children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, though as yet He had only been promised as the woman's seed, whose heel the serpent should bruise, but who should bruise the serpent's head. Now you see, my dear friend, that we may trust God for earthly things, and yet not have come to Him through Jesus Christ, his Son, our Lord, whom God gave (because He loved us, so infinitely loved us), that He might bear our sins in his own body on the tree.

You say you feel so wicked. I am not sorry to hear that. Abel felt wicked, Cain did not. Abel knew the plague of his own heart, having been convinced of sin by the Holy Ghost. Therefore he brought a lamb, whose blood he shed, in confession that his own life was forfeited; and he leaned upon the lamb, showing that all his dependence was on the offering, which foreshadowed the offering of the true Lamb of God.

Cain only paid homage to God as the Creator, but made no confession of his sin. He had no troubled conscience before God. He was the first Pharisee, as Abel was the first publican. Compare the Lord's parable of the Pharisee and publican.

Now you see, dear friend, you cannot enjoy peace with God and forgiveness of sin until you have definitely listened to the Gospel of God—the glad tidings of Jesus, who has put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, and entered into that new covenant with God which He has made with Christ on our behalf—"Their sins and iniquities will I remember no more."

But this only relates to the past; and I think your next question will be, If I do thus come to God, and am forgiven and reconciled, how shall I live a better life in the future than I have in the past? Answer: When you believe in Jesus, God gives you his Holy Spirit (see Acts ii. 38), and though the flesh is against the Spirit, the Spirit is against the flesh, so that we may not do the things that we would (see Gal. v. 16, 17, R.V.). Therefore, He is able to keep us from falling, and to present us unblameable before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy.

Paul at the end of his life called himself the chief of sinners. The nearer he got to the glory of God the more he felt his own sinfulness. So I am not sorry that you feel it too. In 1 John i., 7, we could not endure the light unless the blood of Jesus was always cleansing us from sin.

The Armenian Martyrs.

By CANON HICKS.*

Wherefore should the heathen say: Where is their God? O let the vengeance of thy servant's blood that is shed be openly showed upon the heathen in our sight.—Psalm lxxix. 10-11.

THESE inspired verses, this agonising prayer of the Psalmist, moved our Milton to pen that stirring sonnet which re-echoes in the heart of England to-day:—

Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints whose bones
Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold.

Forget not: in thy book record their groans
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold
Slain by the bloody Piedmontese that rolled Mother with infant down the rocks. Their moans
The vales redoubled to the hills, and they
To heaven.

We ask, however, for no vengeance, save reform; we cry to God for nought else beyond peace and order, and safety of life and conscience for the hapless nation that claims our intercession this day. But we do ask, and ask importunately of God and man, for an end to these horrors in the East. There needs be with us at this hour the pen of a Milton and the sceptre of a Cromwell, to awaken the Christian conscience, and to nerve the national will.

A colossal and incredible crime is being committed under our eyes, while we—as if in some hideous nightmare—sit spell-bound. A whole nation is being done to death, steadily, deliberately, with the malignity of fiendish design. Month by month the ghastly work goes on; year after year.

We mistake, if we think of these atrocities as occasional and only out of the way. They are part of the ordinary methods of government employed by the Turk upon the Christian populations in his dominions. But at times oppression deepens into persecution, and cruelty into massacre. And then Europe is startled for a while with the shriek of these far-off slaughters, and again is glad to forget them.

I am not curious to arrive at the exact numbers done to death in these massacres. It may be 25,000, or it may be 100,000. Take the lower estimate, and the recorded total is awful enough. Thousands more are dying of hunger and misery upon the mountain sides.

It is not slaughter alone that moves our horror. In those scenes of carnage that sicken our minds, to read of death itself would seem a mercy if dealt simply and at once. But there is lingering death, death amid contumely and scorn, death made tenfold more dreadful by every form of fiendish torture—the cutting out of tongues, the gouging of eyes, the slashing of limbs, the burning alive. Nay, there are barbarities worse than these; there are dishonour and violation and insults unspeakable inflicted upon those whose sex and age might mark them for compassion and pity.

We desire not to lay the burthen of these crimes at the door of any Government, save one—and that is the Government of the Turk; although there is a sense in which England has a very real responsibility in this matter. Everyone knows that fifty years ago Russia claimed to be the effective protector of the Christian peoples under Turkish sway. This claim we denied, and by force of arms, in the frightful Crimean war, we substituted the concert of Europe for the protectorate of Russia. Later, in 1878, when Russia had intervened to protect the Balkan States from atrocities like the present, and had dictated the treaty of San Stefano, we interposed again, and tearing up the draft-treaty, we substituted the treaty of Berlin, placing once more the protection of Eastern Christians in the hands of united Europe. Nay, more. By a secret treaty we took over the island of Cyprus as a pledge that we would protect the Sultan from invasion, upon his promising to reform the government of his Armenian and Christian subjects.

It is a small thing to say that these treaties have never been fulfilled. They have been trodden under foot by the Turk, and Europe has been impotent to act. I blame no Power in particular. I do not defend the cynical attitude of Russia, who seems to bar the way of reform to-day as England barred it in 1878; who seems to want Armenia, but to want it without the Armenians. Yet even Russia may justify herself by reminding us of our attitude during the last half century. "Why should I," she may ask, "make enormous sacrifices to defend these Christian peoples, if England every time robs my benevolence of its tangible reward?"

Certainly it is a tangled skein of diplomacy—this Eastern question! Let us concede that it baffles our wit, as it baffles the wit of all our statesmen. Let us assume that some awful blunder has been made, but so far back that we cannot time it. Let us allow that England has done all she could and all she ought, and that these horrors could have been prevented by no human hand.

Then all the more reason for us to fall on our knees and cry to heaven, since "the things which are impossible with men are possible with God." For, if, indeed, no help can be found, and our expression of sympathy does but display our impotence, goad the tyrant to more fiendish hate, then the horror of the crisis is so much deeper. Is Europe so utterly impotent? Has Christendom come to this? Is the dream of human brotherhood so ridiculous a failure? Is Russia so jealous of England, and we of Russia, and France or Germany of one or the other, that none dare move hand or foot? And while the Christian Powers look at each other in mutual mistrust, is the Anti-Christ of the Dardanelles to wreak his ruthless cruelty and lust on our brother and sister believers?

If Christianity indeed be fallen so low it is time that we betook ourselves to prayer. "O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance." And there is need for us not only to pray, but to smite on our breasts and own our national sins. Can we deny that mercenary motives have done their part in bringing us to this shameful pass? Was it not British interests that made us so ready to believe in the bona-fides of the Turk, and to treat the Porte as a civilised Power? Can we doubt that if the interests of British trade had been concerned in Armenian reforms—if British capital, and not merely British honour, had been concerned as much (let us say) as in the Gold Coast, or Mashonaland, or on the Nile; if "there had been money in it," Armenia would be as safe from misgovernment this day as Ashanti?

One ray of comfort shines out through the gloom of this Eastern darkness. These peasant men and women, these youths and maidens of tender years, have met their death amid torture and shame unspeakable, because they would not deny their Lord. They have been martyrs to the faith. They have washed their robes, in very truth, in the Blood of the Lamb. A few have lapsed under stress of pain, or in terror for their friends. Many have been driven by wholesale violence into the faith of Islam. But the thousands upon thousands that have perished could have purchased their lives by apostasy, and yet they refused.

This martyrdom of a nation is, I think, a fact unique in history. It transcends even the persecution of Domitian or Diocletian. There never was witness so grandly given to the power of the Cross. The faith of these martyrs, you may think, had not all the enlightenment which we Christians boast of in the West. Most of them belonged to the native Armenian Church: some of them to congregations of the Protestant faith. Not a few of these had been students in the Armenian College at Constantinople, and one at least had received the orders of our English Church. But whatever their Church, their Christian faith has stood the test; they have sealed it with their blood.

And their heroism may inspire us with fresh hope and devotion. We do well to have faith in a creed which can make heroes like these. Let us catch some of the glow of their devotion, as we fight in our own battlefields—amid opposition and ridicule and failure—against the world, the flesh, and the devil.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune writes:—

A private letter from an English friend who has lately visited the scenes of several of the Armenian massacres tells an incident which I have not yet seen in print. At Oorfa, where several thousand Armenians were massacred or burned in the great church, a large number of young women were carried off. For some time it was not known what had become of them. Then it was learned that they had been distributed among various harems in Oorfa and elsewhere. Some weeks later a foreign physician resident in another city was sent for secretly to attend a sick woman. My friend's letter continues:—

"He was led by many winding passages to an inner room in a Turkish house, and there he found one of these poor Oorfa girls dying from the results of the treatment she had received. She was in delirium, and kept calling out in Armenian, and the Turks wanted to know what it was that she said. The doctor evaded their inquiries, for in truth it was a constant reiteration of her faith and a refusal to deny it. 'I am a Christian, I am a Christian!' was all her cry. In a few hours she had gone 'where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest'!"

Friendless and Failen.

WE are carrying on the beneficent design of these Homes day by day with the earnest desire to "save to the uttermost." The expenses thus involved have exceeded for several weeks the income received. It is not possible to curtail the work during this season, unless we withhold the helping hand to many poor creatures who appeal for succour. Upwards of fifty such applications have already been received this month, and prompt help has been given in every suitable case.

The preventive Homes for respectable friendless girls, who are being trained in the various branches of domestic service, are doing a noble work by protecting and fitting for honourable positions in life those who, on account of their friendless condition, would become an easy prey to the vicious. Over eighty such young girls are in the Homes. The Rescue Homes are also actively working to restore to society those who have been drawn aside from the path of virtue, and it is known that the religious instruction imparted is the means of leading many wanderers to begin a new life in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, so that something more than a moral reformation is accomplished by God's blessing upon the means employed.

I often wish it were possible for the friends of this mission to know what is going on for the protection of the friendless and the rescue of the fallen; but to make public even a small part would often be very objectionable, and might be construed into an effort to make capital out of the misfortunes or failures of others. We can, however, occasionally let our work be known, as in the cases recorded a few weeks since under the head "What shall we do for them?" Many readers have seen from time to time in the daily papers the case of a young French girl, who appears to have been inveigled from Dieppe to London for a supposed immoral purpose. None of those reports contain any reference to the fact that this institution has been taking charge of the young woman for nearly three weeks while the proceedings have been pending in the police-court. This is one instance which in various ways repeats itself during the year. The last report of the Society contains a record of three foreign women who were helped during that year. I shall be pleased to forward copies of the report and other papers to any address on application.

AFTER the long spell of baking and exhausting summer heat in London, the holiday interval this August seemed doubly welcome. Sunshine and warmth in the country are very different things from the torrid glare of the city streets; in the woods, by the brooks and waterfalls, or on the mountain slopes, there are so many compensations.

In these days of quick and easy travel, the Norway fiords, the Swiss mountains, the Italian lakes, and other distant shrines of majestic nature, attract many. But the claims and charms of our own Scottish highlands are not to be despised; all the more by those to whom they gave the first breath of life. For the western highlands of Perthshire there is no better or more convenient centre than the little town of CRIEFF.

It lies cradled on the southern slope of a goodly hill in the upper reach of Strathearn; with the towering Grampians away to the north and west, while the less-imposing Ochils bound the horizon on the south and east.

If nature has done much for this beautiful district, human art and industry have not been behind-hand. I have not sojourned in any place where the great landowners are more considerate of the wishes of the common crowd. Drummond Castle and its world-famed gardens are open to all and sundry on three days of the week. If the garden in Eden was half as delightful to the eye as these marvellous harmonies in colour, one can but find an additional reason for wonder and sorrow at our first parents' dissatisfaction with the bounty of the great Creator. The model proprietor of the Ochertyre estate "goes one better" than his neighbours; he not only keeps open gate to his extensive grounds on every lawful day; he not only freely supplies the Crieff residents and the boarding-house keepers with boats for rowing and fishing in the lake; he actually provides to picnic parties, at his own cost, the appliances necessary for preparing meals within his borders. Such a unique instance of kindly generosity deserves to be embalmed in the grateful memory of a sordid generation.

Six miles to the west of Crieff is the village of Comrie, the seat of most of the seismic disturbance in Scotland; and the birthplace of the late George Gilfillan, whose volcanic pulpit utterances in Dundee were wont to create upheavals in the region of Scottish theology. Crieff, of calmer mood, produced Dr. Stalker, of Free St. Matthew's, Glasgow, whose teaching, if less meteoric than that of his Comrie brother, will leave a more enduring mark on the thought of the age. A little to the north of Crieff is Logiealmond, the "Drumtochty" of "Ian Mac-laren." No self-respecting visitor to Strathearn will miss the drive to the "Sma Glen," which the prince of "Kailyarders" has immortalized as part of the far-spreading parish of "Doctor Weelum Maclure," the idol of Drumtochty folk. This glen (a miniature Glencoe) is the reputed burial place of the Celtic poet Ossian; apart from that its undoubted attractions are substantial. To the cyclist—and the wheel is the most obtrusive thing in Scotland now as elsewhere—I can honestly commend the ride from Crieff, by Comrie, St. Fillans, on by the northern lip of Loch Earn to its western end, and back by the other side. The spin of forty odd miles, on a glorious August day, between breakfast and luncheon, was an exhilarating experience.

I must not omit to refer to the famous "Hydro-pathic," which is such a prominent feature in the town landscape, and to which in no small measure Crieff's popularity is doubtless due. Under the fostering care of the resident physician-superintendent, Dr. Meikle, it continues a career of unbroken prosperity. Within its goodly precincts access of physical health, cultured society, and Christian privileges are happily combined.

Crieff is amply supplied with churches—Presbyterian, Episcopal, Baptist, Congregational, &c. It may interest some intending visitors to know that it can also boast of a Brethren's meeting. On the Sunday evening of my short stay I heard, in the Free Church, one of the most interesting and encouraging statements about Christian work in the Chinese Empire to which I have ever listened. The speaker was Mr. Murray, one of the agents of the National Bible Society of Scotland. During the past eight years he has traversed, with his Bibles and colporteurs, a very large part of that vast empire. His account of the general friendliness of the people, of the help freely rendered to him by mandarins and other persons in authority, of the avidity with which the people purchase and peruse the Christian Scriptures, and of other phases in the present outlook as to Chinese missions, was indeed gratifying, and calculated to put heart into the supporters of the Society which Mr. Murray so ably represents.

INVERNESS.

I reluctantly bade farewell to this lovely spot in central Scotland (I have not exhausted half its beauties), and hied me northwards by the picturesque Highland Railway to the Highland capital par excellence, Inverness. This was more familiar ground, and one noted with pleasure the growth of the city. On the heights, overlooking the Moray Firth, quite a new district has been created by the builder within recent years. "Tomnahurich," the uniquely-situated place of burial for the neighbourhood; the noble, rapid-running Ness that divides the town; the islands with their bridges and umbrageous shady walks (that suggest, at a vast distance of course, the "seven sisters" of the Niagara rapids); the view from Castle Hill—these and other points of interest are greatly admired by the visitor and passing tourist. All the church buildings in Inverness seem to be gravitating towards the banks of the river. The spire of the new Free North overtops its fellows, and yet another Free Church with a red-roofed turret dome is approaching completion on the opposite side. The Free High Church, the scene of the late Dr. Donald Fraser's Scottish ministry, has had as its pastor for more than a quarter of a century Rev. Dr. Black. The passing years are making their mark on his physique, but he retains all his Hibernian fervour of spirit. The fine church was well filled on the Sabbath morning of my visit, and I could detect in the opening devotional exercises by the pastor, echoes of the Keswick Conference, from which he had recently returned. The resumption of the Sunday-school work for the winter was intimated, and Dr. Black made a strenuous appeal to children and young people to rally to the classes in increasing numbers; not to think that because they might be verging on manhood or womanhood they were too old for participating in the privileges of the school.

The discourse was by a "layman," Mr. Martin, of Glasgow, who after a short exposition of Ezekiel's vision of the valley of dry bones, gave a comprehensive and most interesting sketch of the history of the Free Evangelical Church of Italy and its present opportunities. Now is the time, he urged, to strain every nerve for the evangelisation of that fair land of the South, so that Italy, once the centre of gospel light, may again hold aloft the torch of truth and spiritual freedom. At the close he made the admirable suggestion that the congregation might in a retiring collection contribute at least £15, the cost of maintaining the work of the Free Italian Church for one day. Dr. Black warmly seconded the appeal, but I did not learn whether the desired result was attained. It was certainly not much for such a congregation—the cost of a solitary bicycle. I pass on Mr. Martin's suggestion to any Christian congregation or friend of gospel work in Italy who wish to have a humble partnership in such a good business.

On the Sabbath evening I attended the Wesleyan chapel, and heard a discourse of much rugged strength, and full of helpful teaching, from Rev. Arthur Hoyle, on our Lord's temptation to fall down and worship Satan, in exchange for the kingdoms of this world and the glory of them. Mr. Hoyle is now closing a four years' term of service in Inverness, and moving elsewhere, according to Methodist custom. He has made a distinct mark on the spiritual and social life of the community, and has been very successful in attracting young people to his earnest ministry. The chapel, a comparatively new one, was very full on the evening of my visit, and there is talk of building again, though the congregation is far from a wealthy one.

STRATHPEFFER.

A flying visit to Strathpeffer—the Saratoga of Scotland—was an enjoyable item in the holiday programme. The growth of this Highland sanatorium has been almost phenomenal in the past two decades. Its medicinal waters are in great request by the victims of rheumatic and allied complaints while the bracing air and beautiful scenery of the strath attract many others who are simply on pleasure bent. The scene around the pump-room at mid-day, when the visitors are drinking the waters, to the accompaniment of pathetic or stirring Scottish music from the band, wears quite an animated and fashionable aspect.

The religious needs of the residents, and of the greatly-enlarged summer population, are well catered for. New edifices for public worship have lately been built by the Established and Free Churches. In the latter, Rev. John McNeill ministered for a season with much acceptance a few summers ago; and a pastor has now been happily settled after a long and trying vacancy, due to the difficulty of satisfying the requirements both of the Gaelic and English-speaking sections of the community. I observe that a Christian convention is to be held at Strathpeffer next month. Considering the wide—almost world-wide—area from which the yearly visitors are drawn, one would expect fruitful and far-reaching results to follow such a convention, held annually, and wisely conducted, on Keswick lines.

A few further stray notes of a brief Highland holiday must be deferred to another issue.

Harvest Hymn.

A world's provision stored!
Its teeming millions rest;
His power, who sits above adored,
Once more the earth has blest.
Earth is his garden still,
Made fruitful by his power;
Nature itself performs his will,
And his the sun and shower.
No mind can comprehend
The infinite supply
Which, in his goodness, He doth send,
From his blest throne on high.
Be ours to own his love
Made known the wide world o'er,
With joy to raise our songs above,
And his great name adore!

ALBERT MIDLANE.

Mr. Fegan's Homes.—A correspondent writing from Wisboro' Green, Sussex, says: "The boys are all 'camping out' at Wisboro' and enjoying their stay very much; the Gospel tent is filled to overflowing each evening, and on Sundays there are more outside than in; the people come miles to hear. We trust there will be great blessing."

Shaftesbury Memorial Hall, Borough.—The report of this Mission shows many good results from the personal work of the missionary, Mr. John Coles. Changed lives have evidenced the cheering issue. Meetings are held almost daily in the Mission Hall. They are well attended, the Gospel services being most encouraging. At the temperance meetings fifty persons have been induced to sign the pledge. The mothers' meetings have now an average attendance of sixty. A good work is also going on among the children. The hon. sec. is Mr. M. R. Moser, 23, Maresfield-gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

Southern Morocco Mission.

SOUTHERN Morocco lies very near the home-land, yet little more than seven-and-a-half years ago it had not a single missionary set apart for Gospel work among Moslems. South of Rabat all the coast towns were unoccupied by God's servants except Mogador, the last port of call, where Mr. and Mrs. Zerib and their colporteur had their headquarters for work among the Jews. At intervals they itinerated, visiting both coast towns and the interior; but what could so few do in such a large district with its millions of souls? About that time the Southern Morocco Mission was formed, and now we see medical missionaries occupying all the coast towns, and in the Southern capital. I have said medical missionaries, for after years of experience we have found that medicine is indispensable if we would reach these people with the Gospel.

As to actual work being done, we wish we were able to give brighter accounts. Being stationed here, I will briefly describe our system of work among the people. At 8.15 a.m. our door is opened, and all who have arrived at this hour come in, the men going to one room and the women to another. There they listen to a plain, simple Gospel message, varying in length from fifteen to forty minutes, according to the interest of the audience. We are glad to be able thus to preach; in no other part of the Moslem world, so far as I am aware, can such liberty of speech be used. Our aim is always to lead them to see in Christ the "Ascended One," their only Saviour and Intercessor. To prove this we draw extensively and strongly from actual facts in their experience. They drink from the fountain of Islam, but because he who first asserted its claims now lies helpless in the grave, purity and equity have deserted their land. We drink at the fountain of Christianity, and because He who first asserted its claims now sits on high, a glorious victor over death and hell, they find in us truth and purity. Daily we see them silenced, unless they fall back on their fatal formula, "There is no God but God, and Mohammed is his apostle."

Having delivered our message, they are then dealt with from the medical standpoint: and oh what sights are disclosed! Nothing but grace can enable us to go on from day to day in midst of such work. But we gladly stick to it because we see the powerful influence on the minds of the people. They testify that we do for them what their own best friends would not do. And we feel that in alleviating such bodily sufferings we are following in the footsteps of Him who went about continually doing good.

Comparing with statistics given from other Moslem lands, we have a larger attendance here in Morocco City than I have noticed elsewhere. We have considerably over 1000 each month. Fewer visit the mission houses in the coast towns; yet even there the work is encouraging. As to results, I must say I have not yet met a genuine convert. One, as we thought, hopeful case has given cause for grief; but we keep praying for him. Faith, however, enables us to see in the future many souls won for Jesus from among this people.

Our needs are known to God; we make them known now to his people. South of this city live millions of precious souls, and not a witness among them. Last autumn I crossed the Atlas to the Soos valley, where Europeans are not allowed to go. The reception accorded me made me long for the time when God's servants shall be in possession of that large district; but as yet it is unoccupied. Will Christian people at home help us?

Recently our hearts have been saddened to see the low state of our Mission funds. In this, sad to say, we are only having an experience similar to many other missions. When will the Church of Christ respond heartily to her Lord's command, and how long will her members deny themselves the luxury of giving to Him that which costs them something? Perhaps someone may read this letter and in it hear the Lord's call to arise and help in person. If so, may his grace enable that soul to respond heartily. Information regarding our work will be given gladly by Mr. John Anderson, 1, Blythwood-square, Glasgow, or by any of us here on the field.

The Care of Children.*

"TAKE this child and nurse it for Me, and I will give thee thy wages," are words which God speaks to the heart of every true Christian mother. The most overwhelming feeling of insufficiency and inability, which all mothers must know something about, is forgotten when we remember God's blessings are his enablings. If in all fervour and sincerity our prayer ascends, "Undertake for me," which implies a daily looking up for guidance, help will surely be ours. First will come the knowledge that to train our children aright means for ourselves to be "obedient children" of the Father. We know, too, that discipline must be enforced. We have suffered, and it seemed as if God did not spare for our crying; we had to learn our lessons of humility and trust, of courage, self-reliance, and endurance in the school of sorrow. This helps us to keep down our natural inclinations of standing between our child and experiences which are necessary for the strengthening and advancing of the character.

It is God's method of doing things. All good comes by way of redemption. "The evening and the morning were the first day." Why should our child have a feeble and faded existence because reared in chronic sunshine? No adverse wind to test and make more sure its rooting, no showers to cleanse from gathering dust and supply the moisture necessary for perfect growth. Why wish for perpetual sunshine? Because ignorant of the true purport and power of training. Perpetual sunshine does not mean uninterrupted happiness, and the sooner young mothers learn this fact the better; as to leave unused the physical organs of our being would mean to rob these organs of healthy action, so the moral being suffers, lacking development, if all its powers are not called into play.

A mother, to spare her child trouble, sets herself the task to tidy up after him at every turn—and the result? He has still undeveloped any love of order dependent upon his own efforts. He grows up untidy, careless of consequences; another hand is responsible for what might prove inconveniences. He is not too nice in his calculations, his mind does not plan a finished work—his but to begin and enjoy, and desist, leaving another to "clear up." He is wasteful with his moments, and by-and-by with his money. And so the foundations of a noble manly character are tampered with. By some happy accident, an outside influence—usually school discipline—may in measure remedy the evil wrought, but lack of home training will be responsible for a distinct weakness, of which no one is more conscious than he who suffers from the loss which misdirected kindness entailed.

How many failures in maturer life may be traced to the fact that in childhood the training had never developed the purpose, and with it the power, to finish a work begun. Fittfulness, restlessness, love of change, constant shifting, upon no better plea than "tired of one thing and wanting to do another," these are the seed-plants of unsettled aim and effort in after life, of perilous indecision which predisposes feebleness and inability to "endure hardness."

The American Volunteers are steadily increasing and doing effective work in the enlargement of their operations. At the central offices in the Bible House, New York City, there are daily on duty twenty-eight officers and fourteen employees, forty-two persons being regularly engaged in the work of the organisation. The weekly five cent organ of the movement, called The Volunteers' Gazette, has already attained a paid circulation of 20,000 copies weekly.

Sunset at Duxhurst.

THE sun had set; the far-away hills were growing darker and more blue as the night drew on. All round the Birds' Nest and beyond, the fields stretching like a great wide plain in the half light, seemed asleep.

Through the open door the babies could be seen in the long dormitory, preparing for bed. Some were in their long white night-gowns, folding their clothes. The bigger girls sat in a little group on the grass before the door, waiting for their call to retire. They had been laughing and singing a few moments before, but as the light faded their voices took a more serious tone. "Liza sat with her short legs stretched out before her, leaning back on her hands, her quaint little face turned up to the sky. "Ain't it 'andsome?" she said, nodding her head towards the fading west. "My! 'aint it 'andsome!"

No one replied, so she went on.

"Sometimes it's like that in London, jist 'bout this time a'night. I sits on our step an' looks at it. I jist loves it—cause it mikes me fink o' 'en," nodding her head towards the cottage. "I allus finks o' 'en when the sky's like that. I finks as 'ow the cottage is agettin' ready for us, an' 'ow as ivery body's agoin' ter mike us 'appy when the summer comes. An' I counts the weeks till the time fer us to come 'en; an' I wants to come that werry minit; an' I finks, an' I finks, an' then I crys."

No one spoke. The air grew darker; a few stars shone in the sky.

It was time to call the children in to bed, but the Sister standing at the door did not speak. She looked away beyond the little group, beyond the blue hills, away till she fancied she saw the hot dreary court in London with its tall houses, and the children sitting on the dirty pavement looking up to the strip of dull sky above. She fancied she heard the loud noise of the street organ grinding out a popular air; the shrill laughter of the girls; the coarse jokes of the women. She almost felt the hot poisonous air reeking with the smell of the gutter. And she saw the faces of the children—dirty, tired faces, faces with a world of care in them, turned up to the strip of sky that told them there was a better life.

It was bedtime. But when they were all asleep someone stood at the open door, and, looking out into the night, thought of the children who were then counting the days till their turn to come, and asked the Great Father that not one of them might be disappointed.

The cottage will be kept open till October if sufficient help is given. Friends should send their gifts to Sister Kathleen, The Birds' Nest, Duxhurst, Reigate, Surrey.

Letters to the Editor.

THE "BEAM AND SCALES" ARGUMENT.

SIR,—Mr. G. F. Trench, in calling attention to the fallacy of comparing the sums spent by the world at large on amusement and recreation, and the total contributions to missionary work, suggests that the comparison should rather be shown between that which is spent by the actual contributors to missions on their own amusements, on the one side, and the £1,300,000 spent on missions, on the other.

Exactly; but how many of the Lord's stewards know what they do spend on missions, or, rather, what proportion of their income they give to the Lord generally? In other words, what proportion of professed believers give proportionately: how many regularly and systematically lay by in store for God as He prospers them? Few, I fear; and yet in this, I believe, is to be found the true solution of a great question—How shall we get the means to give the Gospel to a lost world? It is no longer a question of men to go—but of money with which to send them.

How many of the Lord's people can say with the Pharisee, "I give tithes of all that I possess?" Some will reply to this, "I do not want to do as the Pharisee did." Perhaps not, but the Pharisee was not pharissical because he gave tithes, but because he trusted in his own doings for righteousness before God. Indeed, when our Lord, alluding to the tithing by the Pharisees of such trivialities as mint, anise, and cummin, rebuked them for neglecting "the weightier matters of the law—judgment, mercy, and faith," He virtually commended them for tithing by saying, "these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

Many object to the tithe as being Jewish or legal, a mere ritual of the Levitical law. The fact, however, that Abraham and Jacob gave the tenth to God disposes of this contention and proves its observance, like the Sabbath, to rest on other grounds—that of moral obligation. Moreover, as a legal ordinance it left as large a margin for free-will giving as could be desired. It was the acknowledgment of Israel's obligation to God—"the minimum, not the maximum, expression of their indebtedness."

That God has "provided some better thing for us" in the Gospel than for Old Testament saints, should make us better givers than they. But are we? Not if the statement made by an able American writer on this subject be true, that the "average amount given by church members is about one-sixth of one-tenth." Probably we give a slightly greater proportion in this country; but I believe if accurate returns could be made our gifts would come far below the despised tenth or even twentieth for all Christian purposes.

We have heard of the old woman who put a P against all the promises she could honestly say she had proved. How many of us could put a P against Mal. iii. 10?—Faithfully yours.

THE ARMENIAN CHRISTIANS.

SIR,—I thank you for the attention you give in your columns to the "Agony of Armenia." Why cannot the clergy and ministers of every town do what they have done in the town of Eastbourne? With scarcely an exception they are united in a holy brotherhood to do all they can to bring to a speedy end these awful massacres. A number of meetings have been held, when hundreds have not been able to get into the largest building (the Town Hall) we have. Some £300 have been raised, and a petition signed by 6800 people was sent to the House of Commons, including clergy and ministers of all denominations, members of the Town Council and magistrates. The work is still going on, and an effort is being made to get the residents of every town and village in the county to unite in bringing pressure to bear on the Government.

This is pre-eminently Christian work. We must not let it fall into the hands of political organisations, but do it ourselves on broad Christian and humanitarian grounds. We believe we have greatly influenced the Government. Anyhow, we have encouraged them to adopt and pursue a policy of righteousness and hope for the Armenian people. We know we have sent a message of peace and goodwill to the oppressed, and the reflex influence has been blessed in uniting all Christians into a closer and kindlier fellowship with one another.

If any of your readers would like a copy of the pamphlet and letters published by our committee, on application to myself they shall be forwarded.—Yours faithfully,

J. TURNER,

Hon. Sec. Relief Committee.

Southdown College, Eastbourne, August 22.

DEAR SIR,—The Salvation Army have appointed Sunday, 30th inst., as a day of prayer to God on behalf of the spoiled, tortured and outraged Christians of Armenia. I am not a member of the Salvation Army, but it appears to me it would be good for all other denominations of Christians in Great Britain to unite with them, on the day stated, in one mighty effort of believing prayer to move the Arm that moves the world. Perhaps the deliverance of the Armenian martyrs is to be brought about only in this way, to teach the world that, when the greatest nations of the earth seem powerless to act by way of armaments or diplomacy, Jehovah will bring it to pass in answer to the prayer of faith.

The Great Powers of Europe, nominally Christian, seem stricken with paralysis in the matter, the reason apparently being that they either distrust each other in the issue, or else their professed Christianity is a mockery and a sham. Shall we not, as a Christian nation, have one great universal day of believing prayer for the deliverance from oppression, rapine, and death of our Armenian brethren?—Yours sincerely,

S. HOWARD.

Advance in Burmah.

REV. OLA HANSON, American Baptist missionary, writes from Bhamo:—

A trip to the confluence of the Mali and N'mai rivers, by a missionary, would have been an impossibility only a few years ago. The Kachins, in this part of northern Burmah, had never been really subjected by any power, until they felt the strong arm of the English Government. Now it is safe to go at least as far as to the N'mai River, but the country to the north from there, especially on the east of the Mali, is still, from a missionary point of view, an unexplored field. Still it is wonderful how these regions open up by degrees. The Sana Mountains north of Myitkyina have recently, without any resistance, been subjected to peaceful rule. Two survey parties, one from Burmah and the other from Assam, met the other day in the Hokong Valley, and are now looking for the best route by which to connect the Burmah State Railway with the Assam branch. It is needless to say that this is all new and inviting ground for the messenger of the Cross. We do not any longer need to pray that the doors may be opened. The prayer of our forefathers is daily being answered. Ours must be for men and women willing to enter the doors already opened for them.

The possibilities for missionaries to meet on the borders of Burmah and China may not be so far distant. A native Karen teacher may within a short time be stationed in Sima, a military post about sixty-five miles north and forty miles east of Bhamo, under the auspices of the Kachin Mission in Myitkyina.

Our brethren, Upcraft and Apenshaw, from the West China Mission, have just crossed the borders to find a suitable place for a mission station in West Yunnan. Few places in the world could show, from a linguistic point of view, a more interesting and discouraging mixture of dialects than is met with here. I have attempted, during a recent trip in these mountains, to work out a small comparative vocabulary between the following dialects: Chinese, Kachin, Atsi, Maru, Lashi, Yaw Yin and Shan. A little further to the south one would also meet Palawng and Burmese. Other dialects are found further to the north, of which no outsider knows as yet. Still the larger part of the population can be reached through Chinese, Kachin or Shan. The day will be hailed with joy when these regions are taken possession of for Christ.

Encouraging results are being reported from many places from this season's jungle work. There is no doubt, whatever may be the "impressions" of travellers, who indeed "come," but "see" very little, and "conquer" still less of the difficulties surrounding strangers in a strange land, while attempting to gain correct ideas of what is going on, that the Gospel is constantly gaining ground, while the native systems are rapidly losing whatever hold they once had on their followers.

Address to Li Hung Chang.

THE following address was presented to H.E. the Viceroy of China, during his visit to this country. It was signed by representatives of the L.M.S., the B. and F. Bible Society, the C.M.S., the English Presbyterian Mission, the Wesleyan Missionary Society, the C.I.M., the National Bible Society of Scotland, the Baptist Missionary Society, the Church of Scotland Foreign Mission, the Friends' Foreign Mission Association, and the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East:—

"London, August, 1896.

"SIR,—We, representatives of various missionary societies who have established Christian missions in China, respectfully beg to offer to your Excellency the expression of our hope that your visit to our shores may afford to your Excellency much gratification.

"We venture to believe that your Excellency has found time, amidst the many serious demands of your exalted and responsible position, to make yourself somewhat acquainted with the nature of the work in which the Christian missionaries are engaged in the Middle Kingdom. You do not, therefore, need to be informed that our holy religion teaches men to be law-abiding, virtuous, and benevolent, and that the missionaries in the Viceroyalty which is under your own distinguished government, in common with those who are labouring in other parts of China, are men and women who are devoting themselves faithfully to the task of doing good by the benevolent practice of medicine, by promoting the education of the poor, and by preaching the great truths of Christianity.

"We avail ourselves of this opportunity to assure your Excellency how highly we appreciate the enlightened policy which has led the Imperial Government of China during recent years to accord to missionaries the right to travel freely, to dwell under the protection of the law, and to pursue their peaceful callings in any part of the great Empire under the Imperial rule. We are well aware of the practical difficulties which have frequently arisen to hinder the full enjoyment of the privileges thus accorded, but we venture to look with confidence to the great statesmen of China, among whom your Excellency has so long held a position of conspicuous influence, to give increasing effect to the gracious proclamations of the Imperial Ruler of the Middle Kingdom, so that a real safety and freedom may be enjoyed by all who are pursuing the peaceful and beneficent calling of the Christian missionary.

"We trust that the long journey which your Excellency has taken to visit Europe may be completed in perfect safety, and that you will return to your home in the best of health, and be spared to continue to render those distinguished services to your Emperor and your country which have made your name illustrious throughout the world."

The following paragraph appears in the September issue of The Sunday Magazine:—"Before Li Hung Chang started for Europe he was presented, through the agency of the Bible Society, with an Imperial edition of the New Testament. The volume was enclosed in a wooden casket, the lid of which bore the name of the book inside and the various titles of his Excellency. Dr. Bryan made the presentation, and in a few words suitable to the occasion expressed the hope that the celebrated Chinaman would become the recipient of the happiness revealed in the Scriptures, a hope that will be universally endorsed both for him and his unfortunate countrymen. After showing much appreciation of the outward appearance of the gift, he promised to take it with him on his travels and read it through, adding that he would trust to the Book to bring him safely back to China."

Miss Rye's Home.—It is announced that Miss Rye has decided to practically incorporate her well-known Emigration Home for Destitute Little Girls at Peckham with "The Church of England Society for Providing Homes for Waifs and Strays." Miss Rye's charity will in future be administered in accordance with the trusts of the last-named Society, on the condition that the children who may be emigrated by means of the charity may be placed out with Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists, and not only with members of the Church of England. Miss Rye, Miss Elizabeth Still, and Mr. F. D. Lewin will be joined as trustees with the chairman, treasurer, and secretary of the Society for the time being.

Scottish Notes.

A STREET collection for Dr. Barnardo's Homes was taken up in Aberdeen on Saturday afternoon.

Rev. Alex. Connell, of Regent Square Church, London, preached in the Free West Church, Inverness, on Sabbath week. There were large congregations, especially in the evening, when the church was crowded to its utmost capacity.

We regret to learn that Professor Candlish, of the Free Church College, Glasgow, has been lying seriously ill in the Free Church Manse, at Tarbolton. He caught a chill a month ago when travelling. It is satisfactory to know he is recovering, though slowly.

A mission has been commenced among the navvies engaged in deepening operations at Port Henry Harbour, Peterhead. The missionary is Mr. Frank Buchanan, who has done good work among the navvies on the Cruden Railway for the past two years. The Mission Hall will be available also as a reading-room for the workmen.

It has been rumoured (says The Northern Evangelist) that the venerable Dr. Aird, of Creich, proposes to retire at an early date, and that he may go to live in England where Mrs. Aird has been obliged to spend the past few months on account of the state of her health. Multitudes, like ourselves, do not like to think of the Highlands without the beloved minister of Creich. We trust, therefore, that the rumour is groundless.

The Aberdeen Auxiliary of the Church of Scotland's Women's Association for Foreign Missions has lately appointed Miss Rachel E. Woodman Mackenzie to be their medical missionary at Sialkot, in the Panjab. Miss Mackenzie is the only lady medical from Scotland on the graduation lists of the London University. She is the daughter of Rev. J. S. Mackenzie, of Little Dunkeld. She sails for India in October, along with Mr. and Mrs. M'Cheyne Paterson, missionaries at Gujerat.

Lord Overtoun has had quite a busy time in the North of Scotland, helping the Free churches. At the opening of a new church at Fearn, he made a speech closing with these words, which will be appreciated by Christians in all the churches:—"It was one thing for the Church to be Evangelical, and another thing to be evangelistic. The Church might be Evangelical and hold sound doctrines, but if the Church was not living for Christ, and leading many souls to Him, it might hold these Evangelical truths in vain."

Professor Salmond, Convener of the Welfare of Youth Scheme of the Free Church, has lately returned to Aberdeen after a visitation of the congregations and schools in Sutherlandshire and Caithnessshire. Last year Professor Salmond visited the Islands in the interest of the Welfare of Youth work, and this year the Highlands of the mainland are claiming his attention. During his recent visitation he addressed the congregations, amongst other places, of Melness, Reay, Watten, Westerdale, and Bower, and on week days he addressed large meetings in Thurso, Wick, and other centres.

Dr. Norman Macleod, of Inverness, in opening a church bazaar recently at Lossiemouth, said the fact that it was so often necessary to have recourse to this expedient was not a satisfactory sign of the present condition of the Christian Church in some respects. He believed that if the Church—he spoke of all its branches—had a more vivid consciousness of its true function and vocation, a deeper sense of responsibility with regard to the claim which God had upon their substance as well as upon themselves, the tithes would flow into the Lord's treasury in such abundance that there would be ample provision for all their needs, and the blessing resulting so great that there would not be room enough to receive it.

The death is announced of Rev. William Shoobred, D.D., an ex-Moderator of the U.P. Church Synod, which took place at Arbroath on Sunday evening. Dr. Shoobred, who was a native of Dunfermline, spent most of his life in missionary service in India, having been ordained as missionary in 1859. Last autumn he left India in bad health, and spent the winter in the South of Italy. While travelling through Italy, Dr. Shoobred had an attack of pleurisy which greatly retarded his recovery and impaired his strength. In 1888 Dr. Shoobred presided as Moderator of the U.P. Synod. Although for some time past he had been in feeble health, his end came suddenly and unexpectedly, and his death will be greatly deplored. Deceased was over sixty years of age.

The Aberdeen University Court, which met several times recently in committee to consider the allegations made against Professor David Johnston, who occupies the chair of Biblical Criticism in the University, made public its finding last week. The complaints made by divinity students were to the effect that Professor Johnston's treatment of his subject was unmethodical and inadequate, and that his treatment of his class was such as to make it impossible for students to give him respect. The Court finds that the charge against the professor of being unmethodical has been established, and that the want or defects of method are so great as not to afford students any reasonable opportunity of becoming acquainted with the subject of Biblical criticism. The Court regrets the disorderly conduct on the part of some of the students, for which they were censured, but finds there is no foundation for the charges of conspiracy, ungodliness, want of principle, and the like brought against them. The Court, without going into the other charges, recommends that in the interests of University education Professor Johnston be requested to retire from office with a suitable retiring allowance. Professor Johnston, who was appointed by the Crown, was formerly a parish minister in Orkney.

Christian Endeavour.

SOME Japanese delegates to the annual Christian Endeavour Convention at Kyoto travelled a distance of 500 miles.

A day was spent in picking blackberries by a society in West Salem, Ill., which gave the proceeds for home missionary work.

Fifteen sailors on a vessel visiting the harbour of San Diego, Cal., were led to a public confession of Christ by the Society of Christian Endeavour.

Both the Boston and Brooklyn Christian Endeavour Unions held great farewell meetings just prior to the recent departure of Dr. Clark for Europe.

The flower committee of the Des Plaines Endeavour Society sent 2235 bouquets of flowers to the Chicago Flower Mission during the month of July.

A weekly meeting attended by more than a score of bluecoats is held in one of the police-stations of Philadelphia by some Christian Endeavourers of that city.

Three new trustees of the United Society were chosen at Washington—Rev. H. K. Carroll, LL.D., to represent the Methodist Episcopal Church, Rev. W. H. Vogler, the President of the Moravian National Union, and Rev. U. F. Swengel, from the United Evangelical Church.

Famine Among The Gonds.

SIR,—For the last three months I have been receiving alarming letters from the C.M.S. mission to the Gonds, a hill tribe in the Central Provinces, India. First there was a great drought, and all the crops were burned up. Then came the Asiatic cholera, by which many of the natives were cut off after a few hours' illness. Now both fever and famine are raging. I copy an extract from the last letter I have had from Rev. E. D. Price, C.M.S. missionary to the Gonds.—Yours faithfully,

X. Y. Z.

"Marpha, Mandla, Central Provinces, India.
24-7-1896.

"The people of the villages all round here are coming to me for food. Very many are starving. We have fed about 150 or more to-day. Off early to-morrow in the rain to get food for the people. House crowded all day with applicants. The people all round are living only on leaves of trees and roots. Can you help?" "EUSTACE DICKINSON PRICE."

Mission Work in Uganda.

In a recent interview, Mr. Hubbard, of the C.M.S., who has just returned from Lake Nyasa, said:—

"The contrast between the Uganda of to-day and that of 1893 is simply marvellous. In the case of the English Protestant mission, our great difficulty is to restrain the thousands of natives who flock to us for instruction and apply for baptism. The relations between the English Catholics and the C.M.S. Mission are much more friendly than those formerly existing between the French fathers and the Society. All the former territorial limits have been removed, and the whole country is open to Protestants and Catholics alike. King Kasagama, the powerful ruler of Toro, was baptized by the Church Missionary Society missionaries in March last, and large numbers of his people are following his example. Bishop Tucker established a mission in Toro in April."

The Church Army.—An anonymous donor has just given £1500 to the Church Army for the purpose of providing and furnishing a lodging home for men, adjoining the Society's labour home for the outcast in Holloway. The St. John's Lodging Home in Lisson-grove has been filled to its utmost capacity every night since it was opened nearly three years ago. In those institutions the advantages of home life, with quiet and respectable surroundings, are obtained at the cost of 5d. or 6d. per night.

The Hop-Pickers' Mission.

WE are about to resume our season's work in Kent and Worcestershire among the hop-pickers. During the month of September many thousands from London and other large centres of population flock to the hop-gardens. Recognising in this annual migration a splendid opportunity of reaching these masses with the Gospel, the Hop-Pickers' Mission was started many years ago by Mr. Kendon, and the blessing of God has richly rested on the work done. From small beginnings the work has grown to considerable proportions, and now some sixteen missionaries are engaged every September. Numerous cases of definite blessing have come to our knowledge. Not the least interesting is the following:—

One of our London City missionaries was toiling with us in Kent; his people in London anxious to help their missionary, but too poor to do much, hit upon the happy idea of making a number of small camphor bags and pocket pincushions, and neatly attaching to each a text of Scripture. The missionary distributed these among the women in the gardens and camps.

Mrs. Sullivan was writing to her soldier son in India, and it occurred to her to enclose the little gift as a souvenir of his earlier years, when he used to accompany her on these annual visits. Attached to this pincushion was the verse from 1 John i. 7, "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

This text God used in leading the young soldier to Christ, and the following mail from India brought the glad news of his conversion, and subsequent letters the further tidings of his efforts to win his comrades. He is to-day an earnest Christian worker in the ranks in India.

The Hop-Pickers' Mission is entirely dependent on the voluntary gifts of God's people. Parcels of clothing, boots, tracts, etc., should be sent per S.E.R., carriage paid, to Rev. J. J. Kendon, Marden Station. Contributions to Rev. J. J. Kendon, Goudhurst, Kent.

The Wesleyan Pastoral.

THE pastoral of the Wesleyan Conference of the present year, drafted by Rev. Professor Waddy Moss, of Didsbury College, and which is directed to be read in the principal Wesleyan chapels early next month, will deal with several points of interest. Attention will be called to the present position of Methodism in the country. It has been a disappointment to record a decrease of 2302 in the membership of the Church; but congregations are in the gross as large and its communicants as numerous and devout as ever. Over 41,000 persons have been brought into the Church, and meanwhile more than 25,000 have wandered away from the Church's fellowship.

As to the causes of this decrease, many conjectures have been made. In some localities, no doubt, special influences, such as the decay of an old industry and the consequent scattering of the population, have tended to the dislodgment of Methodists; but there are other factors, more general in their character. The general life of the country is favourable to the multiplication of business engagements unfavourable to "the cultivation of a meek and quiet spirit, to the frequency of visits to or the permanent abiding in the secret place of the Most High."

The want of class leaders and the desirability of the younger laymen rendering this service to the Church, as well as taking their share in legislative and administrative work, are noted.

The removal of the missionary debt and the increase of 1679 members on mission stations, with the want of an adequate revenue in order that fields waiting to be reaped may be occupied, give occasion for urging upon the Church fidelity to the traditions of Methodism in this matter, and an exhortation to devotion, so that the opportunities of extending and strengthening the stations, which are now unusually great, may be made the most of.

Barry Dock Convention.—A conference was arranged in this town for those who, through circumstances, are unable to participate in the larger yearly conventions. In our Gospel tent here for four days believers assembled from the neighbouring churches. The truth of the "life more abundant" was ably and lovingly pressed home by Revs. J. Gregory Mantle, Seth Joshua, and others. Nine meetings were held for exposition, besides prayer meetings and some open-air services. The solemn feeling that pervaded the convention, and the devout attention given to the Word, were all indicative of the working of the Holy Spirit conquering hearts and lives. We hope to arrange a similar gathering next year.

Obituary.

DR. H. W. KNAPP, BROOKLYN.

REV. HALSEY W. KNAPP, D.D., died at his home in Brooklyn, on July 22. He was seventy-one years old. When thirty years old he entered the Baptist ministry and began his career of usefulness as a pastor. In the early morning one might see him in the market a busy merchant, but in the afternoon he was a faithful pastor not less intent than the merchant. His strong constitution and good physical health enabled him to do successfully what would have been impossible for most men. He accepted no salary, and gave largely to church and denominational work. His memory will always remain dear to the many to whom he ministered during his busy life.

REV. DR. REID, EDINBURGH.

The funeral of Rev. Dr. Reid, senior minister of Lothian-road U.P. Church, Edinburgh, took place at Edinburgh last week. Dr. Reid was born in 1814 at Paisley, where his father was a medical practitioner. He received his early education in Glasgow, and studied divinity in the Secession Hall, Edinburgh. Ordained in 1843, Dr. Reid accepted a call from the congregation, with which he continued to be identified till the close of his ministerial career. His jubilee was celebrated in 1892. Under Dr. Reid's ministrations Lothian-road U.P. Church flourished, the membership reaching to between 1400 and 1500. The death of his wife about four months ago came as a severe blow to Dr. Reid, who is survived by a family of two sons and two daughters.

DR. A. M'AFEE.

Another South African missionary has fallen in the field. Dr. Alex. McAfee, medical missionary of Willowvale, Transkei, passed to his reward on the 15th July. He gave himself to his labours with infinite vigour and earnestness, and his early death is a great blow to missions. He had a splendid prospect as a physician in England, but he caught the missionary spirit from Dr. Paton, and felt compelled to give up home and friends and prospects to preach the Gospel to the natives of the Transkei. For twelve months he lived in a native hut and lived amongst the natives, to whom he acted in the double capacity of pastor and doctor. He was one of the most chivalrous men England has given to African missions, and sympathy of all Christian people will go out to his aged parents in Scotland and to his venerated brother, Dr. McAfee, of West Kirby.

MISS JOHNSTONE, CALCUTTA.

Union Chapel, Calcutta, has suffered a severe loss in the death of Miss Lydia Johnstone, who since 1838 was one of its best workers. Neither her mother nor herself was rich, but they made their mark in a way of their own. For many years it was their custom to write five letters daily, soliciting aid for the missionary society. Great zeal and faith were required for such continued effort, since their applications were often declined, sometimes with expressions of scorn and ridicule for the cause they loved so well. A calculation shows that, estimating the rupee at 1s. 10d., Mrs. Johnstone collected for the London Missionary Society more than £1950, or about £60 a year, and Miss Johnstone about £3000, or £70 a year. They were not persons of influence, neither did they usually receive large sums. The greater part of what they collected was in comparatively small sums and monthly subscriptions of one rupee.

MRS. HARRIET F. BALDWIN.

This beloved missionary died, in the evening of July 29, at the home of a married daughter, in Summit, N.J. The wife of Rev. C. C. Baldwin, D.D., she went out with her husband as a missionary of the American Board in November, 1847, to the newly-opened field in Foochow, China. Her term of service nearly covered a half century, from 1848 to 1895. After securing a knowledge of the native dialect, she engaged, as the years passed by, in various literary and evangelistic work. She possessed a genius and keen relish for the educational department, starting efficiently a female seminary, of which she was the principal during seven years. In literary work, besides her geographies and maps in the native language, she was associated with her husband in the publication of a manual of the Foochow dialect, and also assisted him in the task of editing the much larger dictionary in the same language. There was also the immense labour of translation and revision of the Scriptures, to which she contributed valued help, which was made possible through her knowledge of the language.

REV. JOHN SYMON, PERTH.

After a lingering illness Rev. John Symon, minister of Free St. Paul's Church, Perth, died last week at his residence in Barossa-place. The deceased had an eventful career. He was born in Perth over fifty-three years ago, was apprenticed as [778] an engineer in the locomotive works of the Aberdeen and Arbroath Railway, and served his apprenticeship in Arbroath. While in Arbroath he came under the influence of the Revival movement, and frequently spoke at open-air meetings. He was subsequently removed to the locomotive works at Perth, and on coming to the Fair City he manifested the same interest in religious matters, and was for a time engaged in mission work. On the recommendation of the Free Church Home Mission Committee he was appointed missionary in Edinburgh. While in Edinburgh he attended the University. On the advice of the late Dr. Begg Mr. Symon resolved to study for the ministry. When in 1879 Free St. Paul's Church, which had previously been a mission station, was raised to the rank of a church, Mr. Symon, who had scarcely finished his theological course, was chosen as its first minister. So prosperous did the congregation become that they were able to pay off the original debt on the church, buy a manse, and purchase a hall. Born and reared in comparative poverty, the poor of the city had no warmer friend than Mr. Symon. Unostentatious and unobtrusive, he was always ready to attend any necessitous case.

Personalia.

Dr. Joseph Cook, who has been for some time at his summer home, Cliff Seat, Ticonderoga, N.Y., is steadily gaining in health.

Missionaries on the Congo.—Dr. Harry Guinness writes:—"Our parties for the Congo who have recently sailed, together with those in the field, need our earnest prayers. Tried by the sickness of several, and the death of Miss Wood, our band of missionaries on the Upper River is in circumstances of special difficulty just at present; and their hearts might well fail them if it were not for Him who is 'able to do exceeding abundantly for them' above their prayers and ours, and who has promised never to leave or forsake them."

Dr. Lorimer, of Tremont Temple, Boston, U.S., finished his occupancy of the pulpit of Marylebone Presbyterian Church, during Dr. Pentecost's absence, last Sunday. The audiences were very large, and the interest was kept up to the last, culminating in his sermon last Sunday evening on "The Prodigal Son." He left London for the United States on Wednesday. Five of his sermons have been printed, and two more are to follow. The set of seven may be had from Mr. George Taylor, 40, Southwick-street, W., post free, for ninepence.

Mrs. Ballington Booth, of the American Volunteers, is at work in the State prisons, especially at Sing Sing. She says: "This is the problem that I am trying to solve: I want to get acquainted with the men while they are yet in prison, and win their confidence, and when they come out I want it to be so that those who otherwise would not have a soul in the world to care what became of them will feel that here is someone who loves them and is anxious to help them. And I want to be so situated that when one of my boys comes to me from prison, I will not just talk with him and pray with him and then have to tell him that is all I can do for him. I propose to have a home for him to go to, and a place for him to work, and a chance for him to be honest."

Evangelistic Notes.

Berwick.—Rev. R. Baggie has been holding open-air services at Blackadder West, Berwickshire, which have been largely attended.

Work in the Villages.—Mr. R. Jones has been having good open-air Gospel meetings throughout the summer months at Horton-lane, Isle, Cottages and Armoury-terrace, near Shrewsbury. Several at each of these places have been blessed.

Essex Villages.—Tent missions have been conducted by Mr. Hugh C. Wallace, of the Evangelization Society, in the villages of Saling and Stebbing, Essex. Large congregations have gathered and listened quietly to the preaching of the Word, which has been blessed to the salvation of some. The evangelist is now engaged in a mission in the town of Baintree in the same county.

Mr. C. N. Crittenton, of the Florence Crittenton Mission, New York, continues his extended evangelistic tour, in the Western States, with his Gospel car. This year he, with Mr. C. S. Morton and other workers, has visited many towns in Illinois, Kansas, Colorado, and on the Pacific coast, and manifest revival has followed the labours of the band. By latest accounts good meetings had been held in Santa Barbara and Los Angeles, California.

Mr. F. C. Spurr will hold missions as follows:—September 6-13, Melbourne, Derby; September 20-27, Salisbury; October 11-November 1, Portsmouth; November 8-22, Leeds; November 29-December 13, Nottingham.

THE BOOK WORLD.

Lays of Life and Hope. By William Blane. (Pickering & Inglis, Glasgow.) Here lovers of poetry will find the fundamental truths of our faith set in smooth, flowing verse.

Robert Forward. By Harry Lindsay. (C. H. Kelly.) The sad story of a gambler's ruined life. May it prove the means of warning many boys of the dangers of the widespread vice.

Life and Sayings of Kilsby Jones. By Vyrnwy Morgan. (3s. E. Stock.) The biography of a Congregational minister of some note among the Welsh as a preacher, an educationalist, and a writer on political themes.

Farmer Winstone's Waif. By C. A. B. (1s. 6d. Co-operative Jewish Converts' Institution.) The story of a wandering little one, how he was rescued, and became the means of bringing light and joy into the home in which he was sheltered.

Prissie and Moll. By Mary Inman. (8d. Orphans' Printing Press, Leominster.) Simple stories of poor and humble life, illustrating the beauty of Christian helpfulness, the sin of Lord's Day Desecration, and the power of the Gospel.

Stories about India and Zenana Gleanings. (6d. Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.) Two tasteful companion miniature volumes, which, with their tales of women in India, should stir many hearts on behalf of our sisters in the Empire of the East.

Victoria: Her Life and Reign. By A. E. Knight. (3s. 6d. Partridge & Co.) A popular biography of Queen Victoria, which at this time, when our Sovereign is reaching the longest reigning period of any English monarch, should be widely welcomed. It is a well-written and readable book, affording an admirable review of a long and noble life.

The Autobiography of a Truth. By Edna Lyall. (1s. Longmans & Co.) A story with a purpose, being a vivid tale, illustrating the suffering of the educated Armenians, and evidently intended to awaken deeper sympathy in these outraged and tortured Christians of the East. Probably in this story-form it will reach the ears of many who would never read the terrible narratives of massacre and wrong published in the daily press.

The Gospel Message. By R. N. Cust, LL.D. (6s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. Luzac & Co.) Dr. Cust's life-long study of missions and his observations of the work in the field and in the committee-rooms of the great missionary societies have afforded him material for many and exhaustive works on the theme. Here, however, we have a series of essays, addresses, and warnings on matters in which he is not altogether satisfied with things as they now stand. His habit of speaking his mind plainly has often raised controversy, but not seldom with useful result. It is touching to learn that with this volume he lays down his pen for ever. Whether one has always agreed with him or not, none could ever doubt the sincerity of his love for missions and desire to see the Gospel spread abroad among heathen and Moslem.

THE JEW IN HIS RELATION TO THE SECOND COMING. By J. Hughes-Games. (3d. Holness.) This booklet, on an interesting subject, is too much in the nature of a programme. The author is far more certain as to the order of coming events than most of his readers will be.

FIELD PATH RAMBLES. By Walker Miles. Series 9 and 10. (R. E. Taylor & Son, 19, Old-street, E.C. 6d.) These pocket guides are invaluable to all who would enjoy the "Surrey Hills" to the fullest extent. The directions are clear, exact, and complete. Nothing could be better.

THE HISTORICAL TRUTH OF DANIEL. By R. K. Strang. (6d. Marshall Brothers.) A series of lectures on the evidences, now forthcoming, for the authenticity of the Book of Daniel, summarising for the ordinary reader the "important and crushing replies" made by Archaeology to the speculations of the higher critics.

A Conference in Germany.

DEAR SIR,—I am on the point of starting for Blankenburg, in Thuringen, to attend the yearly conference, and I am eager to secure the prayers of God's people for this conference of Christians of various denominations in Germany. A few brethren from England will be present, but one would be thankful for a fuller expression of International and inter-denominational oneness at such conferences.

The subject for consideration will be "The blessed freedom of the children of God." Some of the Lord's servants in England who are living in the unfettered liberty might have ministered to their continental brethren, and might also have enlarged their borders, and received the greater blessing by giving what they have freely received.

The conference is to begin August 31, and to last till September 4. Pray for us.—Yours sincerely, Weston-super-Mare. F. W. BAEDERER.

The Bible-class Federation is preparing a list of young men's Bible-classes. Will secretaries communicate with Mr. R. M. Waterhouse, 24, Norfolk-road, Dalston, N.?

The whole of this dismal story brings home to the thoughtful mind the fact that there are great crimes as well as individual sins for which there is no adequate earthly punishment. Apart from belief in a Divine distribution of justice at the consummation of all things, we should lose all faith in the inherent righteousness that rules the course of affairs. It is in vain for us to fall back on the truism that sin is its own punishment, and that evil-doers make their own hell. Nothing is clearer than that the worst sinners and criminals are utterly devoid of remorse, and that the greatest cruelties can be "justified" to himself by the one who commits them. Conscience often only reflects the standard of morality outside, and falls silent when the culprit is no worse than those around him. Human tribunals are not unseldom organised instruments of injustice. If there were no faith in a God who will some day bring home to every sinner and community of sinners the exact proportion of guilt and punishment that belongs to them, we should have no guarantee that "though hand join hand, yet shall not the wicked go unpunished." As it is, we fall back on that great doctrine of a world-judgment of which the New Testament is so full, and find in it the certainty of a righteous God. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

The excitement attending the news of the return of Nansen and the Fram from the expedition in search of the North Pole illustrates once more the remarkable sentiment that has gathered round that strange quest. It is astonishing to consider the place that the discovery of the North Pole has taken in adventurous minds. What the Golden Fleece was to Ulysses and his companions, and the Grail to Arthur and his knights, and the Holy Sepulchre to the Crusaders, this undiscovered land seems to have become to a certain class of eager and restless characters. The explanation is probably to be found in the immortality which will unquestionably follow the name of the first discoverer, and not in any real benefit to be gained for humanity at large. There are no great scientific or practical results to be looked for; whether there be land or water at the desired point is a matter of comparatively little importance; there is no prospect of adding to the material or intellectual wealth of the race by finding it. Still, men will endanger their lives again and again in order to be the first to get there; and fresh aspirants for the honour are undeterred by the many failures and the lost lives of their predecessors. Nansen's safe return will be the signal for renewed efforts, and possibly the loss of many more valuable lives, ere the barren goal is reached.

All this is a curious proof of the power of an unknown goal to draw the human mind after it irrespective of practical results. This is the material out of which heroism is made; and what distinguishes between foolhardiness and heroism is only the goal aimed at. If all the available energy and aspiration that takes the lower channels of adventure were to be fired in the direction of the great objects of spiritual and social regeneration, the world would soon be different from what it is; much wasted endeavour would be saved, and causes that are now forlorn for lack of leaders would be revived and carried towards victory. The difference made in a life by grasping a high true aim is seen in perfection in the Apostle Paul. He was just of the adventurous temperament that makes the pioneer and the discoverer, and when his heart was inflamed and constrained by the love of Christ, all these restless qualities came in as a fine instrument for the propagation of the Gospel, with results that were world-wide and enduring. We need men of his stamp to turn the highways of travel into a pathway for the Kingdom of God.

There is a striking article in the current International Journal of Ethics, on the question whether "pleasure is the chief good" of man—pleasure that is, in its higher and more worthy forms. Do men do good because it brings happiness to them, or are they happy because they choose the chief good? This is the great question that divides the Hedonist from the Intuitionist in morals; and Prof. Seth argues finely against the theory that pleasure, however elevated in kind, is the impelling idea in true conduct. As he says:—

It does not follow that because an action is pleasant it is performed for the sake of the pleasure; that because the martyr's, and many another's, self-sacrificing delight thrills him, and the thrill of strange delight carries him through an act which had otherwise been impossible, the act is done for the sake of the thrill, and that this is the object of his devotion. That would be an explanation which does not explain, a distortion and negation of the essential fact in the case. On the contrary, it is the very perfection of his devotion to the object that accounts for the thrill; the thrill is the thrill of devotion.

This article marks a step in return from a theory of conduct and character the influence of which had spread far beyond its immediate limits, and has penetrated even Christian thought and teaching. There has been too much tendency of late years to associate the ideas of right and happiness in family and school training, to estimate actions by their relation to pleasant or unpleasant effects, and to cloud the essential truth that a thing is right or wrong in itself and in relation to the will and being of God. There is no stable foundation for character apart from the last-named principle. The noblest men and women have been fed on it, and have shaped their lives by it, and their great deeds would have been impossible to them were they to lose faith in the essential nature of goodness. We must return to this point of view, which is as philosophical as it is Biblical. Professor Seth's article and his able book on Ethics are very helpful to the perplexed student of this great question.

Mr. Wilfrid Ward tells some strange things in his character-sketch of Professor Huxley in The Nineteenth Century. The impression made by the great scientist on those who personally knew him must be very different from the impression given to a diligent reader of his books. Considering that he was the inventor and chief exponent of the term "agnostic" for over a quarter of a century, it is startling to find a saying of his in 1892 reported thus:—

Faulty and incorrect as is the Christian definition of Theism, it is nearer the truth than the creed of some agnostics who conceive of no unifying principle in the world.

Mr. Ward goes on to say that he proceeded to defend eloquently the argument from design, and affirms that his statement that only "a very great fool" would deny in his heart a God conceived as Spinoza conceives Him, was distinctly short of the degree of agnosticism currently attributed to him by those who read him hastily, and "blended their own logic with his rhetoric."

What, by the way, does this last clause mean? Was Huxley's agnosticism mere rhetoric? If so, is it consistent with honesty that a man who, of all others perhaps, is most responsible for the irreligious tone of the younger scientists, should rhetorically deny the Godhead, that logically he was compelled to believe in? Other thinkers besides Mr. Huxley, such as Matthew Arnold, have given the impression in their books of greater scepticism than was true of their real attitude on religious matters, and they are surely responsible not only for the false impression, but for the results on sensitive and unstable minds who read their works, but do not come into contact with their better mood in personal life.

Mr. Strong, in his Bampton Lectures on "Christian Ethics," takes the view that the Sermon on the Mount, which some seem disposed to make the whole of religion, is "the climax of Judaism." Although it abrogates Judaism, it comes with the authority of a new teacher, but "it still runs in the form of a law. It thus belongs to a transitional period, and, as it were, hangs between the old and the new order." He regards it as the final statement of the Law. It is, therefore, not a commandment by which life comes; it offers no help, it promises no grace whereby its exceeding broad demands on men can be met. Taken alone it might drive to despair. Mr. Strong believes that "the real centre of investigation into the ethical import of Christ's life must be transferred from the Gospel story to the time after Pentecost." This brings us back to the old position, that the Saviour did, by the Holy Spirit, expound his meaning to the apostles and by means of them to others. Therefore, they who cry—"Go back to the Christ of the Gospels"—are robbing us of the glorified Christ who has come to say the things which his disciples could not bear when He was with them in the flesh. Those who would degrade doctrine by exalting precept will find that they have left men without the motive or the power to keep the precept.

It is a curious compliment which men pay to Christianity when they deplore its decline on the ground that men cannot fight so well without it! "The Human Animal in Battle" forms the theme of an article in The Fortnightly Review, in which the writer says that "the decay of religion, which is so widespread a feature of our times, has contributed to the downward progress of the individual by making death more horrible because of the greater uncertainty beyond the grave." The difficulty now is to implant courage and avoid panic. The trial to the nerves is getting too much for the modern civilised man to face. We confess we do not mourn over the lost nerve for the carnage of a battle-field. Man's unwillingness to face it as a combatant may be due to a tender conscience and a sensitive heart, born of the operation of pure religion; willingness to encounter it as a minister of mercy certainly comes from that cause. We entirely agree that true religion imparts courage, but religion does not foster the spirit of militarism.

Sir John Seeley stated that he derived his enthusiasm for history from the Bible, and that his ideas were drawn from the Bible at first hand. What fascinated him was not a passage here and there, "not something which only a scholar or an antiquarian can detect in it, but the Bible as a whole, its great plan and unity, and principally the grand poetic anticipation in it of modern views concerning history." This is a remarkable testimony to the Divine authorship of the Book; a few obscure men in a small obscure nation, writing when there was no history, as we understand history, were yet masters of that broad philosophical treatment of history which marks the books of the modern master. This is another evidence that Bible students take the widest and truest views of the course of human life because they follow Him who rules among the armies of heaven and the inhabitants of the earth.

The abject mental bondage of Jesuits is set forth by Father Clarke (S.J.) in an article in The Nineteenth Century, in which he describes how they are selected and trained. He informs us "it is the difficult habit of abstaining from any mental criticism of the order that is the distinctive feature of the obedience of the Society of Jesus." A servant may object in his mind as much as he likes to the commands of his master, as long as he obeys them; a soldier may do a hearty grumble to himself, only he must obey in act; but a Jesuit subjects his very thoughts to men. A moment's thought recalls to us how unlike this way of training and aiding men is to the Divine way. Elijah expressed his mind very freely, and so did Job. The disciples doubted and questioned and denied, and yet the Master encouraged perfect candour, because He knew that only thus could there be satisfaction and truth. Do the Jesuits really believe that they get every member of their order to abstain from mental criticism? It seems to be an excellent system for making slaves and hypocrites.

England and Russia.

A CHEERING feature of the present time is a growing desire for better relations between England and Russia. We know that in urging this God is with us; the heavens are on our side. For God "made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth." The first note of the New Age, ushered in by the incarnate Lord, was, "Peace on earth, goodwill toward men." The promise of the good time coming is that "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." And that "Ephraim shall not envy Judah, nor Judah vex Ephraim"—a promise of universal application, for if God is opposed to envy and vexation between Ephraim and Judah, He must be also between England and Russia, and any other pair of nations, for He is the same always and everywhere.

A good understanding between England and Russia would tend to the peace of Europe and of the world. It would tend to develop Russia, to introduce civil and religious liberty, and to relieve our brethren the Stundists of the disabilities, oppressions, and persecutions under which they now suffer. And energy wasted in watching one another would be used in ameliorating the condition of the nations dependent upon each. And, not least, there would be no more object in upholding the cruel abomination which calls itself a Government in Turkey.

Indeed, England's support of Turkey for selfish ends has been worse than her antagonism to Russia, and more fatally mischievous. It has enabled that evil Power to perpetrate and perpetuate its corruption and violence on weaker peoples, and to become a festering mass itself. Had England acted righteously in regard to Turkey, the effect on that country would have been very different.

Everything is desirable which would tend to produce in Russia that middle class to which England owes largely her prosperity at home and her influence abroad. As the stars in their courses fought against Sisera, so they fight, slowly but surely, against every man or nation acting in opposition to the patience and grace of the wise Creator, who gave his Son to bring peace on earth and goodwill to men.

Jewish Christians.

A NEW pamphlet in German has lately been issued by Rabbi Lichenstein*, forming the eighth of his remarkable series. A few extracts may interest readers. It is entitled "Judenspiegel" (Jewish Mirror), and its object is to represent Christ as the mirror into which the nation should look and behold the glory of God.

In his introduction the Rabbi writes:—"After much search and diligent examination of the signs of the times founded on the knowledge of both Old and New Testaments, it has become a deeply-rooted conviction, which fills my whole soul, that Christ is the prophesied Messiah of Israel and Saviour of the world. In his person and in his work is to be found the true glory of Israel as well as the true atonement."

After speaking of the bitter hatred of the Jews to any among them who profess faith in Christ, how they first cast them out from among them, and then raise the complaint that Jewish believers in Christ always are lost to their nation, living among the Gentiles, etc., the Rabbi adds: "Jewish-Christians! You must accustom yourselves to the expression. There are Jews, and there will ever be more such, who are at the same time Christians; Jews, who believe on Christ, not in spite of, but because they are Jews, and have found in Jesus the Messiah of Israel. Their number may be few or many, but all are agreed in this, that they wait, and hope, and pray, with all true Christians, among all nations, that Israel at last may welcome its Messiah, the Saviour of the world, and exclaim, 'Blessed be He that cometh in the name of the Lord!'"

In the pamphlet the Rabbi says:—"When the altar of stone lay crushed in ruins, the cross became an altar, on which Christ hung bleeding; Christ is the spotless Lamb, the perfect sacrifice; the true sufficient atonement for the sin of the whole world; of unceasing efficacy and eternal value; the fulfilment and completion of all sacrifice. Therefore the whole system of sacrifice under the old covenant has passed away (Heb. x. 5-14). The Prophet of all prophets, the true High Priest, the everlasting King has been revealed to the world in Him. He was the goal of our holy history, the essence and embodiment of all our holy symbols. Therefore he is manifested in everything as so glorious, so divine, so immeasurably surpassing the merely human. He who hears the voice of his lips, and feels the breath of his Spirit, feels himself withdrawn from earth. His Gospel sings and reverberates in the soul, new hopes arise, aspirations awake, more precious than all treasure, than all that can enchain the heart of man on earth."

After exalting the Lord Jesus as being in Himself the fulfilment of all promise and symbol in Israel, the Rabbi continues to show how the spirit of his Gospel has worked among the nations during the centuries since He was on earth, subduing and alleviating strife, oppression, and suffering. He gives the definition of mercy in the parable of the Good Samaritan, and would show his people that their many charitable institutions of late growth are but an imitation of those of their Christian neighbours, who learn of Christ Himself. If they would but see it, Christ Himself is looking through the lattice; yet they recognise Him not. The Rabbi calls to his people to awaken, and to clear their eyes of the sleep of centuries, that they may see how the world is rejoicing in the Prince of Peace. "Who has subdued the people under Him? Why are new peoples continually drawn to Him? Why are the gods fallen before Him, the groves of idolatrous worship disappeared? How could He compel the heathen world, and bring untold millions to God and his Kingdom, were He not the prophesied Deliverer from out of Israel? Explain the riddle, if you can."

Work in West Africa.

DEAR SIR,—Our coloured friends, Mr. and Mrs. Ricketts, are known to many of your readers as Congo workers. After a visit to their children in Jamaica, they were returning, via England, to Africa, when circumstances arose which led them to Lagos instead of to the Congo, and they sailed last October. Soon after arriving they became acquainted with Prince Ademuyiwa Hastrop, and were by him introduced to their present sphere of labour. Prince A. was converted from heathenism some years ago. He proposed that Mr. Ricketts should go with him on a preaching tour inland, and after visiting several towns it was decided to settle at Agboa Jebu Remo, where Mr. Ricketts was well received, and some land granted to him. He at once began teaching, and has now so far acquired the language as to be able to dismiss the interpreter. As soon as he had built a house he was joined by his wife, who, with her infant babe, had been waiting with kind friends at Lagos.

In a recent letter to me, Mrs. Ricketts says:—"I am glad to tell you that I am now settled down in my own home in Africa. Both myself and baby's health are much improved since we came to the interior, and I feel at home among the heathen and Mahomedans. The people appear to be friendly. The house my husband built and our journey from Lagos have taken up all the money we had...A few boys are at school, and my husband has three boys staying with us in the house. Two of the boys are now reading the Scriptures, and they are singing the praise of God among their own people...My husband is kept busy working and attending to the people's sicknesses...I am quite ready for my family to come to us." In her last letter she expresses her earnest desire for all her children to come, adding, "I do not see how we are to keep up these two homes any more."

The chief and pressing need is to pay the passage-money for five children from Jamaica to Africa. There is great poverty just now in Jamaica, so that the people there can do nothing, and I must appeal to English friends. The home at Agboa is ready. The land granted to Mr. Ricketts is waiting to be cultivated by his elder boys, who also can help him in his school. Further, if the children cannot be sent to Africa, the father and mother must give up their loved mission-work and return to the children.—Sincerely yours,

R. S. HIND SMITH.

P.S.—Prince Ademuyiwa is now in this country and being most kindly received.

The River Plate.—The report of the Sailors' Home and Mission shows good work, although fewer ships have visited the port than in preceding years, owing to the failure of the wheat crop. The superintendent is Capt. F. Ericssen, Calle Progreso, 48, Rosario, Argentina.

The Sunday-School Union Chautauqua, now in progress at Bournemouth, has opened very happily. Christian workers from various parts of the kingdom are comfortably quartered at the Granville Temperance Hotel. They are favoured by lovely weather and great kindness from the Sunday-school workers of Bournemouth. On Sunday Rev. J. Ossian Davies preached from Ezek. i. 10, on "The Requisites of Success in Christian Work." He dwelt on the importance of holy character, and, above all else, upward movement, to get from Christ the Spirit of Pentecost. Rev. F. B. Meyer and others will take part next week.

"For Such a Saviour."—A Brahman scholar baptized last year used to argue against the Christian faith with the missionary preachers in the streets. Then his conscience being touched with some sense of sin, he sought relief in an ascetic life. But after six months of self-crucifixion, he sought peace where alone it may really be found. His old father was grieved and angry, and tried to keep him back from baptism. "If you show yourself in the streets," he said to his son, "you will be killed." "It was a serious matter," was his answer, "that the Innocent should have died for my sins, but it is a small matter for me to die for such a Saviour's sake. Besides, I now live to defend me; and no one can touch me without his permission. Even if that man should lift his club to fell me, Christ can arrest the blow and save me. But if He should not, I can but die and go to Him."

Christ's Gift of Peace.

By REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

"CAN I do anything for you?" said an officer on the battle-field to a wounded soldier who lay weltering in his blood. "Nothing, thank you." "Shall I bring you a little water?" "No, I thank you; I am dying; there is one favour you can do for me. In my knapsack there you will find a Testament. Please open it to the fourteenth chapter of John, and you will find a verse that begins with the word 'peace.' Please read it to me." The officer got out the book and read, "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." "Thank you, sir," said the dying man. "I have got that peace; I am going to that Saviour; I want nothing more." In a few minutes his fluttering spirit had flown away homeward to its everlasting rest. He had come into possession of the precious legacy his Saviour had given him.

Peace is what men's souls are craving. The auction-rooms of business and pleasure are thronged, and the auctioneers are constantly crying, "Peace, peace!" when they have really none to give. Satan's device is to quiet people by gratifying their appetites and unholy cravings. This is like the attempt to appease a fire by heaping on coal, or to extinguish a drunkard's appetite by administering brandy. Satan's method only aggravates the disease. There is no true peace to a wicked heart.

In the midst of this world's clamours, crying off its wretched, delusive frauds, there stands one majestic personage who utters the deep, loving offer, "My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth give I unto you." Christ gives peace by healing the diseases of the soul. Instead of the miserable device of attempting to satisfy restless and sinful cravings, He brings in new sources of joy. The world's false peace begins in delusion, goes on in sin, and ends in perdition. Christ's peace begins in pardoning grace, goes on in simple trust, and ends in glory. Two things Jesus can give which produce tranquillity of soul. The first one is the forgiveness of sin and reconciliation with an offended God. "Justified by faith, we have peace with God." The other is the deliverance of the soul from the tyranny of ungodly lusts, and the occupying of the heart with pure desires and with objects worthy of an immortal being. Obedience to Christ is a wonderful tranquilliser. If I can please Him, why be disturbed?

Remember, however, that to a healthy Christian it is the unhindered permission to do Christ's will and to be a blessing to others. If you dam up a swift, flowing brook it chafes itself into foam; when you pull away the obstruction, it joyfully darts along its bright course wherever its silver feet may lead it. Peace is not spiritual stagnation; it is the deep, strong current of a soul flowing in harmony with God.

Before our blessed Master went out to his sacrifice on the cross He made his will. He had not a penny to leave to his followers, and in his dying moments He committed his mother to the disciple whom He loved. Yet He made a bequest that outweighs all the millions that the Rothschilds or Astors can leave to expectant heirs. "Peace I leave with you." Such peace as He had possessed amid innumerable persecutions and buffetings, amid poverty and reproach, such peace as had filled his divine heart of love in view of Gethsemane and Golgotha—"My peace I give unto you." A gift is all the dearer because it has belonged to our dearest friend, and is linked with him or her in our memory for ever. Our Saviour's gift is of his own peace which had dwelt in his own breast and which He is ready to pour into the hearts that open to Him. It is a peace which passeth all understanding, which keeps the heart from distressing commotions, from racking doubts and fears, from sinful worries and the dark apprehensions of the "judgment to come." Such peace cures the heart-aches. Such peace feels rich on a small income and finds a soft pillow on a bed of pain. Such peace lets God have his way, and is not frightened in the dark. A glorious legacy Jesus left to us when He bestows a peace like this.

Give us this peace, O Lord!
Divine and blest,
Thou keepest for those hearts
Who love Thee best.

The Greatness of God.

GOD! What a word is this! How small; yet how great. We spell it with three letters, and when translated into almost any other language it does not gain much by translation; it is still a little word. But nevertheless, in whatever form it comes to us, there is an infinity of intense meaning wrapped up in it. Here we see one of the peculiarities of Holy Scripture. For Heaven's best thought is often expressed in words of one syllable. There are no long words coined great enough in themselves to convey the meaning and import of God, love, grace, faith, peace. And thus it has come to pass that the most powerful, the most pregnant, of spiritual truths have been thrown into words which a little child may repeat in its earliest articulate attempts.

God is great! His greatness is revealed in his works, and proclaimed in his Word. How vast is the scale of creation. What thoughts of his immensity are suggested by the sight of the glittering hosts of stars which stud the sky on a clear and cloudless night. Never has the overpowering sense of the vastness of the visible universe been more finely expressed than in the words of David, when he says: "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers; the moon and the stars, which Thou hast ordained; What is man, that Thou art mindful of him? and the son of man that Thou visitest him?" All the works of God were designed to declare his exceeding greatness. "The heavens declare the glory of God: and the firmament sheweth his handy-work." "He telleth the number of the stars; He calleth them all by their names. Great is our Lord, and of great power; his understanding is infinite."

God is great—this is always and everywhere the testimony of the Bible. Prophet and Priest and Psalmist unite in celebrating his greatness. He is the Incomparable and Unique: "Thou art great, O Lord God; for there is none like Thee, neither is there any God beside Thee." He is the Exalted and Supreme: "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty; for all that is in the heaven and the earth is thine: thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and Thou art exalted as head above all." He is the Almighty and Terrible: "For the Lord your God is God of gods, and Lord of lords, a great God, a mighty and a terrible." And He is the Holy and Immeasurable: "Great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee."

But, unfortunately, in Christian circles and religious literature it is not the fashion to emphasise God's greatness; and therefore we are not surprised that belief in the greatness of God is not as prevalent as belief in his goodness, his grace, and his gentleness. Now, if the knowledge of God is the highest good then this is an unspeakable calamity. For when men have narrow, childish, cramped views of God they are narrow, weak, cramped in their Christian life and experience. It is by meditating upon the great things of God, upon his infinity and immensity, that saints grow and become great. As we increase in the knowledge of God and his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, we increase in purity and power, and our conduct becomes more nearly what it ought to be.

Hence it is our duty to insist upon a higher conception of God than is usually found in the average Christian of to-day. We must read, and read again and again, the Scriptures which speak of his greatness, until our poor views are overwhelmingly enlarged; until God occupies the front and foremost and first place in the visible sphere as He does in the invisible. Man, money, music, machinery—all good and right in their true place—must decrease, and the conviction and the consciousness of the Divine Presence increase. While in the nature of things finite conceptions of the infinite will always be imperfect, they need not be inadequate. Every day we need a fresh revelation. Every day we can wait upon God for clearer and larger views of Himself. And every day we should look to God to work in us a more determined faith, that enters with awe and adoration into the Unseen and Eternal, and that goes forth in the strength of a reverent sense of the Personal Presence to impress the greatness of God on the people.

And what are the results when a man has thus been apprehended and overwhelmed by the greatness and the glory of the Personal Presence?

First, faith in God is increased, and becomes deeply rooted in the power of God, and not in the wisdom or the devices or the popularity of man.

And then the promises are grasped with a firmer grip. Men who are well acquainted with the great God do not stagger under the weight of a great promise.

Our worship is more intelligent, more spiritual, more spontaneous, more pleasing and acceptable to God.

And, more than that, we are humbled into the dust, and evermore abide at the footstool of the Almighty. Nothing is more humbling, no exercise more abasing, than the steady, steadfast gaze, away from our own littlenesses and limitations to the greatness and grandeur of the infinite God. An adequate apprehension of the greatness of God—this is one thing needful to keep us in our right place, at our right work, and in the right spirit.

What think you of God, and what is God to you?

W. MONRO COLLINGS.

Jews in Russia.—Mr. S. Wilkinson, of the Midway Mission to the Jews, writes:—"I would ask the prayers of your readers on behalf of a Jewish Christian brother just returned to Russia with a view to obtaining his civil rights in order to be able to devote his life to the preaching of the Gospel amongst his brethren in that country. Mr. Levinski has had it laid on his heart to profit by the recent manifesto of the Czar granting immunity to Jewish subjects who had left the empire while liable to military duty if they would return. Mr. Levinski left London about a fortnight ago, and, though he will be free from imprisonment, yet he may possibly have to serve his five years' term of military service. This, with true Christian devotion, he has confessed himself willing to do, trusting to be able to use even his position as a soldier for the furtherance of the Gospel, while at the same time re-securing his rights as a Russian citizen."

For Me and Thee.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

“THAT day stands clearly marked in my memory, because something happened in it, which meant more than it seemed at the time. Indeed, ever since then I have been finding out more and more what the dear Master meant, all of whose miracles were parables, giving glimpses into what He meant to be to us when his bodily presence was removed. Often and often, in dark and lonely days, I have gone back to that incident, and been refreshed and comforted.”

To what dost thou refer?

“We were in Capernaum, where my house was, and the Master was staying with us, as was his wont. I was about in the town, when the collectors of the half-shekel, the capitation tax, came to me, and asked if He did not pay it. I told him that He did, because I knew how particular He was to conform to all lawful usages. On one occasion I remember He greatly aroused the hostility of some, because He bade them give unto Cæsar the things that were Cæsar's. He held that if we availed ourselves of the protection and order of a government, we were bound to support it in all possible ways so long as its demands did not clash with our allegiance to the Most High. I knew that we had no half-shekels in our bag, for all our resources were exhausted, still I was sure that the Master would not wish to escape payment by pleading poverty, and I left the officers with the understanding that the money should be paid.

“When I came to the Master and told Him what had happened, He said pleasantly that He thought that as children of the Father, the Lord of the Temple, for whose support the tax was levied, we might fairly claim exemption. What humility was this, that He should speak of me as being a child like Himself, though I knew, and indeed had confessed only a little before, that He was the Son of the ever-living God, after a unique and special fashion! However, as I expected, He said that He must not give needless offence, or bring about unnecessary controversy; so He sent me to the lake with a line, and told me to take up the first fish that I hooked, and open its mouth, in which I should find one coin, which would pay for us both. I cannot forget the way in which He said the words, ‘for Me and thee.’”

What made them seem so significant?

“Ah! do you not understand? It seemed as though He said that our cause was one; that as I gave Him the use of my house, and boat, and line, so He would give me of his miraculous wonder-working power; that his cause should never lack the necessary funds for its honourable maintenance, and the defrayment of all just dues and demands; that I must do my best, and He would do the rest; so that in all things we should be in blessed partnership—one coin to frank us both.”

And how has this helped you?

“Often since then, when there has been an unusual strain on me, and I have had nothing with which to meet the demands of my position;—it may be I have needed judgment to answer knotty questions, wisdom on matters of doctrine or church discipline, or words with which to make my defence before governors or kings—I have gone to the Master, saying, They are asking of me what I cannot give for myself, much less for Thee. And He has lovingly answered, ‘But your cause is mine, as mine is yours. Do not be anxious. In the great sea of Providence there are ample stores, and all that is lacking shall be supplied for Me and thee.’”

“Those words ‘For Me and thee’ keep coming to me from his dear lips as freshly as though they had been spoken yesterday. When I was an eye-witness of his suffering and death through which He passed to his glory I thought He looked at me, though his face was shadowed by pain and by the memory of my denial, as much as to say this is for Me and thee. When I met Him on the resurrection morning all radiant with his victory over the grave and death, I thought He said, ‘It is for Me and thee.’ And when He spoke of going unto the glory, where we could not follow Him then, but from which He promised to send the Spirit, He said, ‘It is for Me and thee.’ Often when I have been in prison, He has come near and said, ‘Be of good courage, quit thyself like a man, this is not thy matter only, It is for Me and thee.’ And when my heart and flesh have failed, He has told me of his home, his throne, his glory, and whispered lovingly, They are for Me and thee. I once thought of making three tabernacles, one for Moses, one for Elias, and one for Him. It never occurred to me to make a fourth for us three disciples, who were with Him on the Holy Mount. I took it for granted that we should share his; and now He seems to be ever acting on the same principle, and says to me, ‘Thou art ever with Me, and all that I have is thine; all thine is mine, and therefore all mine is thine; and everything is for Me and thee. We are joint heirs of all the Father's store.’”

Are these words also for us?

“Certainly, since God has called you into the fellowship of his Son, and fellowship is partnership. It has pleased the Father that in Him all fulness should dwell, that out of his fulness those who believe should receive, and grace for grace. Yea, it is often permitted to the disciple to come to the end of his resources, that he may be driven to the Master to find how able He is to supply all his need according to his riches in glory, that He may hear Him say, ‘All these are for Me and thee.’”

Evidently, fellow disciples, we are richer than we thought. True that our purse is empty, but who would wish it full, lest its fulness might deprive us of the opportunity of enjoying our Master's provision? Indeed we must go shares with Him in his poverty if we should share his wealth. We must have a common purse, and be prepared to give all up for Him, if we would see Him interpose for Himself and us together. It is very good to share times of scarcity and emptiness with Him, because only so can we see what He can do. His greatest interpositions are well set off on the background of our utter helplessness. Never be discouraged. Though you know you have an empty treasury, never hesitate to meet the tax-gatherer, in whatever form he comes, with a yea. Your Master cannot act dishonourably by you or him, and if He has withdrawn you from your fishing-nets to personal attendance on Himself, that is the greater reason why you should go at once to Him.

Of course, bills contracted by your extravagance, outside of your common life, and apart from the plan shown you on the Mount, the Master will not be responsible for. Though even for these you may go to Him, in bitter repentance and sorrow of soul, confessing your sin, and asking Him to extricate you. Of his free grace He will no doubt find a way of relief and deliverance. But about payments which you have contracted in doing his work, in following out his own directions, in maintaining his honour, you need have neither hesitation nor fear. “Your Master,” as David Livingstone said once, “is a perfect gentleman,” and his honour is pledged to those who have given all to Him; the only condition being a perfect identification of interests; you must be all for Him, with no thought apart from Him, ever saying truly, For Thee and me, whilst He will not fail to answer, “For Me and thee.”

There never was such a Master as ours, so considerate, so prodigal of his help, so intent on supplying all the need of those who accompany Him. Never a storm that He will not share, never a steep bit of the road which He will not tread, never a demand incurred in his service that He will not meet, never an item of expenditure that He will not defray. Never hesitate to link your fortunes with his, come what may, or to leave your fishing-boats and nets, and step out into a life of companionship and fellowship with Him, always remembering those memorable words, that meant so much to Peter, “For Me and thee.”

Amongst Zulu Kaffirs.

MR. ELBERT S. CLARKE'S report of the Mission to Zulu Kaffirs at Rock Fountain, Hope Vale, and Entakamu, Ixopo, Natal, contains much to interest in its simple record of diligent service and happy result.

The native evangelist at Hope Vale reports evident blessing amongst his people. At Rock Fountain the work has been full of life. “Some who were boys and girls in our school at Rock Fountain years ago, but who afterwards became for a time indifferent to the Gospel, have come out boldly on the Lord's side, and are witnessing for Him. This is particularly the case with Imluko, a young man who has a manifest gift for preaching, and who makes it his delight to go from place to place without being sent, to tell out what he knows of the love of Jesus. The young woman to whom he is engaged to be married has also confessed Christ, and so will not hinder him in following his Lord. He is full of joy and praise.

“The change in the Rock Fountain meetings both on Sunday and weekday is very marked; in addition to the heathen who regularly attend, several forms are now filled with natives who wear clothes as a profession of their faith in Christ. This makes a great contrast with the meetings we first held there in a hut, when the assembled heathen asked, during the preaching, when they were going to be paid for all this singing and praying, and for lending their ears to the words of the white man?”

Special reference is made to the great drought, which has brought distress and scarcity of food over Eastern South Africa, and to the unprecedented swarms of locusts, which have in many places eaten up the whole of the new crops. These visitations seem to have been the means of touching many hearts, and it is stated that amongst the heathen very many are turning to God. The mid-week meetings and kraal-to-kraal visitation have greatly increased, with not a few tokens of blessing. Often in the meetings the people have been broken down by the Spirit of God, and not only women, but powerful men have been prostrate, crying for mercy. Many have come out boldly on the Lord's side, and are now giving evidence of changed hearts.

Communications should be addressed, Mr. Elbert S. Clarke, Carr End, Entakamu, Ixopo, Natal; or to the home secretary, Mrs. Fothergill, Pierremont Crescent, Darlington.

The Christian's Calling.

“Behold, I stand at the door and knock.—Rev. iii. 20.

Throw open wide thy soul-gates
And let the Conqueror in;
Thy Saviour claims admission
To keep thy heart from sin.
He paid the debt to free thee;
Thy liberty is won;
Thy Father now beholds thee
“Accepted” in his Son.

’Tis o’er, the great arraignment,
The condemnation past;
Thou hast no fear, O Christian,
Of judgment at the last;
Thou art set free from capture,
From bond of doubt or shame;
Believe the word's full rapture—
“Accepted” in his name.

For ever and for ever
Thou dost belong to Christ;
His bond will fail thee never,
Thy destiny is priced;
Thou hast been bought with coin
Of never-changing worth—
Lift up thy voice and join
The song of the new Birth!

“Set free,” “elect,” “accepted,”
Let go all faithless dread;
No promise is excepted,
Take all that God has said.
“Able to keep” from falling,
Willing to save from sin—
Christian! behold thy calling!
“My King and Lord—come in.”

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, September 6.

"THE PEOPLE HAVE NOT SEPARATED THEMSELVES."—
Ezra ix. 1.

THIS was only too true! There had been, on the part of princes and rulers, gross intermarriage with the people of surrounding lands. The holy seed had become mixed and diluted. And it was the more sad that this should have taken place, when it was to cleanse his people from the result of all such alliances to which they inevitably led that God had passed them through the purging fires of the 70 years' captivity. It afflicted the good Ezra sorely. With every sign of Oriental grief he poured out his soul before God. And this is the lesson we should carry with us. It has been truly said that communion with the Lord dries many tears, but it starts many more. We no longer sorrow with the sorrow of the world, but we become burdened with some of the griefs that still rend the heart of the Lord in the glory. As He beholds the cities of the world, and the inconsistencies of his own people, his heart is sorrowful even unto death, and He says to us: "Can ye not watch with Me one hour."

This fellowship between the Lord's people and the world is becoming increasingly close as we near the end of the age. In our home affinities, amusements, books, and practices, there is very little to choose between the one and the other. If there is any distinction, it lies in a certain sadness with which Christians take their pleasures, as though remembering a something better. But we do not grieve over it: we do not rend our clothes: we do not take these things to heart, as though they were our own.

"THIS MATTER BELONGETH UNTO THEE: WE ALSO WILL BE WITH THEE: BE OF GOOD COURAGE, AND DO IT."—
Ezra x. 4.

It is not given to everyone to be an Ezra. There are abuses to deal with, and wrongs to right, on every side; but they require to be dealt with by those who are specially adapted or qualified for the work. Be always ready to do such work, if there should be no one else. It was the life motto of a great man always to act as though there were no one else who would. Still, Nehemiahs and Ezras are not given very largely to the Church or the world; and for the most part, we must be content to be of those who say, "Be of good courage, and do it, we also will be with thee." But though this seems but a little thing, it may lead to great results. Many a man has been urged to a noble deed by the encouragement he received at a critical hour from some unknown and obscure disciple.

If you cannot do a great thing, identify yourself with one who can. Stand by him, identify yourself with him in public or private, by sympathy and prayer. There are great strongholds of evil, but they may be swept away before an avalanche of snowflakes, any one of which would melt in the warm hand of a child.

TUESDAY, September 8.

"I WAS THE KING'S CUPBEARER."—Neh. i. 11.

The post was an important one. It gave its occupant the opportunity of coming into close contact with the king; it implied a character of unusual trustworthiness, since Oriental despots were very afraid of poison. But no one expected a royal cupbearer to do anything very heroic. He lived in the inner part of the palace, and was necessarily excluded from the great deeds of the stirring outward world. Nehemiah also was evidently a humble and retiring man. His response to the story of the ruined condition of Jerusalem was just a flood of tears and prayer to the God of heaven. And had you seen those tears and heard that prayer, you might have thought that just another flower was drooping, another seed falling into the ground to die.

But this was not all. These prayers and tears were supplemented by an earnest purpose, which was maturing with every hour. He gave himself to God to be used, if God would have it so, as an instrument in the execution of his recorded purpose. He was a man of faith. It mattered little enough that he was only a cupbearer, for that was no barrier to God; indeed, God might work more efficiently through a frail weak man, than through the prince, the soldier, or the orator, since He cannot give his glory to another. What a glorious faith was his, which dared to believe that through his yielded life God could pour his mighty rivers. Why do we not yield ourselves in our helplessness to God, and ask Him to work through us, to fulfil his mighty purposes?

WEDNESDAY, September 9.

"SO I PRAYED TO THE GOD OF HEAVEN."—Neh. ii. 4.

All around the apartment in which this interview took place were effigies of idol gods; perhaps incense was burning before a shrine, and filling the air with its aroma. But Nehemiah, though standing amid these heathen emblems, and in the presence of the greatest king on earth, thought little of either one or the other, and prostrated himself in spirit before the throne of heaven. Remember that thou hast within thee a shrine, a temple into which at any moment, even amid the excitement of an earthly court, thou mayest retire and ask direction of thy King and Friend.

He had been sorely startled by the king's question; he did not know that his face had betrayed him. He had, doubtless, intended to seek an interview with the king (see i. 11), and formally state the whole case. But to be taken thus at unawares, to have to state his case on the spur of the moment, appeared to take him at a great disadvantage, and he instinctively turned to prayer.

How little the king knew what was transpiring, or what had happened between his question and the reply which was given, apparently without the loss of a moment. But how beautiful is the example for ourselves. You cannot acquire this habit of ejaculatory prayer unless you spend prolonged periods in holy fellowship. But when you are much with God in private, you will not find it difficult at any moment to step aside to ask Him a question.

THURSDAY, September 10.

"EVERY ONE OVER AGAINST HIS HOUSE."—Neh. iii. 28.

This is the way to deal with the evil of this world. We are all fonder of starting schemes, forming committees, and discussing methods of work, than in setting definitely to work for ourselves. There is a lack of definiteness, and we hardly know where to begin. But this verse suggests that every one should begin over against his own house. Try and make your own neighbourhood a little more like what God would have it. It may be that you have gone too far afield in search of work; you are applying to the Foreign Missionary Society, or are waiting for a sphere of service; yet, all the time, there is that wretched neighbourhood, like a piece of ruined wall before you. Arise and repair it!

Meshullam repaired over against his chamber (v. 30). Perhaps he was not rich enough to have a whole house; he lived in a single room, but he discovered that there was a little bit of the wall just opposite his window which would not be built unless he set to it. Is not that a hint for college students, and for those who live in flats, or industrial dwellings?

The best way is not immediately to begin giving tracts, good though that is in its place. Ask God to give you an opportunity of showing kindness to your neighbours, so that they get to understand and trust you. This is the foundation of your bit of wall. Then plod on step by step, tier by tier. God will show you how. You may be unpractised in wall-building, but He is the Architect and Builder, and you are but a bricklayer's labourer at the best. Do as He tells you.

FRIDAY, September 11.

"REMEMBER THE LORD."—Neh. iv. 14.

It was uncommonly good advice. Amid all the wise precautions taken by this man of sanctified common-sense, he kept bringing the people back to God. God was amongst them. He would fight for them. God was going to bring the counsel of their enemies to nought.

Whenever enemies assail and difficulties gather like storm-clouds look away from them and remember the Lord. When hemmed in on every side be sure that He can help you perpendicularly; remember the Lord. When heart and flesh fail, and you do not know what to do for the best, be sure to remember the Lord, and act as in his most holy presence. What a comfort and strength it is to see a Friend, standing amid a crowd of your adversaries intent on your destruction, and to know that He will act and speak for you! But remember that Jesus is always like that.

You say that you forget so soon; that you would remember, but at the critical moment you are betrayed into forgetfulness. But you must recall that precious promise, that the Holy Spirit will bring all things to remembrance. If only you will trust the difficulty into his hands, you will find that He will gladly undertake it; and as long as you leave it with Him you will hear his voice rising in your heart, and saying, "Remember the Lord."

SATURDAY, September 12.

"SO DID NOT I, BECAUSE OF THE FEAR OF GOD."—
Neh. v. 15.

These were great words. Nehemiah had a perfect right to take this money. Not a word could be said even by his critics, if he did. He was doing a priceless work, and might justly claim his maintenance. On the other hand, the people were very poor, and he would have a larger influence over them if he were prepared to stand on their level, and to share with them. It was just so that the Apostle argued in 1 Cor. ix. And from both we learn that often we must forego our evident rights and liberties in order to influence others for Christ. Do not always stand on your rights, but live for others, making any sacrifice in order to save some.

If Nehemiah did so much for the holy fear of God, what ought not we to do for love? Love is more inexorable than law. Its exactions are more stringent and searching. Are we doing as much for love of Jesus as generations before did simply on the score of duty? It is much to be questioned if Jesus does not get less, of outward service at least, out of his followers, than Mahomet or Buddha does. But what He does get is infinitely sweet to Him, as far as love prompts it.

All around you people are doing things that they say are perfectly legitimate; they call you narrow and bigoted because you don't join with them; they are always arguing with you to prove you are wrong. But your supreme law is your attitude to your Master. "I cannot do otherwise for the love of Jesus."

Miss Margaret Patterson, who last December returned to India, where she had already laboured many years in connection with the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, writes from Ajodhya:—"There are several native Christian families, and the Zenana and school work have gone on successfully under the superintendence of Miss Nallon and Miss Harris; yet it is only seed-sowing patiently from day to day. Living among the people, one feels more the dead weight of heathenism, the indifference, the difficulty of getting at the people, the utter powerlessness to give to them a sense of need; for how can they receive Christ as Saviour without the knowledge 'we have sinned'? It is nearly twenty years since I first came to India. May these days of my life be fruitful to the praise of his glory who redeemed me."

Fruit and Fruit Trees.

YOU all like fruit, do you not, children? When it grows in your gardens, you can scarcely wait until it is ripe. Such is your eagerness that you want to pick and eat green gooseberries, green currants, green apples, instead of waiting patiently until the warm summer sunshine has made them large and sweet and juicy.

And what a succession we have of them—from the early gooseberries to the winter pears. Through the long summer months we get them one after another—currants, red and black and white, black and white cherries, rosy strawberries, sweet raspberries, delicious grapes, luscious plums, and crisp, crunchy apples. Then in the winter time we can get foreign fruit, such as oranges and dates, so that we are never without fruit. What a loss it would be to our tables if we never had any fruit. What a number of delicious puddings would need to be left out of our cookery books!

It is a pleasant thing to go into an orchard on a sunny autumn day and see the fruits ripening on the trees. And what fun it is to help to pick them, and to store them away for the winter. What excitement there is over the planting of the long ladders, and the carrying of big clothes-baskets to the scene of labour.

There is one curious thing about fruit-trees, children, which I want you to notice. Perhaps you have always taken it for granted, and so have not thought it curious. Yet in two separate places in the Bible we find it mentioned as worthy of notice. Both Matthew and James ask the same question in slightly different words. Listen: "Do men gather grapes from thorns, or figs from thistles?" And, again, "Can the fig tree, my brothers, bear olive berries, or the vine figs?" Olives and figs you do not know much about. I daresay you never saw either of them growing; but grapes you do know, and I think you would be very much surprised if you took a walk in the country some day, and saw bunches of grapes hanging from a thorn bush. "These grapes must have been tied on this bush; they could never have grown there." Why not? Why should not oranges grow on apple trees, and cherries on raspberry canes? "Because they never do," you reply. Well, that is very true; but you have not yet told me why. This is a very difficult question to answer. No man understands it, altogether; but this we know, that God has so made all the plants of the earth that each one has its own flower and its own fruit. And no one plant ever makes a mistake or brings forth other fruit than its own. This is a wonderful thing, is it not? And because it is a thing which is never disputed, Matthew says again, "A tree is known by its fruits." That is to say, that if you see apples growing on a tree you say at once, "That is an apple tree." But if you see pears, you say, "That is a pear tree." You would not think of saying, "Yes; I see cherries on that tree. But for all I know it may be a gooseberry bush after all." Well, that is the first thing which I want you to remember. Say it after me, slowly and distinctly, "A tree is known by its fruits."

Did you ever think that you were like fruit trees, I wonder? You don't think you are, one bit? Well, I do. Listen to these two texts—"A tree is known by its fruits!" "A child is known by his doings!"

How do you know a pear tree? By the pears upon it. How do you know a thistle? By its prickles. How do you know a good child? By his good deeds. How can you tell if a child is a wicked child? By his naughty deeds. How does your text say that a child is known? By his doings. What are "doings"? They are the things which he does all day long—in the school, and in the home, and in the playground. The things which he does show us what kind of a boy he is. If he slaps the baby, and disobeys his mother, and cheats at his play, and idles at his lessons, we cannot call him a good boy, can we? That kind of boy will most likely grow up to be a cruel, mean, selfish man. He is known by his doings. But if he is gentle and obedient at home, industrious at school, and merry and unselfish at his play, we know that he is a good boy—a boy who will probably grow up into a good, honest, sensible man. He, too, is known by his doings.

Now, dear children, do you see that just as a tree is known by its fruits, so a child is known by his doings? Your "doings" are the fruits by which it is known whether you are a good child or a naughty child. The Bible tells us two things about these doings or fruits of ours. It tells us what sort of fruits we are to show in our lives, and it also tells us how to get these fruits. First of all, what are these fruits? Here is the list:—Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. Nine of them! I think you know the meaning of all these, except, perhaps, two, long-suffering and temperance. Long-suffering means a very great deal of patience. When anyone vexes you, and tries your patience many, many times in the day, you must be patient still. And temperance means self-control. It means that when the anger rises up in your heart at some sharp word or unkind action you are to keep it down, and not let it show, either in word, or look, or gesture. That when you go out to tea and see the table heaped with good things you will not eat more than is good for you. You have seen a man driving a spirited horse, have you not? If the man is a good driver he will have his horse well in hand—he will control its movements, and prevent it from running away with him. Now, your desires, your wishes, are sometimes like spirited horses. They try to run away with you, but you must learn to control them, to keep them well in hand; in a word, you must have self-control. Once more, how are we to get these fruits in our lives? What does Paul call them? He calls them the "fruits of the Spirit." Yes, it is only those who have the Spirit of Christ in their hearts, that can show such fruits as these in their lives. Ask God daily in your prayers to give you his Holy Spirit, and then, like the fruit trees, you will bring forth good fruit, and be known by your doings, because your works are always pure and right. Then, as you grow older, you will learn, by his help, to bring forth still more of the fruits of righteousness in your life. For if a tree is well cared for it bears better fruit the older it gets. Apples taste mellow if gathered from an old tree. I daresay you know the tiny, sweet St. Michael orange, with its thin skin. If gathered when the tree is young, it has a thicker skin and a more bitter taste. So, you see, you must not expect to show as good fruit yet as older Christians can. Have you never heard it said of an aged Christian, "He (or she) is ripe for heaven"? That is what you must grow to be, so that at the right time, when the Lord Jesus comes to call you, He may find the fruit which He longed to see when He said, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit."

"ARDREISHAIG" AND ISABELLA GRAHAM.—Many thanks for the flowers, which were sent to the Children's Hospital, Shadwell, and much appreciated. NELLIE LOVEGROVE.—Thank you very much for your two pairs of knitted socks; they will be a great comfort to some poor boy. ETHEL FIELDER.—You had better send the answers. I am glad AMY FOSTER is a little better. DORA WALTERS, WINNIE HOYTE, and ANNIE FLEMING.—Your names have been corrected. "DUDLEY."—Thank you for your letter, but you did not send the whole of the answer. I hope this week you will be more successful. WINNIE PAGE.—You may write on both sides. The star is the only difference made. NETTA BARCROFT.—Your name is sufficient. RUBIE VINCENT.—Your answer was correct. The other was not. CECILIA FRANKLIN.—I hope you are better. N. OAKES AND KATE JOHNS.—You may use a reference Bible, and have the questions explained to you, but no help may be given with the answers, and no Concordance may be used. E. S. HAYWARD.—You only answered the last question relating to Proverbs.

Some of my youngest "nephews and nieces" spend a great deal of time in writing out the answers more fully than they need. I do not want the "Searcher" to become a burden, and I shall be glad if their parents will explain the questions fully to them. In No. 34, for example, many wrote out the whole verse, when only the text given in the "Searcher" was required.

BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.

(Concluded.)

ONE day in the streets of Inverness I was glad to encounter an old friend, Mr. Joseph Melven, publisher, and to learn from him that his new Gospel mid-monthly, The Northern Evangelist, is taking hold among Christian families in the district. This magazine was noticed in your columns when it was started some months ago. It has improved, I think, in substance, since then. The last issue seems to me one of special value, containing as it does specially-contributed articles by such able and learned men as Principal Douglas and Professor Laidlaw, besides much other excellent reading of the old-fashioned evangelical sort. The Bible Class Talks, by "Sandy Scott," being in the broadest of Doric, are quite up-to-date in form; while in pith they are worthy of all praise for their unfolding of foundation truths. This well-conducted serial, in which some space is allotted also to Gaelic, has a large possible field of usefulness throughout the North of Scotland, and every lover of the Highland people will heartily wish it God-speed, in days when frivolous and enervating literature so much abounds.

THE FREE SECESSIONISTS.

I was anxious to have some authoritative opinion on the religious outlook as it is affected by the recent hiving off from the Free Church of some half-dozen congregations in Inverness and Ross shires. These congregations, I was told by a well-informed friend on the Press, do not represent the full strength of the movement, which has adherents in many other places who are not strong enough numerically to form separate congregations. At the same time there seems little likelihood that the disaffection will spread much further, and the principal mischief is that these disagreements foster the spirit of mutual irritation, and hinder united aggressive work. It may be that the split will tend to check the development of the dry rot of rationalistic teaching which would seem to be a peculiar danger in some Scottish churches at the present time. While I do not find in the provisions of the Declaratory Act passed by the Free Church Assembly any sufficient justification for the schismatic action of the secessionists, still, one cannot withhold from them the meed of admiration due to strong religious conviction, which will readily make heavy sacrifices for the maintenance of cherished principle and belief.

REVIVAL MEMORIES.

My stay in the Highland capital was very brief, and I soon found myself speeding eastward by way of Elgin, Keith, and Huntly, towards Aberdeen. The journey through that district recalled many precious and happy memories of boyhood days in the years of the revival of 1859-60. The once familiar forms of Brownlow North, Duncan Matheson, Gordon Forlong, Hay Macdowall Grant, James Turner, John Murker, Donald Fraser, and others, not forgetting our recently-translated brother, Reginald Radcliffe, and Dr. Williamson, of Belfast, who, with Mr. Forlong, is still spared to us—all these rose before my mental vision, and I seemed to hear their earnest voices sounding out the evangel from Banff pulpits, or ringing forth in pleading and impressive tones in the beautiful park near the Duchess of Gordon's residence, at the Huntly gatherings of those bygone days. I saw again the apparently-endless railway trains which brought and carried back the crowds that flocked to those memorable assemblies from distant places. I heard the joyful hymns with the hearty singing of which the journeys were beguiled. My own conviction is that old Scotland, and other parts of the Empire as well, need another such visitation from on high at the present time, to make more real to the men and women of this materialistic generation the things of God, of the soul, of sin, of salvation, and of the life eternal.

A little nearer Aberdeen the traveller skirts the bleaker uplands of Rhynie, Inch, and Gartly—a region which within the last half century has perhaps given to the world a larger muster roll of literary giants than any similar area of Scottish, English, or Irish soil. Some of them have gone to another sphere, leaving behind ample proof of their genius and the promise of still greater achievements if their lives had been prolonged. Some are with us still, helping sensibly to shape the literary and religious thinking of the time.

THE GRANITE CITY.

There are cities more beautiful for situation and more picturesque in architectural endowment than Aberdeen, but in all my travels I have not yet seen a street that embodies the ideas of solidity, strength, and permanence like the avenue of grey granite which goes by the name of Union-street. Its coldness of aspect detracts little from its overmastering beauty. The fitness of things would be altogether set at naught if the Aberdonians were not a hard-headed race, but their hearts are warm enough when once you find an entrance to them.

The Salvation Army has got a fine new "citadel," which makes a splendid and imposing landmark at the extreme east end of Union-street. I had neither time nor opportunity to make minute inquiries, but the glamour of novelty has now faded apparently from the proceedings of our Army friends in the North of Scotland. Where they are in evidence at all, they appear to have largely settled down into the respectable ranks of denominationalism. Their methods, and still more the immaturity of their doctrinal teaching, are somewhat foreign to the genius and the theological conservatism of the great body of the Scottish people.

Despite the distraction of the modern cycle craze, the devout observance of the Sabbath is still a working article in the creed of Northern Scotland. Aberdeen, whatever else it may be, is a great church-going city. The streets, when the bells are ringing, or when the kirks are "skaling," seem more crowded than in the busiest hours of a business day. With my good host and his family I attended the forenoon service of the Free South Church of which Rev. W. Clow is pastor. He was away for the customary autumn vacation, but I was amply satisfied, indeed delighted, with his young assistant, Mr. Thompson. He is evidently in much favour with the congregation, as the fine new church was quite full, though many hearers must have been absent on holiday. Mr. Thompson's sermon to the children on "Following Jesus" was admirably clear, simple, and strong; while his discourse on Jacob at Bethel was as fresh and suggestive a mingling of things new and old as I have lately heard. His main points were that God is ever very near to us in the great crises of our lives; that the future is in his strong and fatherly hands; and that our experiences of heaven must begin on earth. His protest, on the last head, against relegating close communion with God, which is the very essence of heaven, to a future state of being, was to my mind most timely and most true to the teaching of Scripture. With a good presence, a very serviceable voice, freshness of diction, and a strong mental equipment, Mr. Thompson is bound to rise into the front ranks of Scottish preachers, if life and health are granted to him.

At the evening diet of worship I fulfilled a long-cherished desire to hear the "grand old man" of the Aberdeen pulpit, Dr. John Duncan, of Trinity Congregational Church, Shiprow. Fortunately he had returned from his spell of summer rest, and he was announced in the Saturday papers to preach on "After the Holidays." My earliest recollections of Mr. Duncan carry me back a long way, to the time when he was the most fiery, original, and effective lecturer on the temperance question that in those days visited the north-east coast of Scotland. I found that the hard work of the intervening years had whitened his hair and somewhat bent his vigorous frame; but there was the same strong, speaking face, and almost the same rushing torrent of eloquent, earnest speech. The treatment of his subject was at once characteristic, profitable, and inspiring. Some of the passages descriptive of the glories of God's natural world, and the simple pleasures of country sojourn at this season, recalled the fervid declamation of his lecturing days, in which satire and pathos were wont to be powerfully mingled. I hope the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will, ere long, have the opportunity of seeing Dr. Duncan's portrait in its columns, and of perusing some account of a very full and fruitful life spent in the service of God and humanity.

TRAVELLING COMFORTS.

Before closing these fragmentary memories of an enjoyable holiday I would refer to the greatly-improved facilities for quick and comfortable transit from south to north, and vice versa. The great northern trunk lines from London have made many strides of late years in the march of progress. For their solicitude as to the safe-keeping of their constantly-increasing customers, and for the comparative immunity from serious accident, the travelling public have much reason to thank the companies. We are ready enough to grumble if our trains are late, but we are not always considerate as to the difficulties that press on the officials in times of stress and abnormal traffic. I travelled northwards by the ever-popular East Coast route on the eve of last Bank holiday. The scene at King's Cross station, and the necessarily rapid successive dispatch of long and crowded trains to Scotland were enough to confuse any but the coolest and most experienced heads. The same congested state of things prevailed in an aggravated form at Waverley Station, Edinburgh. But all these thousands of passengers were safely carried to their destinations without any other mishap than a little delay in reaching the end of the journey. Railway officials, from the station superintendents to the humblest but not less important engine-drivers, deserve the sincere sympathy of all travellers in these busy summer days and nights.

I was specially desirous of testing the comfortable qualities of the new and finely-appointed corridor train which has been built for daily service by the Great Northern and North-Eastern Companies. Having had some favourable experience of American trains for long-distance journeys I have often longed for the introduction here of these corridor cars, in which you may freely walk from end to end of the flying train, and so beguile the tedious hours, instead of having to sit cramped up in a corner, or, worse still, out of a corner, for eight or it may be a dozen successive hours. For day travellers at any rate this necessity is now abolished. The train which carried me back to London, which left Edinburgh about mid-day and reached King's Cross to the very tick of the clock, is a real train de luxe, with its finely-upholstered compartments, its long promenade, its excellent lavatory accommodation, and its facilities for getting tea or other light refreshments. Travelling under such circumstances entails little more fatigue than walking about in one's own house and occasionally reclining in the family easy chair.

The two great companies I have named seem thoroughly alive to the needs and demands of the present day, in the arrangement of cheap selected tours, of week-end facilities for getting out of the crowded cities into the midst of healthful rural delights, and for similar provisions all wooing our jaded populations out of man-made towns into the God-made country. I would specially commend to north of England residents the beautifully-illustrated threepenny guides issued by the North-Eastern Railway at York, describing by pen and picture the most beautiful resorts on the eastern coast and among the far-famed Yorkshire dales. It was with special interest that I heard of direct communication being established between the east coast system and Keswick; intending attenders at the Convention in future years, who live in the eastern counties, should take note of this convenience.

All this running to and fro, whether on land or sea, is highly conducive, I am sure, to the highest comity of peoples as well as of nations, and tends to an increase of brotherhood and mutual interest among the varied races whom our one God has made of one blood for to dwell on the face of all the earth.

The Late Mr. A. R. Fenn.

ON the third day of last month a life of forty-four years of service to God on earth was linked on to its heavenly and eternal counterpart; a heart fixed on Christ has been satisfied by awaking in his likeness. In the following brief biographical sketch it is impossible to enter into details of private and home life; we can but say that, as in his public so in his private life, since his conversion his one great aim was that God might be glorified in him.

ALBERT ROBERT FENN was born in London in 1832. Until the age of nineteen he lived a pharisaically religious, though unsatisfied life. He knew the prayer-book by heart, and was often engaged in earnest prayer; yet at a time when he was very ill he had no further consolation than the witness of his father that he was a dutiful and good son. At nineteen years of age, in the quiet of his home and after weeks of deep conviction, he found peace and joy in Christ.

A few years later a sore trial befel the young Christian. He had married a devoted Christian, Miss Annie Hiorns, and she was taken from him by rapid consumption a few months after their marriage.

Mr. Müller's work in Bristol, especially that of the Orphan Houses, had much impressed Mr. Fenn before his conversion, and the yearly reports deepened that interest afterwards. He now offered to help in Mr. Müller's school work, and continued in it some years. During this period the preaching of the Gospel, the holding of Bible-classes and prayer-meetings, Y.M.C.A. work, and the evangelisation of villages, all had a share of his time and strength.

In connection with the last-mentioned branch of service, one incident may be mentioned. At Backwell, a scattered village, where he carried the Gospel, souls were saved under his ministry. The clergyman, aided by the churchwardens, used his greatest endeavours to prevent what he doubtless regarded as an invasion of his parish. One of the wardens in particular, who owned most of the cottages in the district, threatened with expulsion any tenant who should allow a meeting to be held in his cottage, though the centre of Mr. Fenn's endeavours was two miles from the church. By this means he was driven from cottage to cottage, and at last, when a lady who had lent a room in her house for meetings received a similar warning, he had no other resource than prayer. His faith grew bolder, and he definitely prayed that his opponent might be led to give his willing consent. It was not long before his prayer was answered, for one day, meeting him whilst collecting his rents, and speaking on ordinary subjects, the warden said, "If you like to use Miss B——'s room for your meeting, I will oppose you no more." It afterwards transpired that the warden, while hidden behind a tree, had heard Mr. Fenn's open-air preaching.

In 1861, Mr. Fenn felt called to give himself entirely to evangelistic and pastoral work, and was led to do this in simple dependence upon God for support. Though within a short time various positions of Christian service were offered with promised salaries, he preferred to continue as he had begun. This was his position with regard to means during the remainder of his life. In the same year he married Miss Charlotte Backwell, who for some years had been an earnest worker for Christ, and who, after being the companion of his life and labours for nearly thirty-five years, now mourns his loss.

During the remaining eight years in England, before his desire to work in a Roman Catholic country was realised, his spheres of labour were successively Yatton, Weston-super-Mare and Kingsbridge. Without entering into details, we remark in passing that Mr. Fenn held and taught in these places, as throughout his life of service, that the bond of union between Christians is stronger than their denominational differences. "All one in Christ Jesus" represented his position in these matters. Though it is now twenty-seven years since he left Kingsbridge, united prayer-meetings where various denominations are represented, continue to be held. It was through his endeavours that they were initiated.

To many friends and relations Mr. and Mrs. Fenn's next step seemed bold and hazardous, and it was in spite of friendly yet serious remonstrance that they stepped forward into what appeared to some to be almost a course of madness. They were convinced that God had called them to labour in Spain, and when the right time came (the Spanish revolution of 1838), they took that step in faith. The future of themselves and their family (four children, of whom the youngest was in arms), they left in God's hands, and went forth with no promised salary. Without a living faith and real conviction that God had called them to go forth, such a step would have been madness, but as in all past ages so now—

(From Photograph by Mr. Yewall, Southport.)

They who trust Him wholly,
Find Him wholly true;

God was, indeed, as true as his word. They were strengthened, however, by much prayerful sympathy on the part of many Christians. Mr. Robert Chapman, of Barnstaple, who had visited Spain years before, was specially interested on hearing of their intention, and encouragingly said, "Spain has need of your family too."

For the sake of brevity we will not refer in detail to Mr. Fenn's work in Barcelona, where for three years he and Mr. Henry Payne laboured in affectionate companionship. In Barcelona and Madrid his missionary endeavours were conducted on similar lines. The greatest need of the Spaniard, to know God, was met by diligent and constant preaching of the truth as it is in Jesus, and by the distribution of Testaments, Gospels, and tracts. The dense ignorance of the uneducated Spaniard (which in itself is food for his superstitions) was met by the establishment of day-schools, where at a nominal cost a substantial education was given. Mr. Charles Faithfull had already started in Madrid when Mr. Fenn, leaving Barcelona, joined him in his labours, till on Mr. Faithfull's departure he and Mrs. Fenn had the entire direction of the mission.

Mr. Fenn was well equipped for both branches of his work. In a country where there was no conscience, where people had very little conception of the true nature of sin, in whose life indeed religion and sin were constantly side by side in perfect agreement, a country whose religious instructors were, in many cases, slaves of their lusts, often shamelessly and openly living in wickedness (Spain is the same now), nothing could be more powerful than Mr. Fenn's life of holy and devoted service to God. Business-like punctuality in the discharge of obligations and payment of rents and salaries contrasted with the unreliableness of the procrastinating Spaniard. Quiet submission to much unjust opposition and persecution, stood out in bold relief from a background of vindictive querulousness. Purity and grace of life and language shone as a light amid the darkness of earth's vilest modes of life and most blasphemous expressions that daily disgrace a Spanish city. Indeed, a life of love to God was the foundation of his influence in the northern district of Madrid, Chamberi, where he laboured for so many years.

The writer once invited a policeman to attend a meeting in the little Chamberi chapel. "Is it where that saint preaches?" replied the man quite seriously. It was his task in such a country by God's gracious blessing to teach the hearers what sin is and how real a salvation from its guilt and power our Saviour has brought us; and this was truly his principal theme. The little chapel, that could accommodate with considerable difficulty two hundred and fifty, was generally occupied by a goodly number of hearers. Many were eager for the truth, and at times new comers would exclaim: "Something tells me that this is the truth." It is not a matter of wonder, however, that many of these found the Gospel too true to suit their evil ways, and withdrew, bringing disappointment to the soul-seeker. Alas! too, even prominent members of the church, who had preached the Gospel and distributed tracts, etc., and who had borne much persecution, went back to their old ways, and so there was much weeping with the sowing. But the membership grew, and in spite of removals and deaths has been about a hundred or more for some time.

For many years (until 1892) Messrs. Müller and Wright, of Bristol, made themselves responsible for the support of the day and Sunday-schools. For all the rest of the work, besides personal expenses, there was no promised help from anyone. Prayer was answered and supplies were sent, so that, be it said to the glory of God, there was no delay in meeting liabilities. The reader can perhaps judge how widespread was the influence of the schools, attended during the last years of Mr. Fenn's superintendence by four to five hundred children daily. Portions of Scripture learned regularly were often recited to Roman Catholic parents at home.

Also at the time of examinations and Christmas feasts, when there was always a crowded attendance, many parents heard the truth from their own children.*

We are thankful to add that many scholars (though proportionately very few), have become true Christians. Altogether about 5000 had passed through the schools or were in actual attendance when Mr. Fenn (whose health had been rapidly failing), was glad to leave to Mr. Faithfull the whole charge of the work. Mention should be made too of an orphanage, now closed, in which, however, several girls became and still continue Christians. Several Christian women from England have been active workers for many years in Madrid, and their efforts have been much blessed.

Many cases of great interest could be mentioned had we space. Instances of remarkably changed life, faithful endurance of persecution, peaceful testimony in death, etc., showing how very abundantly God had blessed his servants' labours, and very much fruit will yet be revealed.

Mr. Fenn was compelled in 1895 by his state of health to bid a sad and affectionate farewell to the little church in Chamberí. Truly wonderful is the love that binds the missionary to those who have believed through the word spoken by him. The dear Spanish Christians went in goodly number to the station to look for the last time on earth on the face of the one who had been God's ambassador to them; and no hearts outside his immediate family circle now feel his departure more keenly than those beloved Spaniards, whom he cared and prayed and worked for.

It was when on a visit to Mrs. Gosse, St. Mary Church, Torquay, after a brief illness of five days, that Mr. Fenn passed peacefully away in the presence of Mrs. Fenn and their family. As we think of this soldier of Christ now resting, let us pray that by God's grace our lives, too, may be consecrated for the Master's glory. Will every Christian who reads this sketch remember in prayer God's work in Chamberí and Mr. and Mrs. Faithfull, who are now bearing the burdens connected with it.

Thanksgiving.

I FARN would give Thee deepest thanks,
Thou, Lord, hast made me thine;
That into this lone heart has come,
Thy Light and Love divine.
I thank Thee for the awful cross,
Its bitterness and woe;
The wrath of God Thou hast endured,
That I no wrath may know.
I thank Thee for the Spirit's love
Who caused mine eyes to see
The hollowness of earthly things,
The peace there is in Thee.
What disappointment all along
Life's swift recurring years;
How oft amidst the brightest smiles
Come agonies and tears.
And so the heart must turn to Thee,
When weary or oppress;
To find thy loving sympathy
A perfect, perfect rest.
Give, give me grace to walk with Thee,
Alone o'er rock or sand;
I shall not fear, if Thou art near
To hold my trembling hand.
Until at last my pilgrim feet
Shall walk thy courts above,
And know the fulness, wide and deep,
Of thine unchanging love.

S. TREVOR FRANCIS.

Northfield in 1896.

By REV. F. B. MEYER.

IN Mr. Moody's judgment, the Convention just finished ranks among the best and most powerful ever held at this beautiful spot in the Connecticut Valley. Though prolonged over two weeks, the interest has never flagged, and the closing meeting on Sunday night seemed electric with the presence of God. When I arrived at the end of the first week, Mr. Moody saluted me with the remark, "They are all waiting to be led into the promised land," and so I found it. It is also certain that the true Joshua did lead many in that great host across the Jordan, and hundreds are now in "the pleasant land," never, I trust, to leave it again.

It was very delightful to find that our beloved friend, Rev. S. A. Selwyn, had already prepared the ground, and gathered to himself much love from these warm-hearted American Christians; and the witness to the deeper things of God was thus confirmed in the mouth of two witnesses. His son, whom he had crossed the Atlantic to visit, and who came with him to the meetings, was converted at one of them in answer to special prayer, and forthwith determined to give up his occupation, and become a missionary. Whilst I write these words, I expect he is on the ocean, returning to England of grace, and did not affect the attendance, as it might have done had we allowed our minds to dwell on it. But how much there was to alleviate the sense of the tropical temperature! The glorious auditorium with all the doors open on either side to the breeze, whenever a waft of it came to us; the woodlands and shadowing trees; the abundance of vehicles reducing physical fatigue as much as possible; the exquisite view along the valley, with its blue river; the verandahs, shutters, and wire-gauze windows of the houses; the beauty of the nights; the heavy dews of the morning; the perpetual fluttering of fans—all mitigated the heat, and alleviated its pressure so far as possible.

And what grand men were there—Dr. Mabie, the devoted secretary of the Baptist Missionary Board—we had tea with him in his cottage among the pines; Dr. Pierson, in his country home, with his children gathered from the ends of the earth; Dr. Weston, the principal of one of the theological colleges, a ripe old saint, brimming with Bible-lore, as a man must be who has read his Greek Testament through once a month for 30 years; Dr. Schofield, who recently assumed the pastorate of the church at Northfield, and who has a deep acquaintance with the Word of God and the heart of Christian experience; Dr. Erdman, who answered questions on Round-top every day for an hour; Dr. Torrey, the head of Mr. Moody's Theological Institute, one of the foremost men in the American Church; Dr. Gray, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. George Needham. But, prince and leader among them all, Mr. Moody, about whom I want to say something in another article, not unduly extolling him, but magnifying God in him, as one of the greatest gifts to the church of to-day.

Each morning, some 300 gathered at 6.30 for prayer. At 10.30 came the morning meeting, for two hours, with addresses and impressions of the deepest nature. In the afternoon, meetings on Round-top, a breezy, tree-shadowed knoll, commanding the valley to the distant hills on the horizon. And finally, at 8.0, the closing meeting of the day, from which many would go home to wait on God in secret, or scatter in the groves and woodlands for prayer.

Among addresses specially enjoyed, was one by Rev. Campbell Morgan, of Birmingham, on the Nazareth life of Jesus, with which the Father said He was well pleased, and which culminated in his Transfiguration. Also the masterly summaries of the Gospels by Mark and John, and of the Epistle of James, by Dr. Weston. Mr. Moody was great in natural analogies, bringing on one occasion a whole fruit-tree into the Hall to illustrate grafting; and at another, a jug and some glasses to illustrate the process of cleansing. In his graphic style, he preached on the Good Samaritan, the 91st Psalm, Humility, Bible-study, etc.

One afternoon we spent at Mount Hermon, where some 400 young men are being trained for life, at an annual cost to each of about £20, which there is an opportunity for some to earn by waiting on the many visitors who gather at each of the Conventions. It is of a project which occurred to me, whilst standing on Mount Temptation there, that I desire to write in my next; but on our way home we gathered around the grave of Mr. Moody's mother. It was a touching scene, in the westerling sunlight. Mr. Moody said that the grave faced the Mount Hermon seminary, because it was largely due to the inspiration of her home-life. "She always made home so pleasant, that I came back to it, and settled here." We stood in one great circle; Mr. Moody, Dr. Pierson, and I took part, and each confessed that we owed all we were to our mothers. Surely there is every reason for women to concentrate their time and thought on the children through whom they live in the coming years.

The singing is always a great feature at the Northfield Convention. Mr. Sankey seemed as with his father for the purpose of at once entering upon his preparatory training.

A very large number of ministers were present at the Convention—at least three hundred—some of them the fruits of former visits to this country, some blessed through Preb. Webb-Peploe and Rev. Andrew Murray, whose visit last year was often gratefully referred to; others came for the first time within the range of the teaching of the Inner Life. They were most kind and sympathetic. Laying aside all jealousy and suspicion, they gave themselves up to learn whatever could be learnt, and receive all that might be received; and perhaps the Convention will always be memorable from the distinct appreciation on the part of the ministers, that there is a system in the presentation of the truth of the Inner Life, beginning with dealing with outward and acknowledged sins, and passing to the crucifixion of self, the consecration of all to Christ, the filling of the Holy Ghost, so as to culminate finally in all those conditions and considerations which promote Christian growth.

The work among the ministers is specially important, as, in the judgment of many competent authorities, the church is losing its hold on the masses of the population, and becoming invaded with worldliness—dangers which can only be combated by an increase of spiritual life on the part of ministers and people alike. And so greatly have we been encouraged by the response, that there are strong reasons for adopting Mr. Moody's suggestion to hold in the early part of next year, in New York, a series of meetings for ministers only, at which he says it will not be difficult to convene 1000 daily for ten days.

The heat during four or five days was excessive, and at last we had to make a public compact not to complain of it or allude to it, lest it should injure our profit. In this way, it became a positive means vigorous as ever as he sang "The Ninety and Nine" and "Nothing but Leaves." There were also Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, Mr. Burke, a quartette of students, and, sweetest of all, Mrs. May Whittle Moody, with her "Moment by Moment" and other sweet songs. Solomon himself, with Heman, Jeduthun, and the rest, could hardly have excelled the band of singers and song-composers gathered around Mr. Moody. Surely if any man has had an opportunity of learning to sing, he has had it; but there is still much left to be done in the way of his complete efficiency in this direction.

Of much else it is impossible to speak. These are only the accessories and incidents of the Convention; but who shall catch and transmit the sense of the presence of God, the hush over the after-meetings, the joy, amounting to rapture, as the end of the Convention approached, and we were permitted to unfold the full meaning of Pentecost? These things are not for words, but they will live, treasured in hundreds of memories, fruitful in hundreds of lives, energising in those who have learnt that each believer there is a participator in the cross at Calvary, in the light of Easter morning, in the glory of the Ascension Mount, and the rapture of the Day of Pentecost.

Writing to the New York Independent, Dr. H. L. Wayland, of Philadelphia, says:—

If I should chance to fall in with one of those frugally-endowed persons who delight themselves in dilating upon the "stingy Yankee," who has no soul for anything but a sixpence, do you know what I would do? I would take him by the ear, and I would lead him to some spot which would command a view of Northfield and of Gill on the two sides of the Connecticut, and I would say to him: "You see that group of buildings at Mount Hermon and this larger group on the Northfield hill? These were erected, mostly by stingy Yankees, at a cost of one or two million dollars, to which has been added a considerable sum by way of endowment; and all this for what? For money-making? Well, they are educating boys and girls at these two schools, charging them 100 dollars a year, while it costs them regularly 200 dollars each a year to educate them. And here come, through the three months of every summer, thousands of men and women young and old, ministers and laymen, and spend their time—in learning how to make money? Rather they come at their own expense for the simple purpose of studying the Bible, of learning how they may be more useful to the souls of their fellow-men, and of hearing about great Christian enterprises and of helping them with liberal contributions. All this magnificent array of buildings and the fine hotel on the neighbouring hill, which pays no dividends and scarcely running expenses, all these are the visible expression of the spiritual; they express the spiritual forces of one man, without any endowment above his fellows, having only an imperial will which was inhabited and controlled by conscience and the Spirit of God. It is the faith and courage and love and self-forgetfulness of this one man which has created all that you see."

And what a testimony also to the inexhaustibleness of the Lord's Word! Other books we absorb; other books we outstrip and leave behind; other books we read to-day with concentrated attention and delight. Books become superseded; but The Book has drawn the attention of scholars and thinkers; it has been read and studied by the learned and has been devoured by the plain people, and yet, never did it awaken an interest so intense as to-day. Nothing will so draw an audience day after day as the intelligent, reverent exposition of the Word.

The attendance this year at Northfield certainly showed no falling-off from former years. Mr. Moody said one day: "We shall have something going on every day, all the time. We do not expect any of you to attend everything, but we want something all through the day, because a great many people come in the morning and go away in the evening. We are glad to have them go away, because if they stayed we should have no place to put them." The hotel was full and had to charter several cottages; new hotels have sprung up, new residences have been built; the houses which do not take boarders or lodgers let out their rooms to some of the larger boarding-houses; the camps are full.

One thing that has struck me every one of the ten seasons that I have been in Northfield has been the atmosphere of high civilisation. It is a phenomenon to see one or two thousand people gathered together, and to see absolutely no one smoking, or chewing, or expectorating on piazza or sidewalk; to notice the total absence of gossip, and scandal, and unkind criticism; to see the deference paid to age, and the winning courtesy with which deference was received by the aged. All this seemed to me to mark the

HIGH-WATER LINE OF CHRISTIAN CIVILISATION.

As to the sermons and addresses, almost all were good, some surpassingly good. President Weston, of Crozer Seminary, on the Epistle of James, was masterly; Dr. Schofield, the village pastor, is a man of decided mark, yet not much known in New England, having had a remarkable history as a Confederate soldier, as a lawyer, as a pastor in Texas, whence he came here, called by the irresistible Mr. Moody, or, rather, not exactly by Mr. Moody, but by the spontaneous voice of the church, a voice which was made effective by Mr. Moody. Dr. Erdman answered each day the inquiries of those who had perplexities about religious truth, and showed a knowledge of the Bible possessed by few men. Mr. Selwyn, from Bournemouth, England, is thoroughly evangelical and very winning in his method of address. Mr. Meyer, Christ Church, London, is known over the world by his intensely spiritual writings.

Booker T. Washington and Chaplain Turner presented with great power the work done for the coloured at Tuskegee, and the work done for the coloured and the Indians at Hampton Institute. Both of them laid particular stress on the industrial aspect of education. At Tuskegee there are twenty-five industrial departments, each with a competent head. The people are getting rid of the idea that manual labour is a disgrace. The whole plant has cost 280,000 dollars, all paid, and it costs 85,000 dollars a year to run it. The mass of the people are hard at work, but they do not know how to use their wages; slavery deprived them of the power of will and of the sense of responsibility. "We never ask anyone to do for the pupils what they can do for themselves." In closing Mr. Washington rose to a height of eloquence which enlisted every heart. Chaplain Turner, of Hampton, spoke of the great purpose of General Armstrong and of the impulse he had given to the work. Of the people who go out to the South and West 90 per cent. are Christians; of the 400 Indians who have gone West only 10 per cent. have disappointed us. A missionary band of 100 goes out every Sunday morning for Sunday-school work and to perform deeds of humanity for the poor and the sick. There is need of 75,000 dollars each year in addition to what comes from assured sources. Every dollar goes into a life.

Those who have not been to Northfield at the Conferences really know nothing of Northfield. An eminent legal gentleman from Rhode Island, a leading member of the Congregational Church, was present this year for the first time. He had heard somewhat vaguely of Northfield, but had little idea what it was. He began by going to one meeting a day, then to two, and then he followed them all with unceasing regularity; and he has made arrangements for board for next year. He said: "I never knew anything about this before."

Some faces were absent; the beloved A. J. Gordon, worn out with incessant work, has left us; Andrew Murray, of South Africa, in whose utterances the spirit triumphed over physical disabilities and drawbacks, was not present; nor President Patton, "the president we all love," in the language of the boys; nor Bishop Hall, of Vermont.

I wish that everybody could go to Northfield, but I suppose this is hardly to be expected; I wish that every minister could go, but then there are nearly 100,000 of them in the United States; I wish that every Sunday-school teacher could go, but I suppose there are nearly a million of them; but I do wish that every one might come under the spiritual influence of Northfield. Perhaps for the great body of people the best thing is to write to The Echoes, East Northfield, Mass., enclosing 1 dol., and then by reading these Echoes of the addresses upon his knees in the closet, to enter into spirit and sympathy and fellowship with the men and women who have spoken and prayed at Northfield.

One other thing I must not omit. Here come scholars from all over the world as teachers and as learners; but the one man that all want to hear and who can draw a larger audience than anybody else is the plain, unlettered man, innocent of the higher criticism, who is

THE SOUL OF NORTHFIELD.

The daily accounts of the recent Northfield Conference given in the New York Tribune have been full and interesting. They gained high encomiums from Mr. Moody, who advised friends to scatter the reports far and wide, so that the blessing might be spread. About the middle of the Conference a fresh and practical address was given one morning by Major Whittle, who is soon expected on this side of the ocean, as will be seen by an announcement elsewhere. The Major's daughter, Mrs. W. R. Moody, several times during the meetings sang the now well-known hymn, composed by herself to her father's words, "Moment by Moment."

The singing at the Conference throughout was pronounced to be very inspiring; Mr. Sankey and Mr. Stebbins were well to the fore, as usual, with their latest solos or duets. Towards the end of the Convention much sorrow was evinced when Mr. Sankey told the audience of the illness of Mrs. Fanny Crosby, the blind and gifted writer of so many of the hymns contained in "Songs and Solos." For the first time in many years she was unable to be present at the Conference, and, says a chronicler, "though she has never seen Northfield, few people with eyesight have interpreted its lessons more faithfully." One of her latest hymns, specially written for Northfield, was sung at the close of the Conference.

Mr. Moody, as his custom is at these gatherings, endeavoured very hard to efface himself so far as public speech went, so that the strangers might have the larger opportunity. But the desire was so general and so great that he should speak, that he was obliged to yield, and gave some of his most stirring addresses.

The Bible Conference ended on August 16, but many of the visitors will remain in Northfield until the end of August, and some of them until the Hotel Northfield closes. Daily Bible study was to continue the remainder of August, and, if desired, through the first week of September. Dr. C. I. Schofield, the pastor of the Northfield Congregational Church, arranged to give daily expository studies in continuation of the regular summer course, viz., "Studies in the Pentateuch," "The Kingdom and Prophetic Truth," and "The Book of the Revelation." At the Young Men's Christian Association camp, open until September 1, there was to be a special Association conference, also a training class for Christian workers.

A Comforting Message.

By PASTOR THEODORE MONOD.

BIBLE READING AT KESWICK CONVENTION.

WE will read in the Gospel of John, fourteenth chapter. I wish this to be in the most literal sense a Bible reading; that is, the reading of a portion of the Bible with a few remarks, not to add anything to the words of our Lord, but to help us to listen to them attentively.

"Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." There are few words of Christ more touching and tender than these. "If it were not so I would have told you. I would never have suffered you to have great expectations of blessedness and then to be disappointed." "Ye who are evil," as He says elsewhere, "know how to give good gifts unto your children." Who of you who is a father or a mother would do this—You are preparing for a beautiful drive, and you know that the carriage will be full, and that there can be no place at all for your boy. Will you suffer him to wait till the last moment and then say that every place is full and he must stay at home? Will you tell him there is no place for him? Oh, no, there is a place for him. If it were not so you would have told him.

"I go to prepare a place for you." A man who is about to remove to another country will first go across the ocean himself alone, and there prepare a place for his wife and children, and then come back and take them out with him. Even so our Lord has gone and is preparing a place for us, and He says, "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Meanwhile, where we are, He is. "Lo, I am with you all the days." But by-and-by, where He is we shall be also.

"Whither I go ye know and the way ye know." Thomas saith unto Him, "Lord, we know not whither Thou goest, and how can we know the way?" Of course you cannot know the way unless you know where you are going. You never heard of a man asking the way to some place, and when you ask where he wants to go, replying, "I do not know." There are many who come and inquire about the way, and they really do not know what way they mean. They do not know where they want to go. Some will go as far as to say that they want to know the way to Heaven.

THAT IS NOT ENOUGH;

You are very much in danger of being mistaken if you are simply seeking the way to the joy and rest of Heaven. Ask for the way to God.

"Jesus saith unto him I am the Way and the Truth and the Life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me." You ask, Who is the Lord Jesus Christ? Well, He is the one Man who stood up in the midst of his suffering, sinning, and dying fellow-men and said, "I am the Life." Do you need to know anything further about the true nature of our Lord Jesus Christ? "I am the Life, no man cometh unto the Father but by Me." Coming unto the Father—that is the end of the journey. Sometimes most wrongfully, and to our great loss, we seem to forget this, and stop in the way, instead of going on to the Father. Do you think you will lose Christ when you get to the Father? Why? Christ is in the Father and the Father is in Him. We must not let others go about the world and say that they represent the Fatherhood of God; and that it is for them to tell men who feel that they are orphans and weak, that they need a Father's love, and that they are going to give it to them. Jesus is the way to the Father, and you are at rest when you are in the arms and in the bosom of the Father.

"If ye had known Me ye would have known my Father also; and from henceforth ye know Him and have seen Him. Philip saith unto Him, Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." Did you ever notice that a passage which we often quote and most dearly love, "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" (Matt. xi. 28), comes at the end of the comfortable words that our Saviour Jesus Christ spoke; "All things are delivered unto Me of My Father: and no man knoweth the Son but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him. Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

"Believe Me that I am in the Father and the Father in Me, or else believe Me for the very works' sake." We have been told again and again to look at this, and we do not look at it as we should. This was the way in which the only-begotten Son lived when He was upon this earth. What words did He speak? The words of the Father. "I speak not from Myself." What works did He do? The works of the Father. "The Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works." How then did He live? Simply by abiding in the Father, and the Father in Him. "Believest thou not that I am in the Father and the Father in Me?" What the Father is to Him, Christ is to us, and just as He says He is in the Father and the Father in Him, He says to us a little further on, "Abide in Me and I in you."

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." At these words we often stop, and sometimes stumble. What! am I to do greater works than Christ? Ah! it is not you or I. The Father did the works by Christ, and now Christ is going to do the works through the Spirit in you. It simply means that the stream of God's mercy, and God's power, and God's working,

GROWS WIDER AS IT RUNS.

Why, the apostle Peter, after he had denied his Master three times, was the instrument of converting more souls in one address than Jesus did in all his ministry, so far as we can tell. But it is really Christ who goes on doing greater things, and when we are afraid of saying and thinking that we are going to do greater things than Christ, we are limiting and dis honouring Christ; we are preventing Christ from doing what He has at heart to do.

"And whatsoever ye shall ask." Mark that "and." You have to pray as well as work. But that again is a privilege, as is every duty. Ye shall ask what? "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name"—that is, as being a member of my body, in connection with Me, one with Me in spirit, in purpose—"that will I do." "That" applies to "whatsoever." "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that," and not another thing, "will I do; that the Father may be glorified in the Son." Jesus' mother said to the servants, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." Now He says to us, "whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my name I will do it."

"And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter." Oh, they were sad! "Let not your heart be troubled." That is the key of the chapter; you find it at the beginning and you find it at the close. He said that one Comforter is going and the other Comforter is coming. "He shall give you another Comforter that He may abide with you for ever." "I do not abide with you for ever; it is better for you that I should go. But God will send another Comforter that He may abide with you for ever, even the Spirit of truth whom the world cannot receive because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him." The world sets itself against Christ; the world keeps its eyes shut, and says there is no light. "But ye know Him, for He dwelleth with you." Just now we had the identity of Christ with the Father, not a fusion but an absolute identity and unity of Christ with the Father. Here is the absolute unity of Christ with the Spirit; "for He dwelleth with you and shall be in you."

Observe here the great importance of knowing "If ye had known Me ye would have known the Father." "Have I been so long time with you and have ye not known Me?" Ye know Me, and therefore ye know the Father, the Son, and the Spirit. Do you know the Father? Do you know the Son? Do you know the Spirit? Or do you know about the Father, about the Son, about the Spirit? "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come unto you."

THE SPIRIT'S COMING IS CHRIST'S COMING.

"Yet a little while and the world seeth Me no more, but ye see Me." There are those that see Him very feebly and faintly, that wish they saw more of Him, and that ought to see more of Him. Do you see anything of Him? Has he touched you eyes, so that you may see Him?

"Because I live, ye shall live also." Have you heard that? Not ye "should live," ye "shall live." Not a question about Heaven. "Ye shall live." Even as in Romans it is not "sin must have dominion over you," but "sin shall not have dominion over you." And why? Because ye are so faithful and understand so well, and have been to Keswick? Oh, no. "Because I live." That is the reason. Have you no doubt that God lives? Then have no doubt that you shall live, that you do live also. "At that time ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in Me, and I in you; he that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me." This is practical indeed. Some of the chapter might perhaps be called by some people mystical. This is not mystical. "And he that loveth Me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him and will manifest Myself to him." "Judas saith unto Him (not Iscariot)"—a man may have a bad name and be a good man—"Lord, how is it that Thou wilt manifest Thyself unto us and not unto the world? Jesus answered and saith unto him, If a man love Me he will keep my words." Keeping his words is doing his will.

Of course we remain in fellowship with Him. There is no sense in speaking of being in any kind of fellowship with Christ, if you are out of communion with Him. That is not being in the same purpose and intention. He wants you to live for one thing, and you want to live for another thing. You have to settle that question. Will you enter into the purpose of Christ for you and for the world? Then everything God says here is sure to you. "If a man love Me." You look into your heart, and perhaps there is not a great deal of feeling there. Never mind that. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me."

Now comes the promise. "If a man love Me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him. He that loveth Me not keepeth not my sayings, and the word which ye hear is not mine but the Father's which sent Me." I have no doubt you have often pored over that passage; you have often prayed, "Lord manifest thyself unto me." Where have you expected that manifestation to come from, and what kind of manifestation have you expected?

HOW HAVE YOU SOUGHT FOR IT?

Here is the way. Go on obeying. There is no way of obeying but to trust Him, and He will show Himself to you. You say, "I have had a vision of heaven as Stephen had." Well, Stephen had it when he was just about to die, and perhaps you may have one too; but there is no promise of God that we shall have a vision of heaven. Or shall you say, as many others have said, that you have seen a vision of Christ on the cross and He seemed to look on you and say to you, "I have died for you." That may be, but that is not a promise. Paul had a manifestation of Christ, when it pleased God to reveal his Son in Him. I take it that the revelation of Christ in us is not so much a revelation of some bodily shape, of some person that we see, as it is a revelation of a heart within our heart, of a spirit within our spirit, of a love and a liking, and a person that loves us, that dwells in us. The revelation is in the heart. It seems to me, from the very expression that Paul uses, that we must not think of that manifestation of Christ as some very extraordinary grace, that we cannot expect unless we have come to Keswick three or four times. I think it is for the obedient soul from the start. Christ will begin to manifest Himself as you begin to obey Him, and will go on manifesting Himself still further, in the grace and glory of his love, and power, and gentleness, as you go on obeying. That revelation, He says, is of the Son, and of the Father, and of the Spirit, and there you have a whole blessed Trinity in your poor heart. I think we are coming to this, that the doctrine of the Trinity—often misrepresented and maligned—call it whatever you please, it is in the Bible—is going to be the watchword of the Church. We are going to understand that there is one God. We know we need not affirm that there are not three Gods, but we are going to understand and to realise that the Father is God, and the Son is God, and the Spirit is God. That makes everything clear and practical, and that is what we need to know, and to teach, and to receive, and to live upon.

"These things have I spoken unto you being yet present with you." What! It seems that something sad is coming. "But I have to leave you"? No! "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my Name, He shall teach you all things." Observe "these things" and "all things." "These things have I spoken unto you"; but "He shall teach you" both these things and all things, for He shall both teach you new things and "bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." Do you not think the Holy Spirit does it still? Do not trouble so much about your note-books. I have nothing against your note-books, but He shall bring to remembrance whatever is really of use to you, when and as you need it.

"Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth give I unto you." The world gives in a miserable way. You must not take things from the world, for the world gives and takes back. Christ gives and never takes back, but He adds more and more. "Let not your heart be troubled." You are troubled, perhaps, just a little bit; not much I hope now, for God has been leading us so gently and wonderfully. But at the end of a convention one is apt to be a bit troubled and afraid. "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away and come again unto you. If ye loved Me—Oh, what a sad word that is! He was not quite sure that they loved Him, but perhaps we must not be too hard upon them—"If ye loved Me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father; for My Father is greater than I." You know that the nature of a father and the nature of a son or a daughter are the same, but the father is greater than the son and daughter. We need not explain that. "The Father is greater than I. He is the Father, I am the Son."

"And now I have told you before it come to pass, that when it is come to pass ye might believe. Hereafter I will not talk much with you, for the prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in Me." You remember that the prince of this world had become bold enough and impudent enough to say to Christ, almost at the start of his ministry, "All these things will I give Thee if Thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him Get thee behind Me, Satan." And now the prince of this world is on his last trial. "The prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in Me. He cannot get hold of Me; I am in the Father and the Father in Me. He can persecute Me, and he can tempt Me, and he can harass Me, but he has nothing in Me." "But that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave Me commandment, even so I do." Have you observed how Christ here shows us that his being faithful unto death, his going through Gethsemane and Calvary was not only for the salvation of the world, but that the world might know that He loved the Father? That is the test of love. It is to go through suffering for God's sake. Is not that enough to help us through suffering—that the world may know that we love God, and that we live in the love of God, and "as the Father gave Me commandment even so I do"? Will you take these two syllables home with you—"I," "do"? "As the Father gave Me commandment even so I do." The least we can say about Christ is that He is our pattern. Well, as the Father gives us commandment, shall each one of us say, "Even so I do"?

You are afraid? "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." Afraid of what? If you are willing to do the will of God, you have God Himself for you and all things for you, all providence and all grace working for you. Whether it be joy or sorrow, whatever it may be, it must work for you. Do you not think there is enough water in the ocean to flood your nutshell? What are you afraid of? Do you think the love of God is not enough for you, the power of God not enough for you, the light of God not enough to guide you, the grace of Christ not enough to sustain and forgive and purify from day to day?

LET US GO HENCE.

Now, then, let us take our last word from the Lord Himself. That was the end not only of that chapter but of that discourse. It was interrupted there by a little word. I had never noticed that until it came home very sweetly not long ago. "Arise, let us go hence." The sweetness of it comes with the word "us"—"Let us go hence." You have certainly seen a man and his wife happily and tenderly united. You have seen them sit in a meeting, and before the meeting comes to a close the wife says to the husband, "I am obliged to go, I am wanted at home in the nursery." The husband says, "There is business in committee after this meeting, and I must stay." And so she goes and he stays. Or at some other time, it may be at a garden party, let us suppose, the husband says before the party comes to an end, while the wife is obliged to sit, "I have an appointment, I have to go." And he goes and she stays. At some other time they are in a large party, and somehow not a word passes between them, but just a glance and a smile, and that means "Arise, let us go hence." "Let us go." Not staying without Him, not going without Him, but going together. My brethren, He will never say anything else to us. We have to arise. It was good to come and it is good to go. We cannot go through this kind of life long. God has blessed us, but He is going to bless us still more as we bring all this to the test.

He never said "Go." He says "Let us go." Perhaps some of you may be called to go through some change in life. He may call some of you to leave England, perhaps, and go to France, or perhaps to Egypt, or India, or China, or Africa, or the Zambesi. But He will say clearly and softly "Arise, let us go." Or you may have a quiet, happy home life. God bless you in it, and sanctify it to you, and you through it. But God may lead you out of that into a life of trouble and sorrow; then He will come and say more gently and softly and lovingly, "Arise, let us go."

By-and-by—when will it be?—certainly soon, for life is short; perhaps very soon for some of us, for life is uncertain—He will come and whisper into your ear, "Arise, let us go hence." Let us go. You won't be afraid of death then. When you have gone through the gates, then He will never say, "Let us go," but you will follow Him whithersoever He goeth; and we shall be like Him at last, for we shall see Him as He is.

The Month & its Lessons.—9.

SEPTEMBER.—The Fruit Month.

SEPTEMBER is the time of the ingathering of the fruits of the earth, the golden link between summer and winter, the season of praise and thanksgiving to the Lord of the harvest for his constant faithfulness and love.

LESSONS FROM THE FRUIT.

1. Fruit trees.—A living blessing. Gen. i. 29; Eccles. ii. 5; Matt. vii. 17.
2. Fruit seasons.—A timely blessing. Matt. xxi. 41; 2 Sam. xvi. 1.
3. Fruit manifest.—A cheering blessing. Deut. xxxiii. 14; Isa. xxviii. 4.
4. Fruit ripe.—A perfect blessing. Acts xiv. 17; Matt. xiii. 20.
5. Fruit gathered.—A secured blessing. Lev. xxiii. 39; Matt. iii. 12.
6. Fruit enjoyed.—A present blessing. Ps. lviii. 11 (R.V.); Prov. xii. 14; Gal. v. 22; Rom. vi. 21, 22.
7. Fruit spoiled.—A lost blessing. Deut. xxviii. 39, 42; Matt. xxi. 19; Jude 12.

September, the month of fruit. The time of hope's fulfilment, when sower and reaper rejoice together, and the summer's last smile. The emblems of the afternoon of man's life, when the fruit of wisdom and grace should be manifest.

Rev. Dr. Franklin had on his signet ring for a device a fruit-bearing tree, with the motto from Psalm i. 3. When dying, his son asked for a final word of counsel. The dying man whispered the word "fruitful."

A farmer who had turned his attention to the raising of fruit said to a friend as they sat at table: "I have cut down over fifty peach trees to-day." "Why is this?" "Because the fruit was not good. The peaches were too small." Afterwards, walking through the orchard, the friend saw where the trees had stood, and also the spot where, after being cut down, they had been burned. This procedure brought to his mind at once the Saviour's parable of the fruitless fig-tree. If God dealt with men as they deal with the trees in their orchards, what a fearful destruction of our race would ensue.

Cowes Regatta.—The crowds that gather at Cowes during the regatta must be seen to be believed. The Open Air Mission had its agent at Cowes, and much blessing attended. The Word was received with respect and not a little surprise. Several gladly had conversation concerning the plan of salvation. Men talk about "Gospel being played out," let them move in and out among the masses and see the effect of a few plain words upon the vital truths of the old Gospel. Two young men were deeply convicted and asked for prayer, and during an earnest conversation with a group of nine they seemed to have received Jesus as their own precious Saviour. The ray of joy upon their faces was unmistakable. "Sir," said one, "I see it all now: it is trust, not try."

Chinese Christians.—Early in the present year a conference of native Christians took place at Gan-shun. Mr. Windsor, who, with seven men from the An-ping station, attended it, found the Christians all very hearty and united, and apparently full of spiritual life. The attention manifested by most at the meetings, and the readiness with which they turned to the many Bible references were quite inspiring. At one of the morning prayer meetings Tsien, the bamboo-worker of the "Tseo," led the meeting, taking "Love" for his subject. Tsao gave good addresses at the Gospel meetings—quiet, but very earnest, clear, and decided. Fang also spoke very helpfully. Continued prayer is asked that the lives of these native Christians may become intensified in their spiritual force, and that the light in them may shine steadily and brightly in the midst of the surrounding dense darkness.

The Armenian Martyrdoms.

SIR,—It will rejoice the Christians of England, who have the cause of Armenia at heart, to hear that their efforts and prayers in England are not in vain. Though they were accused of fanaticism and exaggeration by the people of France and Germany, the light of the truth is beginning to dawn in these two countries. At Paris a committee of different well-known public men, Roman Catholic and Protestant, was organised lately, for the purpose of giving information and collecting funds in support of the sufferers in Armenia.

But the most rejoicing fact is that of a similar movement in Germany, where the people and the Press are beginning to understand the question.

Dr. Leipsius, son of the celebrated Egyptologist, in his recent journey in Asia Minor, having the opportunity of examining the question so misunderstood by his countrymen, comes back with the intention to advocate the cause in Germany. His articles have produced a profound impression in the Press. Even the Jewish papers reproduced them.

A conference was called, and took place on August 28, at Frankfurt, where delegates of Armenian committees and friends from different localities of Germany and Switzerland were present. It was resolved that the Swiss and German committees work in co-operation; that strong appeals be made to the people of Germany for funds on behalf of the suffering Armenians; that literature on the subject be freely circulated among clergy and people; that as far as possible the ministers be invited to speak or preach on the question, that petitions be signed, and especially a petition be presented to the Emperor imploring his Imperial intervention.

It was decided also that efforts be made to present the case to the Tzarina on her visit to Darmstadt, hoping that the example will be followed in England on the occasion of the visit of the Tzar. Finally, it was decided that the funds thus collected be used especially for helping the Armenian orphans in their own country. Some devout German Christians of both sexes will be sent to superintend the work there personally. As they have at the present moment about 70,000 marks in hand, the work will be started immediately. Hope is entertained that as soon as the work is started more help will be forthcoming. Little Switzerland alone has collected over 200,000 francs (£3000), the half of the sum being contributed by French and the other half by German Switzerland.

The Christians of all sections of the Church have great reasons to redouble their prayers that God's richest blessings repose on these decisions of the conference, and that the day may soon come when the three Protestant countries (England, Germany, and America) will unite in a combined action to put an end to this disgrace of humanity and the shame to our Christianity.—Yours, etc.,

G. THOUMAÏAN.

In a communication to us Mr. F. W. Crossley, of Manchester, writes:—

A new society has been formed in Manchester—the Manchester Armenians' Aid Society, of which I am hon. treasurer pro tem. Money may be sent to me at Star Hall, Ancoats, Manchester, and will be forwarded to the sufferers through agencies which have proved efficient. A gentleman of much experience, who has already been twice in Armenia, is also about to leave to organise a scheme of emigration at one end of Turkey, while at the opposite side a similar outlet is being made through the efforts of Mrs. Sheldon Amos, 5c, Oxford and Cambridge Mansions, Marylebone-road, London, W. Much help is required for both these enterprises, and I trust your generous readers will send part of it.

News I have lately received states that the Turks are assessing the taxes of the dead upon the survivors at Oorfa. Even those they tortured and slaughtered are to be considered able to pay taxes to their murderers through such of their representative relations as were "mercifully" permitted to escape. Further than this, and from a perfectly reliable source, I am told that stringent orders have passed from Constantinople to the interior forbidding permits to travel even to the coast, and we learn that much vigilance is being used in arresting all persons found without such permits. Professor — has tried in vain to get permission to send his wife and children to America. He was many years in America, and became a naturalised citizen and married an American lady. Now the Government objects to their going on the ground that all children born in Turkey, though their parents may be Americans, are subjects of the Ottoman Power. Thus are they, with the rest, kept as sheep for the slaughter. As soon as they accumulate a little property by their industry and ability they will be robbed, massacred, and outraged as before unless we intervene.

What an illustration of our sluggish sympathies our inaction in this matter has afforded. Were our Lord Jesus Christ amongst us again and we put to Him once more the question, "Who is my neighbour?" and He again repeated his parable of the good Samaritan, how much might He not add to it in condemnation of those who, having heard it so often and approved it, whilst no demand was being made upon themselves, now that the unrivalled crisis arrives "pass by on the other side?"

May I suggest that not only should money be sent to the treasurers of the several funds, but that the accompanying memorial, which I beg you to insert and which has been prepared by members of our committee, should also be copied out, signed by groups of your readers, and forwarded to the Marquis of Salisbury as quickly as possible?

MEMORIAL.

To the Marquis of Salisbury.

The memorial of the undersigned humbly sheweth:—

That your memorialists are well assured of your lordship's personal sympathy with the Armenians suffering under the misrule of Turkey.

What your memorialists fear, however, that your lordship is hardly aware how deeply the hearts of all classes of the people of this country have been stirred by the cruel martyrdom of a nation of fellow-Christians, to whom we stand to a certain extent in the position of protectors. They have learned on overwhelming evidence that among that unhappy people the most elementary rights of humanity have been systematically violated by the Turkish regular and irregular soldiery, that domestic purity has been outraged with inconceivable brutality, and fiendish cruelty allowed to revel unchecked among helpless women and children.

That your memorialists have anxiously but in vain looked to Her Majesty's Government to give practical effect to your lordship's as well as to their own sympathy with the victims of these unparalleled wrongs; and they have heard with deep sorrow and humiliation that in its efforts to do so Her Majesty's Government have met with obstacles which appeared to them insurmountable.

That your memorialists have received with lively satisfaction the intimation that the Sultan of Turkey will no longer be defended by this country in his ruthless misgovernment.

That your memorialists do not presume to suggest to your lordship any special course of action; but they implore you to increase your efforts on behalf of these afflicted people. They believe it is possible to relieve the Armenians in their own land, and would pray Her Majesty's Government also to set on foot a scheme of assisted emigration, and to take such measures to ensure its safe working as may be essential.

That your memorialists are convinced that whatever steps Her Majesty's Government might find it necessary to take, and whatever sacrifices they might call upon Her Majesty's subjects to make, in order to put an end to the intolerable state of things at present existent in Armenia, they would be sustained by the deliberate and enthusiastic support of a united people.

"One Soweth, another Reapeth."—A Bible colporteur came lately on his tours to a place where he found several that assembled to study the Word of God twice a week. A man told him that a year ago a colporteur with a full beard had offered him the Scriptures. He gave him an abrupt answer, to which the colporteur replied, "Dear sir, I believe you would also wish to be saved." "These words pierced my heart, and I can never forget them," he said. A Testament was ordered, and through the instrumentality of his own brother, who knew the Saviour, he at last found peace.

"To see Jesus."—Miss Faith Box writes from Yang-chau:—"A country woman, who three years ago heard the Gospel, recently came up to see us—to learn more about Jesus." We found that during all that time she had, up to her light, been worshipping God and praying daily. A prayer had been written out for a man, and she had begged him to teach it to her, and had used it three times a day. She is fifty-three years of age, and has lived all her life in a village 24 li off. This was her first visit to the city, but the novel sights and sounds had no charm for her; she wanted to 'see Jesus'—a real seeking soul! Our teacher is unconverted, but when he heard her story he turned to me and said, 'This woman is moved by the Holy Spirit, or she would have forgotten to pray.' Later that same day I overheard two women at their wash-tub saying, 'it will be easy for her to believe, she is moved by the Holy Ghost.' It seemed strange to me, these heathen saw the Spirit's work in her! She stayed a few days, eagerly learning, and declaring her belief in Jesus, then was sent for, and had to return; but we quite believe she is a saved woman."

Pontymoile Christian Mission.

THE new report of this Mission, entitled "A Life-boat of Love on a Sea of Human Misery," gives a sombre picture of the ravages of intemperance in the eastern valleys of Monmouthshire, with the pitiful results in the ruin of young girls. Special efforts have in recent years been made for the rescue of such girls, with the happiest issue, and in this rescue work the police have nobly co-operated. There are now seven girls in the Home at Pontymoile, and the need of a larger home is sorely felt.

Another branch of the Mission's work is that of prison visitation and aid to discharged prisoners. The object of the Mission in this matter is a triple one: to secure true repentance by keeping in touch with them; by personal encouragement to preserve the discharged offenders from sinking deeper through the loss of self-esteem; and to provide them with employment, so that they can begin life's battle afresh, with some hope of victory.

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.

All who know anything of the Mission's endeavours know how great its work has been in relieving the distress which for so long has prevailed in the eastern valleys of Monmouthshire. During the early part of 1895 the Mission stood face to face with a starving population. Then, as now, the staple trades of the district were in a state of stagnation. The tin-plate works were idle, the iron and steel works were deserted, thousands of men, willing and anxious to work, were unable to obtain employment, and hunger and despair were their daily lot. Mr. Wintle devoted his energies to providing for the destitute. As week after week went by the ranks of the starving were recruited. Many a man in the months of idleness spent the scant savings of a laborious life, and when they were gone he, too, had to face starvation or the workhouse. From the 1st January to December 31st, 1895, the Mission spent more upon relief than during any previous twelve months.

During the past year evangelistic work was specially fruitful. The late honoured Richard Weaver had two missions in the year, both greatly blessed. The Bible carriage, lodging-house, open-air Sunday school and other operations have been carried on with much encouragement in Pontymoile, Pontypool, Pontnewydd, Cwmffirddoer, and Dowlais.

The Pontymoile Christian Mission is going forward, its influence is increasing, the demands upon it yearly grow greater. If the Mission is to successfully continue the great work it has commenced, the generous support of the past must be more than equalled. Year by year, tried and open-handed supporters of the work pass away. Their places must be filled, hearts as full of sympathy and hands as ready to give must be found if the Mission is to go forward. The hon. superintendent is Mr. T. M. Wintle, Pontymoile, Pontypool, Mon.

Through Storm to Calm.

On the desolate hills, in the blackest night,

Where the storm-clouds round me sweep,
And thicken the more while the wild winds roar

On the face of the icy steep.
Ah! why did I part from my faithful guide?

Why bask in the sun and sleep?
I must gather the beautiful Alpine flowers
Afar from the beaten track;
And the glacier climb to a peak sublime
In the blue o'er the cloudy rack.

Oh! how could I sing in my march of death,
And not think of the going back?

Let me rave at the deeds I have madly done,
At their folly stand aghast;

Let me wildly pray for the lowly way
With the guide who held me fast,
And long for a sight of my far-off home—
Yet nothing can change the past.

But hark! a voice from the circling cloud—
In the dark I can trust the grace

Of Him who braved all the storms ever raved
O'er the heads of the human race:

He speaks, He saves; He will will take me home
To his own bright resting place,

Donegal.

Ramabai and Her Work.

SOME readers may remember two articles which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN about eighteen months ago, giving an account of the high-caste Brahmin lady, Ramabai, with a sketch of her unique work at Poona. Those who were interested in that narrative may welcome a few selections from the latest annual report, published a few months ago.

In this report, a passage from a letter by Ramabai herself says: "It is some satisfaction, with all the difficulties and drawbacks we have to encounter, to see four young widows happily re-married and settled in their own homes; four girls employed as teachers outside this school (one of them having opened a kindergarten of her own, and working successfully in the field of education); four others learning to nurse in different hospitals, and three employed here as pupil teachers. Two have volunteered to do the noble work of rescuing and helping widows who have fallen into difficulty; two have undertaken to teach ignorant women as they go from house to house, and one has devoted her time to teaching low-caste women."

In accordance with the views of the Ramabai Association, the school was to be "an unsectarian institution of absolute religious freedom." Ramabai felt the wisdom of this arrangement, as many of those whom she most wished to reach would have been shut out from the school if direct Christian teaching had been included in its studies. Her doors are thrown wide open and any who wish may enter. "The Vedas, the Koran, and the Bible stand side by side on her shelves"—but it is evidently no rare thing for girls to be moved by Ramabai's sweet and loving character to inquire, "What is this religion of Christ?"

In fact, the cheering news has lately been received that twenty girls have come out and confessed their faith in Christ and been baptized. In the words of another writer in the last report:—"Twenty of the pupils, rescued from lives of ignorance and degradation, are tasting the joys of a life hitherto unknown to them—a life of usefulness, happiness, and love, and by the silent influence of one simple Christian life have been led from darkness into light."

The home is called Sharâdâ Sadana, or Home of Learning. The highest ambition of many of its inmates is to follow the example of their "dear Bai," and found other Sharâdâs for their unhappy sisters. Although this school has seen but seven summers, its influence has already extended far beyond the confines of Poona: in the words of another writer, "a thousand Sharâdâs throughout India would be blessings to the country."

Besides all her other talents, Ramabai is eminently practical. Mention was made in the previous articles of a piece of land near the Sharâdâ which she was anxious to procure and lay out as a fruit farm for the future benefit of the school. Generous friends provided the means for its purchase a year ago. It is now progressing as rapidly as possible in the hands of an experienced farmer, with Ramabai as general supervisor. Twenty-five hundred orange trees are already in the ground, and the remainder of the field is being prepared for mango trees. A living spring has been found on this field which will give it a constant supply of water, and two wells are being dug. This is costly work, and money is still needed to carry it out fully.

Ramabai cannot count on the continuance of American support when the ten years have expired during which the Association pledged its support, and she hopes that the mango farm may be one source of income in the future. But the school, from its very nature, can never be self-supporting, and it is hoped that friends both in England and America will still rally round her and gather fresh supporters by spreading the knowledge of her brave self-sacrificing life.

If space permitted, many interesting details could still be given; such as a description of the Home itself, as it impressed a visitor on first entering; a touching account of the condition of her pupils and of Ramabai's tender ways of dealing with them; and the story of a pilgrimage recently undertaken with another friend, in mendicant's dress, to some sacred cities in North India, to rescue, if possible, some of the women from their terrible thralldom there, an expedition which nearly cost her her life.

The writer of these lines, who has the happiness of a personal friendship with Ramabai, would gladly communicate with any readers who may wish to know more of her and to share the privilege of cheering and sustaining her in her arduous work. (Mrs.) F. SOMERSET.

The Flower Girl.

By MRS. HARVEY JELLIE.

"TIME'S UP!" that's always her word, and ready enough she is to hurry off somewhere. I'd like to know where she is so glad to get to," said one of the flower girls as they looked after one of their number who had once again gladly said those two words.

They were not likely to know where Jessie Wyldé went to, for she carefully avoided detection by taking a different way, or going out of her course, to mislead their curiosity. She had a history, that slender woman with the sad grey eyes, and there was a pathetic tone in her voice as she said, "Please, buy, only a penny a bunch," that called for a second glance at her face, if not for a penny for her pocket. Before the others had finished their noisy talk and cleared off with their remaining blossoms, Jessie was mounting a staircase in a house behind one of the large thoroughfares in London. Opening the door, she went to the chair near the little window where sat a girl of sixteen.

"Isn't she just starving for her tea, then?" she said, putting her basket down.

"Jess, it's been a long day this, and I've counted the sparrows over and over, as they hop about the chimneys there, and I watched the smoke trying to get up through the thick, hot mist; and nothing would make me sleepy; and I get almost mad to think I might have been strong and able for work, if only——"

"Hush! it's no use making matters worse by talking of the 'if only,' for that's the 'crook in the lot' of most people, I fancy; so you pick over my flowers, and I'll attend to you, Madge."

The reprovèd girl at once ceased her murmuring, and commenced arranging the flowers in a dish of water, now and then wincing at the dull pain in her back.

Not very long ago their home had been ruined by a subtle enemy, and the quiet incoming of the foe had caused no fear until its hold had become secure, and the father sacrificed himself to intemperance, and the children were left to the mother's care; but the chain of a dangerous habit had become too strong for her. Madge was trying to hold her mother from falling when in an intoxicated state one day, and the senseless woman turned upon the child, pushed her roughly, so that she fell downstairs, and never recovered from the consequences. For a time this put a check upon indulgence, but she yielded again, to be conquered, and leave her daughter Jessie with an afflicted sister.

Wounded pride made them try to hide their parents' wrong, and battle hard with want and weakness, till, reduced to the lowest, Jessie took her place among the sellers of the street, and contrived to keep herself and Madge, in an upper room. Some days were bitterly disappointing, and no bright ray of hope seemed to cross the dull pathway of their existence; pain and weariness to the one, and struggle and vexation to the other.

One afternoon in autumn a Christian woman passed by where Jessie stood; she gave a second look at the anxious face, and, taking a shilling out, she purchased nearly all her flowers, not that she was wanting those fading blossoms, but she guessed that young heart needed sympathy and comfort.

Thankful tears rushed into Jessie's eyes, and quickly turning, she hastened to go to Madge.

"Time's up sharp, to-day," said one who saw the little fortune turn in—but no taunts received answer; Jessie was on her way. Madge had been bad, and nourishment was beyond her reach, and to sell those flowers was the only chance of getting any. A shilling! It would buy much; and almost breathless (for she was weak) she entered the room.

"Milk, an' egg, bread an' butter; see, old girl, you shall have food now. You aren't fainting, are you? What's the matter?"

The sight of her was appalling—so white and rigid!

"Jess, I wish I was in the silent land like father and mother; it can't be worse than dragging a life of hopeless misery here!"

"I said I'd never take charity, Madge, and as long as I can earn money for our food I don't mind; but if it comes to failing at that I shall wish to be there too, and have an end of it all. Take this, my girl, and cheer up," and Jessie handed the milk to the parched lips. "Now I'll tell you how it is I am home so early. A lady, with such a countenance as one seldom sees in London streets, came near where I stood. She looked hard at me, and again; and then she just seemed struck with my flowers, and bought a shilling's worth right off. And I saw her look after me as I came away. She had a sort of face that makes you feel happier for seeing it."

"There aren't many like that, are there, as you see faces in the streets, Jess?"

Here a knock at the door startled them, and Jessie opened it cautiously, to see the same kind face before her.

"I saw you come up here, and I wondered if I might venture and ask if you live alone?" said the stranger.

There was no refusing her. All the coldness of her being seemed to thaw before the warm glow of that smile, and Jessie invited her in.

"I am here with my Master's invitation. He has told me to ask you to come in to his kingdom and love. Will you accept it and come?"

"We have never gone in for religion, if that's what you mean," said Jessie, amazed at the new kind of talk.

"But will you let religion go into you? You both seem to need its comforting power. Why should the only source of happiness be shut out?" And then, with tact and Christian love, she drew out the story of their life, and left them with new thoughts and feelings.

The house was not far off to which she went, surrounded by a pretty garden, and unlike the houses in the dirty streets.

"What report to-day?" asked her husband, returning from the city.

"I was directed to a flower girl, and I felt I must follow her. She has an afflicted sister. They once lived in the north of London; father and mother died, and I fear from intemperance."

"Sounds like an answer to my prayer, wife. You remember my old friend who gave way to drink, and how I tried again and again to save him; he used to live in the north."

"I quite forget his name, if I ever heard it," she said.

"Wylde, that's the name, and I have prayed for his children."

"Jessie Wylde is the name of the flower girl: I asked for someone to bless and help to-day, and she seemed to be the one."

"I firmly believe if Christians ask, 'Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do,' each day, the Lord will show an opportunity for loving service. I always find it so, and I have asked Him about Wylde and the children, and He has put the answer into your hands," said the husband.

The next day, having asked guidance for the day, the busy man started for his work, and the wife, after attending to the claims of home, went to visit the two girls. She found Madge quite ready to welcome her. "It's long and lonely here," she said, "and Jess may be late to-day; she was glad you came, she said, for it put new hope into her," and an hour passed quickly as the weary girl listened to the story of Christ's love.

"I will come again and see your Jessie soon," said Mrs. Maxwell.

As she walked along the crowded street there was a block at one part, and she saw something had happened. Her way lay through that very path, and threading through the eager group she came to the cause. A young woman had fallen; the face was turned toward her, and without mistake she saw it was that of Jessie Wylde, the flower-girl. That evening Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell were both in the room with poor terrified Madge, shielding her from much of the bitterness of the sudden blast of sorrow.

"Heart disease" had been the verdict, and Jessie lay calm and still, and no one knew what the "new hope" had wrought within.

Soon after Madge was cared for in the home of those Christian friends, and Jessie laid to rest with flowers in her hand.

"Do all Christians ask 'or someone to help and bless every day?' asked Madge once of her gentle benefactor. Would it were so!

Ourselves and our Neighbours.

THOUGHTS BY THE WAY.

NO one needs to have any doubt as to what true kindly "consideration" is, in the case of those who come to them for counsel or for help. And none need have any uncertainty as to how to be "considerate," for there is ready to hand a simple rule which will meet every case, solve every difficulty. It is an old rule, as old as the advent of Christianity, is in fact its Golden Law—"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

Looking around one's circle of acquaintance, one cannot fail but to be struck by the number of professing Christians who fail in attending practically to the Apostolic injunction, "Be courteous." If they have ever read it, they seem to have forgotten it, or have wilfully determined to ignore it. In any case it may be said of them, if they could only realise the extent of the loss they themselves thus sustain, it is but a common-sense conclusion to arrive at that they would be speedily anxious to obey the Scriptural command.

Considered as a social power for good, as adding not only to the amenities but to the positive comfort of daily life, courtesy is even to the purely worldly-minded man a matter of enormous value, for courtesy constitutes the oil which makes the wheels of life, whether business or social, run smoothly. If it were universally discarded, the work of the community would rapidly come to a standstill, and society would become little better than a horde of untutored savages. Courtesy is more than a gracious oil, making all the parts work sweetly. It may be looked upon also as a softening solvent, which makes the roughnesses and rudenesses, the asperities of life to disappear, or at least be easily got over.

Courtesy reaches its highest point as a power for good between man and man only when under the influence of the essential spirit of Christianity, when it is fostered and dignified by the example of our blessed Lord Jesus Christ; for, speaking in the language of men, there never lived a man so graciously, consistently, and continually courteous as He was. His whole life is but a record of a heavenly graciousness; of a perfect kindness and sweetness of action, in everything at all times, and in all places, without a trace or tinge of the worldly spirit which degrades and lessens the value of heaven-born influences when exercised by poor and failing humanity.

Those who, by "going down into it," know somewhat of the wants and the woes of the world of daily life, feel that by the doing of only a very little more in the way of relieving them there would be an immediate addition to the sum of human happiness, to the comfort of those who are so poorly equipped for the battle of life.

In the matter of kindly doing to others its good and soul-healthy influences are not felt by one side only. The giver is always the better for its exercise, as well as the receiver. We cannot do good to others without bestowing a benefit upon ourselves.

The little act of sympathetic kindness, the giving of but a cup of cold water to some poor soul, is God-like, for He is ever giving; it is Christ-like, for his whole life on earth was but one continued act of giving, and He finished it by giving Himself for us.

"Love never faileth"—so Paul wrote—and words more life- or more love-inspiring were never penned. Everything here below has written upon it the doom of the dust—"Change and decay on all around we see." But love is the one thing eternal. Its reign began before the world was; it will continue when it is not. And where love is, there will always be thoughtfulness, of consideration for, kind sympathetic words said to, and useful actions done for, others, our neighbours. This must be so, inasmuch as they all emanate from, owe their inspiration to, and gain their active impetus from—love. Even here, with all our sad and bad environments, with all our losses, we never lose what love brings to us and makes for ever our very own.

R. SCOTT BURN.

THE EVANGELIST.

Whiter Than Snow.

SOME years ago, I was asked by a member of my Bible-class to visit his mother, an aged woman, and apparently dying. Knowing that she had refused to see another Christian whom he had sent, it was with a good deal of trembling that I went for the first time. Earnestly did I pray for guidance, and that I might gain an entrance, and greatly was I rejoiced when, on reaching the house, I was shown into the room where the poor sick woman sat in an easy chair. Alas! it brought no ease to her, for she was racked with a cough which seemed almost to threaten her with suffocation. Quietly mentioning that I had come at her son's request, I drew her on to talk of herself, and as she spoke freely of her past life and present condition, it became evident to me that she was just wrapped in self-righteousness, not one word about her sinfulness, nor of the person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ did she utter; but, though frightened at the near approach of death, she was trying to find comfort from the recollection of having faithfully discharged her duties as a wife and mother, having "worked early and late, in order to pay her way, and owe no one anything," as she expressed it. Still there was a vague feeling of dissatisfaction, and so she had sent for the parish clergyman, who had administered the Sacrament to her, assuring her that she had great faith.

After listening for some time, I felt well nigh hopeless of reaching the conscience of one so old in sin, and so sick in body, but out of the consciousness of my helplessness, I sent up a little silent cry for help, and like a flash of light came the suggestion, "offer to sing." I had never done such a thing before, and trembled at the idea, but, yielding obedience to the Spirit's leading, I said, "Are you fond of singing?"

"Oh! yes, that I am," she replied.

"Then, shall I sing you a hymn which I heard sung a few days ago, and which I liked very much?"

"Yes! I should like to hear it"; and so in a soft, low tone I commenced—

Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow.

As I went on I could see the tears starting, and signs of feeling being stirred, and when I finished she said, "Oh, thank you, I do like that. When I was young I used to have a good memory, and learned things by heart; if I could see the small type I would learn that even now."

Thankfully seizing upon this token of interest, I proposed that on my return home I should copy out in good large letters the words of the hymn, and as she seemed pleased at the suggestion I did so, and it was her constant companion henceforth.

Months rolled on, during which time I visited her constantly, and instead of passing away she rallied, but though gradually the truth that she was a sinner, was taught her by the Holy Spirit, and all trust in any righteousness of her own was swept away, yet she did not venture to trust in Christ alone and so find peace, but was full of doubts and fears.

When the summer came she was well enough to be taken for a change, and for several months I lost sight of her, when one Sunday I was again asked by her son to visit her. I did not go the next day, but receiving a second message that she was now indeed very ill, and wished much to see me, I hastened to her. One glance revealed to me that her days were drawing to a close, and longing to know her condition, I said, "I have often thought of you, and wondered whether you had given up all your doubts and fears, and trusted yourself to Jesus. Have you?"

"Well!" she said, "for a long time I didn't, but I have now."

Oh! what welcome words those were to me, "I have now," I had known her long enough to believe that she would not have uttered them had they not been true. And so I could rejoice with her, and praise the Lord that she, who was once lost, was found; once a vile sinner—was now washed in the precious blood of Jesus, and was, indeed, "whiter than snow." She lingered but a day or two, and during her last hours was constantly asking for the repetition of the hymn which God had so gracefully used to show her that she needed washing ere she could enter the gates of heaven, for only those who have washed their robes and made them white in the "blood of the Lamb" have the right to enter in through those pearly gates.

Dear reader, how 'is it with you? Where are your sins? On what are you building your hopes of heaven? Is it on some fancied righteousness of your own? Oh! Remember the Word of God, which declares that "all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags," and that "it is not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy He saves us." Put up the publican's prayer, "God be merciful to me a sinner," and you shall find that—

'Tis not by works of righteousness
Which our own hands have done,
But we are saved by Sovereign grace,
Abounding through his Son.

"The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin"—believe on Him and thou shalt be saved.

L. J.

Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many.
Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit.

Christ died for our sins.
Through his name, whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins.

Thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation.

Notices of Books.

The Women in the Word. By Mrs. M. Baxter. ("Christian Herald" Office. 1s.) Brief lessons on the women of Scripture from Eve to the "Elect Lady" of 2 John. Many will find these useful in Bible-class work.

Temperance Politics. By A. Scholfield, LL.D. (3d U.K. Alliance Office.) A series of brief papers showing the evils of strong drink and the ruin it is working individuals and the nation. In view of the serious facts adduced, the author claims the temperance vote for prohibition.

Domestic Hygiene and Rearing and Feeding of Children. By Thomas Dutton, M.D. (H. Kimpton, 82, High Holborn. 2s. each.) Two valuable works, in plain, comprehensible language, dealing practically with matters concerning the health and happiness of all. They should be pondered by every parent and householder.

Mary or Madonna? By W. Marshall. (C. J. Thyne, Great Queen-street. 3d. and 1s. 6d.) In days when Mariolatry is creeping into so-called Reformed churches, we welcome this popular booklet setting forth the teaching of the Bible in clear contrast to the traditions of Rome, and showing plainly that the Madonna is merely the Magna Mater of Paganism.

A PROTEST AGAINST BAZAARS. By Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon. (1d. Passmore & Alabaster.) We are glad to note that this vigorous protest has aroused so much attention that a fifth edition has been called for. The pamphlet has now been enlarged considerably.

MARTYR OF HELL'S HIGHWAY is the title of a new book on a topic that needs much ventilating, announced by Mr. H. B. Allenson. The author is Rev. H. Elwyn Thomas, who here gives much of his experience gained as a London minister near Tottenham-court-road. The book has a preface and an appendix by Mrs. Josephine E. Butler.

Broadway, Kettering.—Most successful services have been held in connection with the fifth anniversary of the London-road Hall, Kettering, the speakers being Rev. Frank Ward Pollard, Mr. George Noakes, and Mr. Charles Pollard (the superintendent), through whose kindness the hall was built and opened five years ago. The services are most useful and helpful and are appreciated, as shown by the numbers who attend.

The Y.M.C.A. in Ireland.—The annual conference of the Mid-Ireland District Union was held at Dundalk on Wednesday, 26th ult. The reports were of a very encouraging character. At the noon meeting, presided over by Rev. S. J. Carolin, of Castlebellingham, a paper was read by Mr. Samuel Miller, general secretary, Mountpottinger Association, entitled "The presence and power of the Holy Ghost essential to success in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association," which was followed by one on the same subject by Mr. Thompson, of the Omagh Association. At the afternoon meeting a paper was read by Mr. Monsell, of the Kingstown Association, on "Through what agencies can young men best be reached by the Young Men's Christian Association?"

Letters to the Editor

THE "BEAM AND SCALES" ARGUMENT AND PROPORTIONATE GIVING.

OUR friend, Pastor Frank White, at page 24 of THE CHRISTIAN for August 27th, gives valuable aid to this important subject by joining in the discussion. Mr. Frank White says, "In this I believe is to be found the true solution of a great question—How shall we get the means to give the Gospel to a lost world? It is no longer a question of men to go—but of money with which to send them." But I fear he does not fully understand the principles of proportionate and systematic benevolence as held by those who are recommending it as one of the great needs of the present day.

It is a great mistake to suppose that we advise the giving of 10 per cent. alike by all. The only essentials are that the giving should be systematic and proportionate according to St. Paul's exhortation (1 Cor. xvi. 2).—"On the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him."

Many bankers, merchants, manufacturers, and others could spare a tenth or a fifth of their incomes, but others whose incomes are small and whose families are large can only with difficulty spare a much smaller portion. The two great essentials are both included in this passage from the Word of God, viz., first, systematic—"On the first day of the week" (i.e., every week), and proportionate, "as God hath prospered him." It is easy to foresee difficulties and call them impossibilities, in ascertaining and giving periodically the proper amount "as God hath prospered him": but those who once adopt the practice soon find the difficulties disappear, and greatly enjoy giving from the money laid up in store ready for the occasions when they arise for giving; knowing that, however much they may find in that store, it is only what they, after full consideration, had decided to give to the Lord's work of spreading the knowledge of Christ and of philanthropic benevolence towards individuals or societies.

We read, "As we have opportunity let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith"; and those who do so find by experience that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

But we are also solemnly commanded (1 Tim. v. 8) first to provide for our own, and especially for those of our own house, and in anxiously obeying this command many find it very difficult to spare even 5 per cent.; which, indeed, must be the case with many ministers of the Gospel, whom we see doing their utmost to bring up their large families, but whose income is only £150 or £200 a year, yet I am sure they wish to give, and such I advise to give systematically by "laying by in store," however little that may be, and they will greatly enjoy the dispensing of that little.

The widow's mite was very small, but the Lord Jesus said she had given more than they all.

I know there are other objections raised to systematic and proportionate giving; but after many years' experience I am more than ever satisfied that it is not only the Scriptural mode which God has commanded, but that it is the remedy for "the present distress." We cannot expect all wealthy persons to give thus, but if only Christians who appreciate these objects will give systematically, proportionately, and as God has prospered them, they will find it so, and the directors of our home and foreign missionary societies, hospitals, and other institutions will not have such anxieties concerning their maintenance as they now suffer.

Reading. M. H. S.

P.S.—It is remarkable that Holy Scripture does not command a man to give in accordance with the amount spent on self-indulgence, but "as God has prospered him."

UNITARIANS AND MR. VOYSEY.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly permit me to point out an error in your "Note" on the "Advisory Committee," in the issue of August 20? You say that "Some of the ministers protest against the decision, but the Unitarian papers defend it." Now, The Unitarian Herald and Christian Life has protested from the first against the commendation of a professedly non-Christian to our churches. Some of us feel very strongly on this matter, as we hold that Unitarianism means believing in and following Christ as our Master, Teacher, Saviour, and Example.

Though you regard Unitarians as mistaken, I feel sure that with your love of justice, you will kindly insert this correction.—Yours truly, S. BURROWS.

Adrian-street Chapel, Dover.

The Spurgeon Orphanage.

AS a large proportion of the children admitted to the Orphanage are the offspring of consumptive parents, they are physically of a frail type, and need the utmost care. Wholesome food and perfect sanitary conditions are secured to them at Stockwell; still, we find it absolutely necessary to send many of them to the sea-side from time to time. The tonic properties of sea air supply an element for building up the constitution which can be secured in no other way. But for the care thus bestowed, not a few of them would, in all human probability, have fallen early victims to those insidious diseases to which their own orphanhood is due.

Our friends will not be surprised, therefore, to learn that the question of a permanent sea-side Home has pressed for consideration; and they will share our regret that we have not hitherto been able to secure this coveted boon for our delicate children and those recovering from illness.

As I am the last survivor of the original Board of Trustees, I should be glad, if the Lord will, to see this most desirable branch of the institution completed, and in working order, before I go home! My dear brother was heartily in favour of such an advance being made; but so long as the funds for the building and furnishing the orphanage had to be secured, he did not feel at liberty to undertake additional responsibility. The time has now come, I think, for proceeding with this work, and my co-trustees are in full sympathy with the project, and their sympathy has taken a very practical turn. Several other friends have also generously responded to a personal appeal; and it is my most earnest hope that I may be able to raise the amount required without diverting any contributions from the general fund of the Orphanage. The outlay for a freehold building and furniture will not, I trust, exceed £3000; but we shall need, at least, £7000 as a capital fund towards the maintenance of the Home.

Mrs. Grimké's Text Cards.

MY last message was sent in much weakness. Now the good hand of the Lord has restored health and greatly enlarged my sphere of work. I have constant appeals for cards, and am encouraged by knowing these messages of the Word were much used by and helpful to the dear workers and martyrs of Fu Kien. While glad and thankful to do what I can for the work, still I know it might be greatly extended if help could be given to enable me to reach all missionaries. I have added several fresh languages and fresh editions, yet many more are needed. A letter of thanks from Oudh tells me the need of texts for the soldiers' hospital, and says, the writer and her husband can reach two millions of people. If your readers could see the requests that come to me from all the heathen lands, I feel sure many more would be constrained to help forward this simple but most blessed work for the Master.—Yours in his service, EMMA GRIMKÉ.

Higher Broughton, Manchester.

Mauritius.—Rev. and Mrs. V. W. Harcourt, who went to South India last autumn on account of health, have returned to their duties in Mauritius.

Japan.—A three days special evangelistic mission was conducted at Fukuoka by Rev. D. T. Terata, of Hiroshima, and Mr. Wakamura, of Kumamoto, in May. Many came who had resisted up till now all entreaties to come and hear about Christ. The student class and the mercantile class were well represented, and some thirty soldiers responded to a special invitation addressed to them. The members of the church took great interest in this special effort, which we trust will in time result, by God's blessing, in abiding fruit.

The Whole Thing a Swindle.—Colporteur Müller, who has his residence in the historical old Catholic city of Ratisbon, in Germany, relates the following:—"He entered a peasant's house and produced his books. The peasant shouted out that they did not want a Bible, as they did not believe anything in it. Müller took the liberty of replying that that could hardly be so. But the man hotly replied that the whole thing was a 'swindle.' Müller told him his soul was immortal. The peasant, with scientific precision and dogmatism, remarked in reply that the blood was the soul, and that, as soon as that had left the body, so had the soul. 'What is reason?' asked the peasant; 'even my oxen have reason.' But Müller had an apt answer: 'May I read you part of the Word of God?' The unbeliever had nothing against this, and Müller read chapter after chapter. After the reading the peasant thought he would decide to buy a Kistemaker New Testament. Müller left the house with a cordial invitation to come again when he next visited the neighbourhood."

Irish Notes.

REV. DR. WILLIAMSON, of Belfast, has been conducting services in Oban during the month of August.

During the past month the Methodist Mission tent, under the charge of Rev. Henry Ball, has been stationed at Warren Point, and has been largely attended.

Rev. Dr. Hall, of New York, is paying his annual visit to his native land, where no one is more popular as a preacher or public speaker. During the past week or two he has been preaching at Bangor, Coleraine, and elsewhere.

Rev. Dr. Hodge, the well-known American Presbyterian minister, who had been attending the Pan-Presbyterian Council in Glasgow, has been preaching and lecturing in several of the Belfast churches with great acceptance.

Arrangements for the third Irish Convention of Christian Endeavour Societies, which is to be held in Belfast from September 30 to October 2, are almost completed. Amongst the speakers expected is Rev. Dr. Clark, the founder of the movement.

The evangelistic tent services on the Shankill-road, Belfast, are being continued night after night with the most gratifying tokens of blessing. It is intended that they should be carried on as far into September as the weather will permit. Already much good has been done.

The Belfast Central Mission continues to do an excellent work, and takes the Gospel to about ten thousand persons a week. Its latest development is Woodvale Hall, which will seat a thousand adults. The Mission has made a good start in the neighbourhood by a series of tent services, which have reached many of the poorest people in the district.

In connection with the autumn manoeuvres which have been held this year in the hilly and picturesque country between Tipperary and Kilkenny, the Methodist chaplains, Revs. Thos. Moran and W. L. Coade, were much in evidence. At Kilcooley Rev. Thos. Moran had a marquee fitted up with refreshment bar and reading and writing tables; while at Tulbrid Camp two tents placed end to end answered as a hall for evangelistic and other meetings. A service was held every night, and at the closing meeting the place was crowded.

It is the general testimony of those best qualified to judge (says The Christian Irishman) that a great wave of scepticism, or of infidelity, has begun to sweep over Ireland. It does not seem to be confined to any one section of the community, and the ranks of Protestantism can claim no immunity from its inroads. A spirit of restless impatience in regard to every form of religious belief may be said to be a mark of the times almost everywhere. There is a universal revolt against the assertion of mere human authority in the religious sphere. In some respects this attitude of mind, though undoubtedly fraught with grave peril, is to be regarded as on the whole an encouraging sign...The paramount duty of the hour is to put the people in possession of the Word of God. Let it convey to them its own message.

Referring to the passing of the Irish Land Bill, the same paper says:—"There may not be any immediate results of a very extraordinary kind from the legislation which has just found its way to the Statute-Book of the realm. But material hindrances have been taken out of the way; and if our people, abandoning drink and the worship of trading demagogues, would but devote themselves to the cultivation of habits of persistent industry, taking God's Word as a lamp to their feet and a light to their path, and looking trustingly to Him for his daily blessing on their basket and their store, Ireland would beyond all doubt attain, and that ere long, to a higher national position than she ever occupied throughout her entire history."

Christian Endeavour.

SOME Chelsea, Mass., Endeavourers, in common with a number of other C.E. societies, have given fresh-air excursions to poor children.

In a boys' school in Pennsylvania, with 800 inmates, the only religious services held are the Christian Endeavour meetings. This society was formed by the boys themselves.

An interesting side-light on the results of the International Christian Endeavour Conventions is given by a letter just received by a young woman in the North-West Territory. She writes:—"I am now a missionary among the Indians here, as a result of the missionary rally held during the Boston Convention."

A Californian family walked four miles over the mountains to attend a missionary meeting held by visiting Christian Endeavourers. This was the first Gospel service that these people had attended for years. After the meeting some of the Endeavourers returned home with them and helped organise a Sunday-school and a Christian Endeavour society.

Personalia.

Prince Ademuyiwa, the Christian Prince from Ijebu Remo, West Africa, has addressed large audiences in several towns in North Wales in aid of the work of the Colwyn Bay Institution.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearce, who has been warmly welcomed on his return from South Africa, hopes to resume his work at St. James's Hall on Sunday, September 13, when he is expected to preach at the morning and evening service.

Rev. Thomas Law, who some time ago was appointed secretary of the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches, has now definitely entered upon his duties, and taken up his office at the Memorial Hall, London.

Rev. Robert Dewar, late assistant to Rev. D. Lowe, in London-road Free Church, Glasgow, is about to undertake mission work among Scotsmen in the neighbourhood of Calcutta, in connection with Wellesley-square Free Church, of that city.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites hopes to leave in the mail steamer India, on Nov. 13, for his winter mission tour in India. He intends to visit the Telugu country on the east, and the Santals, a hill tribe in the north. He will be thankful for prayer on behalf of his labours.

Major Whittle, according to his latest letter, hoped to sail, with Mrs. Whittle, per s.s. Lucania, on Saturday last, 29th, for a brief visit to this country. He intends going straight to Perth for the Conference. Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins purpose leaving New York for Liverpool a fortnight later.

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch is improving, although he is still suffering from extreme depression, and it will be some time before he will be equal to his usual work. His appetite has much improved, and the insomnia is passing away. He would be grateful for continual remembrance in prayer.

Mr. Robert E. Speer, one of the secretaries of the American Presbyterian Foreign Mission Board, is taking a tour round the world in the interests of missions. His wife accompanies him. A farewell meeting was held in New York to commend him and several missionaries who are proceeding to stations in the foreign field, to the care and blessing of God.

Principal Rainy.—The writer of a sketch in The Dundee Advertiser of the distinguished Free Church Principal, says of him:—"His clear-headedness, his sanctified worldly wisdom, and his skill as a judge of the signs of the times, are worth more to the Free Kirk than the nebulous schemes of Chalmers, the pathetic phrases of Guthrie, the historical partisanship of Buchanan, or the sturdy and infrangible Calvinism of Dr. Begg."

Mr. W. S. Caine, who has already made several tours in India, intends to visit that country again during the ensuing winter. He will sail from London on Nov. 20, and in a letter to the Akkari thus sets forth his programme:—"I shall reach Bombay Dec. 14, stay there for three or four days, and then go to Calcutta for the Indian National Congress. It is then my intention to visit Burmah, which I have never seen, cross from Burmah to Madras about the middle of January, and spend five or six weeks in visiting all the branches I can manage in such time as may be at my disposal."

Rev. Hay M. H. Aitken writes to his friends:—"So many kind inquiries have been made about my health since my return that I take this opportunity of saying that I am distinctly better than when I returned; and if I don't feel quite the thing I did before those six months of exceptionally hard work, followed by that terrible heat, I none the less am now in fair working trim, and am about to recommence my mission work in the dear old church of which I was incumbent some twenty-one years ago, Christ Church, Everton. May I ask a very special interest in your prayers in thus returning to my work, in which I may say that I have come of age, for it is now twenty-one years since I began to be a mission preacher exclusively given up to that work. Ask for a full renewal of physical strength, but still more for a fresh endowment of spiritual power."

North-West Canada.—We regret to announce the death, on August 4th, of the wife of Rev. A. E. Cowley, of Winnipeg. She originally went out, as Miss Hart-Davies, to be Principal of an important Ladies' College at Winnipeg.

Hop-Pickers in Hampshire.—This week five tents will be erected for the preaching of the Gospel to the thousands of tramps and gypsies who at this season come into our midst. I have just heard of a young woman to whom the tent services were made a blessing last year. This gives encouragement to go forward. Will your readers aid us in helping the means of comforting many sad hearts? Help is needed to carry on this important work.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Powers, assisted by their daughter, who sings the Gospel, have had large and interesting meetings at a great many of the seaside resorts in Scotland during the past few months. In Millport and Saltcoats especially, the meetings were extremely well attended, and much blessing received by young and old.

Orange Free State.—Mr. William Hill, who for three years has been conducting special missions throughout Cape Colony, is at present evangelising in towns and villages in the Orange Free State, with much encouragement amongst both Europeans and natives. He will be glad of prayer for his missions in the coming months.

Notting Hill.—Mr. Frank L. Smith, of New York, has conducted evangelistic services at the Talbot Tabernacle on three Sunday evenings. The Lord has blessed his ministry; several encouraging cases of professed conversion following. Many are hoping that the way may be opened for a Gospel mission in Notting Hill by Mr. Smith before the winter sets in.

Edinburgh Castle.—Steadily growing congregations have borne testimony to the interest felt in Mr. W. R. Lane's services during August. Perhaps the most effective features of the mission have been the bright, rousing addresses to the young on Sunday mornings, which are attended by upwards of 1000 boys and girls from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, and the evangelist's straight, manly talks to the men of the P.S.A. Doubtless much fruit will follow. Mr. Lane leaves us to conduct a united Free Church Mission in Aberdeen. W. R. N.

The Bible Carriage Mission seeks to disseminate the Word of God and sound Christian literature, and to proclaim the Gospel. Thousands never enter church or chapel, yet are glad to stand around the Bible-carriages to hear God's love preached in the market-places. In this way many hundreds hear the Gospel, and are led to trust Him. On June 10, Mr. Northcote Willy came to Stockport with two Bible-carriages, and the work that has been done here will never be forgotten. Thousands of tracts, Testaments, and Bibles have been sold and given away, and remarkable children's and adults' meetings have been held nightly. God has greatly blessed the mission. Slaves of drink have signed the temperance pledge, hard hearts have been broken, backsliders reclaimed, sinners saved, and believers sanctified. There has been no excitement, but we have had the Spirit's power. Having spent over two months in Stockport, the van has gone on to Manchester. Help is needed to maintain this work. Address to 32, Ellesmore-street, Crumpsall, Manchester.

LOCAL PREACHER.

Mr. Frank H. Leybourne, who has been labouring for the past fifteen months at the Gay-street Mission, Liverpool, will soon be free, and would like charge of a mission in London or South of England, or to conduct special missions. Address: 46a, Everton Brow, Liverpool.

The Church Parochial Mission Society has arranged for the month of September the following missions. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer. Rev. W. Hay Aitken, Sept. 6-21, Christ Church, Everton, Liverpool; Sept. 27-Oct. 11, St. Barnabas', Blackburn. Rev. W. Bryan Brown, Sept. 25-28, Great Toller, Dorchester. Rev. J. P. Cushing, Sept. 5-15, Derriaghy, Dunmurry, Co. Antrim. Rev. E. Bachelor Russell, Sept. 5-8, Holy Trinity, East Finchley; Sept. 19-23, Amberley, Stroud.

Rev. J. H. Horsburgh wrote from Mien-cheo at the end of April that Mr. W. Knipe had accompanied the traveller Mrs. Bishop on an itinerant tour westwards towards Tibet. On the advice and recommendation of Bishop Cassels, Mr. Simmonds, who went out independently to Sichuan in 1891, has been accepted as a missionary of the C.M.S.

The Gospel Mission to Madeira.—The dense darkness prevailing in this island has led to the formation of this mission, under the care of Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Jefford, who writes:—"The inhabitants are dreadfully priest-ridden, very ignorant, and very poor. They are scattered among the mountains, in the valleys between which there are several large villages. Some parishes have a population of 20,000. There centres could be formed and a grand work done. The need is great. People are waiting with yearning hearts for the truth. Very touching has been our experience in meeting souls who have long been dissatisfied with Roman Catholicism, and who have been for years longing for something more satisfying than the teaching of the penance-demanding priest. How eagerly they have listened! How glad they have been to hear of such a great salvation; and yet of the vast numbers dissatisfied we have hitherto been able to instruct but a few. Large audiences may be gathered who will listen eagerly and with wondrous attention to the truth as we happily know it. Helpers are wanted who will willingly give of their means for the furtherance of the Gospel. In the field we need evangelists and doctors." The Hon. Sec. is Mr. A. Dearlove, 82, Shrewsbury-road, Forest Gate, E.

Obituary.

MR. JOSEPH JOYCE.

This veteran in the struggle against State-regulated vice in the British Isles passed to his eternal reward on August 12, in his seventieth year. For ten years (says The Sentinel) he was the general secretary of the Working Men's National League for the Repeal of the C. D. Acts. Painstaking and persevering, he held that important post till Parliament abolished those laws in the United Kingdom. He subsequently worked in connection with the Friends' Association for Abolishing the State Regulation of Vice, in its conflict against legalised sin in "Greater Britain" (including India), and only relinquished active duty through failing health. For the past two years his physical condition had been very frail. At the end of July last he removed from Uxbridge to Tunbridge Wells, thinking that his health would benefit thereby, but he had only been settled in his new home about a fortnight when the end came, so far as earth was concerned.

CANON GREEN, FRIEZLAND.

This devoted man of God was called home suddenly on Wednesday, the 19th ult. He preached in his church on the previous Sunday, and was visiting in his parish the day before. Canon Green had laboured long and diligently on Evangelical and Protestant lines, himself and his people supporting munificently the C.M.S., of which society he was a life governor, the C.P.A.S., and many other kindred societies. He was an earnest and devoted servant of the Lord, a faithful pastor, a wise counsellor, and staunch friend.

A friend writes to The Record:—"It was early in life his habit to set aside one-tenth of his income for charitable purposes, subsequently he apportioned a fifth, and lately a much larger amount. He was an early riser, a diligent student, especially of the Word of God, with the Hebrew as well as the Greek of which he was familiar. Beloved by his flock, by his clerical brethren he was held in the highest respect for his learning, his facile expositions, his unobtrusiveness and gentleness of spirit. He never spoke without commanding respect for the wisdom and moderation of his utterances. He well grasped and unfolded the essentials of the faith, without losing sight of all that goes to the "adornment of the doctrine" of Christ. A true-hearted, God-fearing man, who always seemed to be living as in close converse with God, has been called from us to go higher."

Jews at Mount Carmel.

In a recent letter Mr. D. C. Joseph says: There is a great work to be done in Caiffa. The Jews come regularly, and on Saturday the whole of the day our lectures are well attended. One old Rabbi came for the purpose of arguing with me, with the result that he went home and looked in his own Bible to find out whether the texts which I brought before him were correct. Now he comes very frequently. Two young men are inquirers; one of them is an exceedingly promising youth.

Our night-school is prospering. Between fifty and sixty boys and young men attend regularly. It is very cheering to see Jews, Mahomedans, Greeks, and Roman Catholics sitting side by side listening to the words of life. One of the sons of the native pastor of the C.M.S. is a great help to us in the school, but it would be a great boon if you could meet with an English Christian who could come and help. The eldest son of the native pastor, who is an M.D., kindly gives his time twice a week to see sick Jews, and makes up the medicine. We are much in need of quinine, as fever is prevalent in town, also ophthalmia. I have rented part of the lower rooms in the house where I receive poor sick people. I hope in the winter to use them for schools and reading-room. Will some friends furnish me with newspapers for the reading-room? They may be sent by the Austrian post via Trieste. Address Caiffa, Mount Carmel, Palestine.

The Seed taking Root.—Signor Meille, the Bible Society's agent in Italy, in concluding his yearly report, writes:—"I think we may safely say that, in spite of a somewhat diminished issue, the year that has gone from us has seen a most comforting progress in the excellent work this society is pursuing in Italy. Not only has another large addition been made to the number of copies of the Word of God the Italian nation now possesses, but many signs would tend to show that here and there, and in many more places that we know of, the seed not only is taking root, but begins to bear fruits of salvation and of life. The present hour is dark and full of anxiety, but a country where God's Word begins to be appreciated and followed by many has before it a brighter future than any victory or political events can give."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE massacre at Constantinople continues, as well it may, to fill Europe with horror; it is an exhibition of what the old persecuting spirit can do, for whatever may be uncertain about it, this is certain—the Armenians are persecuted because of their Christian faith, and the Sultan would like to extirpate them. We never remember any living man being so vehemently denounced as Abdul Hamid is; only to such as Borgia, Philip of Spain, Alva, and our own Queen Mary, those who have passed into history, have we seen such epithets applied. The correspondent of The Daily News, who seems to be about the best informed man in Constantinople, says that Abdul is neither ill nor a drunkard; "he is a cynical, cruel fanatic, and very suspicious, but quite free from the taint of intemperance and debauchery associated with the name of 'unspeakable.'" He has made up his mind about "the extermination of all Armenian males, and the drafting into Turkish and Kurdish harems of all Armenian women."

Is it possible to rouse the Governments of Europe, and especially that of Great Britain, to a sense of the unspeakable shame that clings to them in connection with the awful doings in Asiatic Turkey? If it is, the little book, "Armenia and Its Sorrows," written by Mr. W. J. Wintle (1s. Mr. A. Melrose, Pilgrim-street, E.C.), ought to produce some impression on our seemingly sluggish minds and hearts. Its pages unfold what is surely the blackest page in modern, if not in ancient, history. What will be the outcome of it all none can foresee, but for the so-called Christian Powers of Europe there must come a day of terrible reckoning. In a letter with reference to the publication of this work, Mr. Gladstone describes the Sultan as "the assassin who sits on the throne at Constantinople." How much longer are we to be content to be the virtual accomplices, before and after the fact, of this inhuman monster?

Dr. Grace Kimball, who for a number of years past has been a devoted worker among the Armenians in the Province of Van, has just made a brief stay in London on her way to America, whither she is to sail on Saturday next. She was interviewed by a member of our staff, and in an early issue we hope to give an account of her missionary and relief work in Turkey, with portrait and several striking illustrations.

The sudden death of Prince Lobanoff is one of those events that may have a wide bearing on the course of international affairs. Since becoming Russian Foreign Minister, about eighteen months ago, the strong hand of the Prince had been very conspicuous in European diplomacy, and now that he has been removed from the field of earthly politics, the character of his influence is being very clearly made known. We now know that the hand which converted Russia from being the protector of the Christian populations in the East into the cynical upholder of the unspeakable brutalities of the Sultan was that of Prince Lobanoff. His dramatic death, occurring during his royal master's diplomatic tour of Europe, may be the means whereby the whole current of those events that have recently horrified the civilised world may be turned backward in its course. If ever true believers in the Divine petition, "Thy kingdom come," should lift up hands of appeal to the Great Ruler of kings and peoples, this is the crisis. Let us pray that the Czar's tour of Europe may become a means of enlightening him to the real facts of the case, and that he may have grace given to him to reverse the policy which has paralysed the pity and shocked the conscience of Europe.

Complacent confidence in the humanity of civilised Europeans has already been disturbed by reiterated statements as to the treatment of the natives in Congoland. Now, however, a serious indictment has been made by one who has spent ten years on the Congo, travelling constantly in the service of a Belgian trading company. Mr. Parminter's narrative, as given in The Daily News on Tuesday, must rouse public indignation by its appalling revelation of the barbarities which some State officers inflict on helpless and inoffending people. Verily, the dark places of the earth are still full of cruelty, and the advent of "civilised," but irresponsible, officials does not always mean the humane treatment of the hapless natives.

Some shareholders in railway companies are agitating for a reduction of Sunday labour on the lines, to what is barely necessary. They want to abolish Sunday excursions, Sunday theatrical traffic, and the carriage of heavy imperishable goods. Their representations appear to be received with greater respect than they were at first, and some growth of a better feeling seems to be apparent among the shareholders. The movement well deserves encouragement.

Admiral Grant sends to The Daily News a most gratifying testimony as to the nature of the work done by missionaries in Tierra del Fuego. He mentions a notice to mariners, circulated some eighty years ago, that in the event of a casualty on the coast of that country seamen might rely on the assistance of the natives, and says that when the Duchess of Albany was wrecked the men on board were safely conducted by natives to the mission station, and not as much plunder was made of the wreck as would have taken place on our own shores at home. Admiral Grant may well say that he does not know of any agency other than the glorious Gospel which would have produced these results, and in a few years converted these savage cannibals into being Christians.

The Methodist Recorder publishes a letter from an Indian missionary which, were it widely read, might go far to silence the complaints too often heard of the comfortable, not to say luxurious circumstances in which missionaries live. He says it is the rainy season, and the rain just pours into his study, so that he cannot find a dry place to write in. The day before he wrote he had had workmen to patch up the roof, but in a day there were twenty-five leaks in it. A small sum would put it right, but he knows it is useless applying to the chairman of his district, as the word has gone from London to economise. So you may, and find it very costly. A missionary is worth more than a bungalow roof. Home Christians will have to enter more fully into the needs of their brethren abroad before we get Christ's work done aright.

By direction of their late Yearly Meeting the Society of Friends in Britain are circulating a booklet, entitled "A Letter to Fathers." Its object is to persuade fathers to speak frankly and in time to their sons on the subject of purity. The writers testify from personal knowledge that it would not be easy to exaggerate the extent to which sins of impurity have prevailed among the children of godly parents. They are most anxious that a boy should be early taught that his body is precious to his Saviour, and is meant to be a temple of the Holy Spirit. Since boys cannot be kept from contact with the evils which abound on every side, "the true safeguard for them, at every stage of their experience, is the realisation that they belong to Christ." An address like this is a sign of a felt danger, and deserves to be widely circulated.

Dr. Herber Evans takes a serious view of the progress of Romanism in Wales. He refers to a visit which Cardinal Vaughan paid to Llandrindod, when the building in which he preached was "too small to hold the Protestants and Nonconformists who went to hear him." Well-known men have been received into the bosom of the Papacy. "Energetic proselytes are working throughout Radnorshire and the district, and scores have become Papists." Dr. Evans quotes an able Welsh Nonconformist barrister, who said that there had been too much levity and too little seriousness about the religious life of Wales for many years, and if Romanism comes a reaction will set in in favour of deep religious earnestness. But does not that depend? Reaction does not explain everything. Reaction will come, and come now, if God's people pray and work as they ought to do.

The Daily News of Tuesday has a short leader on the address given the previous day by Sir George Osborne Morgan, reported on page 21. The final comment of our contemporary is as follows:—

The bulk of the laity in the Church of England are Protestants, and would leave the Church at once if it recognised the authority or jurisdiction of the Pope. Sir George Osborne Morgan need not be alarmed. An amiable and eccentric gentleman like Lord Halifax no more represents the Church of England than Father Hyacinth represents the Church of Rome.

The last sentence may be quite true, but it seems to us that The Daily News takes a too cheerful view when it says that "the bulk of the laity would leave the Church of England at once if it recognised the authority or jurisdiction of the Pope." The current of fashion in such matters is so strong that we gravely doubt the optimism of our contemporary. We think that Sir George Osborne Morgan has very good ground to be alarmed.

The mental condition of several prisoners recently liberated after long terms of imprisonment has raised a question as to the effects of prison discipline. It seems to be terribly severe. Mr. Raymond Blathwayt, son of a late chaplain of Portland, Woking, and Millbank convict prisons, and one who has visited prisons in almost every part of the world, testifies that in our prison discipline we have gone back; it has, for some time, been getting "more inhuman and dehumanising." He calls us "a warning to the nations and a disgrace to the civilised world." He recalls a time when his father started a series of popular Friday evening lectures, illustrated by diagrams, pictures, lanterns, or even costumes, which were delivered in the chapel to a delighted and crowded audience of convicts. Such things are not done now; they were discontinued through the action of red-tape in the department and ridicule outside. Mr. Blathwayt does not wish to see prisoners pampered, as he thinks they are somewhat at Sing-Sing, but he rightly thinks that to ruin the mind as well as a man's prospects is beyond the legitimate function of the directorate of convict prisons. It seems to us that the official element wants tempering with outside voluntary inspection.

A very searching and pertinent question is asked in these words—

How much of the toleration of this time is indifference? How many of these people that are kindly to their neighbours' faiths are careless about their own?

The implication is that our so-called charity toward men may become unfaithfulness to the truth of God, and we fear that it is too well founded. The popular protest against dogma has reduced all doctrines to a common level of unimportance, the object having been to get rid of them all, and not to separate the true from the false. The teaching on the subject of comparative religion has also had its share in creating indifference as to any faith that a man may hold; one religion would do for one kind of nature, and another for another. A turn in the tide, however, seems to have begun in the increased attention which is being given to doctrine again, and in the clearer discernment that no power can attend nebulous teaching. This will not imply the return of a persecuting spirit, such as distinguished the early days of the Reformation, but the blending of personal liberty with devotion to the truth.

"If a man has no secret religion, he has no religion." The roots of all plants and trees are in the dark, and the stronger and loftier the tree the deeper and wider do they spread underground. The strong, fruit-bearing soul has its life hid with Christ in God. The public assembly may feed it with truth and stimulus, the open work, seen and known of men, may confirm and develop it, but its main nourishment is always drawn from secret prayer and secret meditation. The sure way to kill plant or tree would be to uncover its roots, and expose them to the blazing heat of the sun and to the chilling frost. The sure way to kill religion is to live it only in the eyes of men. Humility, gentleness, love, joy, peace, patience, all require the quiet shade. Alms done to be seen of men are not alms, but advertisements—the deadliest influence a soul can encounter. Purity of motive, reverence, gratitude, flourish in the quiet places where men are with God alone.

It is at first sight a strange thing that Paul, in dealing with the ultimate motive of the Christian life, finds it in the constraint of Christ's love to men, rather than in the constraint of their love to Him, for this is the true reading of that stirring verse, 2 Cor. v. 14. A closer consideration of the case will, however, show how true this is. Our love to Christ can never be a safe and adequate spring of conduct, for it lacks the principles of purity, disinterestedness, and permanence. Our love tends to be selfish, narrow, limited, dependent on how men act towards us and upon our moods. But the love of Christ is free, pure, boundless, constant. It is only as we realise the beauty and sufficiency of his love to men that our own love for them is winnowed of its dross, inflamed into the enthusiasm of humanity, and made abiding and quenchless. There is no true fountain of motive power that can stand the strain of love like that which was unsealed at Bethlehem and overflowed the world from Calvary.

In the discussion as to the increase or decline in attendance on public worship, the question of quality is not less important than that of quantity. Are the worshippers more or less devout than formerly? more or less active in Christian service? more or less forgetful to do good and to communicate, distributing to the necessities of saints? more or less carried about with divers and strange doctrines? more or less established with grace, not with meats, which have not profited them who have been occupied therein?

Does the instruction given to them more or less hold fast the form of sound words? Are their teachers more or less partakers of the afflictions of the Gospel according to the power of God? more or less ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, or of Paul his prisoner? more or less studying to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth? more or less shunning profane and vain babblings, which will increase unto more ungodliness?

The Gospel of the glory of the blessed God, poured out from the heart of the preacher to the hearts of the people, will always find earnest and interested hearers. The accessories of another Gospel which is not another, which aims at pleasing man, not God, may attract for a time, but they have no permanently attractive power; and dwindling congregations in many places prove the powerlessness of the theories of "modern thought" to satisfy the longing soul, or to fill the hungry soul with goodness. It is cause of rejoicing that some who have been distributing these husks are beginning to suspect that they are spending their strength for nought.

Peshawur.—Miss Mitcheson writes that Rev. Ihsan Ullah has been holding a mission in All Saints', Peshawur, with very remarkable results. A correspondent of the Punjab Mission News says:—"Whit-Sunday fell this year on the anniversary of the great Mohammedan Id-Id ul zoha, which corresponds—in partial intention, at any rate—to the Jewish Great Day of Atonement. But while the deluded children of the deluded Arabian prophet were worshipping in their several mosques here on that day, at that very moment, God was being glorified in our midst by the reception into the Church of two converts from Islam. Mahomed Husein and Modhi Khan are both young men. The prayers of all who read these lines are besought in their behalf. Quite as a matter of course, they have been and at the present moment are undergoing a fiery trial and persecution."

Country Musings.

"The rivers that run among the hills."
"He shall drink of the brook by the way, therefore shall he lift up his head."

UP here in the Highlands of Scotland we can truly realise the meaning of these simple texts. Lessons come home to us, of the necessity to stoop and drink of the brook by the way, in our spiritual life, that we too may lift up our heads. The mountain heads of temptation, so stern, so high, and so many, rise before us, all to be patiently, meekly, and cheerfully climbed to reach the exhilarating rarer air.

How seldom we stoop to dip our horn into the burn which is flowing with crystal water, pure and bright, and goes gurgling and singing beneath our feet, almost hidden by heather, grasses, and flowering herbs which so delight our eyes. The sweet, tender blessings our Father sends to please us here, we often permit to fill up our lives, instead of bending them gently aside to dip with determination into the God-sent stream which He has sent to refresh us more fully to enjoy our spiritual, mental, and earthly life.

To rest has seemed quite a faulty action to some of us in our feverish haste to reach the top. But how we feel the need when panting under the strain of rising higher and higher and inhaling purer, rarer air. We must rest, in the rush of this hurried life, and stoop to drink of the brook by the way. When we have drunk, our heads are lifted to Him in loving confidence, who is the Giver of the living water that especially welleteth out among the mountains.

Here on these Grampians we gain a fuller meaning of what David meant when he asks, "Who is a Rock save our God?" For what confidence we feel, when stepping among the richly-shaded mosses, fungi, and grasses which grow so luxuriantly upon the boggy places, to find our feet upon a rock. We can almost picture him in the Burn of Vat, when he has escaped to the cave for safety, and hear him exclaiming, "The Lord is my Rock, and my Fortress, and my Deliverer; my God, my Rock, in Whom I will trust, my Buckler, the horn of my Salvation and my high Tower."

In the descent from our victorious high places, how carefully we need to place our feet, and trust in Him who can enlarge our footsteps under us, that our feet may not slide. Beware of the descent from the heights of religious fervour, to the level of practical life. Who has not recklessly placed a foot and through it sprained an ankle, or slipped and fallen and had an ugly shake: the effects of which remind one for weeks and sometimes years of the carelessness. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." "Drink of the brook by the way." S.

Ballater, Aberdeen.

Gurha, Japalpur.—A whole family here have expressed a wish for baptism. They are Kaiohs by caste (writer caste). Miss Moore's new Bible-woman, Bessie Hatim, is teaching the woman, and her husband the man, both of whom appear to be very much in earnest.

The Chinese Viceroy.—Li Chung Tang spoke the other day in New York in praise of the efforts of American and European missionaries to crush the opium habit in China. He expressed his personal thanks for prayers offered in America for his life when endangered by the assassin's bullet in Japan.

The Ten Days' Mission at the Great Assembly Hall, conducted by Mr. Tennyson Smith, is continuing to awaken interest and to attract increasingly large audiences nightly. On Saturday, in response to an invitation from the platform, a large number of points were raised by those antagonistic to the lecturer. On Sunday, under the presidency of Mr. F. N. Charrington, the immense hall was filled, many hundreds having to stand.

Witnessing to the Truth.

I AM not going to enter upon the question of the subtle distinction which may be drawn between the practical or devotional aspects of religion and its doctrinal aspects. What I have in mind is the earnest endeavour on the part of individual Christians, even though they be called to no public ministry, to do what lies in their power among those with whom they come in contact, to excite a deeper interest in religion, and to make truer and worthier views of it better known.

We need a great awakening of interest throughout society on the subject of religion. The absence of so many thousands in our large towns from public worship is to be deplored, and a remedy sought. We are persuaded that, if those who know the truth would speak of it in season and out of season, many would be awakened to a sense of the supreme value and importance of holier living.

Alike in the intimacy of private friendship and in the intercourse of the world, opportunities are constantly occurring for earnest and devout and godly men and women to speak "words of truth and soberness." Many who do not enter churches or chapels will gladly have a quiet talk on the subject with any whom they meet with. There are few hearts which will remain closed to the entreaties of an earnest, loving, and consecrated soul.

Why every subject of a social or moral nature should be spoken of on the omnibus, in the railway-carriage, in the market-place, and in the street, to the exclusion of the most important subject, the soul's salvation, is and always has been a great and painful surprise. We know that the speaking of religion, the endeavour to draw towards God those who have been strangers to Him, is not one of the easiest tasks; but a word spoken out of "the fulness of the heart" will seldom be spoken in vain.

What the Church needs to-day is witnesses for the truth in private life, and it may be done without the slightest obtrusiveness or officiousness. How many plead lack of opportunities! Surely such a plea cannot be urged by us without loss of self-respect. In the daily life of each Christian, questions touching more or less deeply upon religion are constantly cropping up in one form or other in the midst of the busy world's activities. As they arise seize them and speak the word in season, but let your speech or message be always tender, loving, sympathetic.

To witness effectively in private life it is very essential to have settled convictions. What is the hope within us? Can we at any time, and in any place, give a reason for it? In these days of changing views it is well for us to know where we stand and what we believe.

Let us remember that our witness in daily or private life will be successful or unsuccessful according to the views we entertain in relation to Christ. Put a low estimate upon Him, his work, his character, his sacrifice, and our testimony will be soulless, formal, and hesitating. To think of Him and look upon Him as the only and all-sufficient Saviour, the Highest, the Holiest, will give point and piquancy to our witness. We shall be unable to restrain ourselves. "I must tell somebody or die," will be our cry as it was that of one of the saintliest and most heroic workers in the mission field. Love to Christ will constrain us, for love, true love, cannot live in secret.

Witnessing for Him, quietly, persistently, is one of the greatest safeguards against sin. It steadies the head and strengthens the will and prepares for future conflicts. The worst of men admire one who is not ashamed of his profession, who can give voice to his feelings, bear down ridicule, and scorn opposition. But a wavering, uncertain Christian is everywhere an object of pity.

For our own sakes, for the world's sake and for the Master's sake, we ought to regard it as our duty—yea, our privilege—to witness. It is by such out-spokenness in private life, far more than by any public preaching, that every religious reform has made way. The Reformation in Europe was not wrought in cathedrals or monasteries, but in the shop and in the street, in the parlours of the German burghers, in the homes of England's yeomen and traders. So it will have to be in the main in the still greater reformation in the lives of men and women to-day, with spreading abroad the light of the knowledge of God in Christ Jesus our Lord, and bringing men's hearts back to the glorious realities of religion. Joseph—Jesus.

By MRS. MERRILL GATES.

JOSEPH, in three at least of his characters, serves as a beautiful type of the Lord Jesus. As a Shepherd, as a Brother, and as glorified in the higher life.

I. A shepherd feeds his flock. "I will nourish you," was Joseph's message to his father's house. "And Joseph nourished his father and his brethren and all his father's household with bread, as a little child is nourished" (margin). Jesus as the Good Shepherd calleth his own sheep by name, and through Him they find pasture. "The promise is unto you and to your children." The fulness and abundance and variety that Jesus gives us in his "house of bread" is measured by this sense of our need, and by his knowledge of our dependence on such soul-feeding and not on our own. "He ministers severally to each as He will." In his leading and feeding characteristics Joseph is a type of Jesus. "From thence is the Shepherd the stone of Israel."

II. Joseph is a type of the brotherliness of Jesus. He wept over his brethren when they asked his forgiveness. He comforted them and spake kindly to them, as so often the Lord has done to us. Joseph knew his brethren though they knew him not, so Jesus knows his own. Joseph's heart was overcome by his deep affection for his brothers, and "he sought where to weep." "And he entered into his chamber and wept there." The leaf-walled chamber of Gethsemane witnessed the strong crying and tears of Him who sought our salvation. Those tears were part of the price of his brotherly relation to us. Those blessings, too, with which God crowns Jesus, how like the glorious blessings Jacob called down upon the head of Joseph, and "upon the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren." Jesus, for ever separate from sinners, is yet eternally bound up with them in the bonds of a brotherhood that is indissoluble. The brotherly covenant (Amos i. 9) is one in which the compact is kept because Jesus is the strength of its integrity. Jesus becomes by his humanity and deity united the Saviour-Brother of the World. His covenant with us to save us is as immortal as the new life he gives us.

Jesus, like Joseph as a brother, talks with us personally, and consoles and soothes us Himself. "Your eyes see," said Joseph, "that it is my mouth that speaketh to you." "These things I have spoken to you, being yet present with you," said Jesus.

III. "Ye shall tell my father of all my glory in Egypt." Jesus glorified is the theme of the Christian. Joseph's splendour, triumph, and exaltation in Egypt was to be the chosen topic when his brethren met with the father's household. So our theme among our fellow-Christians is to be the glory, power, majesty, and exaltation of our risen Lord. We must tell of the glory of Him who was slain, and show how his humiliation, his suffering and pain are turned to high splendour now that He liveth to reign.

Jesus's present position is the ruling subject of Christian conversation. Not his death alone, but also his resurrection, glory, and power. He dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him. Christian, is Jesus to you what Joseph was to his brethren, and more? Is He nourishing, leading Shepherd? Is He true, loving, saving, and restoring Brother to your soul? Is He the risen One to you, and have you seen all his glory? Is it your theme all the day long?

"For the precious things of the earth and fulness thereof, and for the goodwill of Him that dwelt in the bush: let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren." How beautiful was the early typical Joseph! Pure; tried by suffering without self-vindication; strong, able to use his power and glory for the salvation of others; knit to his brethren by adamant bonds, woven in his heart, not theirs; glorious in the splendour of his headship and saviourhood; bringing his whole family to himself—is it not sweetly typical of the coming of the whole family in the great home-bringing which is soon to be ours in the land where we shall see the King in his glory? Joseph's act of bringing his whole family to see and share in his glory will soon have its infinite counterpart, for Jesus said, "Father, I will that those whom Thou has given Me be with Me where I am, that they may behold my glory."

All these lovely earthly attributes, and the beauties of Joseph's human dealings with his brothers after the flesh, carried up to their immortal elevation, find their holy and eternal prototype in the Man Christ Jesus, the Brother, the Shepherd, the Glory of our souls.

Climates.

THE purple bells are falling from the heather,
The sunny heights with clouds are overcast,
The breezes sing no longer through the moorlands
The curlew is screaming on the blast.

The beauty of the summer is departing,
The mountain tops are whitening with the snow;
Yet valleys lie beneath us where the winter cometh never,

And the blossoms of the summer ever blow.

There are rains on the faces of the children,
There are storms in the bosoms of the strong,
There are snows upon the heads of the aged,
There are moanings in the soul for its wrong.

Our summer day is shortening to the autumn,
Our flowers are decaying or are dead,
Our pleasures have but ripened into sorrows—
Ichabod! the glory is fled.

But there's refuge from the winter of our weeping—
A valley with a summer all the year;
And the Christian who abideth in the lowlands
Has a shelter when the judgments appear.

Here the guilty and the wretched and the dying,
Every sinner to his Lord coming down,
Finds a blessing never fancied in the highlands—
A King and a kingdom and a crown.

And here, to every soul without distinction,
The banner of his love is unfurled;
Here the weary are at rest with their Saviour
Who bore away the sins of the world.

Here's the air of the ever freshening spring-time,
The light of a never setting sun,
The beauty of a summer everlasting,
The happiness of paradise begun.

Submission.

"Let us fall now into the hand of the Lord."
—2 Sam. xxiv. 14.

IT was a strange choice to which David had been called when he spoke these words, but he chose wisely.

Rarely would an earthly parent leave to the decision of an erring child the form his punishment should take; and it was infinite tenderness on the part of God to take counsel with repentant David as to the nature of the correction which should follow his wilful act of numbering the people.

Of the three evils one might well hesitate which to choose, but there was no hesitation on the part of the man who had had intimate dealings with God during many a long year.

"Cast me not away from thy presence," had been his heart-cry on a previous occasion of grievous sin, for no punishment beside could equal that of even temporary banishment from the Lord he truly loved. And now again we find the same principle guides him in his sorrowful decision, and his immediate response to the message brought by the prophet Gad is this: "Let us fall now into the hand of the Lord; for his mercies are great: and let me not fall into the hand of man."

No one had proved more repeatedly than had the Shepherd-King that it is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man (Psa. cxviii. 8). It did not require much retrospective thought to discover that, as he himself further expresses it, "He preserveth the soul of his saints; he delivereth them out of the hand of the wicked" (Psa. cxviii. 10), for his own history had been writ in every line of the song of praise. But treachery in his friends, and rebellion in his beloved, had alike pointed the moral, "Vain is the help of man."

True, he had at this time offended God, and had provoked his righteous anger, but an offended God is infinitely more gracious than any of his creatures can be; and there was profound wisdom as well as profound trust in the unwavering words, "Let us fall now into the hand of the Lord."

Turning abruptly from royal David to ourselves, shall we inquire if the attitude of our own souls is the same? Is it true of us, in the hours of darkness and of seeming desertion, as well as in the sunny hours of hope and gladness, "My expectation is from Him"? Have we charged our souls with an unconditional and irrevocable decision, "Wait thou only upon God"?

Is it the ultimate and uniform cry of our inmost hearts at every one of the crises to which, sooner or later, we are brought, "Let us fall now into the hands of God"? Do we meet the messengers of his most Fatherly correction—the unexpected reverses, the overwhelming bereavement, the loss of friends or of reputation—with this one unfaltering petition, "Let us fall now into the hand of God"? What a testimony would ours be to the world if it were patent to every beholder that we had no dread but the dread of losing the presence of our God. How it would lift us above the ever-shifting scenes of time and sense if we practically realised that each new dilemma was but a new occasion for testing the strength of the "Everlasting Arms" which are underneath us!

Could anything more effectually interpose between us and the wrath of our enemies than this—"Let us fall now into the hand of the Lord"? And may we not reverently question if there is anything else which could as powerfully appeal to the heart of God as this?

We would not spurn the meanest creature that, in its hour of peril, risked all to trust our mercy. The clinging helplessness of a babe has been its protection from the brutal force of a hardened criminal.

We have seen and known of cases in which the very cruelty of cruel, harsh, hard natures has been paralysed, as it were, by the very infatuation which led a feeble intended victim to attach itself to them, without a single fear or suspicion of evil or treachery. If weakness and trust appeal thus strongly to the human and the sinful; if the devouring sea itself upbears the unstruggling form which restfully commits itself to its liquid bosom, what shall we say of a like appeal to the great heart of the infinitely holy and gracious God? Who shall estimate their blessedness who have learnt habitually to cry, "Let us fall now into the hand of the Lord"?

Too often we hear dependence upon God spoken of as one would speak of a forlorn hope. When all human skill and highest effort have been found powerless, when creature-aid has failed, when the balance at the bank can no longer afford tangible ground of confidence, then it is that the words are oftenest heard, and spoken with sighs and tears sometimes: "There is no help for me but in God. I must trust in the Lord." So slowly do our treacherous hearts learn to lean upon the unseen that almost any earthly prop is preferred, and its removal fills us with dismay; whereas if we saw things as they really are, and with clearer vision, it would be evident to us that we were as truly dependent upon God only in the sunny days of prosperity as in the tempest and the storm. God is behind every circumstance of our lives, though we miss Him at times, fixing our eyes only upon the busy actors on the stage. He Himself is the fount of every joy and blessing; and the stopping of one or another channel is of little real significance, so that the communication between Him and us remains open.

We honour Him when, alike in health and sickness, in wealth or poverty, honour or dishonour, we recognise this, and make it, as David did, our deliberate choice, "Let us fall now into the hand of God."

Alas! that with a child of the great King it should ever be a thought of sorrow, "My help cometh from the Lord."

We have spoken chiefly of temporal circumstances, but perhaps most of all at times of spiritual darkness and disaster the resolve of the text is suitable.

Those of us who have, by God's grace, been brought through the deep waters of conviction of sin; those of us who remember the Spirit's first work within us, and the agonising discovery of the unsuspected depravity of our hearts as the light of Truth shone in, will remember also the peace and rest which came to our souls when, in utter helplessness and spiritual bankruptcy, we cast ourselves upon the mercy of God as revealed in Christ our Saviour.

In like manner must we anew plead the efficacy of that cleansing blood, and anew cast ourselves upon the unfailing love of Christ at every crisis of our spiritual history. When carelessness of walk or actual sin has brought darkness into our spirits, when sharp and sudden temptation is all too much for our feeble strength, when doubts and fears assail from within, and principalities and powers are arrayed against us without, whatever be the nature or the cause of our sorrow, there is refuge, there is comfort, there is joy, in this calm resolve, "Let us fall now into the hands of God." The spiritual mechanism must be put back into the hands of the great Maker; the sick soul, weary of self-selected remedies, finds relief and repose in telling out its secret wounds to the ear of the Almighty Physician; the prodigal child must return to the Father's home and the Father's heart, with this one cry, "Let us fall now into the hand of the Lord." There is no uncertainty as to the result; it is not a speculation; we make no mere adventure; we strike out no new path. It is just the one old beaten road to peace and blessing; the return of the dove to its true ark; the obedience of the weary soul to the call of the Rest giver, "Come unto Me...and I will give you rest."

In Thy strong hand I lay me down,
So shall the work be done,
For who can work so mightily
As the Almighty One?

It may mean, as in David's case, chastisement: "for whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth" (Heb. xii. 6), but it means, inevitably, forgiveness and blessing—God's best. "He gives his very best to those who leave the choice to Him." Widely different is this voluntary falling into the merciful hand of God from that involuntary falling into it which will be the final portion of such as reject his overtures of grace. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" (Heb. x. 31) in this latter sense; and we are not justified in overlooking the contrast. It is a contrast which speaks loudly and solemnly to every one who is now a despiser of God's mercy. That hand now outstretched in love must one sad day be outstretched in wrath against the unbelieving and rebellious; and the very bitterest drop in the draught of remorse will surely be this, that the cup of blessing was refused.

The "wrath of the Lamb" would be less terrible to bear if it were not that it is the lowly and unresisting Lamb whose wrath shall finally be aroused.

A clever young lawyer came, some months since, to plead that an old acquaintance would abandon a course which was certain to bring him to ruin. Presuming somewhat on the friendliness and earnestness of the other, the culprit parried and trifled, and finally made an insulting suggestion.

Patience had been sorely tried, but now a swift change came over the face of the advocate, and few who heard them would forget the warning words "I have pleaded with you hitherto as a friend; you will have to deal with me now as a lawyer, and as a lawyer I can show you no mercy."

It is a feeble illustration of what must surely take place hereafter. (See John v. 22.)

"All the day long have I stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people," argues the long-suffering Jehovah. Into those merciful outstretched hands let us then fall,

In full and glad surrender.
And it shall be well with us for time and for eternity.

Still will we trust, though earth seem dark and dreary,
And the heart faint beneath his chastening rod;
Though rough and steep our pathway, worn and weary,
Still will we trust in God.

Choose for us, God! nor let our weak preferring
Cheat us of good Thou hast for us designed;
Choose for us, God; Thy wisdom is unerring,
And we are fools and blind.

Our eyes see dimly till by faith anointed,
And our blind choosing brings us grief and pain!
Through Him alone, who hath our way appointed,
We find our peace again.—(IV. H. Burleigh.)

LUCY A. BENNETT.

Manitoba.—Rev. A. Tansey, of Somerset, Manitoba, Canada, writes telling of a very severe hail-storm, which has greatly damaged the crops in that neighbourhood. Subsequent frosts have completed the ruin of the crops. This is not only a heavy trial to the land cultivators, but a sore disappointment to Mr. Tansey and his congregation, who were hoping to be able to put the church at Somerset into much-needed repair. Outside help is now a necessity, and Mr. Tansey earnestly appeals to English friends for £50, so that the structure may be put right before the winter sets in. He also asks for good magazines and books for the reading-room.

On the Congo.—Information has been received of the safe arrival of Rev. G. J. Dodds, of the Baptist Congo Mission, at Yukusu, the new station situated a few miles from Stanley Falls, in the very heart of Central Africa. Owing to a delay at Arthington, four months were occupied in travelling. Mr. Dodds was much impressed with the importance of the work carried on at the various stations en route. He reports 150 boys and girls in the Wathen School, under the management of Mrs. Bentley and Mr. Bell. Yukusu is described as a town planted on a very steep bank, having some 600 inhabitants, with an increasing population. In addition, there are numerous villages around, making a district with 10,000 residents within a radius of eight or ten miles. To reach these three or four different languages will have to be acquired.

"I Have Prayed For Thee."

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

WHY, Lord, specially for me?

"Because thou art on the eve of the greatest temptation of thy life, which will leave its permanent mark on thee for good or ill."

How is this known to Thee, Master? I never felt so strong as I do to-day in my love for Thee, or my resolve to bear anything for thy sake. Why, then, does it seem to Thee that I am specially liable to great temptation, which may possibly issue in some terrible disaster?

"I have watched thee closely, Simon, lately; and it has seemed as though thou wert getting off thy guard. Was not thy voice raised high, only a few moments ago, in a dispute as to who should be the greatest? Wert thou not insisting that this was thy position, and that thou wouldst maintain it, come what might? And, surely, it needs but little prescience to foretell that strong temptation is at hand, when the spirit of humility and peace is worsted in such a conflict as that which I overheard. Let him that thinketh he standeth safe take heed lest he fall."

"But I have yet another source of knowledge. A little while ago I was lifted in spirit beyond and above this world; and lo, Satan came, as of old, to present himself before my Father, and this was his request, that he might have you all to sift you as wheat. He had many bitter accusations to make against you in support of his petition. He said that you were chaff at the best. He quoted your question: What shall we have, therefore? to show that you were only following Me for the rewards and royalties of my kingdom. He ridiculed the idea that you could ever be as the foundation stones of my church. And he threw bitter aspersions on Me for choosing you, wished to show up the futility of these three years of training, and said that even my shepherd-care could never suffice to keep such weak and helpless sheep from his attack. It was bitter to hear all he said, but he obtained his petition. My Father desired to teach him, and all his crew that my sheep shall never perish, and that none can pluck them out of my hand, and that He is with Me, and none can pluck out of his hand any who are one with Me by faith and love. Nevertheless, the temptation will be a very bitter and terrible one, although the end is sure."

What form will it take, most dear and beloved Master?

"That is not for Me to tell, my friend; I can only give thee the general warning that danger is near, and urge thee to be on thy guard, to watch and pray lest thou enter into temptation, and be swept down by its mighty current. Again, I urge thee to watch and pray."

My heart misgives me, Lord, to hear Thee speaking thus. Is there no remedy, no hiding-place? Is the trial-hour inevitable? Canst Thou not interpose thy power to check the tempter, and shield me from his malice? Since Thou knowest the movements of the spiritual world so well, canst Thou not anticipate the attack, and meet the wolf before he can reach the flock.

"It is not possible, my child, that thou shouldst altogether escape. There are lessons to be learnt through temptation which can be acquired in no other school. As thou art to be an under-shepherd of souls, thou must learn, by personal experience, the tactics of the greatest enemy they have to fear. Besides, there is nothing to fear in temptation if only thou art well covered in the armour of God, and have learnt to pray always with all prayer and supplication, not for thyself only, but for all who are weak and tempted as thou art. Keep in the middle of God's highway, and thou wilt be safe; no lion is there, neither shall any ravenous beast go up thereon. Thou shalt tread on the lion and adder; the young lion and dragon thou shalt trample under foot."

Still my heart trembles and quakes.

"Yet take heart, for I have prayed for thee. Often in the long midnight hours I have mentioned thy name, saying, 'My Father, I pray not for the world, but for these whom Thou hast given Me, for they are thine; especially I pray for Peter, because he is so impulsive, so impetuous, so liable to rush into the battle unarmed, so likely to say and do things in a rash moment which he will afterwards bitterly repent.' I have asked specially that thy faith may not fail in the awful conflict, and in the case of thy being overcome in the darkness which will rush over thy soul. If only thy faith does not fail, and thou wilt dare to believe in my power to help, or in my grace to forgive, thou wilt weather the storm, and come forth to a life so new and fresh as to seem like a second conversion. Whether thou standest by grace, or art recovered by it, thou wilt be able, as never before, to strengthen thy brethren."

Thou remindest me, dear Master, of what befel months ago now, when we were with Thee by the lake. Thou wilt remember how Thou compelledst us to cross the lake one stormy night, leaving Thee alone on the mountain-side. Afterwards Thou toldst us that Thou couldst see us toiling in rowing across the moonbeams' path and that Thou wert praying for us. It seemeth to me that Thou hast been doing the same again on Olivet for us all, and for me. Wilt Thou ever do thus?

"The hour is at hand when I shall be taken from you, not in spirit but in bodily presence. I go to my Father, and ye see Me no more, but I shall be as near to you as I have ever been, and nearer, and whensoever I see danger lurking near I will not cease to make intercession. Fear not, I will be a Merciful and Faithful High Priest, and whenever the adversary arises against you, I will not fail to bear up your case in ceaseless pleadings. Not that the Father will need much persuading, because the Father Himself loveth you, because ye have loved Me and believed that He sent Me. Still, you may always know that times of special peril will be times when I shall stand to resist Satan, asking that a fair mitre should be set on your brow, and that you should be clothed with change of raiment. Again will I repeat the words of the prophet: 'The Lord rebuke thee, Satan, even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee.' Is not this a brand plucked from the burning? Fear not, little flock, more are they that are for you than all that be against you."

"Nor is this all, but all down the ages till I come again, I will be as the Good Shepherd and the tender High Priest to my own. There will always be weaklings in our flock, straggling behind the rest, and therefore exposed to the tempter's wiles; on these my tenderest thoughts must ever rest, and for these I will not cease to intercede. When I see them threatened by the foe, I will be beforehand with my intercessions, that their faith may not fail."

There is much to help us here, fellow-disciples, for we see, first, that no temptation can befall us without having first been submitted to our God. Satan must ask, and obtain permission, before He can sift us as wheat; must receive authority to touch our flesh, our family, and our possessions. No temptation can touch us but such as man can bear, but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able. Whenever, therefore, fierce temptation assails you, as in Peter's case presented through the guise of a servant-girl, at once look up to God, and say, Thou hast permitted this to come to me, make also the way of escape, that I may be able to endure it.

We learn, next, that we may expect temptation, to show us where we are weak; to compel us to forsake all other help and lay hold on the right hand of God; to teach us the power of evil, without falling under its dominion, that we may be able to act as priests in sympathy and prayer for those who are brought under its bondage. There are lessons to be learnt in the wilderness, when we are being tempted of the devil, which could never be gained in the Jordan Valley; and therefore when we are filled with the Spirit, we may expect to be led thither.

We learn, also, that the one thing by which we conquer is faith. The Master prayed for Peter's faith. Faith receives into its heart the all-conquering Lord, and it is easy then for little children to overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil, because greater is He that is in them than all the power of evil that is without and around them. Do not spend your days looking at the foe, but looking off unto Jesus. Meet every temptation by a fresh and deeper appropriation of his fulness. Apply to Him for a deeper baptism into his death unto sin, and an intenser union with Him in his resurrection life and glory. Thus faith will put its shield, which is Jesus, between itself and the foe.

Again, if we fall as Peter did, through want of watchfulness and prayer, or through yielding in minor and unnoticed points, in which we were defeated almost before we were aware, we must instantly by confession and prayer seek restoration. The Master speaks of it as conversion, i.e., a turning again by humble confession and prayer, from our backsliding and sin, to Him from whom we have gone astray. Sometimes we feel as though we cannot return, we have lost our love and zest in Divine things; we are too ashamed, too disheartened, but there is always a resource in Ephraim's cry, "Turn me and I shall be turned." And directly we are turned back again we are restored to the old place and the old work, and hear the voice of Christ bidding us feed his sheep and lambs.

Lastly, there is work for these restored backsliders to do. Out of the carcass of the lion they may get the honey for the help of others. Out of their sins they may construct ladders by which others shall climb back to the light. Who can estimate the value of St. Augustine's Confessions, or of David's 51st Psalm, or of the First Epistle of Peter, each of which was written with the heart's blood, that had never flowed except through their heinous sin? The devil may outwit himself. Out of his virus we may make the injection which shall constitute others proof to his attacks. "When thou art turned again, strengthen thy brethren."

Missionary Pence Association.

ENCOURAGING progress is still being made in the work of gathering in the pence, mostly of the poor, and of stimulating the interest in foreign missions. We should welcome the help of new members or contributors towards completing the total of £3000, which is now being approached.

Our own missionary, Mr. W. G. Wilkerson, is in King Khama's city at present assisting Mr. Willoughby, who has great influence with the King. The Greenwich branch of the M.P.A. is undertaking the support of four native evangelists in Labuan, where at present there is no European missionary. Christian Endeavour Societies might well copy this example, as the M. P. A. affords to them, or to Bible Classes, Missions, etc., the best methods—free of charge—for doing so. Members of the Association are also supporting several lepers or children of lepers. The missionary spirit is fostered among the members in various ways, and not a few have gone as workers to the foreign field, whilst others are in training.

A form for personal self-denial has just been issued which sets forth the claims of missions in a concise and telling form. This or cards of membership may be had on application to the Secretary, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C. JOHN JACKSON, Treasurer.

"None of Self, and All of Thee."—
"Standing as we do," writes an experienced Indian missionary, "in the thickest gloom of heathenism, able to do but little to stem the great tide of sin and evil, we feel the more our need of the Spirit of God, that our labour may not be of self, but of Christ our King."

"I AM DOING A GREAT WORK, SO THAT I CANNOT COME DOWN."—Neh. vi. 3.

It was a sublime answer. Below was the Plain of Ono, where Nehemiah's foes awaited him. Let him once descend into it and he would become their easy prey; but he withstood their fourfold solicitation by considering the greatness of the work he was doing and the responsible position he was called to fill. Other-worldliness is the best cure for worldliness. Those whose affections are set on things above will have no difficulty in refusing the appeals of sense. Get your heart and hands deeply engaged in the great work of building God's temple, and you will be proof to the most flattering proposals ever made by Madam Bubble.

Oh, children of [the] Great King, let us pray that we may know the grandeur of our position before Him, the high calling with which we have been called, the great responsibilities with which we are entrusted, the great work of co-operating with God in erecting the city of God. Heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ! Called to sit with Christ in the Heavens! Risen, ascended, crowned in Him! Sitting with Christ, far above all principality and power! How can we go down—down to the world that rejected Him, down to the level of the first Adam, from which, at so great cost, we have been raised, down to the quarry from which we were hewn, and the hole of the pit whence we were digged! No, it cannot be, and as we make our choice, let us look to the living and ascended Christ to make it good. Put your will on his side, and expect that the energy of the power that raised Him from the dead will raise and maintain you in union with Him.

"IT WAS NOT FOUND."—Neh. vii. 64.

Certain claimed the maintenance of the priests, and were challenged to show their name in the register of the priestly line. In all likelihood they were descended from the sons of Aaron, but through marriage outside the priestly clan, and through the fact also of the name of the mother's father being adopted, their names were not reckoned in the priestly genealogy; consequently, their claim for priestly maintenance and service was not allowed.

Is there not something like this still? Men, who were called to be God's priests, drop out of the register of those who serve before Him. It may be they are not sure of their genealogy, and have lost the assurance of sonship; their spirit is no longer filled with the blessed co-witness of the Holy Ghost. God is afar from them, and, being out of harmony with Him, they are out of sympathy with their fellows. They are, therefore, rightly put out of the priesthood.

Now trace this matter back to its beginning. As likely as not you will find it originated in some worldly alliance. He that will be a friend of the world is necessarily an enemy with God. For a mess of pottage Esau loses his birthright.

But all this can be put right. There has arisen a Priest, who holds the Urim and Thummim in his hand; God's own Priest after the order of Melchizedek. He can reinstate the erring soul, restore it to the priestly office, and give it priestly food and maintenance.

"THE JOY OF THE LORD IS YOUR STRENGTH."
—Neh. viii. 10.

The sad heart tires in a mile, is a frequent proverb. What a difference there is between the energy of the healthy, joyous heart and the forced activity of the morbid and depressed one. The one leaps to its task, the other crawls to it. The one discovers its meat and drink in self-sacrifice, the other limps, and stoops, and crawls. Do you want to be strong for life's work, be sure to keep a glad heart.

But, be equally sure to be glad with the joy of the Lord. There is a counterfeit of it in the world, of which we must beware—an outward merry-making, jesting, and mad laughter which hides an aching and miserable heart. Solomon compares the joy of the world to the crackling of thorns under a pot, which flare up with great speed, but burn out before the water in the pot is warm.

Ours must be the joy of the Lord. It begins with the assurance of forgiveness and acceptance in the Beloved. It is nourished in trial and tribulation, which veil outward sources of consolation, and lead us to rejoice in God through our Lord Jesus. It is independent of circumstances, so that its possessors can sing in their stocks. It lives not in the gifts of God, but in God Himself. It is the fruit of the Spirit, who begets in us love, joy, peace, long-suffering. Get the Lord Himself to fill your soul, and joy will be as natural as the murmur of a brook to its flow.

And such joy will always reveal itself to others. You will desire to send portions to those for whom nothing is prepared. Your joy will be contagious; it will shed its kindly light on sad and weary hearts. As Rutherford said, we have a new heaven in the heaven of every soul we bring there.

"THE SEED OF ISRAEL SEPARATED THEMSELVES."
—Neh. ix. 2.

This is the beginning of the true life. Turn to the story of creation, and you learn, first, that God divided the light from the darkness; next, the waters of the clouds from those on the earth; and next, the seas from the land. It was only thus that he could effect his purpose of substituting kosmos for chaos. So, in the development of the inner life, there must be separation and judgment; the discrimination of the false from the true, the evil from the good.

When God put his hand to man's highest culture, He separated Shem from his brethren, Terah's house from other kindred clans, and Abraham from his people. What weight this gave to those solemn words, "I am the Lord your God, which have separated you from other people, and ye shall be holy unto Me, for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people that ye should be mine" (Lev. xx. 24-26). It was not that God had no care for the great world, but that He desired to concentrate his attention on a few, that when they had fully caught his thought they might pass it on to mankind.

This accounts for the cry of the Holy Ghost through the Apostle, "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing." We must be separate in our practices, cleansing ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit; in our pursuits, going with Christ without the camp; and in our pleasures, and in our alliances. Then God will receive us, and be a Father unto us, and we shall be his sons and daughters.

THURSDAY, September 17.

"THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL AND THE CHILDREN OF LEVI SHALL BRING THE OFFERING."—Neh. x. 39.

It was at this time that Malachi wrote the memorable words, "Bring ye all the tithes into my storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord, if I will not pour you out a blessing." When a people has separated itself to God, there will be no lack in his house, no failure in its supplies, no lack for its ministers. So with the individual. All they that had separated themselves entered into an oath to charge themselves yearly for the service of the house of God. Separation is an aspect of consecration.

How does this touch you, my friend? What proportion of your income are you setting apart for the service of God? The amount that a man gives in proportion to his income is a sure gauge of the genuineness and depth of his religious life. The Jew gave about a third of his yearly income to God; do we come up to this standard? Yet we speak of the Jews with contempt, as hard-fisted and miserly. These old Jews might set an example to us newer Christians. How often we reverse our position from God's ideal! He puts us over his estate that we should send Him all the produce, after deducting what is necessary for our maintenance, and that of our families. But we engross the entire proceeds for ourselves, sending Him an odd guinea, or half-crown, when we can easily spare it. Let us see that we give at least a fixed proportion of our income, and as much more as we can. Do not forsake the house of your God; so shall the heavens be opened in blessing.

FRIDAY, September 18.

"A CERTAIN PORTION SHOULD BE FOR THE SINGERS."
—Neh. xi. 23.

It was the king's command, and it was very right and sensible, because they enlivened and quickened the life of the entire community. A mere utilitarian spirit might have refused to maintain them, because they did not contribute to the handicrafts of the community. They only sang the praises of God, but they fulfilled a very important part in the life of the city, and they deserved the portion which was regularly contributed to them.

You sometimes feel your life to be comparatively useless. You can only say a kind word to those who are doing the main business of the world. When the brothers had wrought all day at the clearing for the farm, their sister Hope sang through the evening hours to cheer them and drive away their sense of fatigue. That was all she could do; but was she not deserving of maintenance? You can only sing your song of hope, and keep the heart of the toilers sweet and fresh. You can only get inspiration from God's heart and pass it on. You can do little but learn to detect, and translate into music that men love, the deep undertones of God's creation. But it is well. You are needed in God's world. There are invalids, who lie on their back through weary months and years, that are the inspiration of their homes, and to their side the elders and the children come for counsel and comfort. Sing on, ye sweet choristers, that alleviate our depressions and start our hearts to high endeavour. The King will see to it that ye do not miss your maintenance, your portion day by day.

SATURDAY, September 19.

"DAVID, THE MAN OF GOD."—Neh. xii. 24, 36, 37, 45, 46.

How long the influence of David has lingered over the world, like the after-glow of a sunset! Mark the characteristic in him that laid the foundation of his supremacy over the hearts of his countrymen. He was pre-eminently "a man of God." Notwithstanding his terrible fall, his people recognised that his salient characteristic was Godward. Would you be one of God's men?

(1) Give all to God. Too many live lives of piecemeal consecration, giving a bit here and a bit there, but never all. David surrendered himself to do God's will utterly, and in all, and so became a man after God's own heart. Without reserve, holding nothing back, yield yourself to God, to be, and do, and suffer his will, whatever it may be; counting all things but loss to be his very slave.

(2) Take all from God. "It is not what we give to Jesus, but what we take from Him, that makes us strong, helpful, and victorious day by day." Accept this as a fact, that in Jesus God has made all his fulness dwell. There is nothing we require, for life or godliness, that is not stored in Him, but the terrible loss of our lives is that we take so little. We have ourselves to blame if we are poor, and miserable, and blind, and naked.

(3) We must use all for God. It sometimes appears as though Christian people were urged to yield themselves to God, only that their lives might be more comfortable. But the supreme and final end in all surrender must be the purpose that his glory may be better promoted, and He magnified whether in life or death.

"A Peep Inside a Hospital."

FEW of the children who read this page, and are blessed with good homes, know of the pain and suffering that some of their poorer brothers and sisters have to go through, so I thought that perhaps you might like to read a little of what takes place in a children's hospital. I called one afternoon at a well-known hospital to take some toys, scrap-books, etc. On entering I was shown into a waiting-room, until the matron could see me. When she came I told her I very much wished to see the wards, upon which she took me upstairs. The wards are beautiful large rooms, bright with flowers, with rows of cots down each side, and also a few swinging baby cots, for there some are as young as a month. All the children in bed wear little red jackets, which give them a pretty appearance. Those who are well enough are up and dressed, some walking on crutches, some with their arms or legs in a sling, some working, and others helping the nurses to look after the babies.

On speaking to the children and asking them if they want to go home, the general answer was "No." It was so nice there; the doctors and nurses were so kind, and even the babies would cry to go to the nurses as they walked past their cots. On going round with toys to each child, one bright little fellow, four years of age, especially took my fancy, so I gave him a nice woollen ball I had made, and we had a regular game at ball; but when I left him to play with another little patient, he called out as loudly as he could, "Here, come back and play with me." The nurse told me that the poor little fellow had had both his legs cut off. It would have taught some of you a lesson could you have seen him lying there, propped up with pillows, and yet so happy.

Then there was a poor little baby at the end of the ward, its cot screened from the view of the other children, because it was slowly dying. The nurse took me inside the screen, and there it lay so white and still, wrapped in cotton wool, because it was badly burnt; but the nurse told me it was dying, not from the burns, but from starvation. Dear children, you who are guarded by loving parents, you cannot realise the sorrow and pain of those who are crippled for life through their parents' neglect, or sent into bad illnesses through being exposed to all weathers, and with little or no food to eat.

So when on your birthdays, and at Christmas, you receive lots of presents from kind friends, cannot you spare some of your old toys for these poor children, and thus bring a ray of sunshine into their darkened lives by letting them see there are some who care for them? What a delight a doll is to those who have never had one of their own before. A pretty picture card, or a book to take home with them, how they will cherish it. Often they look back at the time spent in the hospital as the happiest time of their lives.

But four o'clock came round—time for these little one's teas—and I was obliged to leave, well pleased with my two hours' visit, and promising the matron to call again. My wish is that you will all profit by this short account, and never again throw old toys away, but send them to an hospital. M. E.

Drusilla's Idea.

BY CHARLOTTE M. PACKARD.

DRUSILLA was a big, kindly, coloured woman who had for many years been a cook in the Leigh family.

Like most of her race Drusilla had a warm imagination, but it was restrained by the careful training of the mistress whom she loved and honoured.

And Amabel Leigh, a dear warm-hearted little soul, carried most of her burdens to her.

"Silla," said the child, entering the kitchen one spring afternoon when the cook, in clean cotton gown and starched apron, stood at the window, "what sort of an angel shall I be when I die?"

"Ye has some t'ings to learn and to practise, missy, and I hope many long years to be studyin' yer Pattern, comparin' notes as 't were. Dat chile has de right complexion for an angel," she added to herself softly, stroking the hair glittering in sunshine. "But, missy," she went on, "remember, when yer looks most like one to yerself yer mayn't be lookin' that-a-way to Him."

Amabel had reason to think of Drusilla's warning not long after. It was a bright Sunday morning, and she was dressed for church in delicate white garments, her yellow curls set off by a becoming hat. She stood before the long glass in her mother's chamber smiling at the image reflected there. Suddenly a door opened, and a loud, boyish voice exclaimed:

"Hullo! Caught you at it! Aren't you a peacock, Amabel Leigh?"

The angry crimson flew to Amabel's cheeks.

"Gerard, you horrid boy! Mamma has forbidden you rushing in like that; and your hands—"

The teasing brother had laid a finger on the exquisite skirt and left a stain before indignant Amabel could fly to her mother in the library.

"Mamma, my new dress is spoiled. And Gerard is too bad to forgive. He did it on purpose."

The child was crying bitterly, and Mrs. Leigh rose instantly with a soothing word, as the mischievous lad followed with a conscious expression.

"Gerard!" she began sternly.

"I am truly sorry; I didn't know my hands were dirty, picking lilies for you, mamma; but Bel was too much for me, standing before the glass with that smirk!"

"Go away now. You make more trouble by such remarks; and, Amabel, calm yourself. Anger is worse than earth spots on your dress."

Mrs. Leigh was nearly as much annoyed as her small daughter, although she restrained speech. "Any one must see that you met with an accident; you have no time to change the dress now, Gerard!"

"Yes, mamma; I only stayed to say that I'm awfully sorry. I like to plague Bel when she likes herself too much. I wish she wouldn't stay mad."

The frank, coaxing tones appealed to his mother, but not as yet to the little sister.

Presently the family were seated in their pew at church, and the awe of the place had its effect upon the little girl in spite of herself.

"I was saying to myself, 'Angel!' when Gerard made me so angry," she thought. "Silla was right; there's not much of an angel under my wings," glancing at the snowy puffs at her shoulder.

Amabel's eyes softened with new tears. "This spot Gerard marked me with is a sign of what the Lord Jesus sees in my heart. And that was there when I looked so white!"

Gerard's sturdy arm was near and she laid her hand against it to attract his attention.

His brown eyes were so pleasant it was easy to whisper, "I'm sorry I was cross."

"All right; we're chums again," was the response, with a brotherly nudge.

Drusilla would have told Amabel that the robe of her Lord's forgiveness was folded above the stain of the morning.—American Messenger.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 36).

- (1) Judas, surnamed Barsabas, Silas, Barnabas, and Paul.
- (2) Paul and Timothy and Silas. (The first two were counted correct.)
- (3) They were forbidden to preach in Asia, or go to Bithynia.
- (4) A man of Macedonia appeared to Paul and prayed him to go to Macedonia and help them.
- (b.) That the Lord wished them to preach the Gospel there.
- (5) Lydia, a seller of purple.
- (6) They were beaten and imprisoned because the masters of the damsel out of whom Paul had cast the spirit of divination brought them before the magistrates and accused them of troubling the city. While they were in prison an earthquake opened the doors, but none of the prisoners escaped. The jailer and his household were converted, and Paul and Silas set free the following day.

A Swarm of Honey B's without Stings.

One writer calls the honey bees "travelling bagmen in the sweetmeat line." Another describes them as "singing masons, skilful mechanics, and model workers." There are lessons from these honey bees for all Christian workers, young and old, for they are travellers, builders, and workers, and the Bible B's will give to every earnest soul the needed grace for this happy service. Let us ask the Holy Spirit to make them fill our lives with the sweet honey of grace and goodness.

Here is one as an example:—"Be diligent" (2 Pet. iii. 14).

ADIRISHAIG, KENNETH DUNBAR, and W. and R. WILLIAMS.—Thank you for the heath and flowers. They were sent to the Children's Ward, St. Bartholomew's Hospital. LOUIS BERTHE and SYBIL FORBES.—I have put your names on my list. VIOLET ASHWORTH.—Your paper was sent as soon as your letter was opened, Saturday morning. EDITH GILSON.—I have had your name corrected. JULIE HAINES and J. A. CHAMBERLAIN.—The next prize competition will be September 24. JULIE HAINES.—One reference in each case was sufficient. The references in last week's "Answers" were some of those given in different papers. EDGAR YERBURY.—I am sorry you found No. 35 so difficult. WILLIAM PORTER.—If you look at No. 34 you will see there are two questions. You only answered the last, and last week for Decision you gave Acts xxvi. 27, which was wrong.

In answering the Bible Searcher Questions, my young friends must be more careful in mastering the questions. In answering last week's Searcher, for instance, many in Question 3 gave either Asia or Bithynia, but not both. Now, the question contains the words "go" and "preach," and a little care in reading would have shown that the apostles were forbidden to "preach" in Asia or "go" to Bithynia. Therefore, both names must be given. Other questions in the same way were only half answered.

The book was translated in 1892 by a Pandit of Almora, who wished to circulate among his people some portion of the Holy Bible, but not being a Christian, did not like to face the opposition which they would have made to his publishing a Gospel.

Gospel Work in Finland.

By Mr. A. MAKINEN.

FINLAND, in the most northerly part of Europe, is not a great country. Still, it is a beautiful country, filled with lakes, rivers, and hills; and we, whose lot is cast upon it, are very fond of it. Finnish people belong to the Turanian race, and the language is not of the Aryan school like most European tongues, it is akin to those of the Chaldeans and Hittites of old. The Magyars of Hungary in our day are our kindred nation.

Our history goes back to the time of Christ. The Roman historian Tacitus mentions Finns in his "Germania." The people of Finland were Christianised by the Swedes. The Swedish king Sanetus came over to Finland, and brought the Christian faith to us with sword and fire. At the time of the Reformation some Finnish young men studied with Luther in Wittenberg. They came to Finland and preached the Gospel there as early as 1525. Our first Lutheran bishop, Michael Agricola, translated the New Testament into Finnish in 1548; the whole Bible was translated into Finnish in 1642. About the same time our university was founded.

Emperor Alexander I. of Russia, who took possession of Finland in 1808, was struck by the heroism of the Finns. He called the Finnish Parliament into a little town named Borga, near Helsingfors, and promised to the Finns that their religion, laws, privileges, and liberties would be unchanged. This promise every Emperor has since renewed at his accession to the throne. So we have our own laws, our own money, our own senate, our own parliament, our own customs. The Emperor of Russia is the Grand Duke of Finland.

The Lutheran Church has done good work in the moral life of the people. There have been in it some living Christian pastors, and amongst the people there have been revivals now and then. Still there have been times of spiritual death, when the moral life of the people was at a very low ebb. Between 1830—1850 there was a remarkable revival, which originated from the pietism of Germany. The principal leader of this movement was an unlettered peasant, Paul Revisalainers. Somehow it laid more stress on the knowledge of sin than on the knowledge of Christ; so its influence gradually died away. At this time there came to Finland another movement from Swedish Lapland. This movement is called Laestadianism, after its originator, a clergyman named Laestadius. This movement laid more stress on the emotional side of the spiritual life than was due to a sound faith, and it was not permanent. Some good clergymen there were even at this time who proclaimed the plain Gospel; but as a whole spiritual torpor prevailed.

In 1879 Lord Radstock came to Finland, when visiting St. Petersburg. His visit was very short, but it resulted in a revival, just as it resulted in St. Petersburg in a revival amongst the higher classes. That work is still going on in St. Petersburg, and even in Finland. Many ladies and students were converted in Helsingfors, and the free religious movement began which has quite changed the spiritual atmosphere in Finland. Dr. Grattan Guinness and Dr. Baedeker visited Finland, helping the movement on its way, and in 1884 Mr. Reginald Radcliffe went through Finland from town to town proclaiming the Gospel. The churches were open to him in many places, and even in a cathedral we were allowed to preach for thousands. Up to that time there had been no lay preachers, but as a result chapels were built and some lay preachers came from Sweden to help. Evangelistic work began in good earnest, and there arose revivals in many places; from that time till now there have been some thousands converted. There are about one thousand communicants in the free churches, and about thirty evangelists, including some women evangelists.

Since this revival in the free churches, Methodist and Salvation Army friends have entered Finland. There has even been awakening in the Lutheran Church, and some of the clergy work with us hand in hand. With this spiritual life there have arisen Sunday-schools, rescue work amongst the fallen, children's orphanages, temperance work, Y.M.C.A.'s, Y.W.C.A.'s, mission to seamen, etc.

The Lutheran Church began in 1857 a foreign mission with its sphere in Ovamboland, South Africa. In 1890 the Free Church founded a branch of the China Inland Mission in connection with the English society, and last year some lady missionaries went to India.

The spiritual life in our congregations has been developed and deepened through the influence of conferences at Mildmay and Keswick, and by the writings of such devoted men as F. B. Meyer, Andrew Murray, Stockmayer, etc. May the Lord send true witnesses to Finland more and more.

The Power of Jesus' Name.

"And in my Name they shall cast out devils."—Mark xvi. 17.

IN one of a row of humble cottages overlooking a graveyard in the town of M——, in Berks, a young man scarcely out of his teens lay sick of brain fever, according to the statement of the doctor who attended him. He was an orphan, the son of respectable parents, by whom he had been articulated to a firm of solicitors in London.

Soon he was drawn within the vortex of the great Babylonian maelstrom, by equally young and thoughtless companions. The spare hours of the evening were given up to the theatre, the music halls, and the casino, instead of the improvement of those fine natural qualities of heart and mind which he undoubtedly possessed. He broke down in health, and by the generosity of a gentleman who had known his parents, he was brought home to be nursed, and was consigned to the care of the good people who kept the cottage where he now lay.

One evening, my son, who had been engaged to attend on the sick youth, came to ask if I would mind making one of a relief party of four to sit up with the patient all night. "He is at times so violent that it is as much as the four of us can do to manage him and hold him down in the bed. Then he makes most savage attempts to free himself and bite us, grinning at us like a tiger cat, his eyes rolling all the time in a horrid manner. When he has tired himself out with struggling, he will lie quiet awhile to lure you off your guard; then if he finds anyone has relaxed hold of him, he will suddenly make a furious dash at him to bite him. Then he will make the night air ring with snatches of songs and recitations from weird scenes of plays, almost making one too nervous to stay with him. Will you come? Ten o'clock sharp."

"I will, John, if only to see what it is like; but as for physical aid, you know I am only convalescent from a recent sickness myself. But we are old friends, and my presence may induce him to be more orderly. So you may reckon on me."

The town clock was striking ten as I knocked at the cottage door where the sick youth lay. After a momentary pause I let myself in, for from unmistakable sounds overhead it was evident that the patient was in one of his fits, and was taxing all the energies of his attendants to master him.

I hurried up the stairs, and unceremoniously entered. Three men and a young woman (who proved to be his sister) were holding him down, apparently with difficulty. Giving the patient a cheery word of recognition, at which he uttered my name, I took my station by the side of his sister, and requested to be allowed to relieve her. He must have felt her hand relax its hold of his wrist as I was in the act of seizing it, for suddenly raising himself half upright in the bed, with a mad yell of rage he dashed his clenched fist full into my face, sending me reeling to the door by which I had entered. Thanks to my spectacles, which had received the full force of the blow, I was unhurt; and, in an instant after, I had secured his wrist with a thong to the bed-rail—an idea that was immediately followed by the other attendants, much to their comfort and future security against such surprises.

Perceiving the uselessness on his part of struggling, he made the midnight welkin resound with his weird recitations and songs, a procedure that gave to the occasion a most undesirable solemnity of feeling. His sister, who was standing at the foot of the bed, whispered to me, "How dreadful, is it not?"

"It is really awful," I whispered back; "I suppose it is not altogether unlike the cases of the demoniacs of the Scriptures."

At this point I was brought to a pause by the most unearthly mocking laugh from the patient, "Hah, hah, hah! the devil! the devil!" he shouted at the top of his voice, repeating it until he fairly sank back exhausted, having, by almost superhuman efforts, raised himself nearly upright in the bed.

Though silenced, he lay glaring at me like an infuriated beast, with clenched teeth and rolling eyeballs, altogether a picture more demoniacal than human. Was it that he realised that I was the cause of his hands and feet being effectually secured against doing anyone harm, that he seemed to vent his malice and rage in particular against myself?

The attendants felt helpless, and looked at one another in mute horror at the situation. I felt that human aid was vain, and sought inward strength for the occasion. Looking him intently and full in the eyes, I said, "Young man, you seem well acquainted with the devil. Tell me, do you know Jesus Christ?" Swiftly and silently as the hastening shadows of the storm-clouds sweep across the plain, lighting up the landscape, the moment the sacred name of the Saviour reached his ears, his highly-wrought, satanic expression of face as it were "rolled away," giving place to his normal look of geniality and quietude. He appeared as one just awakened from a deep sleep, calling each one by their names and conversing as if nothing of importance had occurred to him.

As this happy change continued for some hours, the attendants went home. The medical man, next morning, shared the general wonderment at his sudden recovery. I remained with him all next day, and advised him, should he feel symptoms of a relapse coming on, to call on the name of Jesus for help, which he told me subsequently he did. On bidding his sister good-bye, I suggested the presentation of a keepsake Bible, exacting a promise to daily study it. She did so. It was gratifying for me, some years afterwards, to know for certain that he was walking in the right way, and employed again in a London solicitor's office. W. C.

Essex Farm Home for Women.

THIS Home, which is distinct from the Industrial Farm, Duxhurst, is a part of Dr. Sarah Anderson Brown's scheme of "Industrial Farm Homes for Inebriate Women," and is intended to embrace the following sections:—Bramble Hall (a farmhouse), near Rayleigh, is situated amid lovely scenery in the most beautiful part of Essex, six miles from Southend, and two and a-half miles from Rayleigh station, G.E.R. (Cheap tickets are issued from Liverpool and Fenchurch Street Stations.) The house stands on high ground, gravel soil, has a sunny aspect, and is surrounded by orchards and fine forest trees. Furze Cottage, for working patients. Special arrangements are made for aged women and mothers with babies under two years of age. As there is no place of worship in the immediate vicinity, bright evangelistic services will be held in a large barn on the place. Neighbours and friends will be warmly welcomed. Upon a section of five acres, separated from the main colony by fields and a public road, the Rescue Farm Colony will be carried out, when funds permit of suitable cottages being erected as a memorial of the sixty years' peaceful reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

The House of Industry Branch will be situated in London, and is especially intended for patients who have previously spent some time in any inebriate home, for unfortunately many a poor soul falls back into her besetting sin simply because she is lonely and has no loving care, sympathy, and oversight during the first few months after leaving a retreat. The superintendent will arrange for inmates to go out day by day to assist busy housewives in the care of their homes, sewing, mending, dressmaking, housework, washing, ironing, temporary domestic assistance, care of convalescent children, and other similar employment; while, for those who are unfitted for such service, a variety of occupations will be provided in the Home. This branch will be opened as soon as the Farm Colony is fairly established.

Further particulars as to terms, etc., may be had from Dr. Sarah Anderson Brown, Bramble Hall, Rayleigh, Essex.

A New Memory Scheme.

AN INTERVIEW WITH REV. J. D. KILBURN.

WHAT a marvellous thing is memory! How poor we should be in usefulness and in enjoyment, if we were to lose the power of registering facts, figures, and experiences, in the phonograph of the mind, and of recalling them for use at will. Any thing that can conserve or increase this power is much to be coveted. Systems of mnemonics have been devised, and doubtless they have proved more or less successful. As we lately noted, a fresh scheme for the strengthening of the memory is now before the public—the invention of a well-known Christian brother, Rev. J. D. KILBURN, whose portrait appears on this page. There are special and peculiar features about Mr. Kilburn's method which induce us to wander somewhat beyond our customary orbit and to lay before our readers a few particulars with respect to it.

One or two biographical facts may fitly precede our account of a recent interview with Mr. Kilburn. He studied at the Western College, Plymouth, with a view of engaging in the work of foreign missions. During his studies his health twice broke down; it was therefore not thought desirable that he should go to the foreign field, but should settle down to the Gospel ministry at home. He received a call from the Congregational Church at Isleworth, Middlesex, and there he ministered in holy things for five years. An invitation was then accepted to take the pastorate of the British-American Church at St. Petersburg, and for the space of eight years he filled that important and influential post of service. He resigned it in order to give himself more fully to Christian work in different parts of the Continent. After an interval he was requested to undertake the oversight of the English Reformed Church in Hamburg, and for a time he was settled there. During this time nearly a million of his tracts, etc., were circulated in Germany, Austria, Italy, Sweden, and Denmark. The last two years he has spent mainly in St. Petersburg, but he has also, as the need arose, helped in Christian effort in Finland, Italy, Austria, and other parts of Europe.

"Have you now relinquished the Gospel ministry, Mr. Kilburn, in order to promulgate your system of mnemonics?" was a question asked the other day by his interviewer.

"By no means. I have consecrated my life to the work of the Gospel, and I shall continue to make that my chief business. But I think I can accomplish this in addition."

"What specially induced you to enter on the study of this memory question?"

"At college I always did pretty well in mathematics, but in languages, work as hard as I might, I could never reach more than a second place in my examinations. I heard of the help that others had derived from studying some system of mnemonics. During a vacation, I came to London and took lessons in Mr. Stokes' system. About the same time in college I was studying psychology. Mr. Stokes' system and my psychological studies showed me what could be done through the application of the laws of the mind for the purpose of improving the memory. I continued to study after being settled in St. Petersburg; and later on in Germany I endeavoured to master, so far as I could, the various systems I could get hold of. Having myself derived immense advantage from these studies, I feel it is my duty to help other Christian workers as far as I can, especially missionaries who have to cope with the acquisition of languages."

"Do you purpose publishing your system in book form?"

"I think not. I fear that if I did so the successive lessons would not be sufficiently mastered. Students would be in too great a hurry, and I think I could not help them to the extent I would like. Probably the best plan will be to give my lessons separately through the medium of papers or magazines."

"Can you give the readers of THE CHRISTIAN any experiences as to the practical utility of your system?"

"Speaking for myself, I can state that after applying my system to the study of languages while at college, I was never once out of the first division in about a dozen examinations. As to the results in the case of others, things have been done by it that have quite surprised me. Rather than give statements as to this in my own words, I should prefer to show you what others have written."

(From Photograph by Mr. G. W. Austen, Highbury Place, N.)

Mr. Kilburn here submitted to his questioner some very striking documents, expressing the personal testimony of the writers, as to benefits derived from a knowledge of the system. The New York Herald says: "Stacks of letters testify to the recognition of grateful pupils." One was signed by a number of widely-esteemed Christian men in connection with the Army and Navy. Another bore the signatures of well-known English Christian workers in the city of Rome. Two German countesses write in very high terms on the point; they agree that the results are surprising, and one adds that a striking thing in connection with the lessons is the ease with which they can be learned. A well-known lady living in Berlin says, "I could not have thought that anything could change my memory as Rev. J. D. Kilburn's lessons have done. I can learn many things five times as quickly, and retain them ten times as long."

"I take it, Mr. Kilburn, from this last testimony, that the help rendered by your method is not evanescent in its character?"

"I do not hesitate to say so. Here is a case in point. While I was conducting a class for Christian workers in Berlin a lady asked me if I could help a young student known to her, whose memory, she said, was like that of a dog. I said the young man might join the class, which he did. In that class I said I expected them, by the application of my principles, to remember fifteen disconnected names after hearing them repeated once. They laughed at the idea, but they accomplished it nevertheless. This student was with the others. The same evening I saw him again, and asked if he could remember the fifteen things I had given them. His reply was: 'Oh yes; and I have added other fifteen to them.' I saw him again next morning, and asked if he remembered the thirty things he had learnt the day before. He said he had not tried. I was pleased at this because it showed I had in him a case that would be specially interesting as a test case. I said to him, 'Please try if you can.' He came back in a minute or two with his face beaming: 'Yes, sir, I can; I seem as if I could not forget them!' I saw him some months after, and he remembered them still."

Other testimonies of an equally decided and general character were submitted by Mr. Kilburn, but these will amply suffice. On the point of simplicity, however, referred to by the German countess, the following is most valuable; it is by the first secretary of one of the foreign legations in St. Petersburg. After remarking that the system is in two parts, the writer adds: "In both respects, I find your method surprisingly simple and available, and quite devoid of the cumbersomeness of the older systems. I find it a great advantage in enabling me to remember Russian names and words, which are singularly difficult of retention."

"As I understand it, Mr. Kilburn, your desire is to help overburdened workers, especially Christians?"

"Yes, that is the main object for which I have continued the study of the system, and for which I am anxious to use it."

"I have seen it stated that you do not yourself derive any pecuniary benefit from your lectures or lessons?"

"I have never yet taken a farthing for any lecture delivered or lesson given, and I intend to continue in the same way. Christian workers I have invariably taught freely. To others who were in a position to remunerate me, and who wished to do so, I have always suggested that they should give a contribution to some good work."

"Do you use a system of keys in your lessons, or can you tell me wherein your method is differs from other systems?"

"In none of the cases to which these testimonies refer have I used any key whatever. I simply apply the laws of the mind for the purposes of the memory. My contention is that God has given to men greater power of memory than they have any conception of. Just in proportion as we work according to law shall we bring out these powers. Memory consists of two parts—retention, and reproduction or recollection. The first thing I set myself to do is to show how to get a thing clearly impressed upon the mind; and then how to unite the new with the old, so that by thinking of the old we are enabled to recall the new. As psychologists have taught, when two things have been united in the consciousness the one will recall the other."

"One more question, Mr. Kilburn. Are you prepared to take pupils in England?" "Not at present. I am now leaving for St. Petersburg, and shall probably, according to a widely-expressed desire, resume my lectures there."

A Reciprocal Indwelling.

By REV. F. B. MEYER.

THE whole Christian life is summed up in the word "Inness." "Abide in Me, and I in you," said the Saviour. The entire result of these meetings will be achieved if only this becomes practically realized in our experience.

IN ME. That is our standing in Christ, which for every believer is an eternal fact that cannot be affected by any change in our emotions, any fluctuations in our experience, or even by declension and backsliding. We are in Christ by the purpose of God, who chose us in Him before the foundation of the world, so that our conversion is due to the movements of that Divine nature which first loved us, and drew us by the cords of love and the hands of a man. It is a great comfort for those who have come to Christ to know from his own words that they were included in the Father's gift to Him before the worlds were made. We were in Christ when He died and rose again. The whole body of believers died when the Head poured out his soul unto death, and also rose with Him. "If one died for all, then all died," that they which live should live to Him who died for them, and rose again. It is a great matter for us to see ourselves nailed to that cross, where our Master died. In Him we have suffered the extreme penalty of sin, borne the stripes of a broken law, and met the full demands of the Divine Justice. Surely it must bring satisfaction and peace to the soul, which can point to the Cross as the spot where the penalty of sin was borne by it in the Person of Christ; and to the empty grave where, by the resurrection, the Father's acceptance was signified! O, holy law of God, thou canst ask nothing more of me. I have already met thy claims and satisfied thy last demands; and of this, is witness, for He bade me go forth from the prison-house to the grave on the day when my Saviour rose.

We are in Christ when we accept Him as our Saviour, and by faith are united with Him in living union. If, at this minute, you will but trust Him, a work will be wrought within you by the Holy Spirit, through whom you were led to trust, which will endure when sun and moon are no more. Dare to believe in this as your permanent heritage. Feelings will change like the shadow of the sun over the hills, but nothing can, for a single moment, diminish the certainty of your acceptance in the Beloved. God has made you accepted, and you cannot unmake. Nay, you will not desire to unmake. Through cloud and storm and death, He will keep that which you commit when first you believe.

IN YOU.—Let us clearly understand. At the moment we first believe we are born from above. Those who believe in Him are born, not of the will of the flesh, but of God. Faith and the new birth are simultaneous. You cannot say that one precedes the other any more than which spoke of the wheel moves first. But what is this new birth? It is to receive Christ. "As many as received Him, to them gave He the right to become sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, &c." In the new birth we do not receive it, but Him. Not life as something apart from the Life-Giver, but life in possessing Him who is the Life. At this sacred moment, however, men do not always realise that Jesus has become the actual tenant of the heart. He enters veiled. Thy eyes are holden that they do not know Him. It is only afterwards in many cases, and as the result of special revelation of the Father, that they wake up to discover that CHRIST IS REALLY WITHIN.

The Apostle says, "It pleased God to reveal his Son in me," as though, in his experience at least, there had been a distinct act, like the rending of the veil which hid the contents of the Most Holy Place. Has that transcendent fact ever been revealed to thee? It may not have come with the suddenness of a revelation, but have broken like a summer dawn. If not, ask the Father by the Holy Spirit to make you know the riches of the glory of this mystery, which is Christ in the heart; and be prepared for an experience like the rending of the veil when Jesus Christ died, which was a figure of the utter yielding of his will to the Father. This is what we call consecration, when the soul is prepared to take God's way, and to suffer God's will, even though it should mean the death of the Cross.

When once you know that Jesus is within, all difficulties vanish. You no longer worry about sanctification, because his presence in the heart sanctifies. You are no longer anxious about purity, or power for service, or sweetness of temper, or love, because He in whom each of these graces inheres abides within; and He is made wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. There is no longer the consideration of what you have or what you have not, since the King of Glory has come into the heart, and dwells there; occupying a fuller and wider place in proportion as you yield to the promptings and inspirations of his Spirit. Ah, blessed Lord, when Thou art within, the soul cannot but be strong, gracious, and abounding in the work of God!

Mission to Italian Navvies.

ON my way to England I spent a fortnight in August at Lucerne, to see my friend Miss Symes and the work she is carrying on amongst the Italian navvies who are employed in making a loop line to join the St. Gothard Railway, and also in building and other work.

We spent nearly every evening in the nice cheerful reading-room opened for their use, and in which Miss S. hopes shortly to open a night-school for men and lads. A Gospel address is given in it on Saturday and Sunday evenings, and there have been as many as forty men present. On Sunday morning a Gospel address is given in a room at Kriens, where a large number of Italian workmen are employed. At Seeburg and Meggen, on the other side of Lucerne, there are also a large number, and a service is about to be commenced there on Sunday afternoons. A colporteur evangelist arrived the day I left Lucerne, who will live in a room adjoining the reading-room, and attend to these outlying places, visit the men in their lodgings, and generally work among them.

Of course, money is required to enable this very important work to be carried on efficiently; and it is much to be wished that travellers who enjoy the benefit of the railways and roads made by the Italian navvies would help this effort for their benefit; but the chief object of this notice of it is to make known the urgent need of another lady-worker who would share the expense of an apartment in the same house as the reading-room, and help Miss Symes in visiting the families, in playing the harmonium at the meetings, and in many other ways. Some knowledge of Italian would be most desirable, but not absolutely essential at first. Communications can be addressed to Miss G. M. Maynard, Hawkhurst, Kent.

THE EVANGELIST.

"He Did It All Himself."

IT was my first walk after being laid aside by illness. Very weak, but very thankful was I that morning for all the marks of loving care the Lord had shown me; for the goodness and mercy that had lit up the hours of pain, and for the blessing on means used, and now the strength to go out again. I had not gone very far, when my heart was made sad by hearing an old man using bad language. I suppose something had made him angry, and swearing was the way he showed it. How it made me tremble to hear God's holy name taken in vain, in sin.

I must go and speak to him, this I knew; but shrunk in my weakness from doing so. However, looking up, I was helped, and went across and spoke a few words. When I got home, and sat thinking, I felt so sorry that I had been cowardly. There was one so bold for his master and I so weak in testimony for mine. I asked forgiveness, and resolved, if able, to go on the morrow and tell the man he had shamed me. The roads were being mended, and the swearer was one of the gang employed.

I went again and found it was the dinner-hour. I saw an old man sitting on a door-step who looked like the one I wanted. I asked, "Are you the man I spoke to yesterday about swearing?"

There was a pained look on his face as he replied: "No, ma'am, it wasn't me. I used to swear once, but, thank God, I can't do that now. The Lord has had mercy on me, and saved my soul, and now it is my joy to serve Him. Yes, and suffer for Him too, for its no easy work with some of these poor men, but his smile is worth it all."

"How good of the Lord to let me see you," I said; "it will strengthen and encourage me so much to go forward. Do tell me about your conversion."

"Well," he said, "no man had anything to do with it; He did it all Himself, praise his name. I was going down to hell as fast as I could, but one night an awful feeling came over me that I should soon be there. I cried out, 'Lord, save me, or I shall perish,' and He did. He lifted me up out of the pit, He washed me, and made me clean. So you see it was Peter's prayer that saved me; at least, I mean Peter's Lord. Since then I've learnt to read; I couldn't rest till I could read it for myself; oh, 'tis a glorious book, is God's Bible."

It was marvellous how that dear man had studied it too. He had found out that "this same Jesus" is coming again, and he was watching longingly for that moment when his shout would be heard. But what rejoiced me so much was that the Lord Jesus was to him now a "living, bright reality." What a grand teacher he had had, even the Spirit of God!

I inquired where I should be likely to find the poor swearer. He told me most likely amongst some others who were seated in front of a public-house near. I shook hands with the dear old brother in Christ, hoping to see him again, and went to the group sitting on the path. I asked if they could tell me where to find the old man who was in the habit of swearing, for I saw he was not there. They said, "He'll be back in half an hour."

Of course I could not wait; so asked if they would try and remember if I gave them a message for him. They promised to do so, and I told them how his faithfulness and fearlessness in serving his master, the devil, had made me ashamed at having shown weakness when speaking to him, and not been as bold for my good Master, the Son of God. Then I spoke a few words as to what the reaping of all such sowing would be, but that Jesus came to save such sinners if they would hear his voice and turn to Him as one of their fellow-labourers had done. They said that between them they could tell him the message. I wished them "Good morning," and went on my way rejoicing.

Not being so well, I was unable to go again for some time, and could never find out that dear old Christian, but it was to me one of God's glad surprises.

Quarrierville, Bridge of Weir.

OPENING OF CONSUMPTIVE HOSPITAL.

"THANKSGIVING-DAY" at the Orphan Homes of Scotland falls once every two years, and is always an interesting occasion, but this year's event was more than usually so by reason of the fact that the new Consumptive Hospital for Scotland, with its executive buildings, was opened by Lady Glen Coats. These new buildings, which have been erected at a cost of some £17,000, and are free of debt, only form the beginning of a series of similar hospitals which Mr. Quarrier contemplates erecting, the whole to accommodate 200 patients. The number of guests who attended the proceedings was exceptionally large. The visitors were heartily welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. Quarrier.

Lady Coats having formally opened the hospital in a few hearty and sympathetic words, Mr. Quarrier spoke. It is two years almost to a day, he said, since the memorial stone of this Consumptive Home was laid, and there is not a part of the three acres of ground that is occupied by the house which has not been turned upside down. Nevertheless, amid storm and calm, we have carried on the work for those two years, and you see the beautiful result. I am glad to say that we have this building paid for and opened free of debt by friends in the East of Scotland. It gives me pleasure to see all sections of the Church taking part in this glorious enterprise, which shall go on till every field you see in the west there is covered with houses for the purpose of curing this fell disease.

At two o'clock the "Thanksgiving" meeting took place in the church. Sir Charles Cameron presided, and the building was crowded. The chairman said this meeting marked an epoch in the history of this settlement of mercy. Till now it had been adequately described as the Orphan Homes of Scotland. From this day forth that title must be changed. The Orphan Homes of, and the Consumptive Hospitals for, Scotland was too cumbersome a name for the aggregate settlement. Already, with its dairy and poultry farms, its bakery and workshops, its training ship, its school, and its magnificent church, it had far outgrown its name. In the years to come it should be known as Quarrierville. Not now, because his esteemed friend was much too modest to accept the honour due, but when he had been called to his reward, and when a grateful nation sought some fitting means to perpetuate his memory—here amid these hills around them—in the homes and hospitals of this true city of refuge for the afflicted and helpless, and in the association of the name of Quarrier with this perennial monument of the wondrous good which a single man may do in half a lifetime—Scotland would find the memorial worthy of a man who had proved himself one of her noblest sons. The growth of that settlement read like an Eastern magic tale. Twenty years ago it was not. When the first stone of the first house was laid eighteen years ago Mr. Quarrier had £1500 in hand. Since then some £200,000 had been spent by him in stone and lime alone, and now their friend had started these consumptive hospitals. One had to-day been opened, one was being built, and four more were to follow. £50,000 was wanted. Mr. Quarrier had no misgivings—Jehovah-jireh was his motto—"The Lord will provide." What of the chance of success of these hospitals in the cure of consumption? He had every confidence in it. Consumption with the rich was notoriously amenable to treatment. Everyone who had travelled in the South of Europe, in Australia, in South Africa, had come across men—many of them doctors—who, having gone abroad in an almost hopeless condition, had had their consumption cured by climate, and were living happy and active lives. The case of the poor had been hopeless because they could not remove from the fatal environments of vitiated air and frosts and fogs. Mr. Quarrier's aim was to establish for them a Riviera in Renfrewshire, to provide for Lazarus the pure air, warmth, nourishment and comfort hitherto monopolised by Dives, and to secure for him the best and most careful treatment that medicine and nursing could devise. Mr. Quarrier had dealt also with a number of children not very far short of those that passed through our reformatories and industrial schools; dealing with practically the same class of children, his system gave much superior results, both in economy and in ultimate success.

Addresses having been given by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., Mr. Cameron Corbett, M.P., and others, Mr. Quarrier delivered one of his characteristically interesting addresses, in which he spoke of the addition made in the way of building to the settlement during the past two years, and gave particulars of the work done. The number of children taken in during that period had been close on 900, or very nearly 500 each year, which, added to the 1100 in the homes beforehand, made 2000, and every one of them had a mouth to fill. It was not officialdom, but family life pure and simple, that prevailed in this wonderful city, a city now composed of fifty-two mansions, and all paid for. There was not a penny of debt on any of them. Every year they had received £14,000 for bread and butter, and £10,000 for buildings. He was within the mark by probably £2000, for it had been about £26,000 that they had got for the last three or four years annually. From £28,000 to £29,000 was wanted annually, which meant about £2500 a month, or, putting it roughly, £500 a week. Alluding to the Consumptive Homes, he remarked that it was only £42,000 more that they wanted to build the six additional hospitals. He wished to give accommodation for 200 patients, so as to be able to treat 1000 in a year, and he anticipated that he would be able to do so. The hope that kept his heart whole made him go on fearlessly, implicitly trusting that God would do greater things still.

Later in the afternoon a Communion service was held in the church.

In a leading article, the North British Daily Mail (from whose excellent account the foregoing is abridged) says: "We commend the orphan homes and the consumptive hospitals of Scotland to the generous support of all Scotsmen and Scotswomen. Of these institutions Scotland has reason to be proud, and the best way of showing a just pride and expressing due gratitude is to see that the necessary funds are supplied. No institution better deserves the most liberal help. It should be a pleasure to give for the rescue of the orphan, the destitute, and the consumptive little ones, and every giver will pray that Mr. Quarrier, with his great heart and faith and administrative ability, may long be spared to carry on the beneficent work."

Slavery in Africa.—Speaking of the continued prevalence of the slave trade in tropical Africa, Rev. C. H. Robinson, who has completed a journey of 1500 miles through the Central Soudan, makes a remarkable statement in his book on "Hausaland," published by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co., with reference to the Hausa-speaking population of Africa:—"It is generally admitted that the Hausa-speaking population number at least fifteen million, i.e., roughly speaking, one per cent. of the world's population. Colonel Montell, who has recently travelled through a considerable portion of the Hausa States, gives it as his opinion that the slave population is far in excess of the free. Though this estimate appears to me too high, it is, I think, a fact which admits of no doubt whatever, that at the very least one-third are in a state of slavery, or, in other words, that one out of every three hundred of the world's population is a Hausa-speaking slave."

The Soldier in China. Like every class of official underling, has a bad name, and for the most part this bad name is richly deserved. Idle and dissolute, underpaid and ill-disciplined, the ordinary soldier or "guardsman" is a terror to the weak and unprotected. Instead of defending, he preys upon society. As a class the soldiers are not easily reached, and it is a pleasure to record such an experience as that of Mr. B. C. Randall, in the province of Kwang-tung, who says, in a recent letter:—"When last year Mr. Wells and I visited Pok Lo, we sold two or three Gospels on the guard-boat there stationed. Last Thursday I again visited Pok Lo, and in the evening one of the soldiers came to me with the information that he and several more of his companions had renounced idolatry, and determined, henceforth, to serve the God of the Bible, and expressed a desire that I should further instruct him in the doctrine. He spent the evening with me, and on the following day, together with three of his companions, each equally desirous of becoming Christians, accompanied me to the London Mission Chapel, where I introduced them to the pastor. There are ten soldiers on the boat, and all, I am told, are well inclined towards Christianity."

London Missionary Society.

THE 1896 report of this Society has been issued.

It is a most interesting document, and gives the position of the Society after one hundred years of labour. India and China are its principal spheres, but it labours also in Madagascar, South and Central Africa, Polynesia, and South-eastern New Guinea. The Society's European missionaries in these various spheres number 252, and its native Christian agents 2557. The latter does not include the Malagasy Mission, where before the unhappy French invasion the Society had 6940 native preachers and 1300 native Christian congregations. The native element therefore in its missions is unusually strong, and we believe carefully selected, and often well trained.

The state of the missions varies considerably. The African Mission has the smallest number of native Christians, evangelists, and schools, though some of the earliest stations of the Society are now independent churches.

In most of the islands of Polynesia where the Society has agents idolatry has been extirpated, but the people are intellectually simple and morally weak, so that a small number of missionaries is yet needed to guide the native churches to protect them from Roman Catholic emissaries and the corrupting influence of white traders, to train the native preachers, and to encourage attempts to evangelise islands still heathen. The New Guinea Mission includes many stations. The European missionaries number only nine, but the native pastors are 106—mostly drawn from Polynesia, and it is their endurance, faith, and quiet courage which has given the mission much of its stability and success.

China is an exceptionally hard and difficult field. Many of the missionaries have been men of great ability, and zealous preachers and evangelists, who have widely diffused a knowledge of Christian truth, but conversions have been few. Here and there, however, the day seems breaking. At Hankow a good work is extending. In the Amoy district are numbers of active, self-supporting churches. Of another large district the missionary writes:—"I have spent a good deal of time in travelling about this and the neighbouring country, have preached to some 155 open-air congregations, varying in numbers from a dozen to seven or eight hundred, and have almost invariably had good attention." Another says: "The whole of this province is wonderfully open to the Gospel." Another: "The Chinese come in large numbers to listen to their countrymen preaching the Gospel. But when a foreigner is speaking they throng the building. Mr. Owen has seldom spoken to less than two thousand in one week in our chapel." Nor are instances wanting of great zeal, self-denial, and patient endurance for Christ's sake.

In India converts are much more numerous in the south than in the north, but Christian truth is very widely known, heathen customs and opinions are declining, the number of secret disciples is great, and such is the preparation for the Gospel that there may come at any time the resolve of thousands, and even of millions, to abandon heathenism and accept the Christian faith.

It is a hopeful feature of the Society that it has so large a proportion of native ministers and evangelists, and that of its income of £141,704, £18,616 was raised at the mission stations. A careful study of this and of other reports impresses us with the conviction that the great need of missions is the power of the Spirit of God for guidance, consecration, conversion, on all its work—on contributors, directors, missionaries, native preachers, converts, and heathen.

Heathen Girls.—Miss Mason writes from Bataia:—"This year we have succeeded in opening a school in the city for Hindu girls. On the first day fifteen little girls came, but to our disappointment, a few days after, the number, instead of increasing, suddenly dropped to five. Then we heard there had been preaching in the bazar against the school. A little patience, however, and the fears subsided, and the children came again. It is a touching sight to see these little much-bejewelled heathen girls standing with hands reverently folded, repeating verses such as Psal. cxv. 4-8: 'Their idols are silver and gold: they have mouths, but they speak not ... They that make them are like unto them; so is every one that trusteth in them.'"

American Notes.

YOU think, gentle reader, that there is no need to cross the Atlantic to discover Mount Temptation; but there is only one such for Mr. Moody's friends, and he does not scruple to conduct them to its commanding heights. Always one afternoon of the conference is devoted to an expedition to visit it. What a work it is for the numerous vehicles of every description to cross the Connecticut river by the ferry, which takes but two at a time, and then to climb the steep opposite ascent to Mount Hermon, with its quadrangle of noble buildings, in which some 350 young men of every nationality are being educated, under Mr. Moody's direction, for the various walks in life on which their choice has fallen. It were worth while to have lived, if for no other purpose than to have laid the foundations of this glorious institution.

The seminary is perfectly equipped with every sort of building but one—a much-needed chapel, and to impress this on our minds Mr. Moody brings us to the summit of a commanding bluff, rising above the extensive exercise-ground, and affording a marvellous view of the valley, the river, and North-field on the opposite slope of the hills. This is Mount Temptation, so-called, because it is hoped that some wealthy steward of Christ may be tempted to erect the much-needed chapel here; after which the name is to be altered to Mount Inspiration.

It is many years ago now since I first stood there, and as yet the challenge has not been taken up. But on this occasion the thought suddenly occurred to me, which I hope may be of God, that it would be a beautiful expression of the essential unity of the two nations, and a pleasant way of doing honour to God's servant, if the Christians on each side of the Atlantic were to unite in erecting this chapel, as an expression of affection and regard to Mr. Moody on his forthcoming sixtieth birthday. I have already discovered friends in the States who are willing to set about raising £2500; and I am eager now to consult with some of God's children on the English side, to see if we cannot raise an equal amount. If this is of God, He will prosper it. Please, reader, pray that we may be guided.*

The Wynona Conference is held under the direction of Dr. Chapman, one of the foremost evangelists of the States, who is also pastor of the Bethany Church, Philadelphia. A syndicate of Presbyterian ministers and others has purchased 200 acres on the shores of a beautiful lake in Illinois on which a number of families have erected their summer homes with the certainty that their young people will meet congenial and suitable companions in the spacious and beautiful recreation grounds. There is also a chapel and an auditorium in which a summer school is held during June and July. The season closes with the Conference, which it was our privilege to attend at Mr. Moody's request. It was a memorable week, and none who participated in it can forget the scene on the Indian mound in the woods, where some hundred ministers knelt, or prostrated themselves, on the grass, confessing their need of the gift of the Holy Spirit, and claiming it in audible petitions.

Dr. Chapman is a remarkable man, raised up by God, as it would seem, to be the apostle of the movement of the inner life. His church sets him free for five months in the year, that he may go freely through the States organising great religious crusades against indifference and sin. Mr. Moody always speaks of him as the coming man in this direction, and is associating him in many of his special enterprises; amongst others, in a great colportage agency which is distributing the best religious literature, at low rates, through these great Western States.

* Sir George Williams, having heard of this project, has unsolicited, given me £100 for this object.

His discovery, on one occasion, that there was not a single dépôt for the sale of religious literature in Wisconsin led Mr. Moody to devise this means of scattering the good seed; and now several of his students are maintaining themselves by travelling with colportage wagons through the West, selling literature and preaching the Gospel.

Several days at Chicago, lecturing to the young men and women of the Bible Institute, and preaching in the church which Mr. Moody founded there years ago, brought my ministry to a close for the present. But that was a marvellous opportunity of influencing, not student-life only, but the religious life of the city, which was largely represented by its ministers. One afternoon, in the new Chicago University, we had the opportunity, at their own request, of addressing an audience of 300 to 400 students on the Inner Life.

To God we would humbly render our praise and thanksgiving for all the wonderful things that have been crowded into these brief weeks—and we would thank beloved friends in all parts of the land for their prayers and intercessions on our behalf. There never was a greater opportunity than is now presented in the United States for the presentation of the deeper aspects of the Gospel; worldliness is invading the churches, the masses are standing aloof, every expedient to resuscitate religious life has been tried in vain, and the servants of God are turning to Him with great desire, that through the gate of a more perfect consecration and separation, they may pass into wider possibilities of Christian experience and service. F. B. MEYER.

Industrial Mission Colony.

IN "THE CHRISTIAN" of 13th inst. the friends of our Santhal Mission read with pleasure a sympathetic account of the work being carried on under the leadership of Mr. Børresen and Mr. Skrefsrud. Since then this mission has had the sorrow of losing by death one of its most trusted workers, Mr. Halvaan Bahr. By birth a Norwegian and by profession a botanist, he had an appointment in the Royal Botanical Gardens in Calcutta. After a few years there he married Mr. Børresen's daughter, gave up his lucrative position, and devoted himself to the Mission, to which he has been of great service as manager of the tea-gardens belonging to the Santhal colony started by the Mission in Assam.

Last year Mr. Bahr was compelled on account of his health to return to Europe with his wife, and was under treatment both in Leipzig and Berlin, but his friends here in Denmark were not a little anxious on his behalf, as when he left for India symptoms of the malarial fever were distinctly visible. But love for the Mission would not allow them to remain quietly at home, and Mr. and Mrs. Bahr returned to India.

Whoever has had the opportunity of knowing Mr. Bahr, has no doubt been impressed by his unusually lovable, refined, and humble character, but the most striking thing about him was that in his face there shone that peace which passes all understanding, and which the Lord gives to his faithful servants.

Now Mr. Bahr is dead, fallen on the battle-field for his Lord and Master. We do not, indeed, mourn for him, but for those who remain behind—his widow, his three little children, and especially his aged father-in-law, Mr. Børresen, the leader of the Mission, who is now more than seventy years old, and who has for twenty-eight years worked uninterruptedly with zeal, patience, and with such results as few missions can show.

A. MOLTKE,
President of the Santhal Mission Committee.

A Red Indian and his Bible. — "Everything I have in this book," exclaimed a Christian Sioux, when he was asked why he kept his Bible always beside him. "I like it near me, for I want to look in now and then. Words from it do me good. I was in the night a long time; but the sun has risen, and now I am in the light, and so I keep the book near me."

Bible Training Institute, Glasgow.

THE Bible Training Institute was in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, opened last week for the session. LORD OVERTOUN, who presided, said they were at the beginning of the fifth session of the Bible Training Institute. Their great undertaking was launched by Mr. Moody on March 10, 1892. The work was taken up by the directors of the Y.M.C. Association, the first session opening in January, 1893. They had passed the stage when they needed to apologise and explain, for the call to work had been sounding loud in their ears. The more there were opportunities for work the greater was the number of applicants to be trained. This betokened the one great fact that the Church was awakening to the duty of the work. They had long thought that ministers should do the work of the Christian Church, and congregations had been looking on some encouraging, but none doing active work which the rank and file should do, while led by the ministers as officers. But now the Church was awaking from sleep, and the rank and file had begun to do their duty. All must work together. The calls from the home and foreign fields were sounding louder. In the towns there were seething masses of ungodliness, while in the country districts there was not so much vice perhaps as there was great indifference and coldness.

There was much work to be done by the Training Institute supplying workers. If the ministers had these voluntary workers their labours might have increased fourfold. Then from the foreign fields what a call there was! For years they had prayed that the Lord would open doors. That prayer had been answered, the only difficulty now being to get the people, and the money to send them. It was imagined to be too secular to pray for money. But they wished that they could find out that there was no secular sphere at all.

The first thing they had to do in the new session was to thank God for the manner in which He had hitherto led them. They started like Abraham, not knowing whither they went. When they were first called they recognised the call. They then got Mr. Anderson, who was a God-sent man. They all thanked God for sending them Mr. Arthur, who they hoped, would be a helpmeet to Mr. Anderson. They were grateful for the students who had gone to the mission stations abroad and at home, and from whom they had received good reports. The Institute was not a competitor with any theological schools. They wanted all these schools to be thoroughly efficient—perhaps more than they were now upon the practical side. Indeed, some professors wished that some of their students should have turned in the Institute, as they might do more good in the theological seminaries.

The Institute was not a training for those who went forward to the ministry; it was rather a training for the rank and file of the congregation. There was an institute with one Book—the Bible—as their sole text-book. The Institute, like the Association, was composed of all branches of the Christian Church. They were neither afraid nor ashamed to say that the Bible was the Word of God, and they wished to make it clear that on that Book they had solid ground to stand upon for faith and practice. They would by-and-by remove from the present premises in Blythswood Square to the more lasting building adjoining, now in course of erection. A large portion of the cost had already been met, and friends required to be stirred up to contribute to pay off what remained and help in the maintenance. In Blythswood Square they could receive 24 men, and a house had been taken in West Regent Street capable of holding 18. The old students numbered 17 and the new 29—in all 46. There were thus three vacancies, for which there were a number of applications. In the women's department they had a residence at 93, Douglas Street for 11, although they had 13 enrolled. His lordship concluded by expressing the hope that the Institute might prove a blessing to Scotland and the wide world.

Rev. Dr. A. R. MacEwen, Mr. Galloway, and others said a few friendly words.

Women's Armenian Relief Fund.

WE have recently received news from Dr. G. C. Raynolds as to the progress of the industrial relief work at Van. This gentleman, who so faithfully served the Westminster Fund at Sassoun, and has been for some time a valued colleague of Dr. Grace Kimball, is now in charge of the movement, as, in consequence of the refusal of the Turkish Government to allow Miss Kimball to practise in Turkey, she has accepted a medical appointment in America. The experience of the past fifteen months has suggested various improvements in the management of the work, whereby time, labour and money will be saved, and Dr. Raynolds feels able, under these circumstances, whilst deploring the necessity which removes Miss Kimball from the scene of her arduous and successful labours, to undertake the superintendence of the movement.

Owing to the suspicion with which the Government has regarded the relief work, the English Consul recommended that a joint Commission of Christians and Moslems be formed, these to report needy cases to the management, who, as far as funds permit, will relieve them; the English Consul to audit the accounts. Miss Kimball believes that this plan will in the main work well. For some time the industrial relief was interrupted—first, because material could not be secured, and more recently, because the massacre made it essential to use all available funds and strength to keep alive the destitute thousands thrown on the care of the missionaries.

Dr. Raynolds, whose letter is dated August 12, thus writes:—"Two hundred liras (equal to £180), worth of cotton has been laid in, and I yesterday began the work of giving it out to women to spin, and am glad to say that they seem to appreciate this change, and to prefer this method of help to that of receiving free bread."

Our committee feel strongly that for those who must at least for awhile remain under the (mis)rule of the Turk, the form of relief in Van is the best that can be given them, both morally and materially, and they beg for its continued support from those who have in the past been the mainstay of the movement. At the same time they realise that no confidence is to be placed in the present quieter condition of affairs. The villagers, who have been obliged to return from the city to their ruined and desolate homes, are as liable as ever to the assaults of the Kurds, to the cruel orders from Constantinople. There is no security for their lives and property anywhere in the unhappy land. Until steps can be taken to remove them, the people must live and be cared for; but in the name of humanity—in the name of the family love and security and confidence which go to make the holy and happy homes of England, let us put our shoulders to the wheel, and use our most strenuous endeavours to transplant these sorely tried fellow-creatures of ours to a happier and more congenial environment, where they can live out their lives in peace, and see their sons and daughters grow to manhood and womanhood around them, without fear of the murder, torture, and imprisonment of the one or the unspeakable dishonour of the other.

Mrs. Madeleine Cole, of 3, Trebovir-road, Earl's Court, S.W., is the treasurer of the Women's Armenian Relief Fund, and will thankfully receive donations towards the support of the relief work at Van. Mr. Edmund Wright Brooks, of 6, Upper Thames-street, London, E.C., is the treasurer of the rescue fund, but for obvious reasons it is impossible to speak more explicitly of its objects. I will, however, gladly forward a copy of Mr. Howard's book "Horror of Armenia," and give all the information I can, to anyone desirous of understanding the question, and of assisting us in the development of the movement.

A Timely Protest.

ON Monday afternoon Lady Osborne Morgan laid one of the memorial stones of a new Calvinistic Methodist church at Brymbo, near Wrexham. In the course of an address delivered on the occasion, Sir GEORGE OSBORNE MORGAN, Bart, M.P., said that while he was becoming every day more and more convinced that the liturgy and constitution of the Church of England were wholly unsuited to the genius and character of the Welsh people, with whom Nonconformity was a plant of free and spontaneous growth, he could not shut his eyes to a new danger which was threatening them from another quarter, and to which perhaps the emotional temperament of the Celt rendered him peculiarly liable. He alluded to the strenuous and persistent efforts which the Church of Rome was just now making to capture the Protestantism of Wales. If those efforts had been crowned with some success, it was mainly due to the fact that there was treachery within the camp. It was time to speak out upon this subject. When he was young, men were proud to be called Protestants, and boasted of the glorious Reformation. Now amongst a large number of professing members of the Church of England the name Protestant was only used as a term of reproach, whilst some clergy went so far as to deny that there had been any English Reformation at all. To put the matter quite plainly, the Church of England, which in former times was not unjustly regarded as a bulwark against Popery, was rapidly becoming a half-way house to Rome. The history of this gradual change was most instructive, and perhaps he was in a position to speak with some knowledge on the subject.

Though not old enough to remember the first rise of what was called the Oxford Movement, he had ever since he entered the University watched its growth and development closely and constantly. At its head were two men—Dr. Newman and Dr. Pusey—of great genius, exemplary piety, and extraordinary powers of influencing and fascinating the men and women—especially the young men and women—with whom they came in contact. They worked upon identically the same lines and travelled along the same road, until Dr. Newman, with a large number of his followers, was received into the Church of Rome. Dr. Pusey, without abandoning a single one of his practices and professions, retained the high position of a canon of the Church of England. Now when a man made great sacrifices for conscience' sake, though he might differ from him, he could not help respecting his motives and character, but what respect could they feel for men who clung to the privileges and emoluments of one church while they openly upheld the practices of another? For what were the doctrines and practices of Dr. Pusey and of the extreme High Church clergy of the present day? They were doctrines and practices condemned by the Church of England as blasphemous fables and dangerous deceits. All these were openly acknowledged and defended by Dr. Pusey and his followers. In a letter to him by Cardinal Newman in 1865—ten years after his conversion—the Cardinal declared that upon some of those points the difference between the Church of Pusey and the Church of Rome was a difference merely of words.

Since then the leaven had spread, and the movement had grown enormously. In fact, it only stopped short at one point, the acknowledgment of the Pope as the head of the Christian Church. But now even this barrier was threatened. Lord Halifax, the acknowledged leader of the extreme High Church party in England, the president of the English Church Union, numbering amongst its members many thousands of the leading clergy and laity of that Church, and selected to preside over two of the most important meetings of the Church Congress to be held next month at Shrewsbury, had visited the Pope with a view to the reunion of the Church of Rome, and in recent articles in the National Review on "Christian Reunion," he had declared that such reunion was only possible under the Pope as the supreme head of Christendom. Now they all knew what that meant—the absolute, unconditional surrender of the religious liberties for which their fathers had died, the triumph of Popery, and the wreck of the Protestant religion. Whatever might happen elsewhere, he would never believe that the spiritual descendants of John Elias and Christmas Evans, of Charles of Bala and Williams of Wern, would forsake the faith of their fathers for this.

Notes from Bournemouth.

THE past week has been an important one for Christian work in Bournemouth. Among other important items, mention may be made of the visit of

THE CHAUTAUQUANS.

A good number of them were found in the various places of worship on the last two Sundays, and some of them were not mere hearers. Mrs. Benham, Miss Marianne Farningham, and Miss Street rendered valuable assistance to several congregations, Sunday-schools were visited, and the teachers engaged in this important work were encouraged by wise words and practical sympathy.

At the public reception held in Richmond Hill lecture hall on Monday night, Rev. Geo. Wainwright presided, and words of welcome were spoken by Rev. J. Ossian Davies and Mr. Ernest Lane. Brief addresses followed from Mr. F. F. Belsey, Mrs. Benham, Mr. Hayward, of Ongar, and Miss Jennio Street.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOURERS

had their day on September 2, when the two societies representing the Richmond Hill Congregational Church and the West Cliff Tabernacle combined for their anniversary gathering. All the meetings were held in the Richmond Hill Church. Mr. Belsey took the chair in the afternoon, and gave a bright address on "Be, Go, Do." The address of Rev. W. Houghton, of Guildford, on "The Transfigured Life" was an interesting, searching, and practical exposition. The "Free Parliament," conducted by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, was a great success. During the brief space of half-an-hour twenty or thirty Endeavourers spoke. Testimonies by Pastors C. E. Dickenson, of Winchester, and Geo Wainwright closed the afternoon meeting.

It was an inspiring sight to look upon the whole body of the church filled in the evening with young people, gathered not for amusement, but to learn more perfectly the way of Christian life and service. Rev. J. Ossian Davies presided, and began a brief speech by saying that "the C.E. movement was born, not in America, but in heaven." The speakers were Miss Farningham, Mr. Belsey, and Rev. W. Houghton. The roll-call was conducted by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin. This was perhaps the most interesting and certainly the most solemn part of the whole meeting.

TENT MEETINGS.

On Wednesday and Thursday last tent meetings were held in the grounds of Balcombe Tower, Branksome Park, for the deepening of spiritual life. The most memorable meeting was probably that of Thursday afternoon, when Miss Warr gave an address on China. Rev. Mr. Goldsmith represented Calcutta, and pleaded for a practical outcome from our Holiness Conventions; and Rev. E. N. Thwaites, of Salisbury, delighted the audience by telling of what he had seen during his visit to India. It was a solemn moment when, in response to Mr. Thwaites's appeal, as many as eleven young people said, "Here am I, Lord, send me."

Lansdowne Hall, W. Norwood.

At Lansdowne Hall on Wednesday evening, last week, Mr. R. C. Morgan presided at a meeting in connection with the enlargement of this Hall, which has been rendered essential by the paucity of room. Mr. Morgan struck the key note of the gathering with a "Hallelujah." He rejoiced in the necessity for the enlarging of their borders and felt that such halls and the work associated with them were an important part of God's gracious provision for these latter days.

A very encouraging account of the work was given by Pastor W. Fuller Gooch. The Lord had been manifestly leading in acquisition of the site adjoining the Hall, and in enabling them to enlarge the present structure. The cost of site and alterations would be some £530; all but £25 of this amount had been sent in prior to the meeting. They were hoping to erect a smaller hall for Sunday classes and some of their week-night meetings, as soon as the necessary help is in hand; co-operation in this direction would be valued.

Messrs. W. C. Fegan and W. R. Lane also gave very helpful and encouraging addresses, exhorting all to a more steadfast faithfulness to the Living and Written Word.

"Keswick" in America.—In an article in the N.Y. Independent on "The Keswick Idea," and referring specially to Mr. Meyer's visit to Northfield, Dr. J. Gray, of Boston, says:—"What a blessed thing it would be to have a Keswick Conference in all our large cities during the coming fall and winter! Mr. Moody is doubtless ready to lend his aid to such a movement if the ministers are ready to extend the invitation."

Summer Manœuvres.

LAST year the mimic warfare in which our troops were engaged was carried out under circumstances which were an entire contrast to the present season. Then the weather was almost tropical, hardly a drop of rain falling the whole time. This year drenching showers have been the order of the day, altogether upsetting the orders for the day issued from headquarters at Aldershot.

In spite of rain and slush, wet tents and clothes, the Christian men have taken advantage of every opportunity to come together, and their testimonies have been full of praise to God for his keeping power in the midst of most distressing circumstances.

The Soldiers' Christian Association had a tent last year in General Bengough's division on Ockwell plain, in the New Forest, and very many evidences of blessing received there have since come to hand. This year we had a roving commission through the different camps in the district surrounding Aldershot, and in meeting men from Scotland, Ireland, and different parts of England, have been rejoiced in the work going on among our soldiers.

In the Gordon Highlanders, which regiment has just left Glasgow, a meeting has been held every night in the quartermaster's store tent, and after the fatigues of the day the Christian men have met them to praise God, bringing from time to time unconverted comrades, several of whom have been definitely converted to God. It was a great privilege to join with them last Sunday afternoon, and after an address to hear some of their faithful testimonies before their comrades.

On Friday evening last we met the Christians at Pirbright, where the three battalions of the Guards, The Queen's, Sussex, Essex, South Stafford, Marines, and others are stationed. Between forty and fifty assembled for prayer in the quiet room of the Wesleyan Soldiers' Home, which has become a rallying centre for all the S.C.A. men in this part of the camp. Captain Granville Smith gave an address. At the close, after some prayer, two men came voluntarily forward, and asked to be prayed with, and before we left had confessed Christ before their comrades. The remarkable part of it was that no word had been spoken to the unconverted, as we were under the impression that all present were Christians. There are similar meetings going on every night, with signs following.

Rev. R. Deane Oliver, C.F., has two large marquees on Twesledown among the cavalry, and has been greatly rejoiced in the way men have come out. It has been the one bright spot in the midst of the almost knee-deep mud of this camp. The Christians in the regiments just over from Ireland have found a warm friend in this chaplain.

The Wesleyans have a tent on Cove Common, which has been thronged every night by the militia, whose camps are in the immediate neighbourhood. Rev. E. P. Lowry, the Wesleyan chaplain, seems almost ubiquitous; wherever one has been, he has seemed to turn up. A. H. W.

The Stepney Creche.

THE bazaar for the benefit of the late Mrs. Hilton's Crèche and Home (so long delayed) will be held early in October. A Bazaar Committee has been formed, and further particulars will be given in our advertising columns. My family are devoting themselves to keep the institution going till some permanent arrangement can be made, but funds to meet casual expenses are greatly needed.

Christian Fellowship.—Dr. Jones, of the Madura Mission, reports that a public meeting was held, at which the people, notwithstanding their own great poverty, contributed most liberally for the purpose of sending some relief to their suffering brethren in Asia Minor.

"A Comforting Message."—Those friends who will reserve for future reading Pastor Theodore Monod's Bible reading, reported in our last issue, will be glad to note two corrections with which he has kindly favoured us:—Col. 3, line 2, should read:—"Just now we had the oneness of Christ and the Father—not a fusion of both into one, but an absolute oneness of the one with the other; here we have the oneness of Christ and the Spirit." Col. 5, paragraph 2, line 7, should read: "Do you fear lest there should not be water enough in the ocean to float your nutshell?"

Letters to the Editor.

THE ARMENIAN HORRORS.

DEAR SIR,—The recent massacres in Constantinople are another loud call to the Christians of England to immediate and earnest effort in behalf of our persecuted brethren. The enemy of the Armenian Christians has said, "I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil. My lust shall be satisfied upon them. I will draw my sword, my hand shall destroy them." He has hitherto carried out his purpose unhindered with amazing success. Some 5000 of these poor people are said to have been ruthlessly slain in this last massacre, by men inspired with fanaticism and armed with the authority of the Sultan.

The circle widens, and the appetite for blood grows on what it feeds. Unless something is done, and that speedily, the Armenian race will be wiped out before the dazed people of Europe, and that by a savage barbarism without a parallel in the bloodiest page of the Christian era. Will not Christian England awake, and cause her voice to be heard for the oppressed as the sound of many waters?

If we have no other weapon we have the weapon of "All prayer," and the feeblest can use it. It divided the waters of the Red Sea, it hurled back the menacing host of Sennacherib, it nullified the consuming power of fire, and stopped the mouths of lions. Do we believe in its efficacy? Then let us, as one man, besiege the throne of grace till our God arise for the deliverance of his people. Let us also give of our substance. We can hold meetings to spread information and influence public opinion.

Arrangements have been made whereby Rev. H. B. Otley, vicar of Eastbourne, will be able to devote a large part of his time for the next few months in bringing this burning question before the clergy and members of the Church of England throughout the country. It is a splendid opportunity for our Episcopalian brethren to secure the services of a most able and eloquent advocate of the cause of Armenia. I wish someone could be found to do similar work amongst the Nonconformists. Such a campaign would be the most helpful to the cause of the perishing, and would soon remove the strange apathy of our people.

I have a few copies of the pamphlet issued by the Eastbourne Armenian Relief Committee, which I shall be pleased to forward to any who may apply. Yours faithfully, J. TURNER,

Hon. Sec. to the Eastbourne Relief Committee.

PROPORTIONATE GIVING.

SIR,—I have seen many letters in THE CHRISTIAN on the question of proportionate giving; but it seems to me there is one phase of it that has never been touched yet. I quite admit the force of the argument drawn from 1 Cor. xvi. 2, but I cannot see how this rule can be applied to a man engaged in say a simple merchant or manufacturer's business. Most business men do, and every business man ought, to balance his books periodically. It would be quite impossible for this to be done weekly. It is most frequently done once a year or half-year. Such a man may have a seeming prosperous year and give accordingly as he may think he has prospered. It may and does sometimes occur just at the end of the year or half-year a big loss is made and turns his seemingly prosperous period into one showing a smart loss.

Suppose his income for the year to have been estimated at £500 and he has conscientiously given not less than a tenth of this, and when he comes to balance his books find he has made no profit or it may be a loss, would such a one be warranted in giving less during the following year? I do not like the idea of thus having a hard and fast way of reckoning on such a question, still I would like some opinion given on such a condition of affairs.

Suppose a man in business for two years running through a series of misfortunes loses instead of gaining—has he to live off his capital? Would he be warranted in cutting off his donations or subscriptions, or lessening them? Is his first responsibility not first to his family and his creditors? Would it be right to give donations as before and cause his family to suffer hardship, and so place himself that he could not pay his ordinary business accounts when they became due?

Can any rule be laid down for a business man, balancing his books yearly and only then getting to know his income, how much he should give weekly? I trust I have made my inquiry plain enough, and would esteem a reply.—Yours, etc., MERCHANT.

THE ANSWERING OF PRAYER.

DEAR SIR,—One or two of my young friends—Christians—are perplexed in reference to the matter of prayer for themselves, their friends, and surroundings—the answers do not seem to come as they expect. I am sure you, or one or two of the many readers of THE CHRISTIAN, deeply taught by the Spirit of God, will very kindly reply through your paper, so as to be a real help to them in their difficulty. I feel myself somewhat at a loss to say all that should be said on this important question. A word of counsel and encouragement will be very gratefully received and passed on by an

INQUIRER.

TOURING IN NORWAY.

SIR,—Having recently returned from a brief holiday spent in Western Norway, I beg leave to submit an idea that seemed to grow upon me as I enjoyed the delightful driving facilities of that wonderful land. The idea, which indeed shaped itself into a question, was simply this: Are we not, as tourists, largely responsible for the great number of drivers, old and young alike, to be found on the popular routes of Norway? Many of them are mere lads who, as drivers of the various conveyances in use there, carry tourists between given points, and often wait overnight at the place of discharge in the hope of securing a return fare in the morning. But even when at home these lads or boys swell the number of those who practically wait upon the will and pleasure of the travelling public, at all events during the summer season. At Sand, Naes, Odde, Voss, etc., I saw large groups of this class.

The influences of such a life cannot, as a rule, be very wholesome, especially in the case of the young, and it was with a tinge of pain I seemed to realise that this was one of the natural results of holiday-making in Norway. Alas! that our pleasures should so often be secured at serious cost to others. If we are in any sense responsible for such a state of matters, another question follows, and that is: Can anything be done to ameliorate the condition of this class, or to counteract any of the dangers that beset the life of Norwegian drivers? Perhaps some scheme is in actual operation, although I am unaware of such. But it occurred to me that the possible upkeep of a "travelling missionary" might offer a feasible solution—a Christian man (perhaps a Norwegian student) possessed of Christian tact and sympathy, who, during the summer months, might be engaged to visit the various tourist routes and centres; converse with this class as opportunity offered, and hold informal meetings with them in the evenings. From the little I saw of the men, I think such an effort would be appreciated, and would be bound to do good. Moreover, from the kindness and consideration shown to the horses, I would also draw encouragement.

As to the carrying out of such a scheme, I think there need be no great difficulty if ministers and others who mean to lecture on their Norwegian travels, would intimate that a collection would be taken for this special object. Those also who have benefited by a sojourn in that delightful country, having likewise revelled in its natural grandeur, and it may be, fished in its wonderful waters, might be induced to contribute a modest subscription. In this way the suggestion might soon become an actuality, and thus, in a small degree, we should show our practical interest in the well-being of a class of men to whom we are all indebted.

I pass on the idea in the hope that some good friends of Norway, who know the country far better than I do, may see their way to take it up either in this form, or some other.—Yours faithfully,

WM. BLAIR.

Portsmouth.—In connection with the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, a Parade Service has been arranged for Sunday mornings, and a Voluntary Service for Wednesday evenings. Rev. E. A. Sharpley, Wesleyan Chaplain to the Forces, will conduct these services, the first of which was held last Sunday, when a number of men came from the different ships and barracks to take part in an Evangelistic service. Prayer is asked that this new departure may result in the salvation of many.

Missions in Central Africa.

IN an appendix in his report on the trade and general condition of British Central Africa, Sir H. Johnston gives the history of the Universities Mission and the later settlements of other societies, and says:—"No person who desires to make a truthful statement can deny the great good effected by missionary enterprise in Central Africa. There are some missions and some missionaries out here of whose work nothing but praise can be uttered, though much just criticism might be written on their mode of life, which in some instances is singularly and needlessly ascetic and uncomfortable. Asceticism is all very well in a wholesome part of England, or in an equally healthy North African desert; but any attempts to live carelessly, uncomfortably, and too frugally in the exceedingly unhealthy climate of Central Africa must sooner or later result in the permanent disablement of the missionary's health or his death, and can serve no useful or godly purpose whatsoever. I think that if Europeans are expected to live in Central Africa and to carry on an active work, whether it be educational, religious, commercial, or political, they should first of all be comfortably housed, and, secondly, they should eat the best of food. If they will do this, then they may hope to be able to spend ten or fifteen years of their life in Central Africa without serious deterioration of their health. About mission work in other parts of the world I have no direct knowledge, but I can say of all mission work in British Central Africa that it has only to tell the plain truth and nothing but the truth to secure sympathy and support."

Remarkable Work in Yun Mung.

THE remarkable work began in Yun Mung, Central China, is going on even more and more energetically. The services in the little chapel are attended by members and candidates from thirteen and more villages. Mr. W. G. Terrell, of the L.M.S., writes:—

"Mr. Wang Reh Seng, our preacher, is doing a splendid work, and has great and good influence among the people. I visited some of the villages with him, and was greatly struck with the friendliness and interest manifested by the people. Out of the large number of would-be candidates for membership I examined twenty-four, and we finally decided to baptize eleven of them—nine men and two boys—making a total of twenty-seven baptisms in that district, where a year ago we only had some five or six converts. Thus the seed so long and patiently sown by Mr. Sparham and others, with the help of the native evangelists, is beginning to spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God."

"But not only in King Shan and in Yun Mung is the work thus going forward; in two or three different parts of the Hian Kan district there is a distinct movement in favour of the Gospel. God grant it may prove to be indeed a Christward movement, and not merely one in favour of Christianity as a creed or a doctrine, which is, I fancy, a danger we have more and more to guard against as bitter opposition grows less, and the faith of the people in their false gods gets shaken more and more."

Willing Work.—Rev. F. E. Lawes, writing from Niue (Savage Isle), says that during the past year the contributions to the mission cause from the island of Niue amounted to £281 12s. 7d., including £41 worth of yams given specially to the John Williams. "Arrowroot, the chief item," he remarks, "involves a great deal of work, which is mostly done by women, and the seventy-seven dozen hats, value £40, are entirely their work. These hats were really made by the women of two villages only, Hakupu and Liku. The female population of the former village, all told, is 306. They made 641 hats for L.M.S., in addition to 200 given to their teacher. For two or three weeks they worked from early morning until sunset hat-making, the men doing the cooking and housekeeping."

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—A largely-attended muster of the Christian Harbour Lights was held on Thursday last at the Society's headquarters. Captain H. S. Blackburne and other officers and seamen gave most cheery and helpful testimonies. Rev. G. J. Hill gave an account of recent visits paid by himself and Mrs. Hill to the Society's stations in Cornwall and North Devon. The Sailors' Home in Fowey had been well used and the mission services crowded. During the past month, the captain and crew of a small vessel had been converted through attending the meetings and blessing had come to others. Most encouraging mission services had been held at the Appledore Sailors' Rest, North Devon. Mr. Hill added that not only at the places named, but in the port of London and at most of the coast stations, the Lord's work was prospering and souls were being saved.

Firstfruits from Quemoy.

REV. F. P. JOSELAND, of Amoy, has been visiting the country stations under his care, and also those in Mr. Macgowan's district. "I have," he says, "baptized in all some fourteen adults—eight men and six women—as well as a total of twenty-one children. The work is going on slowly, but surely, and at every place I visited there is some progress. As I had not been to Mr. Macgowan's churches for five or six years, I was able to judge more easily of their growth in that time, and I am glad to say that nearly every one is in a better condition than then. This is especially the case in the Tung-abe district, for whereas all the out-stations were at first dependent on the mother church, they have now mostly become churches themselves."

Mr. Joseland availed himself of the opportunity of proximity to visit the Island of Quemoy (called Kimmung by the natives, meaning "The Golden Gate"), as there the Thaisan church has been at work for many years, and until quite recently without much success. He found the little room rented as a chapel crammed with people, and a great many others waiting outside in the rain, unable to get in. "I had an interesting service with them, and when it was over I examined the six converts already chosen for baptism. I plied them with many questions, and was agreeably surprised with the readiness and accuracy of their answers, as well as the evident feeling with which they spoke. So I had little hesitation in receiving them all—five men and one woman—the firstfruits of that island for Christ."

The Berlin Exhibition and Missions.

THE C.M.S. Gleaner says in its African notes that the value of missions as an important factor in the adequate development of German colonial possessions has been to some extent recognised by the position assigned them in the colonial department of the Berlin Industrial Exhibition. A spontaneous and independent suggestion from an official source resulted in the construction of a "missionary division," which was thrown open to workers of all sects, creeds, and nationalities labouring under the German colonial flag. Some of the English-speaking bodies neglected to avail themselves of the occasion thus offered, but others, notably the American Presbyterians, working in West Africa from the Gaboon to the southern portion of Kamerun, and the Australasian Wesleyans of Sydney, located in the German Bismarck Archipelago, displayed an active concurrence in the efforts of Herr Merensky, upon whom fell the onus of the undertaking. In addition to the eight German Protestant societies, four Roman Catholic agencies claimed admission. A striking commentary, we may remark in passing, on the permanent utility of Romish missions to African philology is offered by the circumstances which resulted in a plentiful display of ethnological curios by the Romish agents, to an exclusion almost practical of any native literature. On the Protestant stalls, on the other hand, appeared various tokens of the services rendered by the Reformed creed to the African philologist. Writings in the Swahili, Dualla, Benga, Evhe, Herero, Nama, Gã, Tshi, and Konde tongues are amongst those offered to the attention of the passer-by, while evidences of the dawning literary proclivities of those natives under the Teutonic flag lie open to inspection.

A Friends' Conference.—A great Conference of the Society of Friends is to be held at Darlington, September 21-24. Its object is mainly to deepen the interest of the Society in the work of foreign missions. The subject will be treated from different points of view by experienced Friends, both men and women. There will also be daily Bible readings.

Scriptures in Uganda.—Recent letters from Archdeacon Walker at Mengo give interesting particulars of the reading of the Bible in Uganda. He says that it is no uncommon thing to hear people, who are quite unknown to the missionaries, discussing passages in the Bible. As an example, he mentions overtaking two workmen leaving the Government Fort, who were discussing the meaning of the passage about Scribes and Pharisees who sit in Moses' seat.

The Hammock hangs quietly during the wildest tossing of the ship. It is because the hammock is independent of the ship, not fastened like the bunks to its sides, but held firmly by the invisible cord of gravitation, which reaches down through the sea to the centre of the earth. This suggests the secret of calmness of soul in the midst of outward trials. Our hearts need not be so fastened to outward things, the changing circumstances of life, as to be tossed with them. Faith swings free. It feels the gravitation towards the Divine will, and amid the storms partakes of the calmness of the infinite heart that holds it.—Toilers of the Deep.

Mrs. Ginever's Homes.

SINCE the death of "Mother Dear," as Mrs. Ginever was called by the orphans, the Kingsdown Orphanage, consisting of three Homes, situated in London and at Broadstairs, have continued to be maintained by the free-will offerings of the Lord's people. They contain 176 children, some of these being infants and others afflicted; there are several cases awaiting admission.

The Homes are unsectarian in character, no voting system, and open daily to visitors. Every case is considered in its own merits by the trustees. One little child recently admitted is the daughter of a missionary who laboured among the Jews, and it is thought that some who are specially interested in God's ancient people would, knowing this, like to help an orphanage which has admitted this dear child to its loving circle.

Just now the funds are very low, and financial help is greatly needed, so that the £60 which have been kindly lent may be repaid, and this good work, whereby many a widowed heart is relieved and cheered, continued. The aid of those unable to assist with money will be thankfully received in the form of articles for the annual sale of work to be held in a few weeks' time. The orphans may be seen and heard by friends who arrange for a visit, and by so doing derive great pleasure on a winter's evening by their sweet singing, recitations, etc.

Provisions and clothing are always most acceptable when there are so many to be daily clothed and fed. The report may be had from the Secretary, 35, Pemberton-gardens, Holloway.

American Conferences.

THE various conferences identical in plan and purpose with those at Northfield, Mass., but held at Lake Geneva, have just closed. There was first the Students' Conference, with 300 students from 114 colleges in seventeen different States, in attendance during the ten days of conference and Bible study. Among the speakers were S. M. Sayford, of Boston; Bishop John H. Vincent, Drs. J. W. Chapman and S. J. McPherson, while Prof. W. W. White, of Chicago, and James McConaughy, led the Bible-classes. About twenty-five new men were counted among the student volunteers. The Bible Conference was followed by conferences of the Young Women's Christian Associations, the largest and best gathering ever held there. Then came the summer school for general secretaries, physical directors, and Christian workers, drawing many young men who desired to be fitted for more efficient service. The recreative features of the camp are well conducted, and this, the oldest educational enterprise of the association, closed its thirteenth year with tokens of great success.—The Independent.

New York.—There has been good preaching in most of our city Presbyterian pulpits all the summer. Dr. A. T. Pierson has preached to full audiences in the Fourth-avenue Church, morning and evening; President F. L. Patton, of Princeton, to the Rutgers Church on the other side of the city; and now for several Sabbaths the Fifth-avenue Church has been well filled to hear Dr. George F. Pentecost.—N.Y. Evangelist.

Lowestoft Bethel Mission.—The forty-sixth report says:—"The work of the Mission has been carried on with the same vigour as in past years. Mr. Hughes continues to work with great acceptance amongst the seamen and fishermen, visiting the smacks and herring-boats, not forgetting the steamers and vessels in the harbour, and God has been pleased to bless the work." Mr. Wm. Johnson has been connected with this work for many years. A goodly number of the fishermen fly the Bethel Union flag, their captains and men witnessing for Christ both ashore and afloat.

North Sea Fishermen.—In an article in Toilers of the Deep, by a Mission surgeon, the writer gives this testimony to the work to the M.D.S.F.:—"Men exposed to constant danger, living far away from the turmoil and excitement of the world, passing many hours alone in the dark watches of the night with no other light than that of heaven, feel the presence of God, and must be thoughtful, serious, and inclined to worship; so hymns are heard in every direction, religion is the common topic of conversation, and whenever two or three can possibly meet together, prayers and praises are the recreation. Peace now reigns in the fleet; quarrels and drunkenness are almost unknown. Truly, old things have passed away! By far the greater number of these fishermen are teetotallers, and at least one-half the skippers professed Christians. May we not be cheered by the anticipation that in a short time both religion and temperance shall reign in the North Sea?"

The Y.M.C.A.

MEETINGS of the National Council, to inaugurate the work of the country for the autumn, were held at Exeter Hall on Thursday and Friday.

The conference of the South of Ireland District, to be held in Limerick on October 6 and 7, will be entertained by the Bishop of Killaloe (Bishop Wynne) at the Palace, Clarisford.

The International Central Committee of the Y.M.C.A., at their recent meeting in Geneva, appointed Mr. Philidins, late general secretary at Berlin, to be their second secretary.

The Norwich Association has just held a large meeting to take farewell of Mr. Walter Price, who for four years has been its general secretary, and is now relinquishing the office to take up a similar one in the thriving town of Cardiff.

A conference of Associations in the Midland district is fixed to take place at Redditch on the 24th inst. The subjects are: "The Y.M.C.A. as a Missionary Agency amongst Young Men" and "How to Secure the Confidence of Young Men and to Deepen their Loyalty to the Association."

The Reading Association has completed a scheme for the erection in Friar-street of a new building, specially adapted for its work. This Association is one of the first that will be visited by Mr. W. R. Lane for a mission, under his twelve months' engagement by the English National Council.

A new departure in summer methods has been tried recently with encouraging results in the Midland district, viz., the holding of a series of out-door delegates' meetings (to promote the intervisitation of Associations) as garden parties. By these means, good attendances and practical discussions of interesting and helpful topics have been secured.

The Croydon Y.M.C.A. Cycle Mission Band Holiday Tour through Ireland proved a great success. The party returned after twenty-four days in excellent health and fit for any duty. They had the privilege of preaching the Gospel in the open-air at Y.M.C.A.'s, Soldiers' Homes, police meetings, in several places of worship, and in a tent. A second party is now on a tour in Normandy, visiting Associations en route.

Rev. H. Tegart, late secretary of the Junior Y.M.C.A. Mercantile College, has sailed for Uganda in connection with the C.M.S. Mr. Tegart was led to Christ at a mission in the City Association, Belfast. Two other members of this association have entered the C.M.S. college in London to study for foreign service, and three more purpose entering this college next year. Altogether twenty are preparing for the home ministry or foreign mission field.

Y.M.C.A. work in Wales is making much progress. The new travelling secretary, Mr. R. D. Thomas, who has just returned from a tour over the Principality, reports himself much impressed with the large amount of good work done by the existing Associations, and the splendid possibilities existing for increasing the number of centres. New branches are being formed at Wrexham, Chester, Bangor, Oswestry, Penarth, Carmarthen, Merthyr Tydvil, Brynmawr, Briton Ferry, etc.

Much blessing has been vouchsafed to the open-air meetings held by the various Y.M.C.A.'s in Devon and Cornwall during the summer. Large crowds have gathered, and there has been a marked spirit of hearing. On Monday, August 31, a members' conference was held at Plymouth with a record attendance. Dr. Hingston presided, and the winter programme was fully discussed. The outlook for the future is full of hope. The Bishop of Durham (Dr. Westcott) has consented to open the new building of the Sunderland Association on Monday, October 19.

Y.W.C.A.—The Waterford branch having removed to more commodious premises at 32, William-street, the reopening of the Home and Institute took place on Friday, Sept. 4. An afternoon and evening meeting were held on that day; in the former an earnest address was delivered by Mrs. Smith, president for Ireland. In the evening the members were invited to tea, and a very happy evening was spent. The meeting was addressed by Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Wood, of Cork, and Miss Southworth.

Requests for Prayer.—For a mission to young men by Mr. Thorne, at the Liverpool Y.M.C.A., Sept. 10-16.—For evangelistic work at Doncaster races.—For Dr. Anderson Brown's Farm Home for Inebriate Women at Rayleigh, Essex.—For a series of evangelistic meetings, being conducted by Mr. Burnside at Edzell, Forfarshire.—For special evangelistic meetings, in Geneva, by Messrs. Tophel and Thomas, Oct. 25-Nov. 1.—On behalf of a six day mission, to begin on Sunday, 13th inst., in Poplar, E. There has been much quiet seed-sowing during the past four years, and many are longing for a time of reaping. Praise.—For three Roman Catholic ladies led into the truth during the last few weeks.

Christian Endeavour.

A NEW C.E. Society has recently been formed in Poona.

The Methodist Society of Fatehgarh, India, has held its fourth anniversary.

A fruitful revival has been enjoyed at Langsett-road, Sheffield, as the result of the effort of the Endeavourers.

At Mill Village, north of Rutland, Vt., there has been laid, with interesting ceremonies, the foundation of a Christian Endeavour chapel.

The second society in the Dehra Mission School for Girls is a junior society. From this school for native girls, endeavour ideas will emanate to many parts of India.

Among the Chinese girls of the Presbyterian Mission Home in San Francisco, two C.E. societies have been formed. These girls are the slave girls rescued from Chinatown, and brought to this home of refuge.

The August number of The Mission Field, the mission magazine of the Reformed Church in America, is a Christian Endeavour number, full of matter of interest to the young people of that denomination, who have already built seven Christian Endeavour home mission churches.

The Southernhay Christian Endeavourers held their annual meetings at Exeter. The present membership is 197, consisting of 120 active, thirty-seven associate, and forty honorary members. During the year twenty-six members have joined the church. Twenty-one committees are engaged in active work.

The Paris correspondent of Evangelical Christendom tells of a C.E. Society, founded in June, 1893, in a very large parish (Sainte Marie, near the Faubourg Saint-Antoine), where the whole work rested on the shoulders of the two pastors, and they could not accomplish it. The young Christian people were asked to take their share of the work. A dozen young men and women responded to the call, and a Christian Endeavour Society was organised. Of course they made mistakes, but they persevered, and by God's grace they are to-day the strength of the parish; the pastors are both deeply grateful that the Lord should have raised this young army in a time of sore need. It is not too much to say that the whole life of the Church has been changed since the Society was founded. Parishioners have been visited, tracts given, regular meetings held, many "socials" given, the young boys and girls have been looked after and enrolled as "associate members." The Society held its third anniversary last month. Pastor Theodore Monod and Rev. C. E. Groig delivered most striking and helpful addresses.

Epitaph on a Girl Missionary.

COVERED with kisses of childhood,
Wet with the backslider's tears,
Hers was the face of a martyr
Dawning through tenderest years.
Steadfast, with feet toward the Sunrise,
Noiseless she entered the race,
All her whole life pointing upward
Silently in the dark place!

CHARLES A. FOX.

Martyrs' Memorial at Lewes.—We learn from Rev. C. Stirling, 31, Chestow-place, W., that Protestants at Lewes are endeavouring to erect a memorial to the witnesses for Christ who were burnt at Lewes in persecution days. A granite obelisk is spoken of, and, should funds permit, a Martyrs' Memorial Hall as a centre of Protestant work. It is trusted that Protestant friends all over the country will liberally help.

The Bible Society is actively occupied on three or four new editions of the Luganda Scriptures. The version of the New Testament has been revised by Mr. Pilkington, and is being printed in large type. Another edition contains marginal references prepared by Mr. Baskerville. Progress is also being made by Mr. Pilkington in the translation of the remaining books of the Old Testament. An advance supply of some of the new editions was sent out in July to be ready for the caravan which will take the missionary into the interior shortly.

Missions and Diplomacy.—Li Hung Chang is a marked man at home for his admiration of Western civilization, and he needs our help to carry his convictions that China needs the West back to his country, in its integrity and with increase after personal inspection. There should be no burden laid upon his personal or official shoulders by misjudgment of his responsibility or misunderstanding of his mission. Zeal for the progress of our plans to preach everywhere the everlasting Gospel is good, but patience is the bone and sinew of zeal. If Prince Li were to become a Christian now, it would still take time to evangelize his countrymen.—N.Y. Evangelist.

Irish Notes.

THE elders opposed to the use of hymns in public worship, connected with the Belfast Presbyterian, have formed themselves into a "Scriptural Worship Association."

In connection with the various district meetings or synods of the Methodist Church held last week, a convention for the deepening of the spiritual life took place under the auspices of each, and was well attended.

Rev. Robt. Clarke, pastor of Mountpottinger Baptist Church, Belfast, has accepted a call to the pastorate of Stirling-street Baptist congregation, Galashiels. Mr. Clarke has done a good work in the north of Ireland, and his removal to Scotland will be much regretted.

The Armagh Protestant Orphan Society is in a prosperous state, and although, at the suggestion of the late Primate, Dr. Gregg, it abandoned the holding of bazaars as a source of revenue, yet its present income is larger than ever before, and the society has been able to close the year with a balance of over £300 in hand.

Mr. J. B. Wooley and a band of musical boys have held a series of meetings throughout Ireland on behalf of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, and have visited Dublin, Wexford, New Ross, Arklow, Bray, Howth, Banbridge, Newry, Monaghan, and Sligo. The meeting in Dublin was held in the Metropolitan Hall, and was attended by about 3000 persons, and is said to have been the most successful ever held in connection with the institution in this country. In addition to the ordinary collection, the sum of £30 was subscribed at the meeting for the purpose of establishing a "Dublin Cot" in one of the homes.

Scottish Notes.

REV. JOHN McNEILL is conducting meetings in Kirkwall this week.

Dr. Robert George Robson, son of Rev. Dr. Robson, Perth, has been appointed one of the medical missionaries of the U.P. Church for work in Rajputana.

Rev. W. A. McCurrach was set apart for mission work at a service held in Crown-terrace Church, Aberdeen. He has been appointed by the Baptist Missionary Society to Shansi, North China. He expects to sail from Southampton on the 14th inst.

At a meeting of Berwick Presbytery, Rev. A. F. Douglas, minister of Ancroft Moor Presbyterian Church, of which he has had charge for sixteen years, tendered his resignation, which was accepted with regret. Mr. Douglas, who has had forty years' ministerial experience, was formerly in New Zealand, and is now going to Genoa.

Summer Sunday in Rome.

WRITING in the Evangelist, Dr. J. R. Miller, of Philadelphia, says: "Sunday was really very little in evidence. I tried to find a Protestant church. There is one place of Presbyterian worship in Rome, but the pastor is at home in Scotland, and the church is closed during the midsummer months. The same is true of the English Methodist Church. We learned, too, that there would be no service last Sunday in the English Episcopal Church. It was said, however, that the American Protestant Episcopal Church was open. The rector, Rev. Dr. R. J. Nevin, was absent, but his place was filled. Only about twenty-five persons were present. So far as could be learned, that was the only service conducted in English this Sunday in the Papal city, and the small attendance shows that there was no demand for more. In the hot months there are probably few Americans or English people resident in Rome, and tourists generally prefer to rest, as did nearly all of our party, or attend Roman Catholic churches, to see the pomp and hear the music. It would seem that church-going in Rome, at least on ordinary occasions, is not by any means universal, even among Roman Catholics themselves. On the streets there seemed to be but little interruption in the usual pursuits of the people. Shops and stores were generally open, at least till noon, and operations of all kinds appeared to be in process as on other days."

British Syrian Schools.—We reopen shortly our various schools; lack of funds made our committee consider very earnestly and prayerfully whether we could reopen the twenty-nine. But God has been so good to us, and our deficit of £600 in June (when the financial year closed) is now reduced to £42. So we will trust and "go forward," and expect Him speedily to send the remainder.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

SEVERAL correspondents have written to us for further information regarding Rev. J. D. Kilburn's new memory scheme. We are not able to furnish particulars, but we hope that when Mr. Kilburn has finished his course in St. Petersburg, he may be able to give instruction on the subject in this country.

We are told that a number of prospective Nonconformist ministers, on being asked by their examiners what part of the Bible they read most, replied, the Four Gospels. And on further inquiry as to which of the Gospels they read most, the reply, without exception, was the Gospel of John. This was thought to be highly satisfactory. And so it was, so far as it went. But the question arises, are these young men, who seek to become evangelists, pastors, and teachers, giving adequate attention to the Scriptures as a whole? or are they following the lead of some of their seniors, in drawing a contrast between the Gospels and the Epistles, or rather between the Holy Spirit speaking by the Lord, and writing through his Apostles?

This comparison, to the depreciation of the apostolic writings, is implicitly discounted in Heb. ii. 3, 4. The "great salvation began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed by them that heard Him; God bearing a co-testimony both with the Lord and with his Apostles, by signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will." To differentiate between the authority of the words of the Lord and the writings of his Apostles, is to differentiate between God at one time and God at another.

The Queen has signified her willingness to receive the petition "which has been signed in forty-four languages by her women subjects in all parts of the world," praying for increased protection against the evils of the liquor traffic and the opium trade. The way in which this petition has been got up by its supporters is a triumph of organisation and zeal on the part of the World's Women's Temperance Union. It contains over seven million signatures and endorsements. The question how to bring under the personal eye of Her Majesty the whole of these names has been solved in a happy way. The pages of the petition have been carefully photographed and bound tastefully in two large volumes, which will be presented in lieu of the original roll. That Her Majesty has consented to receive this petition is significant of her sympathy with the Temperance movement on its higher side, and will have a moral effect for good on all classes of society, especially on those who have looked askance at it through social prejudice. The moral effect of this act of royalty ought to be felt throughout the whole of her vast dominions.

Dr. Alexander McLaren tells students for the ministry that he has observed that what men are as students, that they are as ministers. The hard-working, thoughtful student becomes the diligent, painstaking minister, and the desultory, idle student becomes a minister of the same type. Children will often raise an objection to the learning of certain branches of knowledge on the ground that they will never require the knowledge afterwards. That may or may not be the case; no one ever knows what he may need, except this, the habit of careful thinking, and of patient, thorough working. Students may not be able to see the use of much that they are learning, but depend upon it, they will never know too much. If only that in teaching others, they may know how to pick their steps through the dangerous theories of men, it is worth mastering more than the elements of things. No one can know his Bible too well. A man may not have a large or accurate knowledge of it, who has well mastered its letters; he needs to know its large harmonies, its underlying principles, its separateness from all mere passing phases of thought. He must grasp the Book, and be grasped by it.

"In some parts of the Alpine Chains," we are told by Mr. Baring-Gould, "there are portions delivered over to the chamois as their own, in which no gun may be fired, where the beautiful creatures may be sure of rest and security, in which they may mature their young, and to which, when hard pressed, they may flee as to a city of refuge." The same is true, also, of the typical Alpine flower, the Edelweiss. There should be in every man's heart a reserved territory of this kind, where the soul's best functions may have their "freedom" without fear of intrusion from the strifes and cares and rough handling of the work-a-day things of life. "The world is too much with us," and we permit the rude footsteps and thieving propensities of our lower nature to work havoc with the tenderest sensibilities and shiest aspirations of the soul. These will thrive only in quiet and security, and we should see to it that the sacred hours of meditation and prayer are kept sacred from all that would injure them.

"The strength of the hills is his also." "Who setteth fast the mountains, being girded with power." "His faithfulness is like the great mountains." If the faithful men of old saw in the withering flower, in the perishing grass, in the swift flowing stream, in the passing shadow, images of the evanescence of man, they saw also in the eternal hills the constant remembrances of a God who changes not. The mutable and the immutable were always before them in contrast. But they had also come to the apprehension of the glorious truth that changeable and dying man might make the eternal God his refuge and hiding place. They learnt to trust and not be afraid. The Everlasting they took to be the home of man. "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." On the side of the mountain the flower blooms in beauty, the bird makes its nest, the stream has its perennial fountain, and man finds his rest and refreshment from toil. In God man has all his springs of activity, and in Him, too, he finds peace for his heart and life that is life indeed.

It was a great event in the history of mankind when it was discovered that man needed God; it was a greater when it was discovered that God needed man. The notion of a Divine Being wrapt in the contemplation of his own perfections, and complete in his self-blessedness, was the highest and worthiest conception of Him that was attained by heathen philosophy. Paul makes use of this half-truth in his appeal to the Athenians against the futility of their sacrifices and ritual. But the whole of inspired Writ bears witness to the fact that God is love; and love is incomplete without having an object of regard and a channel of service. So God created man in his own image, in order that He might have a free moral being to love and bless; and He made him dependent on Himself in order that both might be necessary to each other. When man turned aside from the true way, it was therefore a necessity of the Divine character that God should do all that might be done to bring man back to Himself. So came Revelation, Sacrifice, Redemption on God's side, and Repentance, Prayer, and Aspiration on man's. The beauty of the Gospel is focussed in the parables of the lost, where it is taught that the Good Shepherd cannot do without the wandering sheep any more than the sheep can do without the Shepherd.

Christianity gives to man what he has always been wanting, and what he has elsewhere always failed to get. The world does not so much want better morals as better motives. Men hardly ever denounce what is good; they leave it undone; they hardly ever praise what is evil; they do it. Even Paul felt the impotence of his will more than the uncertainty of his conscience: "The good that I would I do not; and the evil that I would not, that I do." It is this which has filled so many well-disposed men with despair, and so many evil-disposed with recklessness. Jesus Christ alone can remedy this defect in our fallen nature. He feeds the springs of motive from the stores of his grace. He has joined faith in the Unseen with love for Himself as the mainspring of Christian conduct. "Before He came faith was beautiful, but it was barren; love was sweet, but it was unchastened." Since He came in the flesh, faith has lifted and purified love, and made it potent for good; love has reinforced faith, and made it available for conduct. And so even the weak and the helpless can say, "I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me."

Jesus Christ has done this not simply by the wisdom of his teaching, the beauty of his ideal, the loftiness and perfection of his own character. Wonderful as these are they have never in themselves sufficed to lift men out of spiritual impotence. It is by his revelation of the Divine love to man; by his redeeming sacrifice on the Cross, offered for the worst and meanest of mankind; by his Risen Presence in the hearts of believers that Ho has commanded the adoration of his people. "We love Him, because He first loved us." A great French preacher once said: "Christ asked of the world one thing: Give me a cross. The world granted Him his desire; and He has needed nothing else in order to claim his crown." And it is an historic fact that only those who believe in and accept the doctrine of the Cross, are able to rise to the heights of Christian heroism, and to "fulfil that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ."

The responsibility which rests upon the older disciples of Jesus in relation to the younger, the babes, and, indeed, in relation to young persons generally, is more serious than is commonly supposed. They are their natural guides, exemplars, and teachers; they represent the Saviour to them. On them will come the Saviour's heaviest woe if in anything they act unworthily, if they should be a stone of stumbling to the feeble. Apart from personal fault and failing, they may so quarrel among themselves, may have such struggles for pre-eminence and the gratification of self-will, as utterly to stagger and bewilder the minds of sincere and simple disciples, who think that everyone will work for Christ only from pure motives. The sight of worldly selfishness among men who profess to act from love comes as a shocking surprise. It was in view of the contentions of the disciples for the first place in the kingdom that Jesus spoke his solemn warning against making one of his little ones to stumble, as if He meant to say: "There is nothing that will so confound the artless and loving disciple as to see you wrangling over things of this kind." Before entering upon many of the petty struggles which have divided brethren, the recollection of his words might have perpetuated peace and good-will.

The management of the tongue is beyond the power of its owner; "the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly member." Yet, considering its power and influence, its ability to bless or to curse, it is of the first importance to bring it into subjection. And it can be done. The habit of prayerfulness has the greatest effect upon the habit of speech. He who speaks much to the Infinite and Eternal is not likely to indulge in vain and foolish speaking to his fellows. He who has looked long upon spotless purity, and lingered under the shadow of the unspeakable love, cannot go away to pollute himself with harsh words concerning brethren. The hush and awe of the Presence is upon him. God both prompts and restrains him. Why he should say certain things when he is in these his best and purest moods he cannot tell, except that the Spirit moves him. And why he should withhold himself when there was so much tempting him to speak freely he cannot tell, except that the Spirit has taught him that this is "a time to be silent." Opportuneness, a sense of fitness, comes with the habit of prayer. It is not time-serving, but God-serving. It is not from fear of man, but from fear of God; not from a desire to please man, but God that judgeth the heart.

Fakenham, Norfolk.—A three days' convention for the deepening of the spiritual life was held in the Assembly-room, commencing August 25. The meetings were well attended by Christians of the town and district. Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, Rev. G. Armstrong Bennetts, and Rev. R. Middleton gave addresses. A prayer-meeting was held each morning. Many grateful testimonies as to definite blessing received have been given, and it is believed the outcome of the convention will be an increased solicitude on the part of Christians for the salvation of the perishing.

Similitudes; or Dark Sayings.

A SIMILITUDE or parable is synonymous with a dark saying. It will be sufficient to note in proof Ps. xlix. 4, "I will incline mine ear to a parable; I will open my dark saying on the harp"; and Ps. lxxviii. 2, "I will open my mouth in a parable; I will utter dark sayings of old." There are the two sides to all the figures of revelation—the dark side and the luminous side. The strange thing is that the luminousness cannot appear until the darkness has reached, and been felt to reach, the point of greatest intensity. As in creation the evening went before the morning in the making of the day, so it is as it concerns the discovery of truth and the perception of light in the light of God. Divine similitudes are balls of darkness and of fire, but the fire comes out of the darkness as out of its womb of concealment, and is never an open vision at the first.

We may say of all Divine Figures that they have a body of concealment, and a soul capable, when sufficiently recognised and known, of transfiguring the whole body. In a word, as in creation the evening deepened into the night, and at the point of greatest density broke into morning, and stole forth into the day, so is it with the days of our learning. We live in parables; and our record (unless it be a mere marking time, which, alas! is only too possible) is a succession of obscurity and coruscation, mystery and knowledge, for out of the enfolding darkness comes the unfolding flame, to show us something more of His thought whose vesture nature and spirit alike are.

According to the value of what He has to communicate, is the depth of the covering around which it is enswathed. How can it otherwise be? How can the Eternal communicate otherwise than through, in the first instance, a ball of concealment? Is it possible to conceive of any creature being able to gaze on the Divine wisdom intuitively, or to companionise with the Divine thought, unless the glory of it be first deeply concealed in parabolic vesture and set forth on the harp as a dark saying? We can only receive light as we are able to bear it (see John xvi. 12). And, therefore, when the Great Creator, the holy Lord God, utters his thoughts, He must needs curtain us in, and turn down the lights, that we be not blinded. In other words, similitude must be his modus operandi, for there is no way to the luminous save through the obscure, nor any path to the explicit in Divine things save through what might be called the labyrinth of parable.

The glory of God in concealing is the glory of grace, for it is of absolute mercy, according to the law of adaptation to creature need; and more than that, it is a call to Divine quest, for what is that which He has concealed, which He has buried deep in figure, around which He has cast the thick mantle of dark saying? Undoubtedly it is Himself, his own attributes, his own Person, his own Son. What is nature's secret but the picturing of his wisdom, a grounding, as upon the rough, of his fancy and power? Providence is a nearer approach to the works of his hands, and here the jewel of his Presence is, if anything, more deeply set than before, the ball of darkness being denser, and the fire that breaks forth glowing with a diviner radiance.

In a more emphatic sense is this true of the Divine revelation in his Word, in the work and person of the Redeemer. So great is the subject of God's thought in Christ, so far-reaching and so historically all-embracing, that it is impossible to say, when we enter this region, where similitude ends or where it begins. One thing is certain, that Christ is the explanation, as He is the heir, of the universe; and, therefore, He is the supreme jewel embedded in similitude. If the dark saying of nature is ever to be interpreted, the obscure abyss of Providence sounded, and the voice of God so heard that it shall be known, then the key must be found in the knowledge of Christ, the First-born of all creation (Col. i. 15), and the Word which is the utterance of all Divine thought.

Armenia.

AT last the tide of sympathy with the downtrodden Armenians has overflowed the banks of indifference or caution that had hemmed it in, and the voice of the whole nation, apart from parties and sects, is being lifted in uncontrollable protest against "the Great Assassin" who uses his throne for the purpose of the shambles. The Press, as a whole, has long been doing its duty, and has steadily kept the public posted up with detailed information of the cruelties perpetrated from week to week. The pulpit, long silent through a sense of impotence, has begun to speak out all over the country. Religious leaders of all denominations are bestirring themselves with a view to organise a great religious demonstration over the land, in which the Christian Churches should speak as with one voice; and last, but not least, our political leaders are breaking the seal of diplomatic silence that has laid so heavy on their lips and on their hearts, and are calling for action. We are, apparently, at the beginning of an uprising of the national conscience.

It would be well, however, to remember the need for self-restraint even in a good cause. There are ominous signs that the war-fever is on the eve of breaking out, and some of the utterances even of our leading men are somewhat strongly bellicose. Granted, as Mr. Gladstone has put it in one of his trenchant letters, in which the old fires of moral indignation burn as clearly as ever, that "the method of remonstrance pursued by the Powers in the face of overwhelming evidence that nothing but force would prevail has been in itself a moral offence as well as a political blunder"; this does not mean that warlike measures are the only means of applying such force. We have yet to prove that the Sultan will not yield if it becomes clear to him that England is in earnest. So far he has not been made to feel this; and when it is clear that even that would not alarm him, it will be time to speak of letting loose the awful dogs of war.

It is clear that Armenia has no other country than England to look to for defence and redress. The movement in Germany is meeting with a stern reception from the semi-official Press. In France, the Press is only just beginning to supply the people with any real knowledge of the awful facts, and the Government is too much afraid of offending Russia to move in the matter. Anything more cynical and selfish than the moral condition of Europe just now, in a cause appealing to the universal sense of humanity, cannot be imagined. It is in this country alone that the Christian conscience has the opportunity, and apparently the desire, to give utterance to its horror and indignation. This only deepens our national responsibility by enlarging our opportunity of rousing Europe to her duty.

Pulpit Fire and Power.

By Dr. T. L. CUYLER.

WHAT is eloquence but truth in earnest? It is the mind's best words spoken in the mind's best moments. When God's truth gets full possession of a minister's soul, when all his sensibilities are aroused and his sympathies are in full play, when his soul becomes luminous until the interior glow blazes through every loop and crevice, when the whole man becomes the beaming impersonation of heaven-sent truth, then he is honestly and irresistibly eloquent. To this a great head is not always essential; a great heart is essential, and ever must be.

Where should we look for the most genuine realisations of eloquence but in the pulpit? Where is there less excuse for tameness, for heartlessness, for dull stupidity? Where can the strongest intellect find fuller sweep? Even a man of moderate intellect ought to kindle when the Holy Spirit offers to furnish fire. The ambassador of Jesus Christ has not only the loftiest of themes and the most powerful of motives, even the salvation of immortal souls, but his text-book is the most perfect of models. In it may be found everything that is most sublime in imagery, most melting in pathos, and irresistible in argument.

He may be always nurturing his soul amid those pages where John Milton fed, before those eyes which "had failed with long watching for liberty and law" behind the gorgeous visions of paradise. He may even be amid the scenes which inspired Bunyan to his matchless dream and taught Jeremy Taylor his harp-like melodies. Paul is ever at his elbow to teach him trenchant argument, John to teach him sweet persuasion; and a heart of steel must he have who is not moved to pathos in the chamber of heart-broken David or under the olive trees of Gethsemane. The Bible sweeps the whole circuit of human life, reaching up to the loftiest and down to the lowliest affairs of existence. The same Divine pencil that portrayed the flashing splendours of the Apocalypse, condescends to etch us a Hebrew mother bending over her cradle of rushes, a village maiden bringing home the gleanings of the barley field, and a penitent woman weeping on her Saviour's feet. What honest, earnest minister of God will hesitate to introduce into the pulpit a homely scene or a homespun character, a fireside incident or a deathbed experience, or the familiar episodes of the field, the shop, the schoolroom, and the nursery? If ever a man should cast off all manacles and speak with a holy boldness, it is the man who stands up in the name of Jehovah to utter the messages which the Holy Spirit puts into his lips.

Every true minister of Christ, whether addressing a cultured city assembly or a company of frontier men in a mining camp, ought to feel that he is surrounded by an unseen "cloud of witnesses." The light of eternity is playing about him, and right before him the judgment day with its separations to the right hand or the left hand of the righteous Judge. His own hearers are to be in the innumerable multitude before the great tribunal. Perhaps their position there—either saved or lost—depends in some degree on the fidelity with which he shall present to them the only Gospel that can save them. In view of such "witnesses" and such tremendous issues, how can any minister be listless or cold or careless or criminally indifferent? John Bunyan says that he went before his people always "carrying that first in his own conscience which he persuaded them to beware of." He was burning to save them from "everlasting burnings," and so ought every man to be who is set to be a watchman for souls. John Welsh, of Scotland, used to rise in the night and wrap himself in his plaid and pray earnestly for his flock. When his wife sometimes remonstrated with him he would reply, "O woman, I have the souls of three thousand to answer for, and I know not how it is with many of them." The preachers who enter the pulpit with that spirit will never lack power, and theirs will be the unfading crown which shall shine as the stars for ever and ever.

Happy is that minister who, as he lays down this brief article, can honestly say, "I am resolved that with the help of my God my pulpit shall glow with that fire and be clothed with that power from on high."

"The Mind of the Master."

THE FATHERHOOD OF GOD.

IN this last book of Dr. John Watson ("Ian Maclaren") expression has been given to views which would seem to have been long formulating and are now crystallising, among a considerable number of prominent Nonconformist teachers. The British Weekly last week contained notes of an address or lecture, of an entirely eulogistic character, by Dr. R. F. Horton, on "The Mind of the Master." Sermons similarly conceived are, we understand, being preached to other large congregations.

As we represent to some extent the views of the older school, some utterance may be expected from us on the thoughts developed during the last two decades on the Fatherhood of God, which, as expounded by himself, is the foundation of Dr. Watson's popular and widely-circulating book.

First let us admit and affirm that in propagating our views we should all be at least as anxious to find out wherein we agree as wherein we differ; and very careful not to misrepresent the other side. Othello's appeal, "Nothing extenuate, nor aught set down in malice," is the rule in argument of every fair-minded man. We must put ourselves in the other man's place, and look at the subject from his point of view as well as our own.

Let it, therefore, be said that with many of the statements of the book and its praises we fully agree. With them we believe that God is love; that He loves the whole world; that He desires all men to be saved; that He reprobates none.

We admit to the full the Fatherhood of God in Adam, and everything in this connection that is fairly deducible from the parable of the Prodigal Son. But we remember the exegetical axiom that it is not safe to base a doctrine on a figure or a parable, unless the doctrine be affirmed in other Scriptures. Especially is this the case when the doctrine sought to be established is not the main purpose of the parable or figure.* But, while we believe in God's Fatherhood in Adam of all the race, we go farther than the book or the lecture, and affirm the Fatherhood of God especially and emphatically to those who believe in Christ Jesus the Lord; for "whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God."

* The Prodigal Son is one of five parables, closely connected in one discourse, of which the purpose is, not specially to assert the Fatherhood of God, but to show that Jesus was justified in receiving sinners (the sheep, the piece of money, the prodigal, Lazarus), and to rebuke and denounce the Pharisees (the elder brother, the unjust steward, the rich man).

For what are the facts of the case? God created Adam perfect, and in the last link of Jesus' genealogy Adam is called "the son of God." But Adam listened to the tempter, believed and obeyed him, and became his servant. His firstborn, Cain, is said to be "of the Wicked One." And Jesus said to the Pharisees, "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." Therefore we are quite in accord with Dr. Horton when he describes wicked men as "by a fatal misbirth born again, as it were, into the childhood of the devil, and being by their perverted choice children of the devil."

If then sonship to God has been superseded by sonship to the devil, how is this terrible lapse to be remedied? "The mind of the Master" is very clear, very simple, very emphatic. He says, "YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN." If there has been "a fatal misbirth into the childhood of the devil," there must be a counteractive birth from above, a new birth from God, into sonship to God. Thus the Evangelist John says: "He came into his own [possessions] and his own [people] received Him not; but to as many as received Him to them gave He power [right, authority], to become children of God, even to them that believe on his name." And there is no antagonism, but perfect agreement, between Jesus and John, on the one hand, and Paul on the other, for the apostle says, "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." "And because ye are sons He hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, 'Abba, Father.'" "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are sons of God... The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God, and if children then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." No, there is no difference between "the mind of the Master" and that of the apostle, who declares that he has "the mind of Christ."

We are obliged, therefore, to withhold our assent to the affirmation of Dr. Horton, that the children of the devil are none the less children of God. We give in full the passage from which we have already quoted:—

To-day, even after all these centuries, it savours of heresy for anyone to say in the broad way of Jesus, "He is Father of all human beings." But oh, brothers and sisters, children of the Father, how it changes all your view of life, and all your view of men, if you seriously accept the teaching of Jesus. You look out upon these men around you. They may be wicked, ignorant, atheistic; so much more sorrow over them, so much more loving effort to recover them. They may be even, by a fatal misbirth, born again, as it were, into the childhood of the devil, and being by their perverted choice children of the devil; but you cannot alter your great faith for such appearances as these. The Son of man is manifested to destroy the works of the devil, and to recover those who are made captive at his will. And you take the very worst and most hopeless of your kind, the very Sultan of Turkey, and with unswerving faith you say, "He is a child of God." It is a sorrow that it is a child of God who has sunk to this, and defiled the heart that came from the heart of God.

We do not remember any words of the New Testament answering to the first sentence of the above paragraph. Did Jesus ever say that God is "the Father of all human beings"?

Is it really "the mind of the Master," that we should "take the very worst and most hopeless of our kind, even the Sultan of Turkey, and with unswerving faith say, 'He is a child of God'?" Did the Master Himself say so? He said, "The good seed are the children of the kingdom, but the tares are the children of the wicked one." He told the Pharisees, "Ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves." He said again, "If God were your Father ye would love Me...Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." He foretold that "at the end of the age the angels will come forth and sever the wicked from among the just." Did the Master mean that the tares, the children of the wicked one, are nevertheless children of God? That the proselyters, and their proselytes, children of hell, are yet children of God? That those whom He told that they were of their father the devil and the lusts of their father they would do, just as if they had been the children of God they would have done the works of God—are, nevertheless, children of God? When the angels cast the wicked into a furnace of fire, will they be casting children of God into that fiery furnace?

If we "cannot alter our real faith for such appearances as these," if we are "with unswerving faith" to say, "Yes, all these are children of God; and the blood-stained monster of Turkey, the great assassin of Cretes and Armenians, is a child of God," on what is our unswerving faith to rest? Not on the words of Jesus, for He never said so; and there is no other way of knowing "the mind of the Master" but his spoken words.

There is a vital difference between union in Adam and union in Christ, between Fatherhood in fallen Adam and Fatherhood in the risen Christ. This is too often overlooked, and texts are relied upon which bear less directly on the subject than those we have quoted from the Gospels and Epistles, in perfect harmony with each other, and which are often entirely ignored by writers on "The universal Fatherhood of God." — M.

Conquering Love.

Psa. xvi. 7-11.

LAST night I was in Hell;
I watched alone with Self and its Desires.
No Water in my Well—
My Well of Faith—to quench those Fires
That round my sleeping Spirit fell.
I was in Hell
Because I was alone with Self
And its Desires.
Self spoke in Accents cold
Yet clear, "You have been hardly used," it said,
"And you are growing old,
Perhaps ere long you will be dead;
Speak up! For once be bold!"
I was in Hell
Because I was alone with Self
In Pains untold.
Ah! how the cruel Hail
Of keen Self-Pity tore with fiery smart!
What could I do but quail
As burning Thoughts did whirling start?
What soothing Comfort could avail?
I was in Hell
Because I was alone with Self
And my weak Heart.
But golden Day awoke—
Ah! Lord, what faithfulness of Love was this,
As with a healing Stroke
The Beams of thy dear Light did kiss
My Forehead, and did Faith evoke?
I was in Hell
Because I was alone with Self,
Until Dawn broke.
Thy Beams did chase the foul
And mocking Fiend that stole my Faith away;
Self had bewitch'd my Soul,
But thy Love's warm and conquering Ray
Freed me from Self and its Control.
I was in Hell,
Yet I was not alone. Thy Love
Held me alway.

The Sword over England.

THE prophets of the LORD in the olden days were entrusted with a double commission. It was their business to announce to the nation, at the command of God, forthcoming events which at the time of their prediction cast no forward shadow; events which, in some instances, did not occur until centuries had passed away. But it was equally their business to direct the attention of men to events which were at that moment transpiring beneath their eyes, and in which the prophets, illumined by God, clearly perceived the nation's destiny. Thus Amos, the earliest of the prophets, followed by Joel and Isaiah, placed their fingers upon conspicuous spots in the national life and made these the texts of their inspired discourses. In particular, Amos recounted the lust, drunkenness, sloth, oppression, usury, and the conventional religion of his time, and then threatened the judgment of God upon the people unless they repented.

The prophets of the LORD in every age have this same task set before them. Instructed by God, they understand that Divine Laws operate everywhere and at all times in the most precise manner: that in every age and in all circumstances, righteousness produces peace, and unrighteousness provokes God to judgment. Further, the prophets are taught that in proportion to privilege is personal accountability; that so far from privilege securing its possessor immunity from punishment, it will greatly enhance the pain of him who abuses it.

Now let these principles be applied to the life of our English nation at the present time. Let us fairly face some facts, and then suffer ourselves to follow their logical deductions. Men frequently complain of those who call attention to unpleasant facts as being smitten with the disease of pessimism—Jeremiahs, whose lamentations proceed from a narrow mind and a circumscribed vision. Possibly, in some cases, there is justice in the charge—but it is an absurd policy to refuse attention to well-authenticated facts because some men have made improper deductions from them. After all, if one must choose, it is better to be a pessimist and to deal with facts, than to be an optimist and to deal with phantoms.

With but little alteration, the opening words of the book of Isaiah might with justice be applied to the English nation, for if ever a nation has been nourished and guarded by God, this nation has. The miracle of England's greatness is second only to that of the Jewish nation. Less than two millenniums ago our ancestors were living in the woods and caves of this island, a barbarous and an almost unknown people. Rome was then supreme, and there seemed no reason to believe that her supremacy would ever fade. To-day Rome is less than a memory, and the barbarous nation has become the chief empire of the world. And by whose power? He must be an extraordinarily blind man who replies that our Navy, or the accident of our home being an island protected by the sea, is sufficient to account for it. A combination of nations against us would make short work of our natural and artificial protections. But hitherto this combination has not been effected, and all attempts at it have been frustrated. It will be sufficient to recall the destruction of the "Invincible" Armada and the utter breakdown of Napoleon's conspiracy against us.

No human arm has placed England in her present position. This "vine in a very fruitful hill" is surely the planting of the Lord. And can it be doubted what was the purpose of God in procuring for this country above all others the blessings which have crowned her? Those who first were made partakers of his gifts to her had little doubt. The printing press is English, and the first use made of it was to print the Holy Word. The earliest steamers took out missionaries to the far-off countries, in many cases free of charge. The first message flashed along the telegraph cable was a message from Scripture. England has been raised to eminence without special merit of her own, in order to accomplish a great purpose of God. To her has been committed a grand and awful trust.

She was commissioned to give the Word of God not only to her own people, but to all the world. From her the first missionaries went forth a century ago leading the way in the new Divine enterprise of Missions. While Continental nations have been engulfed in rationalism or superstition it has been left for the English-speaking people alone to witness, without wavering, to the truths which our Lord and his Apostles preached, which were obscured for sixteen centuries, and which were restored to us at the Reformation. These things, of course, were accomplished under God, by his people, and not by the nation as a political body; nevertheless, the nation, as a nation, has been regarded as the repository of these things, and, in any case, the nation, as a nation, has been prospered of God because of those in her who have accomplished his will. Formerly, at least, if there was no spiritual co-operation on the part of the nation, yet the nation did not only not oppose what was done, but it recognised, through its heads, in many ways, its unique position.

But a great change has come over the face of things. The vine from which God looks for choice grapes is already bearing Him wild grapes. Not so long ago a man was practically outlawed if he announced himself as an Agnostic or an Atheist; to-day, in a large section of society, such a man is received with acclamation. Two decades ago the Lord's Day was regarded with some amount of respect by vast numbers who at present have obliterated all traces of sanctity from it. It is of no use to cry "pessimism" in face of the fact that five-sixths of the population of London never attend any place of worship, or the other fact that more than sixty-five per cent. of the men of this country are utterly outside all religious agencies.

Again, the tone of the secular press is largely on the side of licence to do what one pleases so long as the letter of the law is not broken; while the "sex novel" is almost entirely opposed to Christian morals. Again, there is the ever-increasing number of the "black sisterhood"; lust and greed; our shameful drink bill, and, worst of all, that which is the most conspicuous feature of English life, utter indifference to God or religion.

Some of these features are always present in the life of a nation, and their presence in any particular generation may not mean anything extraordinarily wrong, but when they are combined and concentrated, as they are in our own day, in a measure in which they have scarcely ever been before (and that in spite of all the religious teaching which has inundated the land of late years) it is time for Christian men to arouse themselves.

What does all this mean? These things are symptomatic of an inner decay, which if not arrested will mean utter ruin. "Wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together." England is untrue to her trust. She has waxed fat, and now she kicks. To God she owes all her prosperity, and from that God she seems determined to turn. It is the old tale of Jeshurun and of Israel over again, and the prophet must speak the same words in the similar circumstances. But it is always hard to convince a proud people, and we English are that—every nation under heaven perceives it. We speak of our invincible fleet, and point to our world-wide commerce, and we fancy ourselves secure. But God can as easily annihilate our power as He blotted out Rome and Carthage when their abominations became unbearable. We have had warnings, but they pass by unheeded. The mutterings of war on New Year's Day last may serve to teach us what could be done if the nations which hate us rose up against us at the bidding of God.

These are not unkind words; God knows they are the words of one who loves his land, and ardently desires to see it belong to God. Let the prophets of God awake and point out to men the inevitable issue of the present godlessness. But above all, if it would please God to grant the revival for which so many have prayed, and for so long a time, then would the desert blossom as the rose. God is ready surely. What is needed is a Church humbled to bitterness because of her perverse powerlessness, and then filled with the Holy Ghost, to be the agent of that revival which alone can save England from ruin.

Work for Hop-pickers.

THE five tents have been much appreciated by the poor wanderers this week, and the warm tea has been a great boon to them. The wet weather is very trying for their work, as they get wet through two or three times a day and have no means of drying their clothes. They are able to earn very little during the day, and the work is likely to last long if the rain continues. Many of the large families are greatly in want, and many are sick. We have thought if we could give a little bread as well as warm tea to those who are so destitute, it would be a great help. This is practical Christianity, and at the same time may be the means of leading their thoughts to the Giver of all good. We have not the means to do this, but will your readers kindly help us?

AURELIA CHINN.

Lenten House, Alton, Hants.

DEAR SIR,—As so much has appeared in the daily papers about "starving hop-pickers," those of your readers who so kindly answered my appeal in June will be glad to know we were able to deal with the distress in this parish. Owing to a false report in London, and a change of weather which kept the hops from ripening, many of the pickers came a week too soon. Regular hands were allowed to sleep in the huts, but they and others who slept under the hedges were suffering from want of food. We sold relief tickets to those who were willing to give them away. I personally superintended the Shelter in the daytime. No needy case was refused help; their pinched faces made my heart ache, and how thankful I felt to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for their having given me the means to help the helpless.

Sad to say, the best pickers are only averaging 2s. per day, and it is feared many must walk back to London, being unable to live and earn their return fare. To add to their misery this wet weather rots their cheap boots, and most of them are obliged to sleep in their wet clothes, which must bring illness. Our Shelter was open eight nights at 2 a.m., with half-pint cups of tea or coffee for one penny, and thick rounds of bread and butter for a halfpenny; the pickers crowded in from the trains, thankful to find it still open. And they come in when they come up shopping; even drunkards send their children here instead of giving them beer as heretofore.

If any feel an interest in the cause, I would gladly furnish further information.—Yours very faithfully,

Lower Zambezi Mission.

READERS of Livingstone's "Zambezi and its Tributaries" will remember the many journeys which that eminent servant of God made on the Lower Zambezi River, and how, after burying his wife there, at Shupanga, he pressed northwards to Lake Nyasa. We have now in the country surrounding that lake several strong missions, which were established as the direct result of the great interest which he created in that part. For more than twenty years missionaries have been passing up and down between these missions and the coast, and yet the multitudes dwelling on the banks of this great highway are still unreached by the glorious Gospel which is being carried to the regions beyond.

One difficulty in the way of mission settlements on the Zambezi is that this country is under Portuguese rule; this has until quite recently made it almost impossible for Protestant mission work to be carried on there. Obstacles are now, however, disappearing, and the writer of these lines has, out of four years spent in Africa, passed the last three in work among these people.

During this period I have had the pleasure of meeting with many members of missions labouring in British Central Africa, on their way to and from their field of labour. All have expressed a deep interest in this much-needed work among the people, who were the first among whom Livingstone came on this side of Africa, and yet almost the last to have proclaimed among them the glad message of Christ, whose servant he was.

In pioneer work of this kind progress is necessarily slow, but God's blessing has been manifested in several cases of conversion. One of these converts is now in England with me, assisting in the work of translating the Word of God into the Sena language, which is spoken on the Lower Zambezi. This language has not previously been reduced to writing, and is entirely without literature. I have during the past year compiled a grammar and vocabulary, and have completed the translation of the Gospel of Mark, and part of the Acts. Nothing is more important than providing the people with some portion at least of the Word of God in their own tongue. Another convert is teaching and preaching at Chinde during my absence, and several others are ready to rally round on my return.

I have now come to England with my wife, for the following (among other) purposes:—(1) To get a committee formed to control the work which has been inaugurated. The work will be conducted on entirely unsectarian lines. (2) To get published, by the aid of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the translations referred to above. (3) To find two suitable men who will return with us to this work as soon as the Lord opens the way. (4) To raise the sum of £1,200 to cover the initial expenses of the work and the first year's support.

It is proposed to get built a house-boat, on which the mission staff will be able to live. As the navigation of the Zambezi and Shiré rivers is free to all nations, we shall, by living on the water, avoid all Portuguese taxes and Customs duties, and have also the additional advantage of being able to move our house from place to place as required.

There is about 450 miles of navigable waterway from the mouth of the Zambezi to Tete, and on the Shiré to Chiromo. By means of this mission-boat, it will be possible to evangelize all the people living along the banks for this distance. It is also hoped, as soon as the converts are competent, to settle them in the villages to teach the people to read the Word of God in their own tongue, and to preach the Gospel in their neighbourhood, the mission-boat visiting them regularly about every two months.

The cost of this boat, including freight and building on the Zambezi, will be about £600. The passages and outfits of four workers and of the native who is home with us, £250. The first year's support, at £60 each worker, £240. And the expenses of working the boat, wages of native helpers and sundries, will amount to about £100 a year.

I shall be glad to address meetings on behalf of this work, with or without lantern views illustrating the country and people, also to give further information privately to any who wish it.

Science and Criticism.

IN a Higher Science lecture at SS. Anne and Agnes, Gresham-street, E.C., Probendary Reynolds said:—

Revelation begins by creation. Whether we think of angels or of the material worlds, they were created. Genesis opens with an account as to when and how the worlds and men were formed. The grand astronomer, Laplace, and those following him, aided by the thought and science of earliest and latest times, consider that existence, as it is now, may have been called forth by a sudden act of Almighty will, or by will working through natural means to bring out the present from some former state of being. The latter is a more interesting thought to the scientific, and, in some respects, attractive to all who try to see the Almighty now at work around us. It also conforms to the Divine narrative that chaos did not make itself, nor endow itself with the germs out of which grew all the stars of heaven, but that the Lord, having created spiritual and intelligent beings, laid the foundations of nature, as stated (Gen. i. 1, 2), "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth, and the earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep."

Whether we think of Laplace, or of Moses, who was greater, we create a marvellous prodigy; an account which, in the reasonableness and beauty of it, is a creation, and which, in its truth, can only be explained as an intuition growing into highest intellectuality by help from the Divine Mind. In poetry it is thus expressed:—

This world was once a fluid haze of light,
Till towards the centre set the starry tides,
And eddied into suns, that wheeling cast
The planets.—Tennyson.

Take it thus: In the beginning was chaos, containing, by the Divine operation which gave it birth, the primal shapeless mass, not earth, nor water, nor yet the elements as now they are. Upon this chaos hovers or broods the Eternal Spirit: who differences the dead mass, unmixed by separating. Step by step the mixture, Divinely fashioned, forms land, and sea, and air, fertilised and enlivened, probably much in the order of their creation—the foundation, then that which exists upon it; water for the fishes, and heaven for the heavenlies, the last creative act being specially marked. "God said, Let us make man in our image."

The aim of this narrative is not purely religious. It has nought to do with the Law of Moses, nor with Jewish peculiarities; indeed, it in some points is in conflict with the Law and with the Jew. It is evidently meant to describe the world's genesis, and the cosmogonic theory is astronomical, geological, and descriptive of life's course. The whole is charming with exalted ease and uniform greatness, a glorious manifestation of Divine power.

Workers in Newport, Mon.

On Sunday afternoon, Sept. 6, a meeting of the Daniel's Band was held at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. The meeting was addressed by Mr. R. C. Morgan. On Monday evening a meeting of the Young Men's and Young Women's Bible-classes, and a large number of active Christian workers representative of all the churches, took place in the same room, with the same speaker. These classes, in their inception and continuance, are due to Mr. J. R. Hall.

Twenty-five years ago a remarkable revival took place under Rev. Robert Aitken, results of which continue to this day, though Newport, like other towns, is suffering from spiritual depression and acute worldliness. There are, however, signs of awakening. Some earnest souls are looking to God to restore the years that the locust hath eaten, and there is already the sound of rain.

Bournemouth. — The Chautauqua meetings closed on Friday, Sept. 11, when Rev. F. B. Meyer gave two addresses at the Richmond Hill Congregational Church. There was a good attendance at both meetings; and the addresses, which dealt with the subject of the Holy Ghost as the workers' need, were greatly appreciated. The impression at the close of the evening meeting was very solemn; and not a few responded very devoutly and sincerely while Mr. Meyer made confession of past failure, and accepted by faith the fulness of the Holy Spirit's indwelling, and his endowment for service.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, September 20.

"REMEMBER ME, O MY GOD."—Neh. xiii. 14, 22, 31.

THREE in this chapter this humble man asks to be remembered. We cannot think that he expected to purchase God's favour because of his sacrifices and endeavours. Of this he was already assured. But being a redeemed soul, he desired that his works might come up in remembrance before God, and secure a reward. There is no harm in keeping the eye fixed on the reward for faithful toil in the Lord's service. It was a constant incentive in the life of the great Apostle that he might so run as to obtain, so finish the work entrusted to him that he might win the crown.

Note the three departments of service mentioned in this chapter, in connection with which Nehemiah breathed this petition. He had turned all Tobiah's household stuff out of the temple, so that the whole structure should be given up to the service of God. He had secured the Sabbath from desecration, so that its holy rest and calm were preserved intact. And he insisted on the purity of the holy seed being untainted by foreign alliances. Consecration to God, the Rest of Faith in the inner life, and the separation of God's children from the world, are the counterparts of these in our own time.

Shall we not humbly set ourselves to seek them for the professing Church? Nehemiah was an ungifted, simple-hearted man, but he was able to secure them as the instrument and channel of God's purposes. Why should not God work through us for the same ends. But, first, let us see to it, that each of these particulars is being realised in our own personal character and life. Let every room of the heart be for God; let no voice break the inner peace; let us come out and be separate. Then what God has done for us, we may confidently plead as within his scheme for others.

MONDAY, September 21.

"THAT EVERY MAN SHOULD BEAR RULE IN HIS OWN HOUSE."—Esther i. 22.

One of the pre-requisites in choosing a presiding officer in the early Church was that he should rule well his own house, "for if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the house of God?" (1 Tim. iii. 4, 5).

When a man bears rule as husband and father in the love of God, there is no issue of commands which conflict with primary obligations; rather than that, his authority represents the Divine authority. As Christ received his authority from the Father, so does a man derive and receive his from Christ; and in the recognition of his delegated right and ability to lead, the entire household becomes well ordered. The relaxation of the bonds of authority and government in our homes is one of the saddest symptoms of national decay, as it is among the predicted signs of the end (2 Tim. iii. 2, 3).

But on the other hand, you must show yourself worthy to lead and rule your home. Your character must be such as to command respect. Those whom God has put into your charge must require that you do not use your authority for selfish or capricious ends. Above all, love is the source of the truest authority. We count nothing hard or irksome that we do for those we love. Show love and you will win love, and on love will be built respect, reverence, and obedience.

"HADASSAH, THAT IS, ESTHER."—Esther ii. 7.

Through this one girl-life God was about to save his people, though He was all the while hidden from view. The peculiarity of this book is that there is no mention of the name of God, but there is no book in the Bible more full of the presence and working of God for his own.

We knew that the meshes of evil plotting were laid for the hurt of Israel long before the fatal decree was made for the destruction of the entire nation, but here we find that God has begun his preparations for deliverance long before. In the beauty of Esther, in the position her uncle held at court, in the favour she won with the king, in the discovery through Mordecai of the plot against the king's life, there are the materials of a great and Divine deliverance. God was clearly beforehand to the devil. The angels of light were on the ground before those of darkness were marshalled.

It is a sweet thought to carry with us always: God prepares of his goodness for the poor. He prepares the good work in which we are to walk, and the deliverances by which He will succour us in the hour of need. Do not dread the foe, be not fearful nor dismayed, as He draws his net around thee; God has prepared a way of escape, so that thou shalt be able to bear it. In the meanwhile, rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him; rest in the Lord; wait for the Lord; be silent to the Lord. He is more far-seeing, his plans more far-reaching, his help more certain, than all the stratagems of evil. God laughs at them. Into the pit they have dug, thy enemies shall fall.

WEDNESDAY, September 23.

"BUT MORDECAI BOWED NOT."—Esther iii. 2.

There was stern stuff in this old Jew. He was not going to prostrate himself before one so haughty and so depraved as Haman, albeit that he was the king's favourite. To be the only one in a city office that does not laugh at the questionable story; to stand alone on ship-board against the gambling mania; to refuse to countenance cleverness which is divorced from cleanness, and genius which is apart from goodness—this is to do as Mordecai did in the gate of the king's palace.

Only God can give this power, since of ourselves we are as reeds shaken by the wind. Sooner might a single ear of wheat resist the breeze that bends all its companions in the same direction, than we stand alone, whilst all our associates bow, unless God Himself enable us. But God is prepared to enable us. Listen: "I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." But the mistake we are so apt to make is to brace ourselves up by resolution and firm determination, in anticipation of some impending struggle. To do this is to fail. There is a much easier and more certain way. Alive in Christ, look up into his face, derive from Him strength for the moment and at the moment. And often wrap about thee that exceeding great and precious promise, "I will make him to become a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out, and I will write on him the name of my God." Oh, to stand pillar-like amid men, bearing up the temple arch of truth, and inscribed with God's name, whilst the crowds go and come on the pavement beneath!

THURSDAY, September 24.

"WHO KNOWETH WHETHER THOU ART NOT COME TO THE KINGDOM FOR SUCH A TIME AS THIS?"—Esther iv. 14.

What grand faith was here! Mordecai was in God's secrets, and was assured that deliverance and enlargement would come to his people from some quarter—if not from Esther, then from some other; but he was extremely anxious that she should not miss the honour of being her people's emancipator. Therefore he suggested that she had come to her high position for this very purpose.

We none of us know, at the first, God's reasons for bringing us into positions of honour and trust. Why is that young girl suddenly made mistress over that household? Why is that youth taken from the ranks of the working-people, and placed over that great City church? Why is that man put forward in his business, so that he is the head of the firm in which he served as an office-boy? All these are parts of the Divine plan. God has brought them to the Kingdom that He may work out through them some great purpose of salvation. They have the option, however, to serve it or not. They may use their position for themselves, for their own emolument and enjoyment, that they may surround themselves with strong fortifications against misfortune; but in that case they court destruction. Their position and wealth may as suddenly vanish as it came; or ill-health and disaster may incapacitate them.

If, on the other hand, all is used for God, though at the risk of perishing, for it seemed to Esther as though the action to which Mordecai urged her meant that—the issue is blessed. Those that love their lives lose them, those that are prepared to forfeit them keep them. The wheat grain which is buried in the soil, bears much fruit.

FRIDAY, September 25.

"THE KING HELD OUT TO ESTHER THE GOLDEN SCEPTRE THAT WAS IN HIS HAND."—Esther v. 2.

What a beautiful type this is for each of us in our approaches to God!

For the repentant sinner.—You may have said with Esther, "I will go into the king's presence, and if I perish, I perish." But it is impossible for you to perish. None ever perished at the footstool of mercy. God is faithful to his promises, and just to his Son, and He can do no other, He wants to do no other, than forgive. As you stand amid the throng that surrounds his throne, He will espy you, and accept you graciously, because of the God-Man who sits at his right hand, and ever lives to intercede.

For the suppliant.—You have a great boon to ask for yourself, or another. The King's court stands open; enter and lodge your petition. He will be very gracious at the voice of your cry: the golden sceptre extended, his word passed, that He will answer with the whole resources of his kingdom. The answer may not come at once, or in the way you expected, but no true suppliant was ever turned away without his complaint or cause being graciously considered, and in the best way met and adjusted.

For the Christian worker.—Surely Esther represents a Paul prepared to be himself accursed, a Luther, a Brainerd. It is a lovely sight when the child of God is so oppressed with the burden of other souls as to sacrifice all else in order to plead their cause. Surely such find favour with God; they are kindred spirits with his own, and He bids them share his throne. God will do anything for those who are consumed by his own redemptive purpose.

SATURDAY, September 26.

"AS THOU HAST SAID, DO EVEN SO TO MORDECAI THE JEW."—Esther vi. 10.

Here indeed was a turning of the tables! Haman doing honour to the humble Jew, who refused to do honour to himself. Surely that day the old refrain must have rung through Mordecai's heart:—"He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory." And there was an anticipation of yet other words:—"For thou hast a little strength, and hast not denied my name: behold I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee."

How evidently God was working for his child. The gallows, indeed, was being prepared, but it would be used for Haman; whilst the triumph that Haman thought to be preparing for himself was to be used for Mordecai.

This is not an isolated case. Anyone who has lived a few years in the world and has observed the ways of God could duplicate it with instances that have come under his own notice. Dr. Gordon told us once of a church in Boston that would not admit coloured people; and after a few years it broke up, and the edifice is now occupied by a flourishing coloured church.

Trust on, beloved friend, amid scorn, hate, and threatening death. So long as thy cause is God's it must prevail. He will vindicate thee. Then that honour Him He will honour; whilst those that despise Him shall be lightly esteemed.

The Best Treasure in the Best Place for the Best Purpose.

BY JOSEPH JOHNSON.

"Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee."—Ps. cix. 11.

THIS text has a message for all who read or hear it, but for the young it is especially fitting, and there are three things which are easy to remember. It tells us of the best treasure, "God's word," put in the best place, "hid in the heart," for the best purpose, "that I might not sin against Thee."

"God's Word" is the best treasure we can have or know. A word is an expression of thought or feeling. Every word is a sign with some meaning, and we tell our thoughts to one another by the use of words. Now God's word is the expression of God's thoughts, and through his word He tells us his mind and will. "The word of the Lord" came to good men by the influence of the Holy Spirit, and they spoke or wrote the things the Spirit taught them. Thus the Bible is to us the written "Word of God," because it shows us God's love and the truths He would have us know. When we go away from home we all like to have a letter from father or mother, if it is only a few lines; we are glad to have a message, or even a word or two. So the Bible is God's message of love to us—it is the Word of our Heavenly Father.

Nature too is God's spoken word to us, for He has made all the beautiful things in the world around us, the flowers and the trees, the grass, the sea, the sky, and all living creatures on the earth; they all show us his wisdom and speak of his power and his care. Every good and perfect gift comes from Him. In the beginning God said, Let there be light, and there was light. The sunshine and the starlight are the results of God's word.

Besides the written and spoken word of God, there is the Living Word, Jesus Christ. He was "the Word" of God made flesh—God's own thought and life dwelling in human form, first as a little babe in Bethlehem and then growing into manhood, and at last dying on the Cross and rising again from the dead.

When the Psalmist sang of "God's word" he meant God's law and commandment, what God would have him be and do. This word of God he loved to think about, it was his delight. More than thirty times is it used in this Psalm, thus for example: "Thy word is pure"; "Thy word is true"; "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." The Psalmist says, "I will not forget thy word"; "I will keep thy word"; "I trust in thy word"; "I hope in thy word." This shows that the "Word of God" can become an exceeding precious treasure.

Therefore the Psalmist puts it in the best place, "hid in my heart," laid up in his love. That is better than having it in our heads or on our lips. We may learn some lessons and words by constantly repeating them like a parrot, and be able to say them like an organ-grinder turns the handle to play over the old tunes again and again. It is the things learnt not only with our lips and head, but with our hearts, we remember, because we love them. Many hymns and poems some very old people learnt in childhood are never forgotten, but are quite fresh on their minds because they have been "laid up in their hearts." There are many little folks who cannot recollect their lessons very well, but they don't forget their birthday or promised pleasures, and the difference is because the one is only in their heads for a little time, and the other in their hearts to stay.

Hence to love God's word and to store it up in our hearts, is not to forget it, but to keep and do it. If anyone asks us to go anywhere or do anything we love to do, how quickly and gladly we obey. And when we love anyone very much we will even do what we dislike for their sakes with pleasure.

When we love God's word very much we shall always do it with joy, and we shall say with the Psalmist, "I was grieved because thy word was not kept." If we love God with all our hearts we shall want to do his word even when it seems hard to obey. Only when we learn to love God more than ourselves is it easier to keep his word, and go his way, and do his will, than to keep our own pleasure, or go our own way, or do our own will.

Thus the Psalmist says he keeps the best treasure in the best place for the best purpose, "that I might not sin against Thee." This is the only way we can keep from doing wrong—by loving God and keeping his word well treasured up in our hearts, as we would the most precious promise that any dear friend made us, like some loving word that is so sweet to think of the last thing at night, and comes again to us with joy the first thing on waking. There are some beautiful things which once to have tasted or felt is never to forget; we hold the dear memory of them as secret possessions as long as we live, and life is always the richer and better for the very thought of them. There are some words father or mother may say to us in childhood that years after, when they have been long in heaven, are still as sweet and fresh as ever, and they have helped to keep us from temptation and wrong. Much more, if we love God's word and keep it in our hearts, it will keep us from sin. It will keep our hearts pure, and it will hold all our inclinations as by a tender loving hand so that we go not astray. Then if we live to be very old with God's word always laid up in our hearts, when at last He calls us homeward to see his face, that word will be a song upon our lips and a praise in the memory and influence of our lives.

Salé, August 15, 1896.

"A Shadow from the Heat."

I WONDER whether boys and girls know how many times the word "shadow" is mentioned in the Bible. Nearly fifty times! Mostly it carries with it the idea of shelter, protection, safety—always blessing. God is a "shadow from the heat." We have known during the terrible heat of the summer what a blessing a shadow can be.

Travellers who have crossed the Arabian deserts tell us how they longed for a shadow from the burning rays of the sun, and longed in vain. Days and days, sometimes weeks, pass before they can shelter themselves under some friendly cluster of stunted palm trees, which at great distances apart dot the desert, and then the protection is only very slight.

But to think of God as a shadow from the heat, always near at hand—God always a refuge—a hiding-place. What a beautiful thing it is! God, the shadow of a great rock in a dry and thirsty land.

A strange sight it was nearly two thousand years ago in Jerusalem, when the people brought their sick dear ones out of their houses and laid them on a sort of mat-bed in the open street. They believed that the shadow of Peter the Apostle, if it fell upon their suffering friends, would at least bless them. The marvellous thing was that those upon whom the shadow fell were there and then healed. What a wonderful sight it must have been; those who were a moment before full of pain and weakness—unable to move a limb, some of them—rose up strong and well! The shadow had made them whole!

Two lads were once in earnest conversation about shadows, when one said to the other, "If people's tempers could cast shadows, what would they be?" His companion answered quickly, "John's shadow would be a fist doubled up, for he is always quarrelling. Andrew's would be that of a dove, for he is always amiable and pleasant. Jane's shadow would be like the letter x, for she is as cross as two sticks; and my own shadow, what would that be?" And he was silent. He could not speak positively for himself. It made him think.

The truth is, boys and girls must live every day in the shadow of the kind Christ, then their shadow, the shadow of their character, of their influence, of their conduct will always be for good. Keep so close to Him always that as you go about your small duties you may ever be—morning, noon, and night—in the shadow of Jesus Christ. How beautiful even the lives of girls and boys can be when they spend their days in the shadow of Christ's great love!

For, girls and boys, Jesus is always a shadow from the heat—a hiding place—a refuge.

Draw me not away with the wicked.—Ps. xxviii. 3.

This is a solemn prayer. The wicked are drawn away from God by their own sins, and it would be terrible to have to go with them, so we should lift up our hands to Jesus and pray,

"Draw me not away with the wicked."

"Seen of Cephas."

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

HOW came it that He was seen of thee, Cephas, the stone, on the resurrection morning? We long to know, for surely thou hadst sorely grieved Him? Is this the way with thy Master, that He distributes his choice gifts to the least worthy? Why should He appear to Thee rather than to John, who ran with thee to the garden-tomb, but had never caused him sorrow? We would learn the secret from thine own mouth, for we, too, have sorely grieved Him.

"We ran together, as thou sayest, because we heard that the grave was empty, save of angel-forms, and that He was risen; and we went to see for ourselves. I admit we were partly dazed, and as men that dreamed; but I think we each had a secret hope that we might see Him again. It seemed impossible to believe that we had beheld Him for the last time; and He had said something, more than once, of rising the third day. It did not mean much at the time, but it came back to us at that moment, and gave us a glimmering of twilight to guide our feet to the grave."

But did not the memory of thy fall withhold thee? Surely it might have abashed thee from his sweet and holy presence, to have spoken of Him as thou didst, when He stood alone before Caiaphas. How camest thou to venture so hastily to encounter Him?

"I am not sure that I had adventured it, but that He sent a special message, bidding me come."

A special message! Does the Master send love-tokens to those who have denied Him with oaths and curses, because we have treated Him thus? There have been times when we said we did not know Him, times when we turned on Him the back rather than the face, times when we have chosen to side with his foes, as though He were nought to us. Alas! but thinkest thou that He has love-tokens for all such?

"It happened thus to me. I was seated with Mary, the mother, and John, whom the dying Master gave to be her son. We had come home together from Calvary, where I had been standing afar off, an eyewitness of those awful sufferings of my Lord, every thud of which sent long reverberations through my heart. As he was leading her home I joined them, and we entered the house and sat together. I do not think we ate or spoke that evening, or the day following; our hearts were, so to speak, bleeding drop by drop to death, though surely mine was the heaviest grief. They had the memory of an unsullied heaven of love, but for me there was the bitter, bitter memory of what I had said and done during those dark and fatal hours."

We have heard how bitterly thou didst weep when the cock crew for the third time, and the grey dawn broke on the city.

"Ay, they seemed tears of blood. I rushed from that hall, past the girl that kept the door, and past the outer ward; I saw none of them. I cared not what they thought; my one idea was to get away by myself to the garden where we had been with Him the night before. It was so quiet and lonely there, and we knew every corner of it so well, because He loved it so; and there was the spot where the crushed grass showed that He had lain on his face in prayer, whilst we slept. Fools that we were, and worse, to let Him watch, whilst we, who needed so much to watch with Him, slept! He came three times to wake us, and once he laid special stress on my name, as though there was greater need for me than for the others. But to think of all that love on his part and the thoughtless sloth on ours only made the tears flow more quickly; when I heard the shouts, 'Crucify Him!' ring through the city I was beside myself; and when I knew that He was to die on the cross prepared for Barabbas, I went forth to see Him once again, and my heart seemed as though it must burst asunder when I beheld Him there; and so I came back with the other two, and neither ate, nor slept, nor spoke, all that day and the next, but on the third morning light broke, and a message from his own dear lips, as I have told you, and sent me as fast as my feet would carry me to the grave."

But what message did He send thee? Dost thou mean that He singled thee out of all the rest of his disciples and friends for special remembrance at that transcendent hour of Resurrection.

"Even so. But let me tell the story. We were sitting, as I said, wrapt in the saddest thoughts, when suddenly certain women who had been in our company burst into the chamber, their eyes sparkling, their faces flushed with joy, their natures transfigured with glory. 'The grave is empty,' they said; 'He is gone.' We went to anoint his body, but there was no trace of it, only the grave-clothes in which they wrapt Him. Him we saw not, but there were angels at the entrance, keeping watch, and sitting on the stone, who said, 'Why seek ye the Living among the dead; He is risen; He is not here; come, see the place where they laid Him, and go tell his disciples, and Peter, that He is risen from the dead.' The first part of their words broke on me as a dream, but when they came to my name, I started up and cried, 'Say that again; are you sure they mentioned my name?' 'Certainly,' they replied, 'we could not have been mistaken.' Then it began to dawn on me that He had risen, and had sent that message to me from the grave, to make me know that He loved me still, and that neither my sin nor his death had made any difference between Him and his weak, erring friend."

Surely He must have mentioned thy name to the angels as He passed out from his grave? How wonderful that He should have thought of thee at such a moment, when He was issuing from the gates of death like another Samson. Yet so it must have been. As He passed out He must have turned to the angel-guards and said, 'Tell the women, who will be here at sunrise, to bid my disciples meet Me, and be sure to mention Peter's name; say 'and Peter.''"

"It was wonderful, indeed, that He thought of me then, and yet something had happened before that, which seemed to prepare for it."

What was that?

"It was on the fatal night, when I denied Him. I entered the High Priest's house with John, he introduced me to the man that kept the door; then we parted company, and I drifted up to the fire. There as the light glinted on my face, one who had seen me strike Malchus, recognised me, and turned on me; it was all so sudden, that I was taken off my guard, and denied Him—that was the first time. Then I went out to the door, and they recognised me again, and I denied Him again; then I felt foolhardy and desperate, and went back to the fire, and as they all turned on me the third time, I burst out in oaths and curses, and denied Him again. Then it was that what I mentioned just now took place; He turned and looked on me. Out of the crowd which surrounded Him, away from the sneers and flouts and scorn, as though He had entirely forgotten that his own life was at stake, He turned and looked at me. Is it any wonder that He turned to the angel as He passed, and bade Him mention my name to the women?"

But what expression was on his face when you saw it turned towards you?

"I know not how to describe it, but if you had seen Stephen's when he stood before the Sanhedrim, and all that looked on Him beheld his face as it were an angel's, you could have better understood what my words can never adequately tell. But, besides the heavenly light, there was such sorrow, it reminded me of his face when He looked on Jerusalem and wept; and there was as much love as sorrow; and I felt as if there was something that said, Do not despair; I know, I understand, I forgive; Father, lay not this sin to his charge."

Small wonder that such a look broke thy heart! But what came of thy visit to the garden grave?

"We ran both together, John and I, and he out-ran me—he is younger than I—and reached the grave before me. When I got there I found him peering into its darkness, but not venturing further. But I went in, and we saw the grave-clothes lying wrapped neatly together, and the cloth that had covered his face was wrapt together by itself. If there had been no other indication that He had risen, that would have convinced me."

How so?

"Because, if robbers had rifled the grave, they would not have stooped to wrap those clothes together; and if any of his friends had anticipated us, they would certainly have taken the wrappings with his precious body; and then, He was always so neat, so careful, as when He made the crowds sit down before He fed them, and then bade us gather up the fragments that littered the grass. When, therefore, I saw the condition of the grave, I knew that He had risen in his majesty, laying the cerements of death aside, since his glorious body would need them no more."

And what happened then?

"John went one way by himself, but I lingered about, I had a sort of presentiment that I should see Him whom my soul loved. And so it befell. All suddenly as I stood wondering, He stood before me, and called me by my name. Then I fell at his feet and told Him my bitter grief, and He said He knew it all, and that He had put the sin from his thought for ever; and He bade me, since I was now converted, to use every opportunity of strengthening my brethren. Then he ceased to be seen of me, though I often beheld Him after, during the forty days; but this is my testimony, that neither height nor depth, nor things present nor things to come, nor sin nor denial, nor oaths nor curses, can separate from the Love of Jesus any broken-hearted penitent who dares still to believe."

The Land of the Incas.

MANY who are following the evangelisation of Peru, Bolivia, and Ecuador, three of the most needy states of South America, will be glad to hear of reinforcements for the work here. Already we have three workers in Lima and four in Cuzco. We have also six applications before us; two of those applying, Messrs. Lodge and Patrick, I wish to introduce to your readers before they sail for these fields. Friends desirous of hearing the young men speak on these fields, or of helping the work, are invited to correspond with Miss Guinness, Harley House, Bow. The needs of these lands are becoming more apparent, and the time for scattering the Word of Life at least is an opportune one. Even in Ecuador, the most fanatical of Romish lands, Popery is waning. Two Ecuadorians, who attend our meetings, testify to the spirit of liberalism, especially among the youth, right in the heart of Quito.

In Bolivia, where the laws offer as good protection as those of Peru, and with no workers, a great field lies before us. The highway for these countries is Lima; here men can acquire the language and experience in the work, and then go forth better equipped to meet the fanaticism of the ignorant, the persecution of the priests, or the indifference of liberalism. What has been done in Cuzco can be done in Bolivia and probably in Ecuador.

Copies of The Land of the Incas, a quarterly record of the work of the Peruvian Mission, may be had for free distribution from Mr. James Bird, 10, Maud-villas, Westcombe Hill, Blackheath.

Baptism of Rev. G. C. Grubb.

THE church in Westminster Bridge-road of which Rev. F. B. Meyer is the devoted and successful pastor, was the scene of a very interesting and impressive ceremony last Thursday, at noon. The fact that Rev. George C. Grubb, the well-known and world-wide missionary of the Episcopal Church of Ireland, was then to be publicly baptized, had not been made public through the usual channels; otherwise there would certainly have been a much larger attendance than the fifty or sixty friends that gathered in the lower hall. It was a forenoon of phenomenal rain, even for the wet spell we have lately experienced, and that may have kept many away.

Shortly after the noon hour, Mr. Grubb, accompanied by two young men, who were also to be baptized, took their seats by the edge of the baptismal font at the front part of the hall. At the further end of the seat were Mr. Millard and one or two other personal friends and fellow-workers of Mr. Grubb.

Mr. Meyer officiated throughout. After prayer came the singing of a well-known Keswick hymn—

Loved with everlasting love,
Led by grace that love to know.

Mr. Meyer read a portion of Matt. iii., describing the baptism of Jesus in Jordan, and some verses from Rom. vi.—“Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.”

A brief address from Mr. Meyer followed. “It might be thought enough (he said) that this act should be done simply in token of obedience to Jesus Christ. But there is something more in it. It appears to me as if those of us who follow Christ in this act of outward identification with Christ in his death desire especially to set forth to men our earnest determination, by the grace of God, to surrender our own life absolutely. In the profoundest sense those who are to-day descending into this tomb, so far as this world is concerned, are absolutely surrendering the life that they have been pursuing and any self-energy in which they have been living during the past. But as they go down into this grave, surely they cannot fail to be reminded of the song of the Psalmist: “Thou wilt not leave my soul in Hades, neither wilt Thou suffer thy Holy One to see corruption. Thou wilt show me the path of life.”

“Though it may be supposed that one brother here especially [Mr. Grubb] is surrendering a great deal that this world holds dearest, it will be the prayer of all who share in this holy service that out of what seems to be death there will come more abundant life, not only to himself, but to hundreds and thousands more. (“Amen,” “Amen.”) We believe those who are one with Jesus Christ are called upon to set forth their oneness by being buried in the likeness of his death. Of course we believe that it is perfectly possible for believers who do not see with us in this, to enter into close identification spiritually with our Lord, but we think there is a special meaning and significance in being united with Him in the likeness of his death. I would draw special attention to the words of the Apostle in which he says: ‘If we have been united with Him by the likeness of his death, we shall be also by the likeness of his resurrection.’ The union must of course be a spiritual one:

there is no virtue or efficacy in the water; but surely in this outward act there is closer identification than were otherwise possible. You are united with Him by the likeness of his death; just as his body was carried to the grave and laid there, so you will set forth for one brief moment this identification with him; and then upon the other side there shall be the identification with the likeness of his resurrection glory. Surely this can only be by virtue of the most blessed Holy Spirit, who at the hour of our Lord's own baptism descended and abode upon Him. I want you to notice that word “abiding.” It may be that there has been a fitfulness of the Spirit's abiding on you, but as you emerge from the water you will claim that the Spirit shall not only descend but abide (“Amen”); and especially that you may be anointed for your great ministry hereafter. I have no doubt about the result. I know that you fall into the hands of Christ; that He will open to you your paths of life. I am sure that in his presence there is fullness of joy, and at his right baptism left me. I did not know then, as I do now, that truth must be learned to the satisfaction of the heart, and not from the brain. I was perfectly satisfied with the well-known argument that because the infant was circumcised under the Jewish dispensation, therefore it was quite right to baptize infants under the Christian dispensation. I did not see that the real analogy was this—that circumcision was only in the flesh, but true baptism is in the spirit; that we do not begin to live in Christ until we cast ourselves on Him; then we are Christian infants, and that then God commands us to be baptized in his name. I went on satisfying my intellect with all the usual arguments. There is not a single argument that I could not make use of, but my heart was restless.

God in his mercy spoke to my soul again on the subject when I was reading my Bible perfectly quietly on board the steamship Scotsman, coming home from Canada last May. I took my Bible and thought I would look out all the passages about baptism once more. I did so. My heart was in full communion with Jesus, and I said to Him, “Blessed Lord, if I do not really know the truth as to these things, show it to me.” I do not think one hour had passed before I was certain in my soul that it was the Lord's will I should be buried with Christ in baptism. When I got home I waited in order that the voice of the Lord should be confirmed in my soul. I did not want to do anything rashly; I was fully aware of the grave consequences of this step. The Lord confirmed his voice in my heart, and when I met my beloved brother Mr. Meyer at Keswick this year, the Lord told me to ask him to baptize me in the name of the Lord. Therefore I stand here conscious—praise be to God—that the wilderness experience is over.

There were words which I heard twenty-one and a-half years ago. When one was being baptized—I think it was Lord Carrick—the friend who was baptizing said: “When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee.” These words are in my soul this morning—God has revived them in my soul after twenty-one years of disobedience. So once more I cast myself on God, that He will show me the path of life henceforth.

During the closing sentences of his touching little address Mr. Grubb was greatly moved; his words came between pauses and sobs and tears of emotion. As he concluded there were hearty “Amens” from some of those present. Then it was the turn of his two companions in witness-bearing to speak; their names were William Grinley and John Stuart Holden. The former told of his spiritual experiences and how he had been led to take this step—a step which he was taking in opposition to his father and his church. But he felt he must obey God rather than man. Mr. Holden's experience was marked by some striking features. He was at Cambridge University preparing for the ministry of the Church of England, and was invited by a Baptist pastor to speak at the baptism of an intimate friend, the pastor thinking that he had himself been obedient to the truth. Then he was asked to conduct a mission in this same chapel, and when some of the converts confessed Christ in baptism he was compelled to yield and to be disobedient no longer. Both these young men spoke with great propriety and solemnity.

The act of baptism was proceeded with, Mr. Meyer first immersing Mr. Grubb and then his two comrades, with the usual formula. This being over, Mr. Meyer prayed with deep earnestness, especially on behalf of Mr. Grubb, whom he entreated God to make a powerful apostle of his Gospel in all parts of the world. The chief participants in the morning's ceremony having retired, the little company sang the doxology, in true Salvation Army style, led by Mr. Millard, and the impressive proceedings were ended.

hand pleasures for evermore. May He in his mercy give you now such enlargement of soul, that you may receive of Him the enlargement of blessing that He waits to give.”

Another hymn having been sung, Mr. Meyer then said: George Grubb, I understand that you desire me to baptize you, as a witness to your identification with the Lord Jesus Christ in his death and resurrection. If you would like to express your feelings on the matter, so do.

Mr. GRUBB rose and said:—I praise God with my whole heart for having brought me to this day. It seems to end a certain amount of wilderness experience. Twenty-one and a-half years ago, an aged sister, in the room this morning, brought me to attend an adult baptism in Grosvenor Hall in Dublin; and that sight I have never forgotten—my heart never forgot it. At that time I had entered Trinity College, Dublin, to prepare for the ministry of the Church of Ireland. Then I went to my Bible for the purpose of finding arguments in support of infant baptism; and I succeeded in doing so. I satisfied my intellect, and all questionings with regard to the validity and the Scripturality of infant

The Perth Conference.

FOR thirty-four successive years the invitation has gone forth that those who fear the Lord and think upon his name should meet and speak one to another in fellowship and conference. Special interest was imparted to the gathering this year owing to the presence of Major Whittle, American evangelist (who, with Mrs. Whittle, is paying a visit to our shores), Rev. Dr. Bruce, of Persia, and other missionaries representing work in Africa, India, and China.

The subject considered last week was "The spiritual life, a life of progress in the knowledge of God." Man's need of and craving for such knowledge, the growth in it of the child of God, and its practical effects evidenced in missions at home and abroad, were each enforced by speakers who were able from experience to testify of those things about which they spoke.

Monday evening was profitably spent in converse and prayer, an evangelistic meeting for women also being held. The session of the following morning was opened by the EARL OF MORAY, who, commenting upon Heb. viii. 5-13 and 2 Pet. i. 11, put the test questions—Are we, as we look back over the years since we first knew God, conscious of such a growth in our knowledge of Him as we are in the case of our earthly friends? Do we, in consequence, desire to walk more closely with Him? The relation to God of Abraham, Moses, David, and the saints listed in Hebrew xi., shows this to be the possible and natural outcome of knowing Him.

Rev. K. MOODY STUART (Moffat) expanded the same thought as he pointed out the products of this knowledge—humility, holiness, personal communion, trust, love, growth, etc. The fact of it coming to us by revelation leaves no room for pride; we are not discoverers of it, but scholars in it. In proportion as it increases in us, these qualities necessarily develop. A note of warning, however, was uttered against the worship of knowledge itself. Heart and head must find their right relation. Knowing about God is not the same as knowing God; so that while on the one hand Rome shuts the door of knowledge and forbids the free reading of the Bible, there is also a danger lest the wisdom of the intellect should usurp the place of that true wisdom which consists in personal acquaintance with the Lord.

The position of those without a saving knowledge of God was next illustrated by Rev. GEO. MILLIGAN (Caputh) from Ephes. ii. 1-12. Not only is death the result of sin, but sin is itself a state of death (v. 1), a continual drifting downward (v. 2), and this a natural, universal tendency (v. 3), culminating in alienation from God, and a state of hopelessness (v. 12): and is not hopelessness one of the most notable features of the literature of to-day? Yet even this dark picture has its rays of light; for man is still God's workmanship (v. 10); and life is offered through the risen Lord. It is here that Paul, in all his epistles, finds deliverance. It is not enough that Christ lived and walked upon the earth, leaving an example for us to follow. It is in Christ, risen, exalted, at the right hand of God (v. 6). The believer may taste of the risen life even now, as an aged blind shepherd replied to a well-meant remark from his minister to the effect that he would "soon be in heaven," "I've been there for the last ten years!"

Notice, further, this life is a gift, so it is stated twice positively and twice negatively—"by grace," "the gift of God," "not of yourselves," "not of works"—yet for good works (v. 10). The life which consists in knowing God is therefore a practical, useful, busy life, spent not for self but for the world lying without, that they may have the "life eternal," which is "to know God."

How is this knowledge to be obtained? It is found in the truths and facts of Revelation; it is the gift of the Holy Spirit; and is found in our co-operation with the Spirit in the obedience of faith. These were the phases of the subject to which the next speaker, Rev. D. M. MACINTYRE, of Glasgow, (successor to Dr. Andrew Bonar) addressed himself. Our nature requires God (compare such expressions in the Psalms as "My soul longeth," "fainteth," "crieth out"). Every side of man's nature demands a knowledge of God, and we are commanded to "love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and soul, and strength." As moral laws are stronger than intellectual, so the strongest of all are the spiritual. Faith and reason may travel together; but reason's last office is to open the door for faith to enter. Reason is like the Levite at the door of the Tabernacle: Faith, clad in white raiment, enters the holy of holies and stands in the presence of God Himself. Dr. Chalmers has said, "Faith is a venture; but she never ventures without eyes in her head." Faith is not weakness of understanding, but keenness of sight. She sees the King in his beauty in the land that is very far off. She demands obedience—and this is the spiritual life—"If any man wills to do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."

The afternoon was occupied with several lesser gatherings, devoted to such objects as prayer for children, reports of home missions and temperance work, meetings for women only, and for ministers. In the evening the fine hall was crowded to hear evangelistic addresses from Messrs. D. M. Macintyre, A. W. Bell, C.E. (Dunfermline), and Major Whittle, who spoke from such pointed texts as "He was angry, and would not go in" (Luke xv. 28); God's message to Abram, "Get thee out" (Gen. xii. 1); and, from references in Joshua, Hosea, and Isaiah, the Valley of Achor was used to illustrate a place of judgment, a door of hope, and a place of rest, the sinner requiring to pass the first before he can attain to the blessings of the other two.

WEDNESDAY.

The Wednesday morning session, presided over by W. E. Malcolm, Esq., of Burnfoot, was addressed by Rev. K. Moody Stuart, Rev. Geo. Wilson (Edinburgh), and Rev. D. M. Macintyre, upon the topic "How spiritual life grows and bears fruit in proportion as God is known."

Mr. MOODY STUART said the communication of knowledge is one of the most prominent features of our Lord's ministry and of that of the Christian Church in the ages since. This knowledge sheds light on the past, on our present relation to God, and upon our future destiny. All truth is in Him. Our chairman has pointed out that it is "hid in Christ." No need, therefore, to be gathering truth from all quarters.

ALL TRUTH IS IN JESUS.

Further, nothing but truth is in Jesus. There is no mistake in Him. "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." Then, too, He is the Great Manifestation of truth, so that we not only learn of Christ, but we learn Christ. And is there any practical outcome? The generations gone did not use modern inventions because they did not know of them. If they had known they would have used them. Knowledge must always lead the way to practice. To impart the knowledge of God is the great work of the Holy Spirit, and there is a special fitness in his being symbolised by "tongues of fire" (Acts ii.). For instance, as the "tongues of fire sat upon each of them," so the Spirit does his work still through individuals—not only the Apostles, but through the whole body of believers. As fire illuminates, so the knowledge of God is its own interpreter, and is self-evident—"burning words," burning their way into the hearts of men, and causing them to cry, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Self-interpreting, for each "heard in his own tongue"; and it suits all, old or young, rich or poor, and embraces all the nations of the earth. It is also unwearying, for it spreads from land to land, and cannot be stopped.

Rev. GEO. WILSON emphasized the important distinction between a knowledge of God, which is in conformity with the mind of man, and that which is in conformity with the will of God, and effectively forms Christian character. Many are "ever learning, yet never coming to a knowledge of the truth." The speaker developed his thoughts from these points:—

(1) The knowledge of God that enriches spiritual life is a knowledge of Him as intensely and attractively personal. No mere abstractions about, but acquaintance with, God. Dramatists of old were wont to represent abstract virtues and vices upon the stage, the actors personating friendship, avarice, jealousy, etc. Since Shakespeare's days, however, instead of abstract avarice we have concrete Shylock, while similarly Othello is jealousy personified. Even so the heart of man yearns for something more than vague generalities—it thirsts for the living God. (2) The knowledge of God which enriches spiritual life is knowledge of his character. The charm of a person is the charm of his character. It is the character of God that gleams from the cross and the resurrection, and should shine forth in the life of the child of God. (3) This knowledge only comes by communion with Him. We shall know Him in proportion as we live and walk with Him. (4) It comes not to the natural but to the supernatural mind. The man who tries to know God by force of natural intellect shuts himself out of the school in which alone he can learn about God. Only "in thy light shall we see light" (Psalm xxxvi. 9).

THE BRAIN MUST BE SERVANT TO THE HEART.

Man must be understood in order to be loved; God must be loved in order to be understood. Only those who know can love. (5) It must be immediately translated into obedience. "Hereby we know that we know Him, if we keep his commandments." Let us therefore "follow on to know the Lord."

With some thoughts upon Col. i. 9-12 Mr. MACINTYRE brought the session to a close. Right knowledge of God is not lifeless; it has hands and feet, and it moves. The marks of a "walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing" are fruitfulness in every good work, increase in the knowledge of God, strength unto patience and long suffering, joy and thanksgiving.

The afternoon was devoted to claims and reports of Foreign Missions, always a feature of this conference. Dr. CUNNINGHAM, on behalf of the Jews, described the wonderful awakenings associated with the names of Joseph Rabinowitch and Rabbi Lichtenstein, with which our readers are familiar, while other spheres were represented by Dr. Bruce (Persia), Rev. J. P. McLagan (China), and Rev. Robt. Gilgour (India). With the exception of Dr. Cunningham, these same speakers occupied the platform in the evening, when, in spite of very severe rain, the hall was again crowded.

These and other addresses will be reported in our next issue.

LADIES' MEETINGS.

Miss MUDIE, from Montrose, presided over the women's meeting on Monday evening, and Mrs. GIBBON gave an impressive address on Acts iii. 26.

The leading feature of the tea meetings was the presence of several ladies, chiefly from Perthshire, who are going to the foreign field. Miss MACKENZIE and Miss B. GARVIE are going as medical missionaries to Sialkot and Rajputana, being sent out by the Scotch Established and United Presbyterian Churches. Miss ROBSON, of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, is also qualifying for medical mission work; Miss ORMOND is going to help in the Y.W.C.A. in Bombay; while Miss PLUNKET, from Poona, has come home for training in the Free Church Missionary Institute for future work in India. All these ladies spoke shortly, asking for prayer and sympathy. Miss ROBSON gave an account of the S.V.M.U., which originated in America.

Mrs. STOTT, who has laboured for twenty-six years in China, gave 1 Peter i. 7 as a message to those who were going forth as missionaries, and urged them to put the same value on "the trial of faith" as God does. She illustrated this verse from the parable of the talents, Matt. xxv. 23: "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things," is "praise." "I will make thee ruler over many things"—"honour"; and "enter thou into the joy of thy Lord"—"glory"; and it is all "When the Lord of these servants cometh"—"at the appearing of Jesus Christ." During the past seven years the work at Venchow has prospered, as it always must when there is a living principle at work. A new development has been the formation of a Volunteer Preachers' Band. Four joined at first and the number has increased to fourteen. These working men spend their Sundays in the villages preaching. They receive no payment except their boat-money. The question then arose, How were they to be taught? They were too far from the city to attend Bible classes at night, but they agreed to spend the first month of the year at the Mission for Bible study and help in preparation; they gladly receive help and criticism. They are very original in their illustration. The following is an outline of an address on the Good Samaritan:—Jerusalem is heaven; Jericho the world. Man wandered from the presence of God and fell among thieves—the world, the flesh, and the devil. The Levite is the law; the priest, Confucianism, Buddhism, and all false religions. The Good Samaritan—the Lord Jesus—uses oil, the Holy Spirit; and wine—the blood of Christ—and sets the man on his beast—the Gospel message—and conveys him to the inn—the church—the innkeeper being pastors and teachers. Continue in prayer for us. I do not say we depend on your prayers, for if you were to fail God would still bless us; but oh! what a loss would be yours!

Mrs. MCCHEYNE PATERSON, from Gujerat, pointed out the close connection between work and prayer. So few go out to the work because there is so little prayer. During the past year, in answer to special prayer, there have been more baptisms than before. Three new lady missionaries are going out to the Punjab, two of them being medical missionaries. In an outlying village which had been visited six years ago a Christian woman was found. When asked how long she had believed, she said, "Ever since Christ first set foot in the village." The work is carried on in many ways—among the children at the tent-door, and by means of a magic-lantern, as well as in schools and zenanas. As an illustration of what may be done it was mentioned that one girl is being trained by a retired farm-servant.

Coming nearer home, there were two accounts of work in Corsica. Mrs. D. GILLESPIE, who has recently spent some weeks there, spoke of the great ignorance of the people, who are steeped in Roman Catholicism. Though there are blood feuds among the natives, they are very civil to strangers. The French Protestant Church has done a little work, and has a small congregation at Bastia. The McAll Mission has a station at Ajaccio, and Miss Grant-Brown is also working, but there is room for many more. Mrs. COLQUHOUN urged the need of medical mission work among the people, and told of the conversion of one woman who had not been in church for fifteen years because of the heavy dues demanded by the priests, which she was unable to pay.

From Scotland came reports of the Railway Mission and of rescue work. Mrs. CUMMING, from Montrose, spoke of the importance of special work among railway men. Some of them have few opportunities of attending church—occasionally only on one Sunday out of thirteen, and they have many temptations, one guard having been offered drink seventeen times between Carlisle and Perth. The men gratefully accept the monthly magazine, the "Railway Signal."

Mrs. COCHRANE gave several touching instances of rescue work in a quiet country parish, and emphasized the need of loving sympathy.

Mrs. GIBBON told of blessing resulting from mission work in Aberdeenshire.

On Thursday afternoon the Hon. GERTRUDE KINNAIRD presided over a farewell meeting for Miss Ormond, when she and other outgoing missionaries were commended to God in prayer.

Blankenburg Conference.

THIS Conference for the deepening of spiritual life was held August 31-September 4, and was attended by a larger number of friends than any previous conference. The Allianz Haus seemed almost elastic, and the hospitality of Fräulein von Weling unbounded to accommodate and provide for the many friends from north, south, east, and west, representing fourteen Christian denominations, among them a large number of pastors of the State Church of Germany.

England sent us the venerable Dr. Baedeker, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Rev. R. G. Walker, Rev. C. G. Moore, and other Christian friends. We had a daily prayer-meeting from 8 to 9, meetings from 10 to 12, 4 to 6, 8 to 10. The subject was "The glorious liberty of the children of God." Very solemnly the thralldom of the natural man, fettered in darkness, sin, and death, and his impossibility to free himself without Christ, was laid before us. Then, step by step we were led to see how freedom from the fetters of sin, the flesh, the world, and Satan, can only be obtained and preserved by dying with Christ and rising with Him in faith. The subject of the third day was the state of the children of God, when they are still bound under the law, and that only the saving and guiding grace of Christ can save us from the law and from self-guidance. The subject of the fourth day was the final, complete liberty of the children of God, and of the groaning creation through the coming of Christ.

The coming of Christ was only lightly touched upon for want of time, because one evening the awful sufferings of our poor Armenian brethren were laid before us by those intimately acquainted with all the horrors of those terrible persecutions. Mr. S—, a native Armenian pastor, showed us that it was not because they were a different race that they were persecuted, but because they were Christians. "Let us see who is stronger, your Jesus or our Mahomet," is the taunt of the Turk. Shall we stand with folded hands and see our Saviour thus reviled? The political powers of Europe in league with the Turk from jealousy and distrust of one another may be a Goliath in strength, but shall not the prayers of Christ's redeemed children be even stronger than David? The work of the China Inland Mission was recommended to our prayers by Mr. Hudson Taylor. On Wednesday we all, with very few exceptions, gathered round the Lord's table, to commemorate his love.

We do not know what the fruit of this Conference will be, eternity alone will reveal it, but the Word of God cannot return unto Him void, and I trust that all of us who had the privilege of attending the Conference returned to our homes with a larger view of our responsibilities and privileges as the redeemed children of God, and a fresh consecration to his service,

ANNA VON MILECKA.

Doncaster Races.

IT was the unanimous testimony of those engaged in the work of the Open-air Mission at Doncaster Races last week that in all our experience we had never beheld such a mighty concourse of human beings. Take this one fact as an illustration of what we witnessed. On the afternoon of Wednesday—the day of the "St. Leger"—we took our stand on a slight eminence commanding a great part of the one broad highway, about a mile and a quarter in length, which leads from the racecourse to the Great Northern Station.

From end to end it was literally blackened with the living, moving mass of people, the pavements on either side being packed, and the roadway filled with thousands of crowded vehicles of all descriptions, from the Prince of Wales's carriage to the costermonger's cart. For two hours this surging human stream continued to flow without any diminution in its volume. How many hundreds of thousands of people that implies I leave abler heads than mine to estimate. So awful an illustration of the power of the gambling evil cannot be seen anywhere else—not even at Epsom.

The 30,000 tracts, booklets, and Scripture portions distributed by the agents of the Mission were received with wonderful willingness. Some were torn up, some were rejected with vile oaths and curses, but the vast majority were placed in the pocket for "a convenient season." In many cases as the people passed, they almost snatched them from us, and sometimes, after taking several thousands to a place of vantage, the whole were gone in half-an-hour! It cannot be too strongly emphasised that ordinary leaflet tracts of one or two pages are quite unsuitable for this work. The choicest publications that sanctified ingenuity can suggest, and that money can buy, should be used for such unique opportunities. We found, for instance, that Rev. P. B. Power's splendid tract, "The Straight Tip," and my own little booklet, "The Betting Man's Decision," were taken most eagerly, probably because of the illustrations they bear. Each of these is published by the Stirling Tract Enterprise.

As to the Gospel services, our agents from London and myself were greatly helped by a contingent of members and friends from Sheffield, Wakefield, Hull, and Otley, while our kind friend, Mr. Robert Thomson, of Hull, journeyed all the way from Harrogate. The Market-place in the early morning and evening, among the fair people; the racecourse in the forenoon, and St. Sepulchre Gate at night were all occupied, and often the audiences were very large. Interruptions from drunken people were frequent, and on the racecourse the audiences changed every five minutes, but on the whole we were immensely cheered with the reception of the Word. The culminating point was reached on Thursday night, when the power of God was present in a remarkable manner, stilling the people to an intense silence and receptiveness.

Lastly, let me thankfully record the fact that sinners were converted to God. One young man, a commercial traveller who had come to stay in the town to attend the races, was converted at the street meeting on Tuesday night, gave his name and address, and resolved to leave by the first train on the following morning. Other similar instances cheered our hearts, and assured us that God was indeed with us.

I should add that the Racecourse Mission was represented by several earnest men, for whose labours, in addition to our own, there was indeed abundant room. On Thursday morning they and we held a united service on the racecourse.

Twelve lady missionaries sailed from England on Friday for China, to take up work under the auspices of the C.I.M. Nine are going out for the first time.

Our Armenian Neighbours.

By CANON RAWNSLEY.

The Canon recently preached at Crosthwaite Church, Keswick, a powerful sermon on the parable of the Good Samaritan. We give the concluding portion:—

FROM that day to this the Christian world has wanted no more definitions of "Who is my neighbour?" Men who have gone to Christ for teaching have given up asking "Who is my neighbour?" as being a question quite beside the point. Rather they have kept their ears and eyes open, and their hearts ready to respond to any call of real need. "To whom can I be a neighbour?" is the question now; and the answer is, "To Me, the wounded Saviour, in the bodies of these, thy brethren. For inasmuch as ye do acts of kindness to one of the least of these, my brethren, who are in need, ye do it unto Me"; and in the doing ye shall find that you and Christ, the compassionate Jesus, the Saviour, are closer neighbours than ye dreamed.

For the dear Christ dwells not afar,
The King of some remoter star,
But here, among the poor and blind,
The bound and suffering of our kind.
In work we do, in prayers we pray,
Life of our life, He lives to-day.

As to individuals, so to nations comes the choice of helping the wounded man, or passing him by on the otherside. This nation is passing through just such a test at this time. Away in Armenia is the remnant of one of the tribes of the most ancient Christian peoples on the face of the globe. Once a nation of thirty millions—they were seventeen years ago three millions—they have now, by brutal butchery, torture, and oppression unbelievable and devilish beyond imagination, slow at first, but none the less sure in the operation—swift at the last with terrible swiftness, been reduced to one million, mostly women and children. In the past three years they have undergone such agonies as cannot be written of, and an organised plan of wiping a whole nation from the face of the earth, because it dares to be Christian, has been pitilessly enforced.

The region devastated by brigands and soldiers is five hundred miles long by three hundred broad. Fifty thousand men, chiefly breadwinners, have been massacred in the past three years (exclusive of the murdered thousands in Constantinople), 47,600 houses and shops plundered or burnt to the ground, 46,000 Christians forced by fear to embrace Islamism. Half a million, mostly women and children, are without sufficient food and clothing and means of support. These people that remain alive are being kept alive by a halfpenny a head per day. They dread the sword of the frost and the cold of the coming winter almost as much as they fear the sword of the Turkish assassin. Nay, they have lost fear of the latter. They cry, "Would to God we had died when our fathers and brothers died. We looked to the Powers to help us as they were pledged to do, and we have been miserably deceived and doomed!"

And now, in that vast district of Anatolia not a single Christian when he wakes knows if he will see the sunset, and not a woman goes to rest but fears she will be dishonoured before the dawn. I have this from one who has lived there till a few weeks back. Why all this misery? Because they are Christians—passionately Christian, and cling to a faith for which they have suffered persecution more or less since the Mohammedan hordes overwhelmed the land in the seventh century.

From maddened, miserable Armenia comes the cry to us fellow-Christians, which is heard in heaven, and nothing but the tremendous judgment of God can wait upon us as a nation if we palter any longer with our consciences, if, as a nation, we any longer make excuses, as the pusillanimous priest and Levite did, and finding that poor wounded brother Christian of the East stripped and half dead by the wayside of a murderous Moslemism, we pass by on the other side. The England of St. George's the land of liberty! England, that believes in the happy home-life, in purity from man, in innocence for maidenhood. This England, that can give education and human progress, can no more justify her mute inaction as she sees the last million of this unhappy race torn limb from limb by those cruel robbers in the Armenian wilderness, than that priest and Levite could have been justified, as they went up that day to their national house of prayer, by any question to their guilty consciences of "Who is my neighbour?"

"A SPECTACLE OF SELFISH COWARDICE."

Is there another instance in history of the greatest and strongest nations of the world standing by in silent acquiescence while the weakest and most corrupt breaks their treaties, insults their citizens, loots their property, and massacres by the wholesale a nation whose only crime has been its profession of their faith, its industry and desire for advancement, and its helplessness? Great as is the crime of the Turk, the crime of Europe is still greater. The Turk believes himself to be fighting for his life. Europe refuses to lift a finger lest one nation should get some political advantage over the other, and America stands equally silent, leaving the rabble to sneer at a Government that cannot protect its own citizens, allows its ambassador to be snubbed by Palace officials, and contents itself with basting notes. Never has there been, in the history of Christianity, such a spectacle of selfish cowardice.—N.Y. Independent.

"A SCANDAL TO CIVILISATION."

Protests innumerable have been made to the Sultan; but all the remonstrances have not saved a single Armenian life. They have been of no value in the mind of this stiff-necked tyrant. The writing of Joint Notes is merely a waste of excellent stationery. But can nothing be done? Is there no way by which this scandal to civilisation in the dominions of the Sultan can be stopped without a European war? Surely, if the arts of diplomacy are exhausted as between the Powers and the present Sultan, another occupant might be found for the somewhat perilous throne he has disgraced. The rule of Abdul Hamid is not indispensable to the preservation of the Ottoman Empire. It is inconceivable that he should be suffered to render nugatory the efforts of the Powers to discharge their obligations towards the Christian races within his dominions. With all their resources, moral and material, it ought to be possible for the Powers to bring the Sultan's era of government by massacre and outrage to an abrupt close, either with him or without him. To plead their mutual jealousies as an excuse for inaction is a severe reflection upon Christian civilisation. We are not surprised that there is a growing feeling in this country that the situation is becoming intolerable. Nor would it astonish us to see this feeling develop into a violent agitation against the barbarity and iniquity of Turkish rule. That the statesmen of Europe need the help of public opinion the telegrams show, for, though Constantinople is not just now an Armenian shambles, the general outlook is as black as ever.—The Standard.

TO THE WOMEN OF ENGLAND.

Lady Henry Somerset writes:—"Multitudes of women in all parts of this country have been watching and waiting in vain for the deliverance of the Armenian Christians. Some have vigorously worked at collecting funds, but many, bewildered by the counter-statements which were continually coming to them, have not known how to act, and could only suffer and pray. But now the time has surely come when not one single Englishwoman dare be content with inactivity. The members of every woman's organisation must be aroused, the imperative call for help must be heard at every door, meetings must be organised, funds gathered, and enthusiasm kindled.

"Money and help have been sent by the women of America. The Women's Christian Temperance Union has worked unceasingly; from the distant plains of Dakota to the New England hills money has been gathered at the cost of real self-sacrifice. The women of Canada have responded nobly. Can the women of England be deaf to what is now the cry of a nation's death agony? Let the people of this country be aroused to the urgency of the need, the horror of the situation, and the responsibility of England, and a solution of the problem will assuredly be found. To the women does it especially belong to succour their sisters in their dire hour of need. Let them grasp their opportunity, and avail themselves of the privilege of proving the value of a Christianity here which has triumphed yonder over unspeakable suffering and unmerciful death."

Armenia.

ARMENIA! drenched with martyrs' blood,
And devastated by the sword;
Thou art not hidden from the Lord.
His eyes behold that crimson flood:
And He who rules from out his righteous throne
For all thy bitter sorrows shall atone.

Though He may stay awhile the rod,
Sure shall the stroke of judgment fall:
And while thy cries of anguish call
For the deliverance of thy God,
The winepress of his fury He shall tread,
And there avenge thy nation of its dead.

O, ye who have not stretched the hand
To save the slaughtered from the foe,
Or bring them succour in their woe—
Can ye that day acquitted stand
When God shall rise in all his righteous ire,
And visit earth as a Consuming Fire?

Sanctioned ye not the ghastly fray
Who had the power to do the right,
And yet subscribed not of your might;
When dying men that might did pray?
O mercy, thou who wert accursed likewise,
Behold, and horror-stricken veil thine eyes!

How long, O Lord, how long, we cry,
Shall evil rampant reign? How long
Shall "Christian" thrones permit this wrong,
And boast of peace while thousands die,
With outstretched arms that Christian help to crave,
Which "Christian" kingdoms never, never gave?

Till God arise, Armenia, then
Thy retribution thou shalt see,
And all thy foes shall scattered be,
The Lord Jehovah, He shall reign;
And ruling justly from his righteous throne,
For all thy bitter sorrows shall atone.

JOHN WILFRID MCCLURE.

The Gospel and Women.—Wherever the Gospel is preached woman is assigned her rightful place of equality and respect in society with men. Non-Christian faiths degrade her with an infinite degradation. In these lands women receive but little or no education, because she is thought to be better looking and more easily managed when she is ignorant than when she is educated. But wherever the Gospel of the Son of Mary goes, woman is not only educated and redeemed, but she is accorded the same advantages and opportunities as are given to men.—New York Independent.

Hyde Park.—During the few weeks that the new park regulations have been in operation (says the London correspondent of The Manchester Guardian), the police have not suppressed any of the orators, and the number is not less than before. The constables listen attentively to the lectures, with the object of acting if anything indecent or blasphemous is said. This moderate course has proved strong enough. In addition to Christian, Freethought, anti-Catholic, and Socialist lecturers, there are occasionally some of a strange kind. One, for example, is an Indian, in his native costume, who discourses on Eastern faiths.

The Czar and the Bible Society.—There are few countries in which the Bible Society receive greater facilities for their work than Russia, and the London committee have just presented the Czar with a beautiful copy of the Bible, while the local agent in Russia has sent his Majesty twenty-three volumes beautifully bound in green and gold, being specimens of the Russian translations circulated in the Empire. The "Sermon on the Mount," in the Braille type for the blind, was of special interest. The gift was accompanied by a letter to the Emperor, expressing the Society's thanks for having been "permitted to give to the relatives of those who died on Khodinsky Plain" the comfort of the Scriptures. The late Prince Lobanoff was bidden by the Czar "to be the interpreter of his sincere thanks," and the letter was written very shortly before the Prince's death.

Letters to the Editor.

THE ARMENIAN HORRORS.

SIR,—To-day England admits the fact of the Armenian atrocities. The hideous past, the seething present, and the probably still more awful future, together with our national responsibility, are laid bare before the nation's conscience.

This is not the time to discuss the causes that have led up to the present condition of things, nor to attempt to saddle particular responsibility upon any person or persons. The question before this country is, What can be done at once to put an end to the horrors? The people are stirred, and well they may be. They have, however, been stirred before, and the stir has passed while the atrocities continue. Diplomacy, Parliamentary discussion, public meetings, continuous protests and articles in leading newspapers, as well as many other well-meant efforts, have failed to bring about what we desire. Let us not waste our time and further endanger the cause we have at heart by a mere repetition of these methods.

There lies immediately before us an almost unparalleled opportunity, unparalleled in regard to its simplicity and almost certainty of success. Within a week the young Czar of Russia will be the guest of the Queen of England. No one can doubt that sooner or later we must come to agreement with Russia or Bismarck Her Majesty will have another opportunity of exercising those marvellous diplomatic gifts with which she has been so lavishly endowed. May I suggest that every public meeting called to consider the Armenian question should pass a resolution, and every leading newspaper should publish an article, humbly but urgently petitioning Her Majesty to undertake this Queenly embassy of love.

In the recently-published correspondence of Prince Bismarck we find how in 1875 Queen Victoria, by Her Majesty's personal intervention, frustrated the Bismarckian policy of an unprovoked attack upon France. In the visit of the Czar of Russia to Balmoral Her Majesty will have another opportunity of exercising those marvellous diplomatic gifts with which she has been so lavishly endowed. May I suggest that every public meeting called to consider the Armenian question should pass a resolution, and every leading newspaper should publish an article, humbly but urgently petitioning Her Majesty to undertake this Queenly embassy of love.

The doyen of monarchs could not more gloriously begin this record year of her reign than in bringing peace and happiness to the sorely-stricken Armenian people, whom Britain has doubly promised to succour and protect.—Your obedient servant,

READER HARRIS.

THE ANSWERING OF PRAYER.

SIR,—The question which "Inquirer" puts forward in behalf of his young friends under the above heading is always a difficult one to answer fully in the columns of a paper, although conversationally the matter is easy enough to elucidate. Those who have had a thorough awakening at conversion—as it were, a veritable thunderbolt from the Almighty—never again "doubt" under any circumstances whatsoever, their attitude being towards God one of perfect trust, perfect submission, and absolute dependence upon Him for daily guidance.

These do not in the least trouble whether prayer is or is not answered. They place their petition before God, and leave it there, and this is in reality laying our burdens at the feet of the Lord Jesus Christ, who has told us that He will bear them for us, and He does so. Young converts, however, of less powerful experiences at conversion, are frequently aghast at the seemingly few answers that God vouchsafes them; these not unfrequently fall away and become listless in their devotional exercises.

It is to help such that a few letters on this subject might do good. With that object in view, I would endeavour to put the matter as clearly as I can, as it appears to me. Those of us who have a "quiver full" of little ones know that the paternal or maternal feelings towards them are quite sufficient to supply all their wants without one word from them. The parents, urged by love alone, know all their wants and satisfy them all in due course. The "little ones" often clamour for this or that; the parents do not like it, and it is not too much to say that children of this disposition—most of them are—lose a lot more than they get, entirely owing to this hanging around the parental knees when there is a prospect of something good. We have all felt that way towards our children, a certain displeasure that they "asked for a thing" that they would certainly have got without asking. The result is a denial of the "good thing" for that occasion, although it may be given later on after all.

Of course, we have been told to be "importunate," and that by the Lord Jesus Himself, but—"importunity" is not a lovable trait in a child's nature, and where the childlike attitude, of which I speak, is real towards God, prayer, as we too often misinterpret the word, is not absolutely necessary even to the closest walk with God. This may seem paradoxical, but it is true none the less, and a moment's reflection will show us that a child on its knees before a parent for every small want would be an anomalous state of childhood. Prayer is an excellent thing, no doubt; but it is an abnormal state of soul in a child towards its Heavenly Father.

In making requests to God, they should, as a rule, be for others, and not for ourselves. There is no doubt, for instance, that a person who prays the "prayer of faith" for an unconverted brother, or sister, or friend, or foe for that matter, is most unquestionably heard there and then, and the matter as regards himself, the person prayed for, and God is at an end, and may be left there. If, however, we go beyond this, and continually ask for small things not essential to the soul life, we are sure to get no answers whatever, and properly so.

To illustrate the point, suppose a person in a violent attack of toothache drops on his knees, in a more or less passionate state, and asks for a mitigation of the suffering. What can the result be but an aggravation of the suffering, till the lesson of patience is fully learnt first? This is the experience of most Christians, and afterthought shows us that it is the only possible answer to prayers of this nature. If "Inquirer" could have specified the instances in which the prayers of his, or her, friends have not been answered, I have no doubt it would be found that answers would be got to all those that are proper, urgent, and earnest requests. "Direct" answers to prayer are seldom necessary with God; his time is absolutely his own; but many instances occur where an immediate reply seems to us the only way out of a difficulty, and in such cases, no doubt, a direct answer is received to encourage us. Let not "Inquirer's" young friends despair on that account, for "direct" answers are very rare, even in the case of God's most earnest children; but what is of far more value than even the gift of "prevailing in prayer" with God is that childlike attitude of soul that can look into its Father's eye with love and perfect trust, and say nothing.

PROPORTIONATE GIVING.

DEAR SIR,—It is well that your correspondent, "Merchant," has, at page 22 of last week's CHRISTIAN, stated clearly the difficulties he has met with, and he says he should esteem any reply which may be offered.

His difficulties are very real, and appear to be, first, that of ascertaining weekly how much to give, or rather to "lay by in store as God has prospered him," and it would be a difficulty with many merchants and others to obey this command literally, but the spirit, if not the letter of the command, is fulfilled by doing so on the first day of the month or year.

Fifty years ago the writer was in a small way of business, and as he was fond of statistics and book-keeping, he knew every Saturday night what he had earned, and for many years continued as a religious duty on Sunday morning to set aside, or "lay by him in store," as God had prospered him during the week. But when he became engaged in extensive and complicated merchandise, it was impossible to ascertain his profits oftener than once a year; and even this annual calculation was (as your correspondent says) liable to be modified by subsequent experience. The corresponding alterations were made in the gifts without difficulty, as a book was now kept showing year by year how much had been decided on as the proper sum to be given away during the twelve months, and how much had actually been given.

Subsequently, when his business included considerable foreign trade, the results of which were uncertain for some months, and necessitated alteration in the estimate of the year's profits, it was found expedient every year to give according to the preceding year's gains, which gains had become thoroughly ascertained, and the sum thereof being divided into twelve parts, care was taken to give about as much as one of these parts each month, balancing at the end of the year.

These real difficulties mentioned by your correspondent "Merchant" are not experienced by those living on a fixed income.

"Merchant" also asks concerning the case of one in business who, through misfortune, has had a succession of bad years, causing loss rather than gain, whether he is to give from his remaining capital? But such an one is not included among those to whom the command (1 Cor. xvi. 2) is given. God has not prospered him at all during those years.

"Merchant" says he hopes he has made his inquiry plain, and it is hoped that this reply, together with the letter at page 25 of THE CHRISTIAN of September 3, with the same signature, will include the several points he mentions; but, if there are others, he will do further service to the good cause by stating them that they may be met, though the present writer may be unable to continue this correspondence, being an invalid in his eighty-second year. It should be remembered that when we have given away the proportion which we believe to be in accordance with the Scriptures (1 Cor. xvi. 2), that which remains in our hands is the Lord's, to be used for his glory in bringing up one's family, and in trading, or otherwise.

M. H. S.

"Ye are not your own, for ye were bought with a price. Glorify God then in your body."—1 Cor. vi. 19.

DEAR SIR,—In view of the correspondence now going on in THE CHRISTIAN, permit me to say that the perplexities as to how much we should give to the Lord would soon be solved did we but realise the position which we occupy with regard to Him. If we are redeemed, we have been bought with a price and belong to Him who purchased us. The early disciples gloried in calling themselves "the bond-slaves of Jesus Christ." The bond-slave had not anything of his own, his body, his wife, family, etc., all were the property of his master, he could not give his master anything, for all was already his, but he could serve him with love and devotion willingly, if he wished so to do.

This is our position with regard to our Lord and Master. How this simplifies the Christian life, it is not how much or how little ought I to give, but all I have belongs to my Master. If I claim anything as my own, I am robbing Him. My body is his, I must feed it and clothe it and care for it for Him, not in order to indulge self; my business is his, I must conduct it only according to his will; my time is his, to be used only in his service. He must appoint for me my home, my work, my friends.

All this, because He bought me with the price of his own life-blood; it is simply his right. When we talk so complacently of what we will give to Jesus, surely we forget this great fact with which our Christian life started.

Herein lies the rest and peace which should be ours. One Master undertakes all for us, and as we trust alone to Him, so does He guide and direct by the promptings of his Spirit within us.

Our attitude towards Him must be that of a loving, grateful slave, who ever looks up into the face of his Master for instructions, and keeps near enough to Him to hear his slightest whisper; and blessed be God, as we take this position at his feet. He calls us not slaves, but friends (John xv. 14, 15); nay, more, the purchased one is raised to the position of son, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ (Rom. viii. 16, 17). How can we then discuss any longer as to whether we shall dole out to Him a tenth or more or less, when He claims all by right? As to the best methods of service and first claims, &c., the Bible gives ample and clear directions, it is the revealed will of our Master concerning every duty. Whether it be providing for our families (1 Tim. v. 8), or administering to the necessities of the saints (Rom. xii. 19), or business (Rom. xii. 11), or giving our money or our children or ourselves to foreign missions, it is all one—just the portioning out of our Master's property according to his will. Trusting these few lines may be helpful, yours truly,

Keswick, September 12.

"WAIT AND SEE!"

SIR,—The article by "M." on page 11, in THE CHRISTIAN of August 27, much pleased me. I was for more than a year dwelling with two evangelists and Christian teachers. They frequently talked of unfulfilled prophecy and various perplexing questions; and they told me their views on the several subjects, and asked for my judgment. In many cases I simply replied, "I shall wait and see." So, ultimately, one of them called me "Mr. Wait and See."

I am much pained just now, having heard that a section of the Christian Church has excluded some Christians from partaking of the Lord's Supper in company with them, because they will not say that they believe that a certain unfulfilled Scripture will take place in the way that this particular sect says it will. No true believer in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ, obedient to the one great command of God in 1 John iii. 23, can ever be excluded from the one Church of God, nor from feeding on the body and blood of Christ; therefore, no section of the Church should ever exclude any such while their moral conduct is consistent with their profession.

Let us be comparatively silent on unfulfilled prophecy and perplexing questions, and

TEMPERANCE HOTELS.

DEAR SIR,—In the "Temperance Notes" of a recent issue there is a laudatory notice of the Midland Temperance Hotel, Bournemouth, doubtless well deserved. But "expressio unius est exclusio alterius," so will you allow me to mention in your columns the Waverley Temperance Hotel, Bournemouth, within a few minutes' walk of East Cliff, most comfortable and well appointed in every way, and most moderate in its charges. I enclose my card.

September 7, 1896.

CREDE EXPERTO.

SIR,—In your "Notes and Comments" for August 27 you advocate more good temperance hotels. One practical difficulty I have experienced is that it is difficult for a traveller arriving in a strange town to ascertain whether such an hotel exists or not. I travel every year on business, and I always go to a temperance hotel when I know there is a good one, but from want of such knowledge I have often gone to an ordinary hotel.

Once in a temperance hotel in Exeter I saw a list of similar hotels in other towns. This I at once copied, and have found useful, but the list was a short one.

What is wanted is a list of all first-class temperance hotels in Great Britain and Ireland. Might I suggest that you might help forward the object you had in view in making the comment I refer to in your issue of August 27, by opening your columns to the publication of such a list? Could you not invite readers of THE CHRISTIAN to send you a list, with names and addresses of all temperance hotels they can recommend. In a few weeks' time you could publish that list, stating, of course, that you are not responsible for it. I feel sure that the publication of such a list would help to support temperance hotels.

—Yours truly,

DOUGLAS JONES.

[We shall be very pleased to carry out our friend's suggestion, premising that recommendations of temperance hotels as first-class for good management, cleanliness, attention, cuisine, etc., shall be authenticated by the names and addresses of those commending them—not necessarily for publication.—ED.]

SUNDAY LABOUR.

DEAR SIR,—In these days, when the question of Sabbath rest is so much to the fore, I venture to ask, through the medium of your paper, if it would not be an interesting inquiry to endeavour to ascertain what classes of persons are engaged in Sunday labour, whether the same arises from the actual Sunday needs of their fellows, or in preparation for other needs on the following day. I think, if such a list appeared in the public press, many would be surprised at the extent to which a considerable class of the community are so engaged, whilst they themselves have the full enjoyment of one of the greatest boons to mankind; so true is it that one-half the world does not know how the other half lives.

The publication of such a list might be pregnant with good results to those whose condition, from a Christian, not to say humanitarian, point of view, it is feared is so much in this respect to be deplored.—Yours faithfully,

EDWARD J. COX.

Carlton Vale Mission.—The eighth anniversary of this Mission was recently celebrated. Special sermons were preached to large congregations. At the public meeting, Mr. Tridgell, the secretary of the Mission, referred to the early efforts of Mr. A. Martin on behalf of the Mission, coupled with the vicissitudes they experienced when suddenly plunged into a debt of £250 through an architectural blunder. This sum has now been reduced to £19, which it is hoped will be wiped off before the end of the year. The members now number eighty. The Mission is unsectarian, and is supported by the working men and women forming the congregation, with the exception of valued help rendered by Mr. Joseph Peters, Mr. John Aird, M.P., and other friends. Several friends gave addresses.

Lepers in Bengal.

AT the asylum supported by the Mission to Lepers at Asansol, a good and growing work is being done among these poor sufferers. The institution bears the name of "Christaram," meaning "rest in Christ," and not a few of its afflicted inmates have found rest and hope in Him whose Divine mission was demonstrated in that the lepers were cleansed. An account appeared recently in The Indian Witness, after a visit from its representative. He says:—

"Most touching and suggestive of Christ's mission on earth is the little leper asylum at Asansol. A leper is a leper everywhere, yet a leper in rags, begging at the ghats or on the streets, is a very different-looking creature to the lepers in this rustic home, provided for them by the Christian benevolence of the Mission to Lepers. It would give the supporters of the Society much satisfaction could they see with their own eyes the blessing their benevolence has brought to these unfortunate people. On a piece of broken, sandy ground, which in a few years will be a shady grove and orchard, stand the two rows of houses for men and women, with the little church midway between. Christian love and sympathy in the hearts of people six hundred miles away caused this asylum to be reared, and furnishes the helpless ones their daily bread. When we went on to the men's quarters, and heard them sing a Christian bhajan in praise of Christ, we realised as never before, that his name and his Gospel give these hopeless, helpless ones just the hope and help they so sorely need."

Several new openings are before the committee, and whether they can respond to the pitiable need of these afflicted outcasts depends mainly on the gifts of the Lord's stewards. A very touching appeal is to hand from Rev. T. B. Bawa, a native minister, for help to build a small home for the untainted children of lepers. He says that if he had £85 he could, after the rainy season is over, erect a small home for these little ones, and his wife would teach them and care for them. Communications may be addressed to Mr. J. Jackson, hon. sec. for London and district, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

F.C. Mission in Aberdeen.

THE extended winter mission arranged for by the Free Presbytery of Aberdeen commenced its work on Sunday, 6th inst. By this movement all the Free Church congregations of the Presbytery—extending beyond the city, in some cases many miles into the country—will be visited by evangelists during the next three months, a week of special services being held in each.

First on the list is Mr. W. R. Lane, who began in Free South Church (Rev. W. M. Clow), and on Sunday last moved to Queen's Cross (Rev. Martin Lewis). He will be followed in the various city churches by Messrs. Andrew Stewart (China), Bewley and Frank Weaver, Charles Inglis, W. D. Dunn, and Gipsy Smith; while the outlying churches will be visited by Messrs. Binnie, Stewart, and Rev. A. Hardie.

As to the first ten days, it may be said that Mr. Lane's visit has been the means of arousing very encouraging interest both at the afternoon Bible readings, held in Free West Church (Rev. G. Webster Thomson), and evening Gospel services. The attendance, in spite of unpropitious weather, has been good. This is Mr. Lane's first visit to the city, and the cordial welcome he has received from ministers and people augurs well for the improvement of their mutual acquaintance.

Sunday by the Sea.—The Cleethorpes (Lincolnshire) District Council have adopted resolutions dealing with the Sunday trading question. They have decided that no boats or hackney carriages shall be allowed to ply for hire on Sundays. The maximum penalty for offences against the bye-law is to be £5, with the cancelling of the licence. All street touting and the shouting of wares is also prohibited. Bathing machines are in future to be licensed and inspected, and not allowed to be hired out on Sundays. In addition to passing these resolutions, a vigorous protest has been made against the drinking that is allowed in the Sunday trains. This will no doubt keep a good many excursionists away. All the more reason therefore for Christian visitors to make up the deficiency with their support.

Slavery in Zanzibar.

IN the official correspondence relating to British East Africa, which has been printed, Mr. Hardinge, our diplomatic agent, appears as the chief upholder of slavery in Zanzibar. It would be dangerous, says Mr. Hardinge, to interfere further with the "Mahometan slavery laws." The Arab planters in Zanzibar and Pemba must be allowed to keep 150,000 wretched Africans in servitude on their plantations, lest they should rise and shake the British Empire to its foundations. The last insurrection in Zanzibar was suppressed the other day in fifty minutes by our warships, but we are to tolerate slavery for fear of another revolt of these terrible Arabs. Mr. Hardinge then asserts that the export of slaves to Zanzibar from the British East African coast is "practically extinct."

As we maintain a squadron in these waters at a cost of £80,000 a year to stop the slave trade, and as 6000 slaves are yearly smuggled into Zanzibar and Pemba despite all the efforts of our commanders, Mr. Hardinge must mean that all the slaves come from German territory, a statement which would need a great deal of proof, and which is also beside the point. Mr. Hardinge does not deny that many slaves are brought over from the mainland in small parties, and that the Zanzibar laws of 1873 forbidding the importation of slaves are practically useless. This fully confirms the belief of Mr. Donald Mackenzie and others who have inquired into the question, that the majority of the slaves in Zanzibar and Pemba are held by their owners in violation even of the "Mahometan slavery laws," which Mr. Hardinge holds in such profound respect. It is to be hoped that the Foreign Office will not be hindered by arguments that are as pitiful as they are obsolete in doing its duty towards the slaves in Zanzibar.—Manchester Guardian.

Europe and Africa.

THE uncivilised earth has a heavy account against its civilised guardians. Europe has, in the main, inoculated the savage races with its vices rather than with its virtues, and they have flown through the veins of black and yellow men like raging pestilences. Disease, prostitution, drunkenness, are the white man's hallmarks; by them he is known on every Pacific strand, on every African lake and forest where his feet have trod; and in too many cases they obliterate the higher religious and moral code, the saving gifts of energy and industry which he also carries with him.

And what have we to show within the sphere of our own more intimate society in return for the evil we have done to the inferior races? In the Europe of to-day we can show next to nothing. Judging by the history of the Turkish crisis the Christian Powers have neither courage nor faith in themselves or in each other; they will combine for nothing that remotely resembles a moral end; and their timorousness has grown with their command of destructive material on a scale unparalleled in human history. And yet we hesitate to abandon the hope that the era of blind fear and selfishness will come to an end.—Daily Chronicle.

P.S.A.

ON Thursday, September 10, an important conference of ladies and gentlemen interested in the P.S.A. movement was held at the Y.M.C.A., Leicester, under the presidency of Mr. T. H. Lloyd. Rev. F. B. Meyer, Dr. Paton (of Nottingham), Mr. Reginald Hodder (of Derby), Rev. Eben. Gould (of Leamington), Mr. Rhodes (of Manchester), Rev. W. Stephen (of London), Mr. John Blackham, and others were present.

A series of recommendations was drawn up for presentation to the next National Conference, which, while allowing great liberty in the institution and maintenance of P.S.A. Societies, should promote the strength and unity of the entire movement. Strong hopes were expressed that nothing would prevent the continual development of the P.S.A. movement in accordance with the great Evangelical principles by which it has been inspired hitherto.

The Evangelical Alliance has issued its customary call to united prayer during the opening week of the approaching New Year. The usual sequence of subjects will be followed. Copies of the circular may be had from the office of the Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C. Many friends of Christian union may like to know that the full and comprehensive epitome of the past work of the Alliance, entitled "These Fifty Years," which was prepared and partly read at the recent jubilee conference by Mr. A. J. Arnold, the secretary, is published in a neat pamphlet (1s. per doz. post free).

REVIEW OF QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT.—PROV. XVIII. 10.

THIS series covers the whole period of David's reign. As our Golden Text suggests, trust in God was the prominent feature in David's life. To go through the whole of the incidents dealt with during this series is impossible. Select a few in which the lesson of trust in God is specially manifest.

1. When he needed direction (Lesson I.). Every obstacle to his becoming king is now removed; yet he dare not act without Divine counsel. His trust in God leads him to inquire of God. Learn the lesson. Submit to Him not only great things, but matters that seem trifling and insignificant. The mistake of David in Lesson III. gives increasing emphasis to this form of trust in God. Even a godly man must not lean to his own understanding (Prov. iii. 5, 6).

2. When fighting with his enemies. His first victory, when quite a youth, was that over Goliath, and was won through his trust in God. On the same condition he defeated the Philistines and the combined forces of Ammon and Syria (Lesson vi.). Our enemies are of a different character. Do you know yours? Do not under-estimate their strength, nor deem yourself sufficient for meeting any one of them. It is God who must fight our battles for us, and the condition which He demands is that we trust in Him. Are we learning how to say with confidence, "Jesus saves me all the time, Jesus saves me now"?

3. When he had fallen into sin. It was through forgetfulness of God that his sin began. Recall to what awful lengths it led him. Yet when convicted of sin he committed himself to God by a free and full confession. The result is given in Lesson VII. It is in connection with our guilt and our need of forgiveness that some of us first learn to trust in God. Begin here, if you have not done so already. You have the sin. What are you doing with it? (See Prov. xxviii. 13.)

4. When he was in deepest trouble. No one has ever passed through a more painful experience than David, when Absalom headed a rebellion against him (Lessons VIII. and IX.). Yet the beautiful piety of David never shone so conspicuously as then. Think how his trust in God expressed itself in meek submission, in uncomplaining subjection, and in quiet dependence. His psalms were many of them the result of that painful trial. What can men do in the evil day of sorrow without God? Trust in God can keep the soul in the midst of seas of trouble. Treasure the lesson; for if you do not need it now, you will in future days.

Besides all these exercises of David's faith, remember that everything that was beautiful in his character—his forgiveness of his enemies, his kindness towards the son of Jonathan, his love for God's house—all these had their root in his trust in God. Faith is the root grace from which all others spring. Make the Golden Text your own, and live it.

The Bethesda Young Women's Training Home, Liverpool, meets the case of those who through sickness, loss of parents, temporary loss of work, or other causes find themselves without help or without home. In such circumstances many young women would be placed under great temptation. Any young woman applying to the institution is at once received, and none are refused. They are admitted without payment, on condition that they work according to their ability until situations are found for them, and that they promise to repay, when able to do so, the cost of their maintenance in the Home. By the wise and experienced teaching of Mrs. McLachlan, the superintendent, who is a voluntary worker in this good cause, applicants and the public alike are safeguarded against the misuse of charity.

Salisbury Conference will be held Sept. 21-25. As usual, the programme gives a worthy place to accounts of Christian work at home and abroad. The Conference sermon will be preached on Monday evening at 8 o'clock (September 21st), in Fisherton Church. The Conference meetings will be held in the Maundrel Hall from 11 a.m. until 1 p.m., and from 7.30 p.m. until 9.10 p.m. The afternoon meetings will be devoted to accounts of work in different parts of the world. In the letter of invitation, Rev. E. N. Thwaites says:—While there will be absolute freedom in the addresses, and a desire in all things that the Holy Spirit should be our teacher, yet I venture to suggest the following lines of thought, specially in connection with the sadly-neglected command of our Lord Jesus Christ, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Subject on Tuesday:—"Communion with God" (Exodus xxxiii. 11-23). Wednesday:—"Obedience to God (Isaiah i. 19). Thursday:—"Consecration to God" (Romans xii. 1).

Pilgrimage to Jerusalem.

NEXT Passover corresponds in days of the week and of the moon with that of the year of the Crucifixion, and I therefore wrote to my friend, Brother Cameron, editor of The Watchword, of Boston, U.S.A., proposing a Conference or Convention "of earnest believers in the prophetic Word," to be held in this, the city of our Redemption, next Easter. When the July Watchword arrived, I found, to my delight, that the same thought had occurred to others, and that the Rev. Dr. Lorimer and Dr. Crunden, of Boston, were organising a pilgrimage to this land, to be accompanied by a Watchword division, starting from the U.S.A. in July next; and I write to express the hope that a division from the United Kingdom, headed by some man of God, may be organised to accompany the brethren from the United States to the Land of the Bible and the City of the Great King.

In The Watchword for October will appear a letter in which I suggest the arrival of the pilgrims at least two days before Good Friday, April 16, and offer the upper room of this Mission of faith and trust in the Lord, the only place in Jerusalem where non-Episcopalians can vouch publicly for the worship of God, not only for worship and preaching of the Word divine, but also for lectures, conferences, etc.

I propose (1) that we meet at the Lord's table on the evening of the institution of the Lord's Supper, to commemorate the Lord's death—"Christ our Passover slain for us"—till He come again in glory; and then go for a prayer meeting to the Mount of Olives, as in past years; (2) to lecture on Friday evening on the Passover as celebrated by the Jews since their dispersion on that very evening, and its analogy to the institution of the Lord's Supper; (3) to lecture on prophecy fulfilling now visibly, and on what to see and its true significance and Biblical import, on Saturday night; and may be, some other evening, on the true Golgotha and other holy sites. I need not add that the pilgrims will be welcome to all the help, advice, hospitality, etc., I can give them.

A COLLEGE IN PALESTINE.

The pilgrims will be also invited to consider Bro. Rabinowitz's desire, and mine also these last six years, to promote the opening of a College Home for Jewish converts in Palestine, to be trained for mission work in all lands and among all peoples, for which their linguistic aptitudes fit them so remarkably; and I trust they will carry with them a prayerful, kindly interest in this mission of faith, and in mission work generally in Immanuel's land.

Children's Seaside Services.

SERVICES on the sands have become quite a feature of seaside life, and most of them are now brought to an end for this season. Like everything else, they have encountered competition, and when one hears that at one place the children leave the niggers for the services, while at another they leave the services for the niggers, one is able to form an opinion as to where they have been carried on with ability and where they have not. Starting with perfectly gratuitous service, the mission which directs affairs have learnt that if you want a good thing you must pay for it. Grants accordingly are made towards the expenses of capable men. In no case is all the expense paid, but only in part. Those conducting the services have also a chance of being taken up by the wealthy, as one gentleman made such an impression on a lady while holding services at Scarborough that she settled £600 a year upon him to enable him to devote all his time to such work.

As children's sports are almost as prominent a feature in the programme as holding services, it must be obvious it requires men of varied parts to prove successful. That they do as a rule may be fairly inferred from the fact that the income of the mission is close on £4000 a year, and the services are increasing in popularity. It is becoming quite a custom when families are thinking of a seaside place to inquire if the Children's Mission Services are held on the sands.—Leeds Mercury.

Pariahs in Madras.

I ASK sympathy and aid on behalf of the unfortunate Pariahs of Madras, among whom I have been appointed by the South India Conference to do Christian work. Pariahs are a despised people; they are despised by Brahmins and caste Hindus. They are poor and illiterate and are subject to insults and ridicule. They are regarded as social lepers by Hindu society and Hindu religion; consequently they have been living for centuries in small, squalid, unventilated huts, erected in places untrodden by caste Hindus and branded as "filthy" by the general public and sanitary officers. Our Pariahs remain in the deepest ignorance; they are slaves to gross superstition and meaningless customs. Theirs is the hardest lot imaginable, and may well arrest the attention and call forth the sympathy of all Christian hearts.

I visit daily six Pariah villages, in two of which we have day and night schools for Pariah girls and boys. These schools have at present eighty children, who learn English as well as Tamil. They are conducted purely on Christian lines. Christian education is an undoubted blessing to this poor, despised class. I proclaim the glad tidings to the Pariahs in their villages. Thank God, some men and women have become Christians, and attend our Sabbath services; we have five Sunday-schools, attended by 350 pupils.

But the field is large and the workers are but few. We want to open more schools in needy villages. Our mission is financially crippled, and it does not see its way clear to give us all the help we need for the extension of work, especially amongst the depressed classes of this benighted city. A non-Christian Hindu gentleman generously maintains one of the mission schools for Pariah children under my management. I am constrained to appeal to your sympathetic readers for aid. I will be very glad to correspond with those who may wish to help.

Missionaries in Egypt.

THE secretary of the North Africa Mission, reporting as to the epidemic of illness which has visited the Mission staff in Egypt, states that Mrs. Dickens has recovered from the severe attack of typhoid fever. Miss Watson, who has also been down with fever, is considerably better, while Misses White and Mills are reported to be improving.

Dr. H. Smith is, however, in a hopeless condition. He was attacked, it seems, by tuberculosis, not by typhoid, and as members of his family have succumbed to this disease, there seems no hope of his recovery. He has been brought home by Mr. W. Summers, and now lies "waiting at the gate" in his home at Basingstoke.

Mr. Glenny remarks: "Dr. Smith's illness and return to England is another of those strange events which we are unable to fathom. He seemed so necessary to the work, and his return necessitates a thorough rearrangement. These illnesses and difficulties compel us to cast ourselves on God to overrule and guide us, for we cannot guide ourselves."

Converts from Romanism.—A Naples evangelical journal, the Libero Credente, recently published a list of ex-priests and ex-monks, who, since 1848, have become ministers of the Gospel in the Protestant churches. The list does not profess to be exhaustive of distinguished converts, nor is it complete as a list of ministers who were originally priests in the Church of Rome. Yet the list includes sixty-six names, among them Beltrami, Desanctis, Gavazzi, Bottini, and Rogghianti, men who had occupied professors' chairs and sustained other positions of distinction before they "left all" to become evangelical pastors.

Highland Orphanage.—A very pleasant hour was spent at the recent annual meeting for praise and prayer, at the above Orphanage. It did one good to see the children (about sixty) look so comfortable and happy; also to hear them sing their hymns so sweetly. The keynote of the meeting was thankfulness for the provision of the past, and going forward to the coming years with much hope. Rev. Dr. Black presided, and the following took part:—Rev. Dr. Norman Macleod, Rev. Mr. Lang, Mr. Corner, Mr. Walker, Mr. Elliot, Mr. T. D. Campbell, Bailie Cook, and Mr. Melven. This valuable Christian work, now eighteen years old, proves the truth of "Casting all your cares upon Him for He careth for you," as Miss Macmaster, the matron, has all sent to her for their bodily comforts; Miss Strachan sees well to their education; and many friends surround the orphans with helpful spiritual influences. Friends willing to aid with money or articles of usefulness may hand such to Mr. Elliot, Drummond-street, Inverness.—Northern Evangelist.

The Y.M.C.A.

MR. A. H. WHEELER, secretary of the Soldiers' Auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A., has held a series of meetings among the troops encamped in Aldershot and the neighbourhood. He is now visiting the Scottish regiments.

The 1896 report of the Y.M.C.A.'s of Ireland is just issued under the title of "Irish Affairs." It shows that at the present time there are forty-six Associations, with a gross membership of 6372, owning buildings to the value of £21,300.

A garden party and sale of work has been held in connection with the Trowbridge Association in the grounds of Hill View, the residence of the president (Mr. J. Poynton Haden). The weather was unpropitious, but in other respects the affair was a success.

The work of the Middlesbro' Association, which during the past few months suffered considerable decline, has been resuscitated through the instrumentality of Mr. J. C. Moor, travelling secretary, and now gives promise of activity and usefulness for the winter.

The president of the Wolverhampton Association has established a reference library for the benefit of clergymen, ministers, and Christian workers. A scheme is on foot for the provision also of a gymnasium, sleeping accommodation, a restaurant, and a caretaker's residence.

The Islington and Highbury Association is celebrating its jubilee. In a circular the committee "trust that while older friends will observe the jubilee by giving special help, many new friends also will feel the occasion suitable for a special thank-offering towards setting the Association free from its financial burdens."

A revival has been experienced in the work of the Anglo-American Association in Paris. There has been much activity in all departments of the work on the part of almost the entire membership, and the Association has been the means of rendering help to an unusually large number of English-speaking young men during the summer months.

The Bishop of Durham has consented to open the new building of the Sunderland Young Men's Christian Association on Monday, October 19. The North-Eastern District Union of the Y.M.C.A. has decided, with a view to encourage individual, systematic, and comprehensive study of the Bible, to adopt a scheme of study and examinations for the associations in the district, and for the coming season the scheme of the Christian Evidence Society has been adopted.

The ranks of the Irish Y.M.C.A.'s have given many workers to the mission fields of the world. Several members of the Belfast Y.M.C.A. are at work on the deadly West Coast of Africa. Mr. Robert McCann, Trav. Sec. of the Y.M.C.A.'s of Ireland, has recently published a very interesting illustrated history of their work, entitled "Qua Iboe," a copy of which will be sent to any person who will send his address to Mr. H. B. Niblock, 36, Salisbury-street, Belfast.

Mr. Henry Daniel, J.P., entertained the leading friends of the Bristol and Totterdown Associations at the rooms of the former, on the 8th inst., to confer as to the Totterdown Y.M.C.A. new building scheme. Mr. J. Storrs Fry, president of the Bristol Association, made an additional donation of £200 (he had already given £300) to ensure the carrying out of the scheme, which makes excellent provision for the ordinary work of the Association, in addition to a gymnasium, which will be available also as a hall for public meetings. The Totterdown Association, though young, has 170 members, who have contributed liberally to the building fund.

The Brixton Y.W.C.A. has removed to Aberdeen House, 194, Stockwell-road, and having larger premises the committee are hoping greatly to extend the work, by accommodating more boarders. During the hard wear of sixteen years, many things now want replenishing. Gifts of money or any kind of partly used furniture, table linen, carpets, etc., will be gratefully received. The winter's work will soon be recommenced by Bible classes, lectures, music lessons, secular classes, and social evenings.

M. E. GARRETT, Hon. Sec.

Dublin Convention.—The twenty-third Dublin Christian Convention will meet in the Christian Union Buildings on Monday evening, Sept. 28. Among the subjects to be considered are—"The indwelling of Christ in the Believer," "Why so many desire and so few receive the fulness of the Holy Ghost," "The love of Christ, a revelation of the character of God," "The approachableness of Jesus," "Passover and Calvary," "The Holy War," &c. The Archbishop of Dublin will preside, and addresses will be delivered by two foreign missionaries—the Rev. F. Swainson, C.M.S., Saskatchewan, and the Rev. Gilbert G. Warren, Hankow, China.

Christian Endeavour.

A UNITED Convention of the Bradford and Wharfedale Unions has been held at Ilkley. About fifty societies responded to the roll-call.

The Urmost Sunshine Committee recently invited thirty slum children from Manchester, for an afternoon's enjoyment. Several of the shoeless had shoes and stockings provided, and each went home with a bunch of flowers given by the Sunday-school.

On a recent Sunday the Endeavourers of the Presbyterian society of Decatur, Ill., hired a carriage and conveyed eight of the older members of the church to the communion service. They were given front seats and cordially greeted by the Endeavourers at the close of the service.

Other societies than those in China will find helpful the plan recently reported from the Sunrise Kingdom. A newly-formed society was not skilled in the workings of the organisation, and members from a neighbouring society attended the meetings for some time in order to help the new Endeavourers to get into working order.

Dr. F. E. Clark writes in The Golden Rule:—"What is our whole system of Christian Endeavour, if it is not a series of unconscious steps up invisible mountains? The prayer meetings, in a sense, are routine affairs; fulfilling the pledge, in our discouraged moments, may seem like a perfunctory obligation; the committees, like the lifeless parts of a machine; but one great object of the Society is to form habits of well-doing, habits of confession, of devotion, of service. Walking itself, after a while, becomes an unconscious act, and moral hill-climbing an unconscious habit."

Irish Notes.

MIS^{SES} EMILY H. REID, of Knock, Belfast, has been accepted by the committee of the Methodist Women's Auxiliary for Mission Work in India, and is going out to that country.

The interest of Irish Presbyterianism in home and foreign missions may be inferred from the fact that it raised last year for the former £10,000 and for the latter £26,000.

A meeting to say farewell to Rev. H. W. Tegart, who is going out as a missionary to Uganda, under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society, has been held in Clarence-place Hall, Belfast.

The Congregational Mission tent, after doing four weeks' good service at Larne, is now pitched near Newry, where it is under the care of Rev. James Whiteside, and is being largely attended.

The late Miss Alexander, of Derry, has bequeathed several sums to the funds of the Presbyterian Church, including £2000 to Magee College, £2000 to the Sustentation Fund, and £2000 to the congregation of First Derry, of which deceased was a member.

Dr. George Ebers.—A report has been circulated that Dr. George Ebers, the distinguished German Egyptologist, had become a Buddhist. He has written to an American correspondent contradicting the report. He says:—"Who bequeathed warmer, happier love than He who wore the cruel crown of thorns, than He who was Himself love, and gave it first to the world? Before He came the circle of one's love was confined to his people, his state, his family, or some chosen ones; but Christ gave the world the great love which embraces all mankind. Never could I desert Christ, for I love Him, and He knows love so well. No, worthy friend, I have not become a Buddhist; I remain Christian to the end, and also educate my children as Christians. I teach them to love the Holy One as earnestly as my mother taught these truths to me, her only son, and my warm-hearted Christian wife stands side by side with me in this matter."

Protestant Evangelical School in Kilburn.—Yielding to the earnest request of many of the poor working people who live in the midst of the parish of St. Augustine, Kilburn (the schools in connection with which are managed by the Kilburn Sisterhood), we have opened a day-school, trusting, with the Divine guidance and assistance, it may prove at once a blessing, and, it is hoped, an antidote to the unscriptural error which is being so zealously and sedulously taught in the district. Already the premises are quite inadequate to meet the ever-increasing—and pressing—applications of parents who desire their children to enter these Protestant schools. An extension, in fact, a rebuilding of the present premises, is absolutely necessary before the committee will be in a position to claim the Government grant for which application has been made. To do this, a sum of over £2500 is required.

Scottish Notes.

A FINE block of new buildings for the Samaritan Hospital for Women has been opened in Coplaw-street, Victoria-road, South Side, Glasgow, by Lady Bell, in presence of a large company of ladies and gentlemen. The buildings, which are free of debt, have cost upwards of £10,000.

The Free Presbytery of Glasgow met in Cowcaddens Free Church last week for the induction of Rev. James Muir, late of Cowdenbeath, as colleague and successor to Rev. William Ross, the present pastor. Mr. Muir, it is understood, has done splendid aggressive work in his former charge, and will be a very valuable addition to the Home Mission ministers in Glasgow.

Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon, who is deeply interested in the circulation of her lamented husband's sermons in various languages, has ordered several thousand copies of a Gaelic translation of one of them to be printed by Mr. Archibald Sinclair, Bothwell-street, Glasgow. The title is—"Lifting up the Brazen Serpent." Professor Mackinnon, who has seen the manuscript, speaks very favourably of the translation. He considers it to be "faithful and idiomatic." Gaelic translations of others of the great preacher's sermons are intended to follow.

A correspondent of the Aberdeen Free Press, writing as to the case of Professor Johnston, says:—"I find in the city an uneasy feeling that Professor Johnston has not received a fair chance either at the hands of the students or of the University Court. There seems to be a general demand that his lectures should be submitted to competent critics and that any sentence passed on him should be founded on the judgment of these experts. The public, as yet, have only been treated to what they consider unimportant and side issues. Before the Court confirm the judgment of the committee, I hope, for the sake of Aberdeen justice, that the lectures of Professor Johnston will be judged by competent critics."

The annual meeting of the Scottish Women's Bible Study Association was held in Perth last Friday. Mrs. Shaip, who presided, gave a short address. Miss Dundas set forth the objects of the society as tending to give a definite aim and purpose to Scripture study, even diligent Bible readers often requiring some assistance in making their Scripture study definite. She urged the necessity of studying the whole Bible. Addressing herself principally to junior students, she begged them not to neglect to take advantage of the opportunity now offered them of making the Bible the central point of all their knowledge. An address was given by Miss Robson on the work of the S.V.M.U. and the University Women's Missionary Settlement in Bombay.

Principal Miller, Free Church Moderator, officiated to large congregations in Buckie Free Church on Sunday week. At night he gave an address on mission work in India, where, more than elsewhere, he said, precious lessons were to be learnt about how God meant his work to be done, because there the Church was face to face with a more fully-organised society than in any other non-Christian land. It was remarkable that of 1800 youths at the Madras Christian College every one was paying higher fees than what he could get the same education for without the religious element. The Principal compared the present state of missionary advancement in India to the green corn just above the ground, full of promise, but fruit had not arrived and would not arrive suddenly. India had the acutest race on earth at judging personal character, and they were presented not merely with the theory of Christianity, but with its practical effects. If they compared the Church with what it might be, they would realise that everything we did was either a help or a hindrance to God's great wish to fill the world with love and rejoicing in the one great Saviour.

East Plumstead Mission.—The first report of this Mission states that in the midst of the thousands of this poor working-class population, which is so rapidly increasing, mission work is most successfully carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, who have been greatly blessed in their work during the past fifteen years. The only building available is a skittle saloon at the back of the "Prince of Orange." This has been secured for services and Bible-classes on Sundays, and one service during the week. Souls have been led to Christ and backsliders restored. A mission house is urgently needed in this part of Plumstead, where there are over 12,000 souls. Among this large working-class population the need of a hall in which to carry out this important work is now pressing felt, and it is proposed to erect a building, the cost of which is estimated at £500. It is earnestly desired that Christians friends will visit the locality and make personal inquiry as to the existing spiritual destitution. Address, Mr. W. H. Lewis, manager of the London and Provincial Bank, Woolwich.

The Christian.

To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WITH all Her Majesty's loyal subjects we thankfully express the satisfaction of ourselves and our readers at the fact that her reign has now exceeded that of any previous British monarch. No doubt there will be some fitting national observance of the event when the full sixty years of her queenhood have been completed. In the meantime we sincerely trust and pray that the life and royal influence of Her Majesty will yet be prolonged, for the good of the empire and the peace of the world. If she can at this critical juncture in European history, through the visit of the Czar, draw the Russian nation into a friendly compact with our own for the cessation of Turkish misrule, she will add one more to the many laurels that already cluster around her crown.

The authoritative utterance of the Pope has settled the question of the validity of Anglican orders for those who place the slightest value upon the Pope's judgment. After "long and exhaustive study," he "confirms all the decrees of his predecessors," and "proclaims ordination according to the Anglican rite to be absolutely invalid." He "concludes by inviting Anglicans to return to Catholic unity." Of course. This is the only unity the Pope can understand, and those who hold office in a so-called Protestant church who desire the Pope's approval of their orders should, to be consistent, accept ordination in the Romish Church. Their position in a Protestant church is a false one. They are using it in order to betray the cause they have pledged themselves to support. If they deem the Reformation to have been a huge mistake, let them have the honesty to act out their convictions. In this free country they may teach what they please; but, as honest men, they ought not to receive Protestant pay while they denounce the Protestant faith.

From the Peace Congress at Budapest comes a story of an opposite character. After an eloquent speech upon the Armenian atrocities had roused the enthusiasm of the Congress, the Abbé Pichon proposed that an address should be sent to the Pope. But Madame Vincent, a French delegate, opposed it, on the ground that the Pope was not "the head of a State, but merely the first functionary of a church, and that if the Congress addressed him it should also address all heads of churches." It is gratifying to know that she carried her point with only three dissentients. Lord Halifax and his friends practically give themselves away by their foolish appeal to the Pope, as though his judgment could settle a question concerning them. Madame Vincent takes the true and wise position. The nations and their rulers would do well to refuse any recognition of the Pope other than that of the head of the Romish Church.

When, in spite of coercive measures and threats, Rome loses a devotee of social or intellectual influence, an early device, intended to harass if not recapture the pervert, takes the form of a published report that he or she has just re-entered the Church of Rome. This device has been tried again and again with Father Chiniquy and Count Campello. Now it has been attempted upon Miss Cusack, who, as "the Nun of Kenmare," occupied a position of peculiar importance in the Church of Rome in Ireland. Miss Cusack has indignantly denied the report, and in a letter to us says:

Every day I am hearing of new plans for the subjugation of England to Rome. Surely there never was a time when the united action of Christian people was more necessary, and when they should strengthen the hands of those who have left that apostate Church.

We are glad to learn that Miss Cusack is still busily engaged in the conflict with Rome. Her recently published work on the Jesuits, so valuable from all points of view, had a good reception, and she is preparing a new edition. She is also engaged on a reply to Lord Halifax's appeal for reunion with the Church of Rome, giving proof from Canon Law that Rome has neither valid orders nor valid jurisdiction! She may assuredly count upon the prayerful sympathy of our readers, in view of her incessant labours and peculiar trials. Miss Cusack may be addressed, care of the Protestant Alliance, 430, Strand, W.C.

Rev. Chancellor Lias, in The Contemporary, pleads for the treatment of the laity as an integral portion of the Church of God, as the first step towards placing the Church of England in touch with the nation. He argues that their assent should be obtained to all appointments; that they should be consulted in all parish affairs, including the mode of conducting services; that no church work or legislation should be initiated without their approval; and that if this were done, many obstacles which now exist to a cordial understanding between the clergy and the people would disappear at once. It is at least certain that if this work were done, it would demonstrate the fact that the High Church movement is a movement of the clergy and not of the laity, and the extravagances of ritual in many of the churches would be summarily put a stop to.

A significant indication of thought among a certain school of scientists is given in a review of Dr. Archdall Reid's book on "The Present Evolution of Man," in the current Fortnightly. Dr. Reid's theory is that certain vices, as well as diseases, by weeding out the unfit members of society, tend to the up-building and development of the race. Notably, alcohol and opium would, by their ruinous effects on those predisposed to them, help to the survival of a healthy humanity. Logically it would follow that a suppression of these traffics is not only unwise but antihumanitarian. Dr. Reid would, therefore, say, not "Let us reform the drunkard," but "Let him drink and perish, and his soul with him."

The only thing consistent with this new theory is to leave the nation free to indulge in habits of drunkenness and debauchery, in the hope that the "weaker brethren" may be weeded out, and only the strong—i.e., those impervious to the fascinations of these evil habits, be left to continue the race. So far none of the "new" scientists go so far as to advocate this system, in which it would seem that they have not the courage of their opinions. It is time to know where we are in relation to this school of thought. This subtle undermining of the public conscience is a sin against all that is pitiful and kind. If it were true, it would falsify the Gospel of Christ in its most fundamental aspects, transform the rescue and reclamation of the morally "unfit," and the spiritually perishing, into a crime against posterity. To state this is to demonstrate that there must be a lie at the root of this teaching. The premises that lead logically to such a conclusion must have a hideous fallacy at their door, against which the instinct of every Christian rises in protest.

In some notes on "Poetry for Children" in the same review, Mr. E. V. Lucas points out a serious danger in the modern training of children. He says:—

Our grandmothers and grandfathers, whose nursery shelves held a poor dozen books, but who knew that dozen well, and remembered them through life, were more fortunate than their descendants, who are bewildered by the quantity of matter prepared for them by glib writers, and who, after reading everything, find little or nothing worthy of recollection.

This applies with quite as much force to religious as to more general literature. There is a tendency to encourage budding minds to cover too much ground in their reading, and to promote a butterfly habit of sipping at many books, instead of making a determined attempt to master a few. How many children nowadays have read and re-read the "Pilgrim's Progress" till it builds itself into the texture of their thought? Previous generations have been fed on that and a few kindred books in early life, till they have become a part of the very mind itself. Parents should lay it more to heart that the best results are gained, not by making the eye travel prematurely over acres of print, but by the absorption and mastery of a few noble books, which, while they are interesting, are also edifying and stimulating to the higher nature.

As we have already noted, the Anglo-Indian doctors are said to be agitating for the purpose of inducing the Government to resuscitate, for the benefit of the Indian army, certain objectionable Acts which were repealed in 1880. If such be the case, Mrs. Josephine Butler's "Personal Reminiscences of a Great Crusade," to be published by Horace Marshall and Son at the end of this month, will make a timely appearance. The crusade of "the new abolitionists," as they were called, against the State recognition and regulation of vice was opened twenty-seven years ago, under the leadership of Mrs. Butler. Many of the active workers in the movement are dead, and at present there exists nothing like a complete record of the conflict, which is generally admitted to have been one of the most vital of modern Christian times. If the history of such a movement must be written at all, then there is no one so likely as Mrs. Butler to do it with that refinement and restraint which are so essential, nor is there anyone more qualified to give a faithful and vivid picture of the inner meanings and growth of the movement.

A correspondent writes :—

Your note in a recent issue referring to Mr. R. Blathwayt's testimony in regard to prison discipline is so contrary to fact that I am constrained as a reader to warn you against becoming the mouth-piece of such misleading statements. The progress made in the last twenty years is a fact for which we cannot be too thankful. Old warders often say that they never would have believed that such changes were possible. In our large convict prisons there are now fewer breaches of discipline and fewer punishments weekly than in a well-conducted regiment. The yearly reports, which are faithful records from the prisons, are within the reach of all. I am also thankful to say, the interest of the high authorities of the Prison Department in the spiritual progress of prisoners and the affording to them of religious privileges has enormously increased in the last few years, though it still leaves room for increase. When the authorities are so decidedly moving in the right direction, it is grievous that such statements should be made.

The Daily News of Saturday last related some sad stories for its readers. There must be something wrong about our drinking system, when a girl of fifteen can obtain brandy, and drink it until she becomes "helplessly drunk." Even sadder is the story, told on the same page, of a poor girl charged with attempting to commit suicide. She had been ruined by a soldier in the Scots Guards, then forsaken, and her attempt at self-destruction was that her friends might not "hear of her disgrace." During the hearing of her case she was overcome with grief, and fell fainting from her seat in the dock, and was carried out unconscious. Is nothing to be done to the man who has wrecked this young life? Are our laws equal, if they allow the helpless victim to suffer such ruin and disgrace, and leave the chief criminal free to repeat his crime elsewhere?

"Having no root in himself." Character, like trees, needs roots. Just as the tree is made stately and strong by that part of it which grasps the soil and turns itself round unseen rocks; just as it is fed by the invisible tentacles that penetrate the soil and subtract its nourishment with unerring skill; just as it thus provides for itself a reservoir of food on which it may draw in times of barrenness and drought; just as it is built up by the same means into ability to stand the storm and the hurricane; so the soul "rooted and grounded in love" grows strong, is nourished, and is made capable of enjoying the heat and burden of the day, and the shock of unforeseen troubles by its attachment to the unseen, and its vital relation with the spiritual world in the depths of its being. Jesus made much of this in his teaching, and laid it as his last command on his disciples, "Abide in Me." This is the great guarantee and condition of continuance in the spiritual life. Without it our best promise is sure to wither before it comes to anything. With it, we are made more than conquerors "through Him that loved us."

One of the most striking utterances of the past week was Sir Joseph Lister's presidential address to the British Association at Liverpool. The advances that have been made in recent years in scientific surgery, for the relief and prevention of human suffering, are matter for the utmost gratitude: though we think that the service which vivisection has rendered in this direction is by no means what its promoters assert. It is too high a price to pay for such a slight addition to our knowledge. We hope next week to give some notes by a correspondent of the British Association meetings.

Dr. H. R. Reynolds' Funeral.

THE funeral of the late president of the College at Cheshunt took place on Tuesday afternoon, September 15. The chapel, which is to be much enlarged, being in the hands of the builders, the assembly had to meet in the College Hall, so that the life-like portrait of the late beloved and revered President looked down upon the congregation, which crowded the building to pay the last honours to his remains. The coffin was met at the entrance to the library by President Whitehouse, Dr. Newman Hall, and other ministers who were to take part in the service, and also by the Treasurer of the College, and one or two of his colleagues. Amongst the mourners were the sisters of the deceased, Mrs. Baines, Mrs. Vaizey, and Lady Russell Reynolds, with whom were a large group of relatives in deep mourning.

The service was begun by the reading by President Whitehouse (as the cortège passed up through the congregation) of the familiar passages of Scripture taken from the Prayer Book, followed by others less familiar, but not less suitable. A brief but striking reference to the deceased by his successor followed, who mentioned the enforced absence of many friends, and read a beautiful letter from one of them.

After the singing of Dr. Watts' hymn,
O God, our help in ages past,
Professor Radford Thomson read from 1 Corinthians xv. with much feeling, and offered prayer. Then followed an address by Rev. Urijah Thomas, of Bristol, founded on the words, "Jesus wept," "Our friend sleepeth," "If thou wouldest believe thou shouldst see the glory of God" (John xi. 35, 11, 40). Element after element of Dr. Reynolds's unique character was dwelt on with great appropriateness, the climax being that all was the revelation of God in the soul, though the very body of "our father and friend" was the fitting casket for so pure a gem. After this the assembly sang a hymn by Mr. Rawson, beginning—

Ye principalities and powers,
That never tasted death, and ending, in reference to the frame soon to be laid in the grave—

It shall arise a holy shrine,
Of glory, beauty, might,
Fit for a spirit made divine,
All purity, all light.

Thanks be to God, there is no death
For all that trust his word,
Thanks be to God, for victory
Through Jesus Christ our Lord.

At this point Rev. A. Sandison, of the Weigh House Chapel, was called upon to pray, but his voice broke into inarticulate sobs, these being followed by silence. Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton—at the suggestion of the reader of the address—offered prayer, and the assembly left the hall for the cemetery. There Dr. Newman Hall uttered the words of committal, and a prayer of quiet thankfulness and trust. Bishop Bickersteth's hymn—

Peace, perfect peace, was sung. Dr. Hall pronounced the Benediction. The mourners took a last look at the coffin, and the crowd dispersed, as the rain began to fall on the grave of the saint and teacher, a true "friend of God" and "knight of Jesus."

Metropolitan Tabernacle.—Sunday last, being Pastor Thomas Spurgeon's fortieth birthday, it was arranged that he would sit in the vestry on Monday to receive the gifts of members and friends towards the various institutions connected with the Tabernacle. The total amount received was £294 11s. 6d., and will, it is expected, exceed £300 by the end of the week.

Armenia.

THE condition of international politics just now illustrates the oft-forgotten fact that nations and communities lag far behind the majority that compose them in their standard of morality. It is a truism that a crowd will commit acts without remorse of which its members individually would be ashamed to be guilty, and nations will think nothing of following a policy of selfishness such as their citizens would blush at in themselves. The tone of the "inspired" German press last week, in view of the growing indignation in that country against the Sultan, is a proof how heartlessly a Government can pursue a detestable policy of cynicism in the face of an aroused public feeling. The international conscience of Europe, indeed, seems drugged to an ignoble sleep. Self-interest reigns supreme. There are signs, however, that the giant is beginning to awake, and our hope is that when he comes to himself he will arise in wrath, and, without the firing of a cannon, or the spilling of a drop of blood, will make such atrocities as we have lately been surfeited with, for ever impossible, even in Turkey.

The Armenian agitation is entering on a new and nobler phase. The cry of war prematurely raised by enthusiasts with more passion than wisdom is being hushed in a more statesmanlike appeal to the Government to attack the difficulty from a new point of view. To those who cry out that we are impotent to cope with a "united" Europe, the answer is rising in ever-increasing tones—"We may be impotent to meet force with force, but are we impotent as a nation to secure defence for the persecuted Armenians at the cost of some sacrifice?" Self-sacrifice and application of the Golden Rule are frequently called into operation in individuals; why not in nations? Can we not make such concessions to Russia as will make her willing to undertake a new policy? Her present attitude of indifference is due to the part we took in defrauding her of the fruits of her conquest in 1878. Is it not possible in some way to range her now, as she was then, on the side of humanity and righteousness? By so doing we should at least be proving our own disinterestedness, and disarm much of the suspicion with which other European nations regard us; and the probability is that the great object of the present agitation would be accomplished, and the Sultan for ever made impotent for evil.

We hope that this attitude will be pursued by those who are organising meetings all over the country. Until this policy is tried by our Government we cannot say that we have exhausted the peaceable resources of diplomacy. The great trouble now is that there is not a court in Europe which does not believe, or profess to believe, that we have ulterior purposes to attain, and that the wave of indignation that is sweeping over the land is insincere and hypocritical. Till this false impression has been removed we can do nothing effective, and the only way to remove it is by showing that we are prepared to make willing sacrifices for the cause of right. When this pacific and noble policy has been fairly tried, and has failed, it will be time enough to speak of an ultimatum that might be the spark to fire the powder magazine of Europe, and involve the continent in the throes of an unparalleled conflict.

"The Sign of the Cross."

NOW that the Sign of the Cross has its place on the stage, and is being made the ground of scenic display, it is more needful that those who know that the offence of the cross has not ceased, should withdraw into Arabia, and, where flesh and blood cannot perturb, turn aside to see the great sight; the bush that burns but is not consumed; the glory which, disguised in shame, is to those who behold it the deepest expression of the wisdom and power of God.

No one can construe the sign of the Cross aright who approaches it after the outward aspect, or who seeks its meaning in the sphere of animal or æsthetic excitements. So pure is the spirituality of this sign, that for self to see it is for self to die. Stone blindness alone could have set a sign such as this in the whirligig of this world's shows. But though there in semblance, it is in substance outside the camp; outside the whole scheme of the self-life's promotion, a sign so unworldly that to see it is to live apart in the secret place of his Presence, "not known," even as He, "and yet well known."

There is an analogy between the sign of the Cross in its Scriptural forthsetting and the range of sin in the human heart. The one is set as deep in Scripture as the other is in experience. As sin crimson human life, so does redemption's sign crimson the texture of Holy Writ. For, whether typically or anti-typically viewed, the sign in question is blood. Let it suffice now, in proof, to instance the ordinance of the Passover. "And when I see the blood I will pass over you" (Exodus xii. 13). Here the charter of Israel's security is, as it were, dipped in blood; the entire ground of Israel's redemption is made to lie in this one specific sign. It is needless to go further afield to corroborate a fact which is the distinguishing feature of both Testaments, and to which alike the Passover and the Crucifixion bear witness. Our object now is to get a deepened view of the sign itself, to inquire why the sign is crimson, and to push out as far as possible from the shore in the exploration of this the deepest of all similitudes.

To appreciate the sign is only possible to the degree that sin is laid bare, and its evil Godward disclosed. Jehovah's sight of the blood is plainly informed by that view. He sees the blood, and sees it with such an absoluteness of insight, that the course of judgment is stayed, and sin covered. How sublime that jewel must be which meets the demands of Divine inquisition in the sphere of judgment! The glory of the sign is developed by its setting, and the merit of the blood by sin's demerit. Now, while we recognise that what fills the field of Divine vision is never the blood typical, but anti-typical, and that the substance of the sign is ever "the blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot" (1 Pet. i. 19), that fact but intensifies the mystery of sin's evil, and enforces this conclusion that the blood-red character of the Sign of the Cross is necessitated somehow by the nature of sin itself.

What, then, is sin? and what explanation do we find in this dark region why redemption's sign is blood? The whole truth on this subject lies, we believe, in this one fact, that the evil in sin is such an evil as does not admit of being qualified. Blood is a maximum sign; it does not represent the partial but the utter. And the reason why redemption requires a sign of maximum intensity is because sin is crimson and proceeds, in the inner working of it, to the uttermost of extremity. In other words, there is a killing power in sin, a carnal enmity that is decisive in its action; and which, were it granted sufficiency of field, would recognise no law, no limits, no God. It is on this ground that sin, in the inmost nature of it, is not a relative but an absolute evil; it has not to do with the partial but the entire; it involves the life, and, therefore, whether we consider the guilt of sin, the penalty of sin, or the effects of sin, it is in every case the blood-red that meets our gaze.

Dimness of view in the matter of sin is probably the reason why the sign of the Cross has paled in many quarters. Sin takes rank in the thoughts of men (some Christian teachers included), as qualified, not utter. But how if the evil in sin be qualified is the finished product absolute? "And sin when it is finished bringeth forth death" (James i. 15). Nor is that all. If the in-being of sin may be defined by qualified terms, how comes it to pass that the carnal mind is beyond the pale of spiritual reformation? See Rom. viii. 7. The statement that "the carnal mind is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be," is not a qualified but an absolute statement.

The like applies to the Scriptural definition of sin. For if sin be "lawlessness" (1 John iii. 4) it is of the very nature of sin to break the Divine bands asunder and cast the limitations of duty, as voiced by the law, to the winds. The bearing of all this on the old Puritan notion that "sin is an infinite evil" is one that ought not to be ignored. Am I right in the impression that the Puritan view on this point is largely a thing of the past, and that the ghost of it is practically for ever laid? If so, it ought here to be said that the Puritans meant by "infinite" what in this paper I have sought to express by "absolute." The substance of their thought was truth, namely, that sin is not to be expressed by qualified terms, it is not to be placed within limits, for as "lawlessness" it is the direct antithesis of the essential Being of God.

The guilt, therefore, attaching to sin is guilt absolute; and, as every student of Scripture knows, there is no possibility of eliminating the absolute from the descriptions of sin's penalty (see 2 Thess. i. 9; Matt. xxv. 46, etc., etc.). Moreover, sin, as motivated by the carnal mind, is virtual Deicide; for how can enmity against God be otherwise construed? And if sin in its Godward bearing is blood-red, equally so is it in its inward action, crimson—a bloody hand that only the sign of the Cross can purge.

All this shows that as the demerit of sin is absolute, and involves the life, and can alone be expressed by the maximum sign, namely, blood; so Redemption's sign to be adequate must go deep as the life, and have a merit that is nothing short of absolute also. We have not space for enlargement, but surely this much is evident, that, underlying the sign of the Cross, is an obedience that is entire! As the demerit of disobedience in sin is utter; so the merit of obedience in Redemption's sign is complete.

Nor is that all. The sign of the Cross must show as absolute a concern with a view to the vindication of the law's sanctions, as in respect of the fulfilment of its requirements. Hence the felt obligation on the part of the Redeemer that in redeeming He should bear the sins of many, and make intercession for the transgressors. But how bear them, unless He goes into the place of judgment for them, and thus save from the doom of death by the sacrifice of his own soul as ransom? Can we wonder, therefore, that the sign of the Cross is what it is, and that its effects are arrestive of judgment? The sign of the Cross is Divine love in a mystery. That precious blood which is the content of it, while human in the matter of it, is in the stamp and value of it Divine. Shall we not turn aside and see this great sight? Happy those in whose eyes the blood of Christ is precious. For we may say of this sign in the language of Job: "Man knoweth not the price thereof; nor is it found in the land of the living."

Ben Ledi—the "Hill of God."

FROM amongst the hills and lakes of the Western Highlands I would add another tribute of praise to this lovely land. I have read with interest the contributions which have already appeared in THE CHRISTIAN, and have noticed the pointed lessons in "Country Musings."

Callander has been to us such a veritable "Hill of God" that we feel we must share with others the good things, or, at least, rehearse them from the Christian standpoint. After a fortnight at Keswick, including the Convention week, we turned our faces toward the North. Callander was our destination, and as we walked down the "brae" from the picturesque railway station, we were already refreshed by the clear mountain breeze; it was meat and drink to us after an eight-hours' dusty train journey.

Six weeks have been spent here with increasing benefit and pleasure. We found ourselves in the heart of a most lovely district, no doubt well known to many of your readers. The hill walks and mountain paths, the numerous exquisite drives and rambles, make this a choice spot for health and rest.

Ben Ledi, or "The Hill of God," with other smaller hills, forms the western boundary of the village. As the weeks have passed the ancient Gaelic name seemed to us to have a special significance in this place. Again and again have the words come back to us, as we gazed at the huge shoulder rearing itself against the horizon, "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place?" And then the heart-searching answer in the fourth verse of Psalm xiv.

Is it not the experience of each child of God that, to have power with men for God, and to have power with God for men, there must be the continual cleansing which alone leads to unbroken communion? Are we amongst those who not only "ascend into the hill of the Lord," but who know something of what it is to "dwell" there in touch with God through Christ? (Ps. xv. 1). But, alas! how easily this is interrupted. Are we not tempted in our holiday time just to be a little lax—a little off our guard in the matter of walk and talk? May the Holy Spirit teach us the open secret of dwelling on the "Hill of God."

Such thoughts as these have filled our minds at Callander, and they have been encouraged and deepened by the precious spiritual advantages within reach. The "mission-hall" services have been to us, indeed, a refreshment. Never can we forget the addresses given there, week after week, by the young missionary, Mr. Bissett, nor the helpful and powerful testimony of others connected with this work.

These things combine to make us glad that our summer holiday was not only spent in sight of Ben Ledi, but that by God's grace we have known something of what it is to "dwell in his holy hill."

Dundee.—The annual social gathering of the Y.W.C.A. was held last week. Lord Overtoun, who presided, thanked God that He had so greatly blessed every department of the work. Speaking of the blessing such an association as that of the Y.W.C.A. must be in a great city, he said that the power of woman was unspeakable in whatever rank one cared to look. He thought that some of the young women present were not fully aware of the influence they had on their brothers at home. He counselled them to make their homes winsome and bright for them. A duet followed, "What will you do with the King called Jesus?" Later on Lady Overtoun made the question the text of a tender and appealing little speech. In place of her sister, the Hon. Emily, who through illness was unable to attend, the Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird addressed the meeting. Addresses followed by Revs. G. Macphail, J. G. Watson, A. S. Inch, and others.

"Thou Canst Not Follow Me Now."

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

"Whither I go, thou canst not follow Me now."

"LORD, why cannot I follow Thee now? There is nothing that I have not given up, and would not give up for Thee. Thou badest the young man go and sell all that he had, but there was no need to say as much to us, because we had already done so. I say now, as I said then, 'We have left all and followed Thee.' I left my old father and my boat, my fisherman's life and nets, and have followed Thee for three years. I have followed Thee in all thy journeyings up and down this land, to the house of death and the Mount of Transfiguration; when men took up stones to cast at Thee, and when Thou camest back from beyond Jordan to meet the hate of the Jews. Neither storm nor death could make me lose track of Thee, my dear and blessed Lord. I could not live without Thee now, and I would go through a hundred deaths to keep at thy side. Besides, what Thou canst do I can; yea, I am stronger-built, more accustomed to bear hardship, have faced death oftener. Surely if Thou must die, I can; and on the other side of death we should meet, and in all those wonderful mansions Thou hast told us about we should be together. Why cannot I follow Thee now? I will lay down my life for thy sake."

"Whither I go, thou canst not follow Me now, but thou shalt follow Me afterwards."

"Afterwards, Lord, afterwards? What is this thou sayest? It is so indefinite, and may mean so long. After what? After thy death? But, if once Thou enterest before me that wonderful world of which Thou speakest, I shall never be able to come up with Thee; besides, there will be so many and so much to engage thy thought, that Thou wilt be lost to me in the crowd. Why cannot I follow Thee now? I am prepared at this moment to lay down my life for Thee. If Thou must die, I take back what I said before thy Transfiguration, when I asked Thee to spare Thyself, and insisted that death must never overshadow thy life. Therefore, if this must be, let it be. Thou knowest thine own way best, but at least let me go with Thee now. I will lay down my life for thy sake."

"This, beloved friend and disciple, is where thou mistakest. The death through which I am to pass to my abundant life, and by which alone I can obtain the richest blessings for thee and all, is not a matter for the exercise of the human will. It is not death in the power of the will or choice of the soul, but to all these. Such a death is an act in which the human will is absolutely renounced and yielded, so that he who dies is willing to live or die, has no choice in the matter, but surrenders himself absolutely to the Father's will. Clearly thou hast not come to this, since thou art so set on dying. Thou mightest succeed in dying at the same moment as I, but this would not avail thee, since thou wouldst die in the energy of thy flesh, whilst I am come to do the will of God, and yield myself to Him to perform his purpose, be it life or death; yea, I delight to do his will, and his law is within my heart. Thou shalt follow Me afterwards, when thy flesh has been crucified, thy self life denied, and thou art willing to be carried whither thou wouldest not; then thou shalt be with Me where I am and behold my glory, which the Father hath given Me; thou shalt sit with Me on my throne, as I have overcome, and shall sit with my Father on his throne."

"Lord, why sayest Thou, that my wish to die is in the energy of the flesh?"

"Rememberest thou the Lake, and how thou didst leave the boat to walk the water, partly because thou lovedst Me, and partly because thy nature ever prompts thee to be first among thy fellows! Thou failedst then, because there was so much of the impulsiveness of thy impetuous heart in it all; and for the same reason thou wilt fail again. Verily, verily, I say unto thee, The cock shall not crow before thou hast denied Me thrice."

Fellow-disciples, there is much to learn from all this. There were three stages in Peter's experience. First, the thought of death was abhorrent to him, and he entreated his Master to spare Himself. Almost rudely he said, "This shall not come to Thee!" Next, he conceded the necessity of death, but proposed to die at the prompting and in the power of his strong and impetuous self-will. But, finally, after years had passed, he said, "Forasmuch then as Christ suffered in the flesh, arm ye yourselves also with the same mind; for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin; that ye no longer should live the rest of your time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God." How well he had learnt his lesson, that we must die to the flesh, as the only way of deliverance from the lusts of men, and of entering on a life according to the will of God! Earnest and admirable as the desire to die with Christ seemed, it was but a manifestation of the workings and promptings of the self-life, which had to be denied and surrendered to the cross. Not in dying with Jesus, but in not dying with Him, was the true lesson of his life to be learnt, and the beginning of his sanctification to be made.

Our greatest trouble is the self-life. It is much to put away, and be cleansed from, known sins. Peter himself says, "Putting away [the tense of a definite final act] all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings." To begin with the outward act, to pass to the desire or want to, to go deeper to the springs of intention and motive, to judge what is wrong in each of these departments of life, to arraign it and put it away by the act of the will, and finally to seek cleansing and deliverance—all this is right and lovely, but it is not enough. When we have done all, there remains the consciousness that the flesh is still within us, there is still the assertion of self, still the strong me-life, still the flesh lusting against the Spirit (as Gal. v. 17), or trying to perfect that which was begun in the Spirit (as Gal. iii. 3). Your heart may have been cleansed by the precious blood, but still self is in evidence, in the very congratulation with which one considers the transformation that has been wrought.

We must discriminate and arraign the self-life.—Nowhere in Scripture are we encouraged to believe that it will become dead in us, but in many places are we taught how to become dead to it—as dead to it as the woman divorced from a sottish villain, and married to a noble man whom she loves with all her being, is dead to her former husband, if she sees him reeling along the street, and demanding her return to him.

The seat and home of the self-life is in the soul. The selfish man is a soulish man. Therefore we need the aid of the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, and which pierces to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow. Beneath the marvellous light which the Word of God throws on the workings of our inner life we shall suddenly become aware of the large share that the self or flesh energy has had in it all. We have planned according to its wisdom; we have sought holiness under its promptings; we have done useful and good work in its energy; we have built up what seemed to be gold, silver, and precious stones, but was really wood, hay, and stubble, because our inspiration came from beneath rather than above, from self and not from God.

When this discovery first looms on us, we are beyond measure discouraged. It breaks our heart to see the ravages of the canker-worm in our exquisite fabrics, the gaps caused by God's testing fire in our carefully-constructed building; and then, if we are led by the Spirit, we unite ourselves to the death of Christ. We see there how God has nailed up the likeness of sinful flesh as an accursed thing in the dying Lord. We accept this as our own: "They that are of Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh," and from that moment of vision and appropriation we say with the apostle, "I have been, and am, crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Always reckoning that the cross and grave of Jesus lie between us and the self-life, we live wholly unto God. We are married to Him who was raised from the dead; we are so occupied with Him that we hardly notice the solicitations of the old lover, if ever he should show himself. Life is no longer a monologue of selfishness, but a dialogue with Jesus. This is what the Apostle meant when, in after life, he said:—"Since Christ has suffered in the flesh let us arm ourselves with the same mind, that we may cease from sin."

The deliverance from the fascination and dominion of the self-life can only come from the Holy Spirit. It was by the Eternal Spirit that Jesus offered Himself without spot to God, and it is only as we are in-filled and possessed by that same Spirit that we can enter into true union with Jesus in his death, and, above all, into such union with Him in his life as shall make us completely indifferent to the promptings and pleadings of the flesh.

We can arraign the criminal. In one supreme moment of our life we can adjudge him to the cross, and desire to consider him as a crucified malefactor, an outlaw, and accursed; but we must entrust all else to the blessed Spirit. He must keep us true to our vows, enabling us daily to mortify the deeds of the body, and to nip off every bud of the self-life below the Christ-graft. How gladly will He undertake the work! How sensitive He will make us to every suggestion or manifestation of the self-life! How certainly He will lead us to die to it in deeper depths than ever we had been conscious of! How delightfully He will engage us in the love of Jesus, till there shall seem no hardship in the death! How completely and abundantly will He baptize us into the abundant life, which is Life indeed! Blessed Spirit! Administrator of the sentence of death passed by God on our flesh, a sentence which we have reverently and deliberately countersigned and endorsed! That Thou doest, do quickly.

This is surely what our Lord meant by that "afterward." Thou shalt follow Me after that the Holy Ghost is come upon thee, and thou shalt be a witness of the power of God, enabling a headstrong self-willed man to accept death with an eager desire to die, and being willing to wait patiently and meekly, tending the flock with shepherd-care, till in a ripe old age he is summoned to receive the crown of life, and the Master's Well-done.

Wouldst thou die to the flesh-life, fellow disciple, Be filled with the Spirit, live in the Spirit, be led by the Spirit, walk (take thy smallest steps) in the Spirit. They who are one with Jesus in his life, by the grace of the Spirit, have no difficulty in reckoning themselves dead to the flesh.

Charterhouse Science and Art Schools.—The winter session will commence on Saturday, Sept. 26. During the late session upwards of 900 students, mostly elementary teachers, availed themselves of the privileges afforded by the institution. Instruction of a decidedly practical character is given in most of the sciences at a nominal fee, whilst in art, at an equally low rate, students may be advanced in their studies. Classes will be held to prepare candidates for matriculation (Lond.), the clerical, medical (including mental), legal, and other exams. Students who aim at becoming proficient in chemistry (organic and inorganic) have the opportunity of working in a well-fitted laboratory. Those interested in education will rejoice to learn that the work commenced by the late Rev. Wm. Rogers, M.A., and continued by a late vice-chairman of the London School Board, is so vigorously continued by the present president, Rev. Henry Swann, M.A. Full particulars of the classes may be obtained from C. Smith, at the School.

Condition of Madagascar.

MRS. PEILL, wife of Rev. J. Peill, of Ambohimanga, writes to us:—"All country mission stations in the northern half of the island have had to be at least temporarily abandoned on account of the dangerous state of the country, except this in Ambohimanga and an S.P.G. station four miles away, where they have a special guard of French soldiers. Ambohimanga is perched on the top of a steep wooded eminence. Our present dwelling lies close to the foot of the height, and our compound can be fired into by the soldiers from above in case of an attack being made on us.

"Early this morning, July 28, the rebels were very near us, trying to break into a church not five minutes from our gate. The poor, stupid people whose houses they attacked were afraid to make an outcry lest the 'white men' should fire upon them, and the robbers went off with considerable booty in persons (thirty are said to have been taken), cattle, and money, and clothing. The soldiers heard only soon enough to make a useless visit to the scene of the depredations after the robbers had all disappeared.

"Almost every morning brings us some tale of fresh disaster in the neighbourhood, owing to the activity of the brigands, who have given up, apparently, all hope of gaining any political ends, if they ever really had such hopes, and now think only of plunder and destruction.

"Unfortunately, the French are, many of them, not much disposed to distinguish between the brigands and the peaceable inhabitants, but inclined to put them all down as equally unaffected, which is both a great injustice and a great mistake, as tending to drive the sufferers into the ranks of the rebels. The first set of French soldiers sent were picked men from the different companies. Since then some of the more satisfactory among them, including sergeants and corporals, have been withdrawn, and replaced by men of a very different stamp, so that all the poor natives sigh for those who were so quiet, gentle, and well behaved, and to whom the late comers are such a contrast, the non-commissioned officers particularly so.

"I have distributed Gospels among the soldiers, as well as a large number of tracts. I feel very sorry for these young fellows, removed from home and all helpful influences, and thrown pell-mell among GODLESS AND IMMORAL CHARACTERS, with whom they are bound to associate night and day. No provision is made for their mental culture, or moral or spiritual improvement. On Monday afternoons they have a general permission to come down by twos and threes and visit us. Besides this I have a class on week-day afternoons for teaching them Malagasy. I should be glad if someone would give me a few suggestions as to steps that might be more likely to attract the men and at the same time do them good, as I have never worked among soldiers before. On Sunday afternoons I get them to sing hymns from the McAll selection, while I play the concertina, leaving them to choose which pieces they prefer. Pray that the Lord may lead many of these to Himself, through his Word spoken in feebleness to them while staying here."

Writing in the New York Independent, Rev. James Sibree, of Antananarivo, says: "There are about 110 Protestant missionaries in the island, having under their care more than 2000 congregations, with a total of (at the beginning of this year), about 370,000 adherents. To these must be added the statistics of the Roman Catholic (Jesuit) Mission. These are, however, not very easy to obtain. Before the late war they claimed to have had 130,000 adherents, probably a very exaggerated estimate; 70,000 or 80,000 would most likely be much nearer the mark. These people are taught by a large staff of more than a hundred priests, lay brothers and sisters, ruled by a bishop. It need hardly be said that the influence of this mission is HOSTILE TO ALL PROTESTANT WORK, and trying times are perhaps before us and our people, especially if the priests gain much influence over French officials.

"It will be seen that there are about 450,000 people in the island more or less under Christian teaching, so that if we reckon the population of Madagascar at 4,000,000, only a little over one-tenth of them are yet brought in any way under the influence of the Gospel. We want to impress this fact on all friends of missions: that nearly nine-tenths of the Malagasy are still heathen, and that a large proportion of those who have accepted Christianity are yet only Christians in name. In view of the great work still to be accomplished, of the many adversaries of various kinds all around us, and of the recent revival of heathenism and superstition among us, may I beg the earnest prayers of all God's people for our work—rather, for his work—in Madagascar."

Our French contemporary, La Christianisme, states that, on the strength of a gift of 150,000fr. made to them by the French Alliance, in aid of their work in Madagascar, the Jesuits are about to open a subscription on a large scale "in order that moral conquest may follow the material conquest of the country!"

The New Church in Arkville.

THE suburban express rolled out of the dépôt as Deacon John Bradshaw, of Arkville, sat down beside Randall Adams, the clerk of the church in Riverview. After shaking hands and exchanging comments on the weather, Adams said:

"I hear you intend to build a new church over in Arkville."—"Yes," responded Bradshaw.

"How much money shall you put into it?"—"We have not decided yet. We have a meeting to-night to consider it. Let me see, you built a church in Riverview last year, did you not? How much did it cost?"

"Sixty thousand dollars, without the land. Of course, that paid for all the latest improvements, electric lights, and the best arrangements for heating and ventilation."

"Did it also include the organ?"—"No; the organ was a gift from a legacy, and cost 10,000 dols. more. Very fine instrument, very."

"Built the church of stone, I suppose?"—"Yes, graystone with granite trimmings. It is a very imposing structure—quite an honour to the town."

"Cost 60,000 dols., you say?"—"Yes."

"How much are your running expenses per year?"—"About 8000 dols. We pay our pastor, Dr. Criticus, 4000."

"Expensive church to run, is it not?"—"Yes; it costs a great deal to keep a church like that in order. And then our music is expensive. By the way, have you heard our new soprano? She is one of the best singers outside of New York. Quite an acquisition, I assure you."

"No, I have not heard her. How are your congregations—large?"—"Moderately. We are doing very well. Dr. Criticus is preaching now a series of sermons on 'How to Attract the Masses.' Very interesting discourses, I am sure."

"Does he attract them?" asked Bradshaw, with a smile.—"Attract whom?"

"The masses."—"Oh no, of course not. We are hardly located for that sort of work, you know. I judge one would have to go down by the factories to do that sort of work."

"Have you had many additions this year?"—"Oh yes, quite a number have come in with us."

"By confession, I suppose?"—"No, by letter mostly. Let me think. Ah, yes, I remember, Dr. Criticus did baptize a candidate this winter, and one or two in the fall. The Emory Hudsons have come with us this winter. You know Hudson? Director in the Fifth National Bank. Brought their letters from New York."

"How much did you give for missions last year?"—"Missions? Let me see. Oh, a thousand or so, I suppose. I believe our benevolences, including the home charities, were nearly two thousand dollars. Some of that, I have no doubt, went to missions. Ah, this is Arkville. You leave here. Well, good-night."

Bradshaw left the train and entered his carriage. On the way home he mused on the conversation with Adams, and came slowly to a conclusion which might have surprised that gentleman had he known it.

Arkville had been for generations a staid little village within a dozen miles of the great metropolis; but it was only in recent years that she had begun to thrive as a "suburb." She had now become an exceedingly attractive town of no mean dimensions, and her low, wooded hills were crowned with handsome residences. The water power afforded by a narrow but deep stream in her centre had attracted mills there more than a century before, and at one time certain old wisecrackers thought her prospects far more brilliant than those of the little Dutch town on the end of Manhattan

Island, which its British captors called New York. But the mills which once made Arkville famous were now crumbling to dust, their broken walls overrun with blossoming vines. New factories, which had replaced the water power with steam, had sprung up in the busy streets of the town, and attracted a considerable population of labourers, who lived in the old-fashioned cottages and the staring new tenements that filled the cross streets.

The old church, of which Bradshaw was a deacon, stood at one side of the town, because fifty years ago, when it was built, its location was chosen to suit the convenience of the rural population quite as much as of the townspeople. It was strong enough to have stood another half-century, but it was far too small for the growing congregation that gathered there.

On the night in question it was filled almost to overflowing with eager people, whose half-suppressed excitement betokened the keenest interest in the question under debate. Much was said by way of preliminary which we need not repeat, and then the question of the style and cost of the new building was thrown open for the freest discussion. It was Deacon Bradshaw's earnest words that decided the matter. He sat very near the minister in one of the front pews. When a number of persons had spoken, he rose and said:

"Brethren, we are about to erect a house for the worship of God. I believe we all, every one of us, honestly desire to please the Lord in the manner of building which we build." [A murmur of assent was heard at this.] "It has pleased the Lord to grant us showers of refreshing grace in the months that have just passed, and I am sure that our hearts are still filled with the joy of that blessed revival. Therefore we are the more desirous to please Him in this matter. I have thought much about this enterprise, and the question that has been continually in my mind for weeks past is, What kind of a house does God want us to build?"

"You all know what this last revival has meant to me." [Here the tears suddenly gathered in the good man's eyes, and as he continued speaking, they fell, one by one, over his cheeks.] "You know how God at last heard the prayers of many years, and that my son, my only son, has been redeemed and cleansed from all the evil of his past, and has come at last to be a father's blessing and a mother's joy. When I remember this great, great goodness of the Almighty, my heart overflows with the desire to honour Him and to please Him. To many of you has come this same feeling of gratitude because of members of your families that have been brought into the kingdom, and I believe that you desire equally with me to please God in this building which we are about to erect.

"Let us consider then, brothers and sisters, what sort of a building is that which will please God. We have money enough to build a beautiful church, as beautiful a church as our neighbours of Riverview have built. We can spend as much as they in costly decoration. We can buy beautiful woods, and the finest marbles, and set up granite columns, for the Lord has blessed us in temporal affairs, and we have the money to give. But does the Lord wish us to do that with his money? Is that the kind of church that He wants? I know that He is worthy of the best that earth can yield Him, but I also know that in his sight obedience is better than sacrifice, and I believe that He would rather we should obey as far as in our power the command to preach the Gospel to every creature, than to build the most magnificent house in the world.

"The church in Riverview is very imposing, very rich, very pleasing to an æsthetic taste, but the sinner does not go there. As you know, Riverview, like Arkville, has a large population of factory operatives. There are plenty of people in Riverview to fill the church, and several more as large congregations if they chose to come. But it is too fine. Its beauty and costliness frighten them. It is too dignified to be inviting, too imposing to be friendly. A few of the richer people go there, people who are already Christians, but the crowds go to the beer gardens and the picnic grounds.

"Will it not be the same in Arkville if we build such a church? I do not believe that as a church we wish to sit down with our hands folded, content with our own salvation, and let our neighbours perish. [Cries of 'No,' 'No,' were heard.] We do wish to obey the command to preach the Gospel to every creature. Let us, then, build a house which the poor shall not fear, yet which the rich need not be ashamed to enter."—N. Y. Evangelist. 1853.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

"WHAT IS THY PETITION, AND IT SHALL BE GRANTED THEE: AND WHAT IS THY REQUEST? EVEN TO THE HALF OF THE KINGDOM, IT SHALL BE PERFORMED."
—Esther vii. 2.

AMID the sensual conceptions of marriage that obtained in this heathen empire there was doubtless a consciousness in the king's breast of the essential unity between himself and his beautiful queen. She was his better self, and in her pleading he heard the voice of his own higher nature. To nothing less than this could he have made so far-reaching a promise. It was not so much Ahasuerus pledging himself to Esther, as Ahasuerus, the king, awakening to the appeal of a nobler Ahasuerus, for the most part buried. Such is the power of a pure and noble character awakening a nobler life. Will you try by your unselfishness and purity to awaken those around you to see and follow an ideal, which shall presently assume the form of the living Christ?

In these words of the king we are reminded that God is willing to do beyond what we ask or think. Not to the half of his kingdom, but to the whole extent of it, has God pledged Himself, "According to the power that worketh in us." But our prayer must be in the name, or nature, of Christ; that is, the nature of Christ must pray in us, and God must recognise Himself coming back through the circle of our intercessions to Himself. The Spirit must make intercession in us, according to the will of God. When the unselfish, lovely, and holy nature of Jesus pleads in us by the Holy Ghost, there is nothing that God will not do for us, even to the whole of his kingdom.

MONDAY, September 28.

"SEALED WITH THE KING'S RING."—Esther viii. 8.

In chap. iii. 10 the king took the ring from his hand, and gave it to Haman. Here he had evidently resumed it from his chief officer's finger before he was sent to execution. It was now entrusted to Mordecai, because it gave validity to the documents that proclaimed liberty to the Jews. Notice those words: "the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's seal, no man may reverse," and apply them to that sealing with the Holy Ghost, of which we read so often in the New Testament.

On the molten wax the ring, with its royal device, or perhaps the cutting of the royal profile, was pressed, giving sanction, validity, and irreversibility; so on the tender heart of the believer in Christ the Holy Spirit impresses the likeness of Jesus. The seal does not leave an impression of itself, but of the sovereign; and the Holy Spirit reveals not Himself, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and aims only to leave the mark and superscription of Christ on the character. The word character is used in Hebrews i. 3 (see Greek). How wonderful that as the image or character of the Father was impressed on Christ, so the Saviour's image and character are impressed on us! "Him hath God the Father sealed," says the Evangelist. "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God by whom ye were sealed," says the Apostle.

This sealing us with the likeness of Jesus is God's attestation. It is his witness that we are born from above, and are become his sons and daughters. It is God's sign manual of his decree that we should inherit an irreversible portion, and when God has once passed and sealed it neither man nor devil can reverse it.

"THE JEWS HAD RULE OVER THEM THAT HATED THEM."—Esther ix. 1.

Yes, my reader, a similar reversal awaits us in the near future! Now, the god of this world and his followers bear rule over us, and work their way with the servants of God. They butcher Armenians like sheep, and scatter the ashes of their homes to the winds; and sometimes it seems as though God had forgotten to avenge the cause of his saints. But the hour is coming when the Almighty will arise on our behalf, and to him who has patiently kept his works unto the end, He will give authority unto the nations. Listen to these great words: "Behold, I give of the synagogue of Satan, of them which say they are Jews, and they are not, but do lie, behold I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee." Words more applicable to the case of the Jews in the days of Mordecai, and to the history of the Church, it would be impossible to find.

But mark a notable distinction. In the case of the enemies of the Jewish people, there was no quarter. Destruction and death were meted to those who had breathed out persecution and slaughter. But in the case of Christ and his Church power is viewed only as an opportunity of securing salvation and life. The Saviour said after his resurrection, "All power is given unto Me in heaven, and on earth, Go ye, therefore, and preach." And the Church says, as through suffering she passes to the right hand of power, "Lay not this sin to their charge, but out of our persecutors raise apostles to bring them to the feet of Jesus."

"SEEKING THE GOOD OF HIS PEOPLE, AND SPEAKING GOOD TO ALL HIS SEED."—Esther x. 3 (R.V.).

This epitaph on the life of a simple-minded, true-hearted man might be yours also. Why should you not from this moment adopt these twin characteristics? Go about the world seeking the good of people. It does not always mean that you should give them a tract, or a little book. It is much easier to do this than to press your own good in order to seek theirs, and you may be quite sure that some little act of self-sacrifice or thoughtfulness for a weary mother, or crying child, for a sick friend, or for some person who is always maligning and injuring you, would do a great deal in the way of preparing an entrance for the Gospel message, as a genial spring loosens the earth and prepares the way for the germination of multitudinous life. Count the day lost in which you have not sought to promote the good of someone. Adopt as your own the pious Quaker's motto, "Do all the good you can, to all the people you can, in all the ways you can."

Speak peace to people. Soothe agitated and irritated souls. Throw oil on troubled waters. Let the law of kindness be on your lip. Do not say sharp or unkind things of the absent, or allow your lips to speak words that will lead to bitterness or wrath. Seek peace and pursue it. And in order to this, let the peace of God that passeth all understanding keep your mind and heart.

THURSDAY, October 1.

"JOB SAID, IT MAY BE THAT MY SONS HAVE SINNED AND RENOUNCED GOD IN THEIR HEARTS."—

Job. i. 5 (R.V.).

Times of festivity are always full of temptation. The loins are relaxed, the girdle of the soul is loosed. Amid the general hilarity and the passing of the merry joke, words are said and thoughts permitted which are not always consistent with the character of God and his glorious kingdom and service. Job was not wrong, therefore, in supposing that his children might have contracted some defiling stain.

It is necessary for some of us to move in society, and to attend festive gatherings. As the Lord went to the wedding feast, and accepted Simon's invitation, so must we. The sphere of our life seems necessarily in the world. But when we are entering scenes of recreation and pleasure we should be more than ever careful to put on our armour, and by previous meditation and prayer prepare ourselves for the inevitable temptation; and when it is all over, and the lights are down, we should quietly review our behaviour under the light that streams from the Word of God. If we then are made aware of frivolous or uncharitable words, of jealousy because others have outshone us, or of pride at the splendour of our dress and the brilliance of our talk, we must confess it, and obtain forgiveness and restoration.

What a beautiful example is furnished by Job to Christian parents! When your girls are going among strangers, and your boys into the great ways of the world, and you are unable to impose your will upon them, as in the days of childhood, you can yet pray for them, casting over them the shield of intercession, with strong cryings and tears.

FRIDAY, October 2.

"A PERFECT AND AN UPRIGHT MAN."—Job ii. 3.

Even God spoke of Job as perfect. Not that he was absolutely so, as judged by the perfect standard of eternity, but as judged by the standard of his own light and knowledge. He was living up to all the requirements of God and man, so far as he understood them. His whole being was open and obedient to the Divine impulses. Probably Job could have adopted the words of the Apostle, "I know nothing against myself." He exercised himself to have always a conscience void of offence toward God and man.

Satan suggested that his goodness was pure selfishness, that it paid him well to be as he was, because God had hedged him around and blessed his substance. This malignant suggestion was at once dealt with by the Almighty Vindicator of the saints. It was as if God said, "I give thee permission to deprive him of all those favouring conditions, for the sake of which thou sayest he is bribed to goodness, and it shall be seen that his integrity is rooted deep down in the work of my grace upon his heart."

But the book goes on to show that God desired to show Job that there were flaws and blemishes in his character which could only be seen by comparing it with the more perfect glory of his own Divine nature. His friends sought to prove him faulty, and failed; God revealed himself, and he cried, "Behold I am vile, and abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes."

SATURDAY, October 3.

"JOB OPENED HIS MOUTH, AND CURSED HIS DAY."—Job iii. 1.

That is, the day of his birth. Probably there have been hours in the majority of lives in which men have wished that they had never been born. When they have stood beside the wreck of all earthly hope, or entered the garden of the grave, they have cried, "Why died I not from the birth!" The reason for this, is, that the heart has been so occupied with the transient and earthly, that it has lost sight of the unseen and eternal, and in finding itself deprived of the former, it has thought that there was nothing left to live for.

In this state of mind we are apt, if we are professing Christians, to exert a certain constraint over ourselves, and bear ourselves heroically. We have read of people in like circumstances who have not shed a tear or uttered a complaining word, and we have braced ourselves to a Christian stoicism. "I am sure you cannot find fault with my behaviour," said one such to me. And yet beneath the correct exterior there may be the pride and haughtiness of an altogether unsubdued self. Even the self-life may adopt "Keswick" methods of speech.

The only true cure for the self-life, whatever garb it adopts, is the Holy Spirit. We must accept death to self by the body of Christ, in one supreme act, and never be surprised by any subsequent manifestation of the infamy of the felon whom we have hurried to his doom, simply trusting the Holy Spirit to antagonise it, and to realise in us the full beauty of the character of Jesus.

Williams, William F. Williams, Phillis and Noel Wright, Helen and Elsie Willoughby, Harold and Hettie Wodson, Connie Wood, Edgar Yerbury.

* As all the children have not yet sent in their answers to Bible Searcher No. 38, there may be some among the number who can enter the competition. Those children who are thus rendered eligible will receive postcards this week.

2. Competitors will be divided into Four DIVISIONS:—

- DIVISION I. Those under EIGHT years of age.
- II. Those between EIGHT and TWELVE years of age.
- III. Those between TWELVE and FOURTEEN years of age.
- IV. Those over FOURTEEN years of age.

3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "PRIZE COMPETITION," and the NUMBER of DIVISION to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom," as usual.

4. At the top of your answer paper write very clearly your FULL NAME and ADDRESS, your DIVISION, and your AGE last birthday.

5. NUMBER YOUR ANSWERS exactly to correspond with the questions.

6. No CONCORDANCE and no help allowed; only the use of the Bible.

7. Every paper must be signed by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 6 has been observed.

8. Answers may be posted any day (except Sunday) up to, but not later than, TUESDAY, October 6. The results will be announced in THE CHRISTIAN of October 15.

9. Marks will be apportioned for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, etc. In each division 100 marks may be obtained, the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.

10. Every answer will be examined separately by three persons; and NO PAPERS can be RE-EXAMINED after the lists appear.

Those who cannot do ALL the questions set for their division must do AS MANY AS THEY CAN, and will receive marks accordingly. Although the questions will take longer to do than usual, remember (1) that you are working for a prize; (2) that you have more time than usual for doing them.

DIVISION I.

In the Gospel of Mark (ix.).

1. Who went up into a mountain with Jesus? What did they see there?
2. What happened when they joined the other disciples?
3. What was the saying that they "understood not"?
4. What did Jesus ask his disciples in a house at Capernaum?
5. What did Jesus do with a little child?
6. What did He say about "a millstone" and "salt"?

DIVISION II.

In the Gospel of John (i.—v.).

1. How does John describe himself?
2. Who was Christ's third disciple?
3. Whom did He call "an Israelite indeed in whom there is no guile"?
4. What was the first miracle that Jesus performed? What was the second?
5. To whom did He say, "Take these things hence" and why?
6. How long did it take to build the Temple?
7. Say what you know of Nicodemus.
8. With whom did Jesus talk at the well? Where were his disciples?
9. "Come see a man which told me all things that ever I did." By whom and to whom were these words spoken? To whom did they refer?
10. Who was "a burning and a shining light"?

DIVISION III.

[Buried names.]

Find (with consecutive letters), in each of the following texts, the name of a Bible personage. State fully what you know of each:—

1. "The rod and reproof give wisdom."
2. "The great God that formed all things both rewardeth the fool and rewardeth transgressors."
3. "Moses chose able men out of all Israel."
4. "As Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came to hearken."
5. "I am the light of the world."
6. "If thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures,"
7. "She maketh herself coverings of tapestry."

DIVISION IV.

In the Book of Numbers (vi.—xxv.):—

1. What two acts were required of the Nazarite during the days of his separation?
2. Between what ages were the Levites allowed to wait upon the service of the Tabernacle?
3. What was the manna like in appearance and taste? What reference is made to it in St. John's Gospel? What food was given in place of it?
4. State fully what you know of the following:—Eldad and Medad, Miriam, Hobab, Taberah, Kadesh, Meribah, Zelophehad, Balaam, Mount Hor.
5. What reference does Christ make to an event recorded in chapter xxi?
6. Who were the spies sent to Canaan? What was their report? What became of them?
7. What happened to the man who gathered sticks on the Sabbath?
8. "I have not taken one ass from them." By whom and to whom were these words spoken? To whom did they refer?

UNCLE TOM.

Home Missionaries.

DOROTHY was feeling very sad as she sat in the drawing-room one Sunday evening. She had been to a children's service in the afternoon, and the clergyman had preached from the text, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." After speaking of the noble work done by missionaries in foreign lands, he had said that though everyone was not able to go and teach the heathen, yet all, even little children, could preach the Gospel by their lives—that is, they could show by the way in which they acted and spoke, that Jesus was their Master, and so could try to get others to love and serve Him too.

Dorothy had listened very intently to all the clergyman said, and had made up her mind to try and be a "home missionary," and to look as happy and bright as ever she could, to show people how nice it was to love Jesus. But as soon as she got out of church some of her little friends asked her what was making her look so happy. Poor Dorothy was only a little girl, and it was very, very hard for her, as I daresay it is for you, to talk about what she called "good things." So she passed by the question, and lost an opportunity of speaking for Jesus. And now, looking sadly out of the window, she could not keep from crying to think how soon she had failed to keep her resolution.

"Why is my little girl so quiet to-night?" asked her mother, who was sitting at the other end of the room, and so did not see the fast-falling tears.

"Oh, mother, I meant to try so hard to be a home missionary, like Mr. Graham said this afternoon, and then Ada and Bessie asked me why I looked so happy, and I was ashamed to tell them." And poor Dorothy cried more than ever.

Very gently and tenderly did her mother speak to the little girl, telling her that even if she failed at first, Jesus would always be ready to help her, and would give her strength to glorify Him every day of her life. "I am so glad," she said, "that my little girl is going to be a soldier of the Cross; but whenever she feels afraid to say what is right, she must pray to Jesus for help."

So Dorothy dried her tears, and never forgot her mother's words; and when her friends asked what made her so different, she would say gently that she was trying to be a home missionary, and to show people to whom she belonged.

Will you be a home missionary too? Then perhaps some day, when you grow up, you will be a real missionary, and go to tell the heathen about Jesus and his love; for He has done so much for us, that we ought to do a little for Him, oughtn't we?

HER WORK FOR ARMENIA.

THE week before last there passed through London on her way to America Dr. GRACE KIMBALL, whom circumstances have compelled to retire from mission work in Asia Minor, and who is now entering on medical work in her native land. She kindly received and conversed with a representative of this journal, to whom she gave the following details of her work in the troubled East. The narrative is given in her own words as far as condensation will permit.

I went to Van in Asia Minor in 1882, with another American lady, Miss Johnston, to further the interests of educational work among the girls of the country, in connection with the American Board of Missions. This branch of the work had been commenced some six or eight years before, but things grow slowly there, and the question of schools had been kept in abeyance to the preaching and evangelical work. This educational work, which we went to build up, grew to be very interesting and prosperous. The Armenians are a most progressive race, and they worship ardently at the shrine of a solid education. As they were determined to have education at all hazards, we felt an obligation to give them a Christian education. In many parts of the country Russian influence is great. The Russian Armenians go to Germany and other parts of Europe, where they practically become infidels, and the results are very demoralising. Among the native, uncorrupted Armenians, moral sanctions are exceedingly strong.

We had a very satisfactory work in building up, and keeping in operation, these girls' schools. In 1888 I went back home to America for a year's vacation. I was then led providentially to study medicine, towards which I had always had a strong natural leaning. I spent four years in America in this study, and took my medical degree at the Women's Medical College, New York. I returned to Asia Minor in 1892 as a medical missionary. At Constantinople I made a strenuous effort to get my diploma viséd by the Imperial Medical College of that city. After weeks of fatiguing work I could only succeed in getting a certificate as midwife. There was an iradé of the Grand Vizier forbidding women to practise medicine in Turkey. This iradé was practically withdrawn a year after, through the intervention of the American Minister, and two women received their diplomas. A fortnight later, however, the Grand Vizier intimated that that permission was only granted as a special favour to the American Minister, and that it was not a general order. When I put in my petition for a diploma I was met by refusal from the Imperial Board. Finally, my application went to the Grand Vizier and there it lay.

Meantime I was practising my profession in Van. There was a large dispensary, and I also had outside practice, for which I found the greatest need. But my work was hampered by the local doctors, who were jealous of it on financial grounds. The fees we charged were only half those charged by the Turkish doctors, and we supplied the people with drugs at a low price. The doctors combined to oppose me. Bahri Pasha then Governor of the province, sent me a courteous note asking that my diploma and certificate might be handed in for examination. Then he intimated that they would have to go to Constantinople and said he would recommend that they should be viséd. The visé did not come, and I proceeded with my work, on the assumption that the matter was under process, and that I had a perfect right meanwhile to exercise my profession. The Governor accepted that view of it, and showed that he personally had no desire to interfere with me. Indeed, he put some patients in my way. However, the local doctors again took counsel in order to stop me, and I saw that something would have to be done in the matter. I was thinking of going to Constantinople to present my case personally, when the relief work sprang up; from a year ago in July to the time I left Van, all my strength has been expended on that work.

The condition of Armenia, as all the world knows, has been going from bad to worse ever since the signing of the Berlin Treaty. The people have been oppressed more and more; fresh taxation has been imposed by the authorities, so that the poverty has increased year by year. The years preceding 1895 were very hard times, and business was at a low ebb. Bahri Pasha greatly improve-ished the province of Van by collecting an immense amount of money in taxation, and sending it out of the province, probably with the idea of advancing his own interests. It is a large province. In 1894 a very poor harvest caused a scarcity of bread. The Governor manipulated the grain market, so that the price of bread rose to two and a-half times the ordinary figure. The people were reduced to great straits in order to get the bare necessities of life. This was especially the case in the interior of the province; many of the husbands and fathers had gone to Constantinople and other places in search of work, leaving their families in a state of dreadful destitution.

The ranks of the poor in the city of Van were largely increased from these helpless women and children in the country. They looked to the missionaries for relief, and we had to give them help from our own scanty personal resources. This was a very heavy drain on us, and we felt that some way must be found of securing relief for the starving people. It was then that the idea of helping them by providing relief work occurred to me. I was working it out in my mind in a vague sort of way, when I read one day in The Daily News a short letter by Mrs. Madeline Cole, of Trebovir-road, Earl's Court, expressing sympathy with the Armenians, and calling on the women of England to give their Armenian sisters some material aid. I consulted Mr. Hallward, the British Consul at Van, who was a good friend and neighbour, and asked him whether he would endorse my application, if I wrote a reply to Mrs. Cole's letter. He wrote a cordial endorsement, and both our letters duly appeared in The Daily News. From this there grew up the work of industrial relief at Van, which has been such an untold blessing to the people, and which is still going on.

Some little sums of money had been sent to me from other friends, and I at once set to buy some wool and cotton. Instead of merely giving charity, I asked the women if they would spin the wool and cotton, receiving such amounts in payment as would sustain them and their families in life. They were perfectly overjoyed at the idea of getting work to do; for the Armenians are a characteristically frugal, self-respecting, and hard-working people. The women set to work to spin the wool and cotton, and brought it back as thread. Then we had to find weavers.

A great many of the people know either of these trades of spinning and weaving. The hand looms were started, and the thread was made into coarse woollen or cotton cloth. The people were paid a living wage, and the effort proved a tremendous help to them. As I was out of medical practice we gave up the large dispensary to the work, and the applicants rose from a very few to scores and hundreds, and eventually to thousands.

Up to this time there had been no massacres in our region except at Sassoun. It was significant of the condition of the country that before those dreadful universal massacres had taken place, things were at such a pitch that this relief work was absolutely imperative. From the goods we had made we supplied the Sassoun Relief Committee, which was supported by the Duke of Westminster's Fund, and this helped to renew our capital for further purchases of material. We again accumulated a large amount of goods, and were at a loss to know what to do with the constantly increasing stock. Then the October and November massacres took place throughout the country. These outrages reached our Van villages, which were largely pillaged; five hundred out of the five hundred and fifty were looted by the Kurdish raiders. I made a report to that effect, and the Sultan was good enough to call me a liar, but the facts remained the same. We had hundreds of refugees crowding into the city of Van. They had been robbed of everything, even of decent clothing. Many had not enough to cover their nakedness. The question of feeding and clothing them had to be faced. We turned to our storehouses of cloth already manufactured, and we found this stock the greatest blessing. It was too great a temptation to give the cloth, which was a saleable article, so we distributed it among all the tailors we could find, and in twenty-four hours we had a large supply of ready-made clothing. The funds raised by the Women's Armenian Relief Committee enabled us to meet this large and sudden demand. Bakeries were opened by the help of contributions sent by the readers of the Christian Herald of New York. So we clothed and fed these crowds of country refugees. As they settled down and practically became residents, they came under our industrial operations, and in that way supported themselves.

All these efforts were carried on upon thoroughly business principles, and we had the help of some experienced and trustworthy business men in the city, who willingly gave their services for a very small remuneration, so that our administration expenses were kept low.

I ought to say that the money collected in England by the Women's Armenian Relief Committee was remitted to us in the speediest and most admirable way. The amounts at disposal were advised by telegraph to the Ottoman Bank, Constantinople; the bankers there telegraphed to us in Van, so that in four or five days from the time the money was deposited with the London bankers, we were able to use it at Van.

As the summer of this year came on, the harvest prospects were very encouraging. It was felt by Major Williams, the British Consul, and the rest of our relief committee, that we should stop operations at that time. Our endeavour was to get the people back to their villages, to establish them there, to provide them with tools and cattle, and get them settled in their villages, hoping that at the harvest in August the relief work would stop. On that basis I made my plans to leave Van, in order to fill the post which I had accepted, of resident physician at Vassar College, New York. Just after my acceptance had been cabled to America, the massacres in the city of Van took place. They began on June 14. I need not describe them, as the British people have supped full of these horrors. Suffice it to say that one-third of the Armenian houses in the city were either burnt or pillaged, and about 600 Armenians were killed, while in the outlying districts the villages were practically all pillaged to the very last vestige of property, and most of the arm-bearing men were killed. The others were in many cases driven from the villages into the city, and everywhere there were confusion and distress.

We had to reorganise the industrial work and start on a new career of relief. The country people were forcibly sent back to their villages by the Government, and so far as I know no further excesses or outrages have occurred. The idea was to get the Armenians to reap the new harvest. The question of future taxes is involved. Whether the Armenians will be helped and protected by the authorities after the harvest, is a question that time alone will answer. At the present time the condition of things in Van and all that region is one that calls very strongly for continued relief. In the city all industries have been practically stopped since October 23 of last year, and that of course means great poverty. As the city depends largely on the villages for its support, the village destitution increases the poverty. The killing of 600 able-bodied men leaves so many more wives and orphans to be kept alive. In the villages throughout the large province of Van some 10,000 able-bodied men have been killed, leaving a great host of women and children who were dependent on them. While the wheat harvest has been extremely abundant, no ploughing or sowing has been done for next year, so that the outlook is bad. They will not have a famine, but there is certain to be very great suffering amongst a large portion of the people.

What the outcome may be of the recent Constantinople outbreak of massacre one cannot tell, but I feel that matters have now these are the only alternatives. There are grave eventualities to be feared whatever happens. It will be difficult for the Great Powers to prevent a general massacre the moment the provincial Turks know that their hour of retribution has come.

The relief work in Van is now under the protection of the British Vice-Consul, and is being carried out by Dr. Raynolds, the senior member of the American Mission. It will be continued on the same lines as hitherto. All moneys sent to the Women's Armenian Relief Committee (Mrs. Cole, 3, Trebovir-road, Earl's Court, S.W., Treasurer) will be applied in the most economical and practical manner possible, and almost entirely through industrial relief channels.

From the New Hebrides.

THE general report for last year of the New Hebrides Mission states that there were eighteen missionaries and 271 teachers at work, with 9587 people attending school and 296 candidates awaiting baptism; 492 adult baptisms and 148 marriages were solemnised during the year. The sum of £312 7s. 3d. in cash was raised, and, in addition, 5210lb. of arrowroot, amounting to about £260, was made for mission purposes. This does not include the large amount paid for books in cash or by contributions of arrowroot. Sixteen couples volunteered for work in heathen islands, and 1120 natives renounced their heathenism and joined the Christian party, while the number of church members stands at 2082.

Rev. J. W. Mackenzie, of Efate, writing on the political aspect of the islands, says it gives ground for grave anxiety. "The French seem particularly energetic at present in seeking to get the trade of the group into their hands, and several priests have been settled during the past year; and not only this, but French settlers are coming in and settling on the land in much greater numbers than the British. And I was told the other day, by one who is an authority on the subject, that when the question of annexation comes up, improvement of the land, and not the amount of work done among the natives, will be the point to decide the matter."

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, of Tonga, in a recent letter, describes a trip on the new mission vessel the Day-spring; he went as far north as Santo, with five youths who were entering Dr. Annand's training institution. Returning south he made a short stay at Epi, and afterwards visited Lopevi and Paama, two heathen islands. To the chiefs of the latter island he proposed the settlement of Christian teachers, and he left with hopes of being able to send some shortly. The Tonga boat Viking proved of great service in moving about between the islands and from station to station on the coasts. In the various parts of his field Mr. Michelsen found many converts desiring baptism, the additions to his membership roll in the course of ten months making an aggregate of about 200. A lady missionary, Miss Gorton, of Sydney, has arrived to help in the work at Tonga.

The List of Missionaries leaving England this autumn in connection with the C.M.S. comprises forty-seven clergymen, seven doctors, sixteen laymen, twenty-six wives, and thirty-eight women workers, making a total of 134.

reached a crisis, when some decision must be come to. Either a European Commissioner must be appointed for Asia Minor, or Russia must get Anatolia and Constantinople. If the laissez faire policy is to be pursued still further, that probably will mean that the Armenians will be wholly exterminated or converted to Islam. It seems to me that Perth Conference.

THE MISSIONARY ADDRESSES.

Under the chairmanship of Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P. (Liverpool), several most interesting addresses were given by missionaries, who are home for a while and fresh from the scene of their labours. Chief among them stood Rev. Dr. BRUCE, of the C.M.S. Mission in whose special plea was for increased effort among Mohammedan nations.

Islam, said the speaker, has come to be regarded as the one Goliath which defies the armies of the living God. Yet this is not the case in India, at any rate, where a large proportion of the best converts were formerly Mohammedans. There are several reasons why Christians are under special obligations to the followers of the "Prophet." He was a descendant of Ishmael and his disciples are his spiritual seed; Christians are of the spiritual seed of Abraham through Isaac. We are, therefore, their spiritual brethren. Then, too, the home of Christianity and that of Mohammedanism is the same—the lands of the Bible, stretching, roughly, from the western frontier of Egypt to that of India—the home of the patriarchs, the prophets, and of the Lord Himself, as well as of the most populous of the kingdoms of the earth. Yet how different the influence of each. Mahomet changed the fruitful land into a desert, but Christ makes the desert to blossom as the rose.

Tracing the history of the "Prophet" himself, Dr. Bruce related how when in quest of truth he had been misled by both Jews and Christians, who fed him on the chaff of human tradition instead of the wheat of truth; with the result that he founded the religion which bears his name. He was not a polygamist until after the death of his first wife (whose influence over him was all-powerful), when he himself was over fifty years old. The oppression of woman, in which is found the root of the cruelty of the world, has since then been an article of Mohammedan faith and practice, and forms a strong contrast to that of the followers of Christ. He believed that God had raised up the prophets to win the world, even by fire and sword. This and his other false ideas about God were the result of the mischievous and unfortunate training he received from those who turned aside his eager seeking into wrong channels. To these nations, then, who have a knowledge about God, but do not know Him, that Christians are in duty bound to take the Gospel.

Dr. Bruce referred in grateful terms to the devoted pioneer Henry Martyn, who after seven or eight years of labour in India, went at his own expense to Persia and translated the New Testament with that tongue. It was while bringing home his treasured work for publication that the faithful worker died. He (Dr. Bruce) had been led to Persia in a remarkable manner while en route for India. A severe famine raged through the land, and large sums of money were sent out by friends at home, no less than £6300 coming from a Wurtemberg pastor, who had collected it in small coins from his congregation.

In 1875 Dr. Bruce took up work at Ispahan, and subsequently at Baghdad. The blessing of Christian women in work among Mohammedans cannot be over estimated; and he bore warm testimony to Miss Mary Bird, a frail but invaluable worker in the Mission. From among the Armenians, too, God had raised up a useful band of workers. He related the case of a martyr to the truth who for eleven months was imprisoned in a loathsome dungeon, then beaten and finally strangled. Again and again he was offered his liberty to recant, but his unfaltering reply was,

"JESUS IS TRUE, THOUGH YOU KILL ME!"

How many have borne equally brave testimony in these later days of massacre and blood! Dr.

(558)

Bruce concluded with a powerful presentation of the claims of these Mohammedan lands, and the responsibility of the Christian Church regarding them.

CHINA.

Rev. P. J. MACLAGAN introduced himself as representing the English Presbyterian Church in Swatow. Their first missionary was Rev. Wm. Burns, who commenced his labours about fifty years ago. To-day there is a chain of mission stations extending from north of Amoy to within a hundred miles of Hongkong, also work in Formosa and the Straits Settlements and India. There is considerable freedom of movement in the country, due to the itinerating of the missionaries, who have thus been enabled to diffuse a knowledge of Christianity. The converts are not very many, but they include some very useful men.

The medical branch of the work has also done much to open the way for the Gospel, there being seven hospitals carried on under the auspices of the Mission. That at Swatow, with which the speaker was best acquainted, had recorded the attendance of 5000 patients, who had come from no less than 2000 towns and villages. During their stay they were taught by colporteurs and Bible-women, and heard the preaching at the chapel; so that they could not return home without some knowledge of the Gospel. But a still more powerful influence is that of the convert's life at home. The parents of a young Chinaman were advised to stop his attending the meetings held by the missionary; but they replied, "We will wait, and see if it MAKES HIM A BETTER SON."

Nor were they disappointed; and his consistent life led ultimately to their own conversion.

The adult membership of the mission now numbers 4640 (besides those who have died in the faith), of whom about 1400 are in Swatow. The service of English ladies and of Christian Chinese women has proved exceedingly valuable, and in this direction there are great possibilities of development, were volunteers and funds forthcoming. The educational and colportage branches are also most important. Much has been spoken and written against the character of Chinese converts, but such criticism has emanated entirely from prejudiced or ill-informed sources. That some have failed is true of these as of every other community, but there have been many who, for faithfulness even unto death, would put to shame many better-privileged Christians at home. Indeed, they have stood times of testing with heroic devotion; they have shaken themselves free from idols and heathen customs, have endured persecution, robbery, beating, and social disgrace, have given freely of their substance to further the work, and have laboured earnestly without receiving a penny of remuneration. Surely these are qualifications to rank among faithful followers of the Lamb.

As to the future prospects of this and similar missions in China, the cause of missions will be helped forward in proportion as the Chinese allow themselves to be influenced by Western thoughts and ideas, which will tend to break down the spirit of exclusiveness which has so widely prevailed. The visit to England of Li Hung Chang will, it is expected, largely conduce to this. Meantime, far more has been accomplished than the first missionaries even dared to hope for. For this we thank God and take courage.

INDIA

was represented by Rev. ROBT. KILGOUR (Darjeeling) and Rev. R. MCCHEYNE PATTERSON (Gujerat). The former spoke of the work of the North-East Himalayan Mission among the Tibetans, Goorkhas, and Lepchas, all of whom come in large numbers to Darjeeling. The membership numbers 2350, besides 2216 scholars in the Sunday school. There was a long time of sowing before the work began to show tangible fruit, and it was not till four years had elapsed that the first convert, a boy, was registered; but he, now grown to man's estate, has proved a staunch and valuable helper. He is now a Christian policeman on the frontier, and much esteemed by his European superior officers. There are also two native missionary associations for sending the Gospel into Nepaul and Bhutan, to which Europeans have no access. At a meeting recently held in Darjeeling most encouraging testimony to the success of the work was borne by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal (Sir Charles Elliott), who presided, corroborated by the Deputy Commissioner of the district, the Government Inspector of Schools, and a Christian tea-planter. Sir Charles Elliott said: "The influence of the missionaries, is many-sided—economic, intellectual, and spiritual—this last, of course, most of all: influences that work together for the great end of helping the people of this country, and of collecting together a body of people who share with us the blessings of the Christian religion."

Mr. MCCHEYNE PATTERSON described the Punjab as the home of the Sikhs, who volunteer to give up their homes to go and defend British interests in East Africa, and, by their religion, imperil their souls by crossing the sea—all for an earthly Queen, and with no "farewell meeting" or valedictory honours. Surely, then, it ought to be no hardship for workers to go forth in the service of the King of kings! Speaking for himself, he so loved the work that the trial was for him to come home and leave it even for a time. For many years, he said, our members were very "narrow," but eight years ago the famine in China opened the hearts and pockets of the Christians in Gujerat, and now they give (besides church collections) 5d. in the £ toward foreign missionary effort. A league has been formed, the members of which agree (1) "To look on the face of God every morning before we look on that of our fellow-men. (2) To pray as earnestly before reading the Bible as we usually do after. (3) That if we neglect either of these, to make a note of the omission and confess it before our brethren at the next monthly meeting." This illustrates the earnestness of the converts, which is a very encouraging sign, especially in view of the flooding of the country with infidel literature before which Hinduism is gradually vanishing, and a dark and hopeless atheism taking its place. Nor are there wanting evidences of the martyr-spirit in times of persecution, when converts have said, "The Lord Jesus spilled his blood for us, and shall we do less for Him?" As to the influence of the Gospel in the land, the Prince of Travancore said in a public speech in 1874: "Where did the English-speaking people get all their intelligence, and cleverness, and energy, and power? It is their Bible that gives it to them, and now they bring it to us and say, 'This is what raised us; take it and raise yourselves.' They do not force it upon us as the Mohammedans did their Koran: but they bring it in love, and translate it into our languages, and lay it before us and say, 'Look at it, read it, examine it, and see if it is not good.' Of one thing I am convinced—do what we will, oppose it as we may, it is the Christian Bible that will sooner or later work the regeneration of this land." It was sad that he should have had to add "I am not a Christian; I do not accept their tenets; but I accept Christian ethics in their entirety. I have the highest admiration for them."

The interest of the meeting at which these addresses were delivered was so well maintained that in spite of the unusual lateness of the hour there was very little diminution of the audience to listen to Rev. DUNDAS ERSKINE, who pleaded the cause of AFRICA.

With commendable tact, he imparted no little humour to his speech in describing the niceties of the Kaffir language. He described the influence of witchcraft as one of the greatest obstacles to the progress of the Gospel, creating as it does a class of witch-doctors who live upon the credulity of the people and gain immense power over them. Practically, the Kaffir in his natural state has no religion; yet there are indications in the customs of the race of a certain feeling after, and a belief in, a future state—as, for instance, the burying of weapons and tools with a man in the evident supposition that he will require them when he wakes in another life.

The methods adopted by the mission are (1) village schools, by which the children are reached when access is denied to the adults; (2) medical work, which is the key to unlock many a closed door; (3) Gospel preaching at various out-stations. The bounds of the speaker's district extend seventy miles by twenty-five, in which there are fourteen stations in charge of competent native workers, who fill the offices of elders, evangelists, and deacons. As instances of the fidelity of these brethren it was recorded that one elder had been known to walk forty-three miles to attend the session meeting, and another had walked eighteen miles regularly for twelve years for the same purpose, neither of them receiving any remuneration from the mission. It is evident that here, as in China, the Gospel has the same regenerating and sustaining power, and that God can save men of any colour, character, or clime.

Progress in Ireland.

THE superintendents and leading friends throughout Ireland speak in most favourable terms of the work being done all over the country both by the permanent Scripture Readers at important stations, and also by the itinerant Scripture Readers. All have reason to believe that the Irish people are thinking for themselves, and feel less than ever the restraint and power of the priesthood.

Open doors and open hearts are to be met with everywhere; there is less of controversy and bad feeling, and altogether more friendship and real nationality subsist between Protestants and Roman Catholics. The Word of God is received more freely, and it is to be hoped souls are being saved. We have reason to hope there is a good time coming for Ireland.

Tourists are coming over in large numbers from all parts of the world, and have opportunities of seeing this country and its lovely scenery, mountains and lakes, and western highlands. There is now good hotel accommodation to be met with in the wildest parts. Our friendly cry is to all, "Come over, see and judge, and help to unite and pull together."

You will be glad to hear that the booklet "Compel," fourth edition, by special request, has been largely noticed in pulpits and elsewhere as a very remarkable illustration of the text Luke xiv. 23, "Compel them to come in." A leading friend of the Society writes as follows: "Just a word to cheer you. Last night, 6th September, Sunday, at Spurgeon's Tabernacle, Pastor Brown, of Dublin, was preaching. I was there, and the place was filled, a reminder of dear Spurgeon's days. A memorable sermon was closed with a reference to your work and labour of love, depicting the rescue of the Russian crew (as described in 'Compel'). I would suggest special prayer being offered up that this service may be specially blessed in far-reaching results and benefit to both of the two societies, the Scripture Readers' Society and the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Society, as alluded to in 'Compel.'"

Some lines in the Irish Times of September 11, on mackerel fishing off Connemara, remind me of days long gone by, when I was privileged to co-operate with others in efforts to lift our poor people out of want by promoting fisheries. I learn that the mackerel fishery has experienced great developments, and that a few nights ago over a hundred thousand were landed in one haul. There was work for every available man, woman, and child in preparing and despatching the catch for the American market. The success achieved augurs well for the permanent establishment of the fishing industry in this remote part of the Galway coast, where none but local boats are engaged.

J. KEARNEY WHITE.

27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

Dundee Christian Conference.

THE annual gatherings of this conference took place on three successive days last week, and proved a source of much blessing to the many who were privileged to attend. The presence of Rev. J. Hudson Taylor gave a strong impulse to the missionary aspect of the conference, and the fervid appeals of Rev. Henry Montgomery, from Belfast, did not fail to come home to the consciences of hundreds.

On Tuesday forenoon the chair was occupied by Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON. The subject of Conference was "The Nurture of the Christian Life." The most important thing about a Christian, he said, was his spiritual life, and that it was his duty and privilege to nourish that life by the use of every legitimate means.

Rev. A. F. FORREST, Glasgow, having read Ephesians iii. 14-17, said that in the Gospels we had a record of that part of his work for man's salvation which was outward, but there was another form of his saving activity in the lives of all to whom He brings the experience of the great salvation. By the indwelling of Christ we have power for duty, the endurance of affliction, and the performance of service. Many do not realise this indwelling, and are therefore weak. It is the function of the Holy Ghost to reveal Christ to the human soul, and make his presence a reality in power and grace.

In the afternoon Rev. JOHN BISSETT presided, and gave an outline of the teaching of Paul about the Holy Spirit in his Epistle to the Ephesians. He pointed out that the work of the Spirit consisted in sealing, supplying, and strengthening believers, and that their practical attitude towards the Spirit is negatively not to grieve Him, but positively to be filled with his power.

Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON mentioned various ways of grieving the Spirit, such as neglect, disobedience, and want of dependence on his promised aid. Rev. DUNDAS ERSKINE, from Africa, in an earnest address, pleaded for a fuller recognition of the Spirit's work on the part of all Christians.

The evening meeting was largely attended. Rev. C. M. Grant occupied the chair. Rev. W. H. RANKINE, St. Boswells, delivered an address on "The Gift of the Holy Ghost, with Special Reference to the Teaching of the Acts of the Apostles." The power of the Holy Ghost is an inalienable right of believers. The purpose of Jesus Christ was that all men and women should be living witnesses for Him. We owe our position as believers to the work of the Holy Spirit. A full Christian life is only to be attained by a loving reception of the Spirit for service. Men and women can only receive the Spirit through faith. The Christian life is not based upon experiences but on facts regarding Jesus Christ. Rev. A. F. FORREST followed with an evangelistic address on the purpose of life.

On Wednesday morning, Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR gave an address on "The Duty of Reading the Scriptures." There are too many fasting Christians who, however careful they are of the body, nevertheless neglect the needs of the soul. God is a bountiful Giver. If He gives light there is plenty of it, and so with his other gifts. He not only keeps alive, but satisfies the desire of every living thing. No earthly parent cares to see his child looking sickly and complaining of hunger. How much more our Father in heaven loves to see his people strong in his own might. After reading Joshua i. 1-9, he stated that Canaan with its conflict was a type, not of heaven, but of the rest of faith and consequent victory enjoyed by Christians on earth. Joshua's Bible was a very small one compared with ours, yet, if it did so much for him, there is much in these early books that might be useful to us. He attributed any success God had given him in the work of the China Inland Mission to his endeavour to make the law of the Lord his delight.

Rev. W. H. RANKINE followed with an address on Phil. iv. 6-7, in which he showed the value of prayer and thanksgiving in all circumstances.

In the afternoon, Rev. HENRY MONTGOMERY, Belfast, spoke on the subject of "Prevailing Prayer." After reading the story of Jacob wrestling with the angel, he said God never answered his people until He had broken them. Jacob was adroit and clever, but he got no blessing till the Lord lamed him. God brings his people to the dust, and after He has, as it were, pulverised them, they are ready for his gifts. Moses with Aaron and Hur on the Mount cried in utter helplessness; but their prayer prevailed against Amalek. Prayer to prevail must be persevering. Thus the disciples prayed ten days before the Day of Pentecost.

At a crowded meeting in the evening, Mr. D. Keith Murray occupied the chair, and Rev. J. S. RAE, Edinburgh, gave an address on "Prayer in Connection with Christian Work." In the course of his remarks, he said that for success in Christian work we must wait upon God with prayer and supplication. When men and women unite in prayer they are doing one of the grandest works they can do. The very best example of this we have in the Lord Jesus Himself, and this is the only unfinished work of Christ. Christians can never have perfection in prayer; let them go on, therefore, without ceasing. Working and prayer go together. If work is to be well done it must be followed by prayer. Mr. J. E. TAYLOR, Aylesbury, followed with an evangelistic address.

On Thursday morning, Rev. WILLIAM MUIR, Blairgowrie, gave an address on "Church Fellowship." He mentioned four reasons why such fellowship promotes the nurture of the Christian life—first, by taking Christians out of themselves. In astronomy, under the Ptolemaic system, the earth was supposed to be the centre of the heavenly bodies. Brave but futile attempts were made to harmonise the movements of the stars with this belief. Only when the sun was found to be the centre of the solar system did the harmony appear. We, at first, make self the centre and fancy that all revolves round us. But when the Sun of Righteousness appears on the horizon, our life becomes Christocentric and, therefore, orderly. Second—Christian fellowship is useful because it supplements the inadequacy of the individual life. No single Christian possesses all the light that has been revealed. Different Christians and even different periods have discovered different aspects of truth. Further—fellowship is useful because it corrects the one-sidedness of the individual life. Finally—Christian fellowship is helpful by making those promises available which are only for companies of Christians.

Rev. HENRY MONTGOMERY followed with a rousing address on the "Baptism of the Holy Ghost." He pointed out that their work was supernatural, and for its accomplishment they required supernatural power. Too many are like the nine disciples who for lack of faith were unable to dislodge one devil from a little boy, though Jesus had made that part of their programme. The Chinese refused to receive new ideas, and in the recent war they were defeated. The Japanese embraced Western notions, and were victorious. God's new idea is the baptism of his Spirit. Christians must receive this if they are to conquer the world.

The afternoon meeting was devoted to missions. Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR sketched the origin of the China Inland Mission, and then described a long journey through the heart of China during the late war. He stated that in spite of the dangers to which many of the missionaries were subjected, he found that the riots in Western China only tended in the long run to further the cause of the Gospel. Rev. R. H. KIRKLAND gave an interesting account of his work on the Congo, and paid a warm tribute to the late Mr. John C. Logie, of Dundee, with whom he had held pleasant fellowship not long before his lamented death. Rev. DUNDAS ERSKINE told of ten years' work in Kaffraria, and gave graphic details of missionary efforts among the people by means of schools, medical treatment, and Gospel preaching. Mr. JAMES ADAM, who was dressed in Chinese costume, told how nine years ago he started from his native Dundee to a western province in China, where he had since seen many of the natives renouncing their idols and embracing the Gospel.

The evening meeting was presided over by ex-Provost Moncur. Rev. WILLIAM MUIR, Blairgowrie, spoke on "Christian Service as a Means of Strengthening Spiritual Life." He stated that life and service stood to each other as cause and effect. Together they constituted an endless chain. There was now an urgent call to the Church of Christ for a more active Christian service. The world was perishing, and waited for the Gospel. Let them vote urgency in the question of advancing Christ's cause. Rev. HENRY MONTGOMERY followed with an earnest evangelistic address.

Conference in Switzerland.

THE Annual International Conference of the Federation for Abolishing all Governmental Licensing of Vice has again been held, namely at Berne, Switzerland. Once again Mrs. Josephine Butler, whose efforts started the Federation many years ago, was able to take part in the proceedings, and to give to and receive from her many supporters the encouragement which all need when engaged in such an unpopular movement as this one is.

Switzerland has for many years produced some of the most devoted workers for this Federation, and the system of Police des Mœurs, which the Federation thinks so unrighteous and so inhuman, has been abolished in many Swiss cities and towns. It was abolished in Berne, for example, by the initiative of M. Stockmar ten years ago, when he was holding the post of Conseiller d'Etat, and in spite of some efforts to resuscitate the system, M. Stockmar and his party have maintained the exclusion up till now. M. Stockmar came forward at last week's conferences as President of the Committee of Reception. But Geneva is the one city which forms the bête noire in Switzerland by its official recognition of the system of licensing vice, and the fact that Mrs. Butler and many supporters of the Federation have recently conducted a stirring public agitation in Geneva has served the purpose of awakening Swiss public opinion on the subject, and so adding zest to the week of conferences just held at Berne.

The British delegates to Berne included Mrs. Josephine Butler, Mr. Stuart, M.P., Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P., Mr. Thomasson, ex-M.P. for Bolton, Rev. J. P. Gledstone, Mr. W. Alex. Coote, secretary of the National Vigilance Society, Mr. J. H. Levy and a contingent of about a dozen ladies connected with the English Ladies' National Association for Repeal. Sir W. Wedderburn, M.P., Mr. Percy Bunting, editor of the Contemporary, and one or two other gentlemen were named as delegates, but were prevented from attending. The local Committee of Reception included government officials, doctors, lawyers, and clergy. The Swiss bishops sent two delegates (one of whom is the Curé of Berne) to express episcopal greetings and sympathy, and to report fully upon the conferences and the statistics and arguments upon which the claim for abolition of Police des Mœurs is based.

The subject matter dealt with at the conferences embraced the hygienic, the legislative, the social and moral aspects of the regulation question. In the hygienic section the topics and the details were much too medical and statistical for copious reference here, but it may be explained that Dr. Birkbeck Nevins, of Liverpool, who many years ago was convinced of the immorality of the Contagious Diseases Acts in England, and their tyranny over poor women, leaving the sinful men scot-free, has long been the Advocatus Dei for the repeal movement. And it is a significant fact that although special invitations and even challenges have been issued to Continental doctors and specialists to meet Dr. Nevins, no earnest Advocatus Diaboli has come forward publicly to defend the Police des Mœurs or prove its sanitary effectiveness. Dr. Comminge, of Paris, has recently dealt with the subject in print, and has attempted to prove that the Police des Mœurs and State regulation of vice have had a beneficial effect on the Continental armies, and Dr. Nevins took occasion to answer Dr. Comminge's statements at Berne. He started on these inquiries:—

1. Has "réglementation" (the C.D. Acts) proved to be a sanitary benefit to the European or Indian Armies, so as to call for its maintenance or its re-enactment?
2. Has the abolition of the system been followed by injury and not rather by benefit to the troops previously under its influence?

Against these questions Dr. Nevins set himself to prove:—

1. "Réglementation" has failed to prove that it has either prevented or diminished the diseases of sin in the various European communities in which it has been applied. It has also failed to prove that the small amount or even a reduction in the amount of these diseases, when they may have occurred, has been due to its influence, and not rather to the operation of other more important causes acting at the same time along with it.

[360]

2. The abolition of "réglementation," where it had been in operation, so far from producing sanitary injury, has been followed by a marked diminution of these diseases in some countries—notably in England and some of her dependencies. It has also been followed in other places by a reduction of the rate of increase that had been taking place for years previously, while they were under the operation of the system.

In support of his argument he produced very elaborate charts and tabulated statistics, which were accepted by the conference, and were certainly not challenged, much less refuted, by anybody favourable to the Police des Mœurs.

On the subject of the traffic in girls and women for purposes of immorality, a traffic carried on with England and other countries of Europe by most subtly scientific ramifications, M. de Meuron, of Geneva, Prof. Hilty (Swiss Federal Councillor and Professor of Jurisprudence), Mr. William Alex. Coote, of the National Vigilance Association, London, and other speakers addressed the meeting. A resolution by M. de Meuron, asking the Swiss Government to lead in a movement for suppressing this traffic, was amended by Professor Hilty to the effect that England, which had produced Mrs. Butler as protagonist of this repeal movement, and which was also reigned over by a Queen, should take the initiative, and later on Mr. W. A. Coote submitted a motion that "Every person engaging any young woman for employment in a foreign country shall be compelled to report the same to the local police at the port or place of departure from the country to which she belongs, in her presence and with her corroboration, and the names, addresses and destinations of the persons shall be noted in a special book kept for that purpose; and on the arrival of the young woman at her destination it shall be the duty of the person into whose employment she is taken to report the same at the local police office, in the presence of the young woman so engaged, and with her corroboration, with a schedule of the general duties involved in the engagement." Both the motion of M. de Meuron and the addition by Mr. W. A. Coote were favourably received by the Federation's Executive Committee, which will seek to put the suggestions into practice later on.

On the legislative side Mr. Levy, member of the Personal Rights Association, London, read a paper, taking the view that "Freedom is the Fundamental Condition of Morality." He held that our intellectual and moral natures can only come into play when it is possible for us to discriminate and decide for ourselves. When this power and duty of discrimination and decision was taken away, the individual was deprived of the most essential element of manhood and womanhood, and became a mere tool, propelled from without. Freedom was the primal and basal condition of morality, without which there can be neither virtue nor vice. "Force is no remedy," said the late Mr. John Bright, and on this principle Mr. Levy held that all the world over, the principal obstacle to the growth of morality was the constant resort to brute force; whereas the true remedy was a firm faith in the reformation possible as a result of earnest love and calm reason, and the recognition of the right of even the greatest sinner to control his or her own life. Never till that faith was put into practice would public morality be put upon such a basis that all that was best in the individual might reach its highest and widest development.

Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., and M. H. Pierson (Holland) combated these views, and held that legislation for suppressing vice should not only be passed, but should be made equally penal on men as on women. Mr. Wilson instanced an Act for this purpose passed by the House of Commons last year, to apply to Scotland, and hoped soon to see a similar law in force in England, in spite of the House of Lords, which threw out a clause to this effect in the City of Glasgow Bill.

Mrs. Butler spoke with great force and pathos on the opening day of the conferences, and concluded a very touching address with the twice-repeated axiom: "Let this be all our care, to stand approved in sight of God, though worlds judge us perverse." Later on she presided at morning prayer-meetings and at a public meeting for women, which was well attended by the local population, and in which there were many evidences of sympathy with M. Stockmar for his courageous and persistent stand against tolerated houses for wrong purposes.

Friday, the last day of the conference, was mainly taken up with a discussion of the forthcoming new penal code for Switzerland, and the discharge of routine business.

Students' Conference in Holland.

IT was not so long ago that we heard news of the great success which had attended the holding of the first Students' Conference in South Africa. Again we thanked God for this further unfolding of his purposes to bless the students of the world. But we are once more called to "the sacrifice of thanksgiving" by the fact that the first Dutch Students' Conference was held at Laren, fifteen miles from Amsterdam, from Sept. 3-5.

Eleven Dutch students attended the International Students' Missionary Conference at Liverpool. The inspiration which they there received led them in February last to unite together the seven student-centres in Holland under a Students' Christian Union for the purpose of solidifying and developing the Christian forces already at work. They also determined to give strength and permanence to the newly-formed Union by holding at the earliest possible date a general students' conference and securing as large a representation as possible. The committee laid their plans with considerable wisdom, and their efforts were rewarded by the presence of fifty-seven students, representing all the seven college-centres, which contain in the aggregate some 3800 students.

The opening meeting was held in the village church at Laren; the remainder in a tent specially erected for the purpose on the outskirts of some picturesque pine-woods. The Conference was managed throughout by students. With the exception of two young pastors, who had been specially invited, all the speakers were students. The general standard of the addresses or papers was admirable; the spiritual tone was high; the free, yet well-regulated, discussions which followed were practical and harmonious; the subjects treated were various—communion with God, Bible study, the student's responsibility for his fellows, social purity, missions. At the closing meeting there were several unsolicited testimonies to personal light and blessing received. But the most important result was the appointment of one of the ablest of the students present, Mr. A. R. van de Laar, as travelling secretary. It will be only by such a step as this, under the blessing of God, that the work in the Dutch colleges can be really developed.

There are immense difficulties in the way; but the beginning is full of hope. The churches in Holland sadly need a strong spiritual current, and here is the source of the stream; Dutch India sadly needs the Gospel, and here should be the centre of supply. Two-thirds of those present were theological students; if this movement leads these men to claim the fulness of the Holy Ghost for their ministry, Holland may yet witness a greater religious revolution than when she shook off the yoke of Rome. F. A.

Sunday Traffic.—In view of the increasing interest which is beginning to be manifested in the work of opposing Sunday labour upon railroads, we are requested to state that Mr. James Fox Wilson, Secretary of the Shareholders' Union for the Defence of the Sabbath, 22, Western-road, St. Leonards-on-Sea, will be pleased to hear from any shareholders willing to help, especially in the presentation of memorials to boards of directors.

Holiness Convention at Manchester.—Several well-known speakers are expected at the Convention at the Star Hall, Ancoats, Manchester, Oct. 4 to 11. There will be several meetings each day, and due account will be rendered of foreign missions. In the letter of invitation, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Crossley, the conveners, speak of guidance as an essential of holiness, and conclude: "God's perfect guidance is perfect holiness. He cannot guide us in, or into, sin. No wonder that Paul prayed, 'That ye may be filled with the knowledge of his will'; or, that, living in the centre of it, John could exclaim, 'Truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ'; and again, 'Whosoever abideth in Him, sinneth not.'" Applications for rooms during the Convention may be made to Mr. E. Trowbridge at Star Hall.

Letters to the Editor.

THE SITUATION IN TURKEY.

DEAR SIR,—As the country is now thoroughly aroused as to the shocking wickedness of the califf who has inaugurated a reign of murder and savagery in the Turkish Empire, it may be well for Christian readers and believers in prophecy to consider what form their protests ought to take, so as to have any prospect of success. Merely calling upon Lord Salisbury to "do something" is hardly definite enough, and some suggestions have been more definite than practicable. We may take it for granted that the Ottoman Empire is really breaking up, and that this last explosion is a manifestation of the madness which precedes destruction. Already the ships of war are being fitted out which will soon converge, like hungry eagles, on the decaying glory of the False Prophet, whose owners are shortly about to quarrel as to the largeness of the slice that should fall to each by mutual agreement.

In the meantime an entire historic people, with many noble qualities, are being slaughtered in open day, without distinction of age or sex, or the slightest evidence of their being generally opposed to any tolerable government. That their wrongs have at last stung them to rebel is only what every nation worthy of the name would do under like circumstances. My proposition is that those in power should content themselves for the present, with maintaining order in Constantinople, and with a view to this being more effectually done, that they should invite the co-operation of the other European powers, so as to show that no attempt to snatch territory was in contemplation. As for the Sultan, his own people will depose him fast enough when they find him reduced to a cypher in his own capital. Nations are not called (any more than individuals) to look on calmly whilst wholesale murder stalks abroad, and it is quite certain that if our present Government do not act in sympathy with the humane sentiments, which (thank God) are now in the ascendant, that no political advantages, real or imaginary (which may afterwards be gained by their diplomacy), will atone in the sight of God, or of this great people, for their inhuman neglect of their fellow Christians, who are hated by the Turk mainly on account of their faithfulness to their own Lord and Master. Yours faithfully,

Upper Norwood, S.E. EDWD. HAUGHTON, M.D.

THE GOSPELS AND EPISTLES.

DEAR FRIEND,—In common doubtless with many of your readers, I felt thankful to read the notes in your last issue with regard to the depreciation of the Apostolic writings, as compared with the four Gospels.

Mark i. 1 has been helpful to me in this connection, in which the writer describes the book as "the beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ." This may be compared with Acts i. 1, where Luke's Gospel is also described as a record of "all that Jesus began to do and to teach." Are we not right in saying that the four "Gospels" are the beginning, and the beginning only, of the Gospel?

Pages 73 and 74 of Dr. Stalker's "Life of Christ" have also been helpful to me. He says: "It is impossible to read the discourses of Jesus without remarking that, wonderful as they are, yet some of the most characteristic doctrines of Christianity, as it is set forth in the epistles of Paul, and now cherished in the minds of the most devoted and enlightened Christians, hold a very inconsiderable place in them."

"Especially is this the case in regard to the great doctrines of the Gospel, as to how a sinner is reconciled to God, and how, in a pardoned soul, the character is gradually produced which makes it like Christ and pleasing to the Father. The lack of reference to such doctrines may indeed be much exaggerated, the fact being that there is not one prominent doctrine of the great apostle the germs of which are not to be found in the teaching of Christ Himself. Yet the contrast is marked enough to have given some colour for denying that the distinctive doctrines of Paul are genuine elements of Christianity."

"But the true explanation of the phenomenon is very different. Jesus was not a mere teacher. His character was greater than his words, and so was his work. The chief part of that work was to atone for the sin of the world by his death on the cross. But his nearest followers never would believe that He was to die, and, until his death happened, it was impossible to explain its far-reaching significance. Paul's most distinctive doctrines are merely expositions of the meaning of two great facts—the death of Christ and the mission of the Spirit by the glorified Redeemer. It is obvious that these facts could not be fully explained in the words of Jesus Himself, when they had not yet taken place; but to suppress the inspired explanation of them would be to extinguish the light of the Gospel and rob Christ of his crowning glory."—Sincerely yours,

MAURICE GREGORY.

TOURING IN NORWAY.

SIR,—After reading the letter of your correspondent on this subject, in your columns of September 10, I have come to the conclusion that your correspondent is not acquainted with the Norwegian language. If he were, by a few test questions he might have ascertained the spiritual condition of the drivers, young and old, whom he had occasion to see and meet with in the course of his trip in Western Norway, and whose supposed spiritual condition appears to have aroused his pity and sympathy. Your correspondent particularly noticed the kindness and consideration shown to the horses, but I take it that the drivers were the owners or sons of the owners of the horses, and therefore self-interest teaches them to be careful of their animals.

Considering that the Norwegians are bound by law to receive a certain amount of spiritual instruction, it must be very clear that they are not kept in spiritual darkness. There is no doubt that Norway supplies its drivers with religious knowledge; whether this knowledge gets down from the head into the heart of every one so instructed, it is not for me to say. We have only to look at our own country and draw our own inference.

Whilst on this subject there is, however, a matter to which I should like to call the attention of tourists, or intending tourists, and that is, when travelling in Norway, to be extremely careful that their conduct and deportment be such as should belong to Christians. Only last month a young Englishman was bundled neck and crop out of the Drontheim Tivoli on account of his disgraceful behaviour; which in England would doubtless have brought him up next morning before the magistrates.

Then, again, last month, when the Fram got to Tromsø, people were allowed to go on board and visit the ship. But English tourists took the opportunity to pick up what they could as keepsakes, much to the disgust of the Norwegians. However, when the Fram got to Drontheim, only a very few favoured people were allowed to go on board, and English tourists were kept at a distance.

In my younger days, when English tourists in Norway were very few and very far between, I had occasion to reside in the north of Norway (about 70 deg. N.L., near Alsen), and before returning to England I spent nearly a year in Drontheim, where I formed sundry friendships, and have since retained very happy impressions of the treatment I received when out there. But since I have been home I have had several complaints forwarded to me of the conduct of English tourists in the neighbourhood of Drontheim. One I remember well. A British duke was up there with his yacht, and some of his companions got into a small island, which the owner kept as a park with deer, etc. Some of these companions shot some of the tame deer, thus breaking all the rules of law and order. In consequence the rudder of the yacht was unshipped by the authorities, but with the aid of the English Consul matters were eventually squared up. The whole affair, however, left a very bad impression on the minds of the Norwegians.

However, a piece of good news has just reached me from Drontheim. An Englishman who had been in the habit of visiting the north of Norway for many years, and had built himself a very comfortable house in a very pleasant valley at Holme, has recently informed the ecclesiastic of that district that it is his intention to make the district a present of his house, to be used as the "Manse." Doubtless this is in return for the many courtesies he had received during his visits to that district.—Yours faithfully,

J. FRANCIS COLE, F.R.A.S.
Westfield, Cheam-road, Sutton, Surrey.

PROPORTIONATE GIVING.

SIR,—I also am a merchant, and have been in business about twenty years, having commenced at the age of twenty-two. I was led, at the beginning of my business career, to set aside a tenth of my income for religious and philanthropic purposes. God prospered me beyond my anticipations, and at the end of ten years I decided to increase the proportion of my giving to one-fifth of my income, and this proportion I am thankful to say I have since been enabled to maintain.

In order that I might carry out my resolve faithfully I have kept from the first a credit and debit account. On the credit side I place one-fifth of what I draw quarterly by way of interest upon the capital in my business, or rents outside my business, and annually the profit realised by my trading as shown in my balance-sheet. On the debit side I place my contributions to the various institutions and funds to which I subscribe. The net result has been that I have never had to refuse an appeal which has commended itself to my judgment, and my store has never been exhausted; whilst the privilege of being permitted to help forward in this way the extension of Christ's kingdom and to relieve the necessities of some of my fellows has been an unspeakable joy.

In common with other business men when making up my balance-sheet, I set aside a proportion for bad and doubtful debts. This proportion I carry to a reserve fund account, and upon a loss being made it is carried to the debit of this fund. Occasionally my losses have been such as to entirely exhaust the fund, but better years have followed, and I have been able to equalise the years by keeping this distinct account. In the same way I have equalised my giving account. I have not always distributed the whole of the proportion of the profits of a good year in the succeeding one, and have sometimes had a considerable balance in hand; then when lean years have come I have had this balance to fall back upon, and so have not had to drop or even to lessen a single subscription. I have made a provision in my will that any balance standing to the credit of the fund at my decease is to be disposed of by my trustees on similar lines to those I have adopted in giving during my lifetime until the fund is exhausted.

As to provision for my children. I have a family of seven, and one method I have followed is to place to the credit of each of them on his or her birthday a certain sum in my business books. On these amounts my business pays five per cent. interest quarterly—the interest and compound interest being added to the child's capital. By this means, if I am permitted to continue the system, each child will have at the age of twenty-one the accumulation of twenty-one birthday gifts with the interest thereon, which will be sufficient to give them at least a start in life. I may say, however, that neither of the children (although the oldest is over eighteen) has any idea of what I am doing, so I do not endanger the sense of self-reliance which I seek to foster in them.

I may add that my income is not a very large one, and that the principles upon which I work may be adapted to any income—the proportion of giving being a matter for personal decision.—Yours sincerely,

ANOTHER MERCHANT.

SIR,—The difficulty of your correspondent "Merchant" in arriving at a mathematically exact decimation of his income for the purposes of charity appears to me to be almost amusing, were it not for the saddening legalism which the whole spirit of this correspondence displays. May I humbly submit to "Merchant" one or two points for him to consider in the calculation of his charitable liabilities?

First, has he determined in his own mind what prosperity in business really is? Has he arrived at a true interpretation of the term wealth? If so, he will at once dismiss as futile any attempt to arrive at a true "proportionate giving." For, supposing I successfully trade (1) dishonestly or (2) speculatively, and thereby make a gain of an odd thousand pounds, can I complacently set aside a hundred of this to foreign missions and think I am doing God service? The suggestion only needs to be made to be refuted.

Yet it is not always clear to see the same principle in every aspect of the problem. For the truth is, that, when we have arrived at the exact tenth of our normally-earned income (earned, that is, whether to the satisfaction of our own conscience or merely in ways approved by current commercial morality) we are no nearer having satisfied the law's demands. Why? Because wealth does not consist exclusively in cash or goods. It comprises also our natural talents, our powers of intellect, our spiritual gifts, our capacity for social service. These possessions and our material wealth are so interdependent that it is impossible in this matter to deal with them separately. They are all subject to a common denominator.

For example, a merchant may conceivably set aside a portion (say a tenth) of his income, or the time which is usually devoted to income-earning, for the purpose of intellectual culture, with a view to increased spiritual efficiency as an evangelist or in any other field of Christian work. I say it is conceivable that such a thing should be voluntarily done in this age of commercialism. Can it for a moment be seriously contended that the money thus spent or the time devoted by him are not in every sense as much given to God as if the equivalent in cash headed fifty different mission subscription lists?

Again, it is very misleading to speak of "misfortunes," "seemingly prosperous years," "smart losses," and so on, as "Merchant" does, considering that (as he probably well knows) a business loss may be a spiritual benefit, and conversely a prosperous business year very likely means one in which ethical motives have sunk into a back place. I mention this in order to ask, How can we give God less when we have actually received greater blessings from Him? Or, on the other hand, how can we conscientiously devote to Him any part of an income swelled by the labours of sweated employes or under-paid clerks?

I am convinced that the lesson our age has to learn in this matter is the acquisition rather than the ethics of use. Were our industrial system based upon truly Christian principles, the remuneration for one's labour would be not, as at present, a matter of chance, but dependent on merit and in proportion to the services rendered to the community. There would then be little difficulty in ascertaining one's "prosperity"; we should discern more clearly that we are mere trustees of all our possessions, and further that a trustee's duty is to account for the whole of the property committed to his charge, and not merely for a tenth or any fraction of it. G. HERBERT DAVIS.

Herne Hill.

DEAR SIR,—The interesting correspondence which has grown out of the "Beam and Scales" argument at Keswick will prove richly profitable if it leads to a more general weighing in the balances of the sanctuary of our direct contributions to the Lord's service by the hands of others by contrast with those which are indirect and by our own.

Your correspondent, Mrs. Emma C. Banks, fails to make this distinction. For many years I held the views and used the identical arguments which she sets forth, that believers are altogether Christ's, body, soul, and possessions, and that "proportionate giving" savoured of proportionate reservations, largely in favour of the latter. But while it is perfectly true and indisputable that all we possess is the Lord's by purchase of his precious blood, has He not made us stewards of all, to be administered wisely and with due regard to the need of others as well as our own?

Pressed to its legitimate conclusion, the argument of your correspondent might be used, and certainly would be used, by unspiritual and selfish Christians for their own indulgence and the neglect of God's work through others and of his poorer saints. For, say they, "Am I not his by purchase, are not my comforts his concern, are not my children his children, and is not everything spent at home in innocent provision really spent for God?" And so they reject "proportionate giving" under the vain plea that they and all they possess are God's, and are being spent for God.

There is no doubt an element of truth in such a plea where the speaker is one of the earnest labourers in the Lord's service, devoting his whole time and labour to the good of souls or bodies around him. But Mrs. Banks fails to make this distinction. The majority of us are engaged largely in temporal business and work, which, though earnestly seeking to do it to the Lord and for his glory, cannot truly be called "God's service." The money we spend at home may be spent on a Christian family, and be of use in helping on the trade of various Christian traders, artisans, or work-people, and yet cannot be truly called charity. In [862] all such cases a truly consecrated spirit, a yoke-bearer, one who desires to realize the theory that he is altogether the Lord's, will have to set up the beam and scales in his secret chamber to weigh well to which and to how many of the various calls for help from outside he is to respond, and in what proportions, and to which and how many of them he is to offer a gentle refusal. Here is the point at which daily he will need and will receive divinely-guided discretion, if he is walking in communion with his God. For is not a false balance abomination to the Lord, while a just weight and balance are the Lord's; all the weights of the bag are his work (Prov. xi. 1, xvi. 11).

Far be it from me to lay down that because a tithe has the sanction of Old Testament Scripture, a tithe, no less or no more, is the true expression of love to God for all saints. For persons of small income it may be wholly impossible to give so much to others' need or work. For those of large income this fraction may truly represent not what they should give, but what they should spend at home, nine tenths being their true proportion for charity and missions.

But the advantage of fixing some proportion, each according to his means, is enormous and not far to seek. 1. It leaves us free to consider not whether we can give so much, but only in what direction shall we give it. 2. It greatly promotes the attitude of willing and loving serfdom to the Lord, and the spirit of true consecration. 3. It duly carries out that spirit of order, of method and of regularity which 1 Cor. xvi. 2 lays down. 4. If generally acted upon it would probably so largely multiply the gift of God's people that the poor of the flock would be in comfort everywhere, and all the missions at home and abroad would only have to seek for men instead of means, without any help whatever from the world and its people.—Yours truly, GEO. F. TRENCH

THE ANSWERING OF PRAYER.

DEAR SIR,—May I call the attention of "Inquirer" to three passages of Scripture which give real help and encouragement when prayer is not answered as we expect? The first is Deut. iii. 23-29. Here Moses received a gracious answer, though his petition was not literally granted; and he was not only permitted to see the Land from the mountain top, but had also the honour and joy of training and preparing Joshua, God's chosen leader for his people, whom he was to "charge, encourage, and strengthen" for the work of giving Israel possession of their promised inheritance. Surely he entered into the joy of his Lord in some measure in yielding up his own will and becoming a worker together with God in this matter.

A second example is found in 2 Cor. xii. 8-10, where Paul rejoices over the greater gift of grace and strength which changed the very infirmity from which he had thrice sought so earnestly to be delivered into a continual experience of triumph with Christ.

The third passage is in James iv. 3, 5, and the marginal reading of the R.V. throws a beautiful light upon it: "the Spirit which He made to dwell in us yearneth for us even unto jealous envy." If we honestly consider our unanswered prayers, shall we not find that few (if any) of them are responsive to that yearning, loving Spirit which is jealous over us for Christ, and would have Him in his right place as Lord and King in our affections and wills?

"No good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly," and much might be said about lessons of faith and patience learned in waiting his time, but the above is sufficient to show that when a sincere request in prayer is not literally granted it is usually that "a greater grace" may be given instead (James iv. 6, R.V., margin).—Yours truly, A SYMPATHIZER.

DEAR SIR,—The letter of "Inquirer" opens a very large subject, and will doubtless call forth many sympathetic rejoinders.

Upon one point I would like to say a word, a point often overlooked by young Christians. We are not to suppose that prayer is not answered because our petition is not granted at the time and in the way we expected. The request of Moses was absolutely refused; and the desire of Paul, though thrice urged, was set aside by the divine hand; but who shall say their prayers were not answered? Even our great Intercessor Himself pleaded, seemingly in vain, "If it be possible let this cup pass from Me."

It has been elsewhere pointed out that the Lord Jehovah is not restricted as to the answer He shall give. He may truly answer, though not by an affirmation. "No" is as really an answer as "Yes" can be, and oftentimes a refusal implies even more of fatherly love than would the granting of our ill-judged petitions.

"I know that Thou hearest me always." This was the supreme knowledge which satisfied the heart of God's beloved Son and the certainty that He hears us should bring absolute rest to our human hearts as well.

The answer may be long delayed (1 John v. 14-15); it may never come in the form we anticipated; but, when faith understands that the cry has reached the "bowed down" ear of God, it cannot: the battle is won. The child's real grief is at an end when the mother's answering voice, even from afar, makes it clear that the wail of infant woe has reached her.

Let us remember, too, Augustine's well-known words: "Delays are not denials. When sometimes God gives tardily, He commends his gifts, He does not deny them. God withholds for a time, that thou mayest learn to desire great things greatly."

When prayer is offered in the name of the Lord Jesus, when it is for his glory and for our real good, there can be no such thing as an unanswered prayer.

Say not the Father hath not heard your prayer.
You shall have your desire, some time, somewhere.

L. A. D.

DEAR SIR,—The request in THE CHRISTIAN of Sept. 10 from "Inquirer" respecting unanswered prayers, and help for young friends in this particular, stirred my heart to its depths. For many years, in early life, I was greatly tried on this very point; and now, in my old age, feeling a debtor to Christ and his Church, have written a record of his unfoldings, showing that He was answering at the very time when He appeared deaf to all my entreaties. The record is entitled, "Broken Purposes; but Answered Prayers." I will gladly send copies (up to 100) free, on receipt of the full address of the applicant, combined with the assurance that the application is in answer to this letter.

I would advise those in perplexity on this important subject to read "The Lord's Dealings with George Muller," also "Asked of God" and "Waiting Hours," by Anna Shipton. Personal dealing with a living Saviour, through the power of the Holy Spirit, will reveal the Father's willingness to hear the cry of his children, although for a time, if needs be, He may try their faith while training them to patience, and working out his own loving purposes on their behalf.—Yours truly, ANNA BOOBYER.

Dulwich House, North Malvern.

SIR,—Is it not to be feared that "L. J. P.'s" letter may have an effect far different from what, no doubt, he desires, and may appear to some to encourage or condone what we are already too prone to—the restraining of prayer before God? His argument throughout seems to have this wrong basis—he compares God with man. When our Lord uses human beings as illustrations of his teaching it is more by way of contrast than comparison. "How much more!" The "friend" of Luke xi. was no doubt annoyed by the importunity of his neighbour, and the unjust judge was certainly wearied by that of the poor widow; but our Heavenly Father is neither annoyed nor wearied by the importunity of his children. In fact, He commands them to "give Him no rest."

"L. J. P." says: "Of course, we have been told to be 'importunate,' and that by the Lord Jesus Himself, but—importunity is not a lovable trait in a child's nature." And yet the same Lord who tells us to be importunate tells us to be like little children. Our Heavenly Father loves to be importuned by his children. This is beautifully illustrated by Bunyan. Mercy was tremendously importunate—knocked and hammered at the wicket-gate as though she would batter it down.

"M. But, pray, what said my Lord unto my rudeness? Was He not angry with me?"

"C. When He heard your lumbering noise, He gave a wonderful, innocent smile. I believe what you did pleased Him well."

Then, again, if we are to "pray without ceasing," how can prayer be "an abnormal state of soul in a child towards its Heavenly Father"? Why,—

Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
The Christian's native air.

"L. J. P." says, moreover, that "requests to God should, as a rule, be for others, and not for ourselves." What, then, are we to do with the "us," four times repeated in the short space of the Lord's Prayer?

He says, "We have all felt towards our children a certain displeasure that they asked for a thing that they would certainly have got without asking." But is God displeased with his children on that account? That is the point. Old Hart says,

Prayer was appointed to convey
The blessings God designs to give.
Long as they live should Christians pray,
For only while they pray they live.

And this is Scriptural teaching. "I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them." "If we ask anything according to his will, He heareth us."

"L. J. P." speaks approvingly of those who "do not in the least trouble whether prayer is or is not answered." Then, what is the meaning of the injunction, "Continue in prayer and watch in the same with thanksgiving"?

And if a poor disciple is suffering the pangs of toothache, is not that one of the "all things"? and is he not to be allowed to seek relief in prayer? St. Paul did in similar circumstances, and, though the "thorn" was not removed, he got a glorious answer in the "grace sufficient" and "the power of Christ" to rest upon him. SPERA BENE.

National Protestant Congress.

THE seventh gathering of this Congress will be held in Exeter Hall, London, October 12 to 15. The morning and afternoon meetings will be held in the Lower Hall, those in the evening in the Large Hall. The speakers announced in the programme include some well-known witnesses against Romanism and its Ritualistic imitators. The early sessions of conference will relate to the Church of God, the nature of Protestantism, and the real character of Romanism. Then the work of Rome is to be considered—her attempted "conversion of England," her interference in public affairs, and how to meet it. Other subjects relate to God's Word and Rome's hatred of it; monasteries and convents, as to their nature, increase, and needed suppression. The closing meeting has its keynote in the peril which besets Protestantism from Romanism and other erroneous systems. Several meetings will be held under the auspices of the Women's Protestant Union. The Hon. Secs. of the Congress are Bishop Eldridge and Rev. Lancelot Holland, M.A., and the offices, 74, Strand, W.C.

"The People's Day."

ONE of the most comprehensive and eloquent pleas ever penned on behalf of Sunday rest is the booklet under the title of "The People's Day," written and published more than a generation ago by the now venerable Rev. Wm. Arthur. This utterance, originally published at a shilling, is now brought out in very neat shape by Messrs. Morgan and Scott at the popular price of a penny.

All the aspects of this important question are carefully and ably treated by Mr. Arthur. In a prefatory note to the present edition he cogently remarks that all the arguments for Sunday amusements, against which he contended, are now "much weakened by the adoption of the Saturday half-holiday, the earlier closing of shops, and the general shortening of the hours of labour." The title-page of the pamphlet gives a dozen finely-produced portraits of eminent defenders of the Day of Rest, and on the last page there are added weighty testimonies on the subject from three Lord Chancellors.

"The People's Day" ought to have the widest possible circulation. Parcels of 100 or 1000 can be had on special terms, which can be ascertained from the publishers.

French Society for the Evangelisation of Israel.—Pastor F. Jacot has been advocating the claims of this mission in the French religious papers. He says: "It has three stations—two in Algeria, where it should have many. The one is entrusted to Mr. Borloz, formerly a pastor of the Reformed Church. He lives at Oran, but his labours extend to the whole of the district and beyond. The second is entrusted to a baptized Israelite, Mr. Jean Touff, who preaches to the numerous Jews of Algiers. The third station is in Paris. It was vacant from July, 1894, till April last. It is now occupied by Pastor Samuel H. Anderson, who is already encouraged in his work, and who has had the joy of baptizing a converted Israelite. We are asking God to increase our pecuniary resources, and to send us 3000 francs (£120), so that we may close the year without deficit."

Mr. W. R. Lane in Aberdeen.

SIR,—As one of the ministers whose congregation have enjoyed, along with Queen's Cross congregation, the services of Mr. W. R. Lane, I feel a few words about the work done and the workers may interest your readers. Mr. Lane preached in several of the pulpits with great acceptance and power. This special mission to two centres, the Free South and Queen's Cross, two of the strongest congregations in the city, lasted eleven days, has been one of deep solemnity, and must have proved a blessing to a great number of people.

His Bible readings, which were given in the afternoon at three o'clock in the Free West Church, were much appreciated, and must have been helpful to the Mission. Mr. Lane, whose name was unknown to Aberdeen a fortnight ago, has in these few days won the confidence and the affection of our people who were present at the meetings. In our judgment the Lord has raised in him an evangelist of very exceptional strength, a man who will yet do great service to the cause and Kingdom of God. Mr. Martin Lewis and I both feel deeply grateful for the earnest, the faithful, and the loving words which he spoke to our people and to those who assembled night after night to hear the mystery of Christ.

The other ministers present at the services have been all equally impressed with the fidelity and the power of his Gospel ministrations. Believing the Head of the Church has appointed evangelists—as well as pastors and teachers—to carry on his work on earth, we feel grateful that He has raised in Mr. Lane a man who is as well qualified to conduct a Gospel mission in the West End, where it is as much needed as in the East End of our great cities. Good seed in the midst of broken weather has been sown, and judging from a few first-fruits, the harvest may be rich and abundant.—Yours sincerely,

ANDREW MCQUEEN.

Proposed Y.W.C.A. Preparation Home.

DURING the past few years the work of the Association has so grown that we are constantly needing to supply workers for all parts of our own land as well as in other countries. We are, therefore, starting a Preparation Home for Y.W.C.A. workers in connection with our City Institute, in the early autumn. May we ask through your columns for gifts for the Home—drawing-room and bedroom furniture, pictures, books, and all kinds of useful household and ornamental articles?

The object of the Training Home will be to fit women for future work; we hope it will be of use to many such who are seeking a sphere of Christian effort among girls, and that it will be abundantly blessed of God. The above articles will be gratefully received and thankfully acknowledged by the honorary secretary, Miss Duff, 15, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.—Your obedient servants,

EMILY KINNAIRD, } Hon.
MARY MORLEY, } Secs.

Rossie Priory, Inchtute, N.B.

Autumn Days.

ONCE more 'tis autumn, peace and plenty bringing,
The time of fruits and sheaves;
Orchard and field with joyous songs are ringing,
Crimsoned the falling leaves.

To warmer climes the swallow hordes are flying,
Faded the roses fair;
In woodlands wild the freshening breeze is sighing,
Through branches sere and bare.

Transient and pale the fitful sunlight glory,
Night shadows, grey and cold;
With silver rime the fields will soon be hoary,
The year is growing old.

Yet mourn we not, on nature's breast maternal,
Nourished through wintry hours,
By precious fruits, that through the seasons vernal,
Were fed by sun and showers.

Thus may our souls, when life's dim shades are falling,
When fades earth's blossoms bright,
And angel voices through the mists are calling
To regions out of sight,

Rejoice at last amidst autumnal fading,
In fruits of other years;
Love garnered sheaves, and stores with fruitage laden,
Nurtured by joy and tears.

HARRIET JULIA EVANS.

The Basutoland Mission.

AT their annual Conference in Basutoland the missionaries of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions had no very remarkable report to deliver. There had been devoted work, and there had been trophies of grace; but what with prevailing indifference and lingering heathenism, progress had not been specially startling. Some of the workers live in painful isolation in regions that are given over to ignorance and superstition, certain of the chiefs continuing to patronise the witch-doctor, and to put their trust in the rain-maker. Nevertheless, individual workers told of remarkable instances of conversion from the grossest heathenism, and of devotion to Christ and his teachings.

Strong temptation is brought to bear upon many who are the real hope of the Church, and it is gratifying to read of old worthies who, in the fear of God and the love of Christ, have passed to their rest. The educational institutions maintain their high standard of efficiency. The Bible School has forty-seven pupils, twenty-two of whom are from the Transvaal and the Zambesi. The Normal School had 102 pupils, a number without parallel in the past. Though not everywhere satisfactory, the condition of the work by no means justifies discouragement.

Among the incidents told at the Conference was the following:—On March 1, at Leribe, rain was prayed for. Simultaneously, the wife of one of the chiefs called together all the heathen. In another part of the district, at the call of a chief, the women assembled to "sing for rain." The rain-makers demonstrated, but no rain fell; so the heathen were not allowed to boast. The Christians, on the other hand, resigned themselves and their land to the will of God, who "doeth all things well." In another circuit of Leribe, where heathenism reigns supreme, immorality is rampant. What wonder if some disciples of Christ fall in such surroundings? "Yet," says M. Dieterlen, "the falls have been few. On the other hand, there have been many conversions, and over a hundred persons received into the Church."

The educational work of the mission is specially fruitful, and there can be no doubt that, with God's blessing, the young people who are now being instructed and trained will prove of great service in the near future. In a recent letter Rev. R. Henry Dyke writes: "We have had another great encouragement. In May last we presented twenty-two of our pupils at the Cape University Elementary Examinations, and of these twenty passed, ten in honours, nine in class 2, and one in class 3. Our two failures were but a small percentage in comparison with other schools. No native institution has more than four in honours, and only three European colleges of South Africa have more than ten. Another cheering event has taken place by fifteen of our pupils being added to the church, and three others will be received at an out-station to which they belong. Pray for them when you are thinking of South Africa."

Qua Iboe Mission.

THE effort to reach the 500,000 heathen in the district drained by the Qua Iboe River on the West Coast of Africa, is being much blessed. The inquirers classes are well attended, and quite a number desiring baptism are receiving fuller instruction before being admitted to church membership.

Messrs. Bill and Heaney, who sailed from Liverpool on June 20, reached their destination about July 27. Less than nine years ago Mr. Bill, who has now returned after his second furlough, went out from Belfast single-handed (yet not alone) to an unknown field; to-day, by the blessing of God, there are five European and three native workers, and a church consisting of about seventy members. Several natives are in training as evangelists to their fellow-countrymen.

Those desiring fuller information about this deeply interesting work should drop a card to the hon. sec., 36, Salisbury-street, Belfast, who will gladly send a copy of a recently-published booklet.

Hoppers at Yalding.—Pastor D. C. Chapman, of Yalding, has been conducting an evangelistic mission amongst the hop-pickers in the Yalding district of Kent. Although there has been much distress, the work has been very encouraging. Several hearty and well-attended meetings have been held in the villages and camps.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Woolwich and Plumstead branch has taken new rooms at 69, Powis-street, Woolwich, and the opening meeting will be held to-day (Thursday) at 7.30 p.m., Sir George Williams in the chair.

Through the generosity of Mr. J. K. Starley, the president, the Coventry Association has been provided with excellent premises, and with the services of a general secretary giving his whole time to the work, in the person of Mr. J. H. Haise.

The Ballymoney Association has secured the services of Mr. W. A. Boyd, secretary of the City of Dublin Association, to conduct a men's mission beginning on Sunday, 20th September, to 27th; much prayer has been offered up for this mission, and floods of blessing are expected.

The Anglo-American Young Men's Christian Association, 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris, is very much alive just now. Every worker has some responsibility, and many inexperienced men are developing into able adherents. The only damper is the state of the finances. The members are praying for this.

The Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Bible-class, held in connection with the Burton-on-Trent Association, reports an average attendance of 777 men each Sunday during last year. The number of books distributed as prizes was 1377, while 216 members received certificates for having attended every Sunday during six months.

Mr. Ed. Barde, president of the Central Committee, has published an appeal to the associations, warning them against the substitution of amusement for edification or Christian effort among the young. He says in effect:—Increase your numbers, interest or amuse your guests, but be sure not to forget to bring the Gospel to bear upon them.

On October 2 a meeting will be held at Exeter Hall to take farewell of Mr. Frank Anderson, B.A., who has been appointed by the English National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s to work among educated natives in schools and colleges throughout the Bombay presidency. Sir George Williams, Canon Taylor Smith, Revs. H. E. Fox (hon. sec. C.M.S.), F. B. Meyer, and others have consented to take part in the proceedings.

Mr. Henry Thorne, evangelist, concluded a profitable mission at the Liverpool Association on the 16th inst. The mission, began with a social gathering given by Mr. Alexander Guthrie, on the 10th inst., at which over 200 Christian workers were present, and continued for seven days, with definite signs of conversion. The mission was much appreciated. A social meeting of inquirers was held on the 18th inst.

T. JAMESON.

Mr. Thos. A. Bailey, late general secretary of the Cork Association, who is making a tour round the world en route for India, writes from the Hawaiian Islands:—"In this distant part of the world I find the interests of young men being well cared for, and our beloved Association well to the fore. In Honolulu (in addition to a Chinese branch) there is a flourishing Association, with a splendid building, to which they have recently added a well-equipped gymnasium. The president, Mr. A. B. Wood, a business gentleman in the city, is quite a young man, and full of enthusiasm for the work, having been at one time a general secretary in America. The Association on the island of Molokai is doing good work amongst the poor suffering lepers there."

The North Eastern Daily Gazette, referring to the work of the Association at Middlesbrough, takes occasion to speak of the pioneer work of the Y.M.C.A., and of the great stimulus it has given to other forms of effort in behalf of young men, and it adds:—"It must not be assumed, however, that although congregational organisation has appropriated many of the methods of the pioneer agency, the day of the Y.M.C.A. is done, or that the institution has become in any degree less valuable or necessary. It still maintains a distinct sphere of its own into which the congregational society cannot possibly enter. It is pre-eminently an unsectarian institution. It opens its doors to, and forms an enduring bond of connection for, young men of all sects and denominations that acknowledge Jesus Christ as Lord and Master. It supplies a common platform for good men of all evangelical communions. In days of strife and contention and tendency to separation and to conflict in every sphere of life, it reminds the Christian citizen and patriot of agreements which are far more important than any disagreements. Thus it tends to bind up and to heal, to break down partition walls, and to link together the human family in faith, hope, and charity."

A National Convention for India of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held at Poona at the beginning of December. Mrs. Mary R. Phillips, the National president, will take the lead.

Christian Endeavour.

THE Paris Convention at Clarksville, Tex., was marked by deep spirituality and sweet fellowship. A "Rally," to welcome Dr. F. E. Clark, will be held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Saturday.

At Pudsey four members of the Congregational Society were welcomed as members of the church at the last church meeting.

The members of a single C.E. society in India visit each week on an average from five to ten villages, and preach the Gospel to from 300 to 500 hearers.

An interesting service was held at Lineholme, Todmorden, on Sunday week, when six young people from the C.E. Society were baptized by the pastor, Rev. G. M. Rice.

At the summer convention of the Saco Valley Union, Rev. George M. Ward, formerly general secretary of the United Society, delivered an address on "The Principles of the Christian Endeavour Movement."

The fifth annual convention of the Manchester and District Union of the Y.P.S.C.E. was held on Saturday afternoon and evening, at the Grosvenor-street Wesleyan Chapel, Manchester. At both meetings there was a large congregation. A spirited address on "Enthusiasm" was then delivered by Rev. J. L. Hookins, and the meeting afterwards resolved itself into a deliberative assembly, and many suggestions were made for the more efficient conduct of the society's work.

The Cheltenham Union, comprising five societies, have been engaged in active open-air work throughout the summer, holding two meetings every Sunday evening at different sections of the town. Much good has resulted and souls have been saved. Rev. S. Hinds speaking before the Union on "The Relation of the Christian Endeavour Societies to the Church," maintained that in spite of acknowledged dangers the "Endeavour" movement was rich in promise of blessing to the churches if they gave it warm welcome and wise guidance.

The Pioneer (Baptist) Mission.

PROF. A. McCaig, B.A., LL.D., of the Pastors' College, and Lieut. A. McGill, R.A., of Woolwich, have joined the council of management of the Pioneer Mission.

The Mission, founded in 1889 by Rev. E. A. Carter, has for its object the evangelisation of spiritually-destitute districts, mainly by means of the formation of new Baptist churches and the strengthening of weak existing ones. It has already done good service in these directions, several new churches having been formed and not a few weak causes strengthened. Mr. Carter's whole time is gratuitously given to the service of the Mission.

Among the more recent efforts of the Mission may be mentioned the work at Govan, in Scotland. This was commenced last November; the preaching of the Gospel has been blessed, a church is now being formed, and the friends have issued an appeal for funds to erect a suitable place of worship. Help would be gratefully acknowledged by Pastor John Harpur.

Holbeach, Lincs., is one of the churches which is under the fostering care of the Mission, and on Sunday evening, September 13, Mr. Carter preached, and introduced as pastor Mr. Howard Parker, whose ministry, it is hoped, will be the means, under God, of reviving the work.

Pastor Kingston, who has done good service in connection with the mission at Tenbury, is now taking the oversight of the work at Sutterton, Lincs., another of the foster churches, where Pastor Britton, now of Mint-street, Lincoln, was settled for a short time.

The Armenian Refugees.—Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Frances Willard are in Marseilles rendering valuable aid to the Armenian refugees, who are landing there in large numbers. A disused hospital has been placed at their disposal by the authorities, rent free, and this has been fitted up for immediate occupancy. Lady Henry Somerset has appealed for funds to support these refugees until they can be sent to America or elsewhere, and to pay their steamship passage to other countries.

A Missionary Retreat.—Rev. Dr. Howie writes from Mount Lebanon:—"We have had the pleasure of welcoming to our home twelve missionaries from different parts of Syria and Palestine. It gave us pleasure to wait upon them and help some of them in their Arabic studies. We appreciate the part which some of them took in Christian work here. Four are still with us, and others are expected. We will be glad to correspond with Christians who, for the sake of health, rest, or study may wish to spend some time with us."—Address, Shweir, via Bevrout, Syria.

Oxford Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

WYCLIFFE HALL summer term ended last week. Several of the men were ordained at the recent ordinations.

Rev. H. E. Fox, secretary of the C.M.S., preached at St. Peter-le-Bailey on Sunday. His son, a Cambridge man, has just been ordained to the curacy there.

A large number of visitors came to Oxford for the St. Giles's Fair. The usual tent was erected for the sale of Bibles and religious literature, and open-air services were held by the members of the Y.M.C.A., the clergy, and the Salvation Army.

The meetings on Sunday evenings, conducted by Mr. Wheelhouse, City missionary, have been interfered with by the Socialists, who commenced their meetings rather earlier. The latter, however, have now moved a short distance away. Much sympathy was felt for Mr. Wheelhouse, as he had held meetings there for many years.

The ministers of the Wesleyan Chapels have recently been changed, in some cases, at any rate, much to their own regret and that of their congregations.

The tent mission in St. Ebbe's Parish, conducted by Mr. Brown, of the Evangelisation Society, was well attended and resulted in much real blessing.

Irish Notes.

A RELIGIOUS revival is in progress at Hyde Park Methodist Church, County Antrim, where some agents of the Faith Mission are actively working.

The death of Mr. John Coates, J.P., of Bangor, co. Down, at the advanced age of ninety-one years, is a loss to the Presbyterian Church, with which for many years he was actively and earnestly identified.

A scheme for the support of native missionaries in Central China has been taken up by the Methodist Christian Endeavour Societies at Athlone, Cork, Portadown, Drogheda, and Abbey-street, Dublin, and promises most encouraging results.

An immense valedictory meeting was held in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, on Wednesday week, in connection with the departure of twenty-nine missionaries to India, China, Uganda, and other stations abroad. The Archbishop of Dublin, who presided, delivered an interesting address, and several of the outgoing missionaries also spoke. The Bishop of Derry delivered also an eloquent farewell address to the missionaries.

The annual conference in connection with the North of Ireland District Union of Young Men's Christian Associations has been held in Ballymena. Mr. Robert Crawford, Ballymena, was elected president, and Mr. D. A. Black, secretary for the ensuing year. It was decided that the next meeting should be held at Bessbrook. A paper was also read by Mr. Hind Smith, of London, on "The Importance and Value of an Aggressive Membership and the Best Means of Securing the Same," and altogether the conference was a very successful one.

Scottish Notes.

REV. JOHN RENVY, of the Free Church, Wick, has celebrated his semi-jubilee.

The Aberdeen University Court have resolved to ask Professor Johnson to retire from the Chair of Biblical Criticism on an allowance of £250 a year.

A Congregational ministers' symposium took place at Dundee last week. There were discussions on various matters bearing on the religious life of the people.

Requests for Prayer.—For blessing on a mission to be held from Sept. 27 to October 11 at Middle Barton, Oxon, by Mr. Harris, of the Evangelisation Society.—For a blessing on a fortnight's mission at the Bible Christian Chapel at Broadwood, Launceston, to be conducted by Mr. G. W. Clegg.—For blessing at the All-Day Conference of the Y.M.C.A., on Nov. 5 in the West-End Hall, Rothesay.—For a special evangelistic mission to young men, to be conducted by Mr. Samuel Millar, general secretary of the Mountpottinger Y.M.C.A., in Dublin Y.M.C.A., October 22 to 30.—For a special mission to young men, to be conducted by Rev. T. B. Robertson, Limerick, in the Men's Christian Institute, Kingstown, co. Dublin, September 28 to October 1.—For an earnest young clergyman, that his ministry may be increasing fruitful.—For a three weeks' mission at Marazion B. C. Chapel, Cornwall.—For a ten days' mission (October 3 to 12) amongst the navvies at Sutton-in-Ashfield, conducted by Miss L. A. Spafford.—For evangelistic meetings, commencing on September 27, in the Free Church, Beaulieu.—For results of missions recently held at Redruth and Pool, in Cornwall.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE turned with curious interest to the pages of The Church Times to see how the Pope's Bull on Anglican Orders had been received by the High Church party. It pities the Pope for his ignorant mistake, and boldly affirms the validity of ordinations which he has denied. His judgment has no importance for us personally, but it has great importance for the Roman Church, and it has great importance indirectly for the whole Church of Christ, since the adverse judgment now given is an additional bar to the reunion of Christendom.

Our contemporary is especially thankful that the Pope has given his reasons, because they can be probed and analysed, and if they are found to be worthless, then the decision is worthless even for those who bow to the Pope's authority.

And it finds them to be worthless. It roundly affirms that "the authors of the Bull cannot even quote a previous Papal document correctly." Nay, worse: it accuses the Bull of making a false assertion as to the Anglican priesthood, and veiling it by "a trick of translation." All this is in strange contrast to the obsequious writing with regard to Rome which we had when the air was full of "reunion."

Still the craving for Reunion exists. The Bull "will be a grievous disappointment to many who hoped for something better." It will form a bar to the desired consummation, but not a final bar. "The goodness and wisdom of God can overcome all the hindrances interposed by human folly or ignorance, and by the fraud of the enemy." This is optimistic language, but Rome will never change, and reunion with her spells absorption. People who hold that priests and masses are necessary for salvation will have to join her unconditionally.

When the advocates of Reunion met at Grindelwald, under the presidency of the liberal-minded Bishop Perowne, of Worcester, the Nonconformists in the early part of the day expressed themselves prepared to accept the Lambeth proposals, including recognition of the Historic Episcopate. But at night Professor Stokes, of Dublin, pooh-poohed the whole situation, when he derisively asked, What orders are Churchmen to recognise? Are they to acknowledge the validity of those of the village preacher or the city missionary, whom a few followers accept as their pastor? Now, the Pope and Cardinal Vaughan are saying very much the same thing as to Anglicans themselves. "The validity of Anglican orders could never form even a single plank in the platform for either corporate or individual reunion." How pitiful this whole contention is, in view of the orders conferred by the Lord Himself upon all his kings and priests, orders inclusive of all believers—"Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

Mr. Sydney Watson, author of so many penny stories, has been telling a representative of The British Weekly that in the villages of the South of England it is his experience that "the largest congregations and deepest interest in the services are to be found in undenominational halls, where expository preaching and simple Gospel truth are the main features of the platform." Sermons on topics of the day are above the villagers. Evidently there is effective preaching of the truth, and for that we may be thankful; but why do the people not go to church or chapel for it? Is it not there? or are they repelled by coldness? A fact such as Mr. Watson mentions ought to cause great searchings of heart among the so-called Christian congregations.

Because Christianity in England has been more freely and fully taught she takes the lead in philanthropic and humanitarian movements. We rejoice with thanksgiving to God that this nation is expressing itself so unreservedly in detestation and denunciation of the Turkish massacre and outrage of our Armenian professed fellow-Christians. We acknowledge the great effect of Mr. Gladstone's moving speech at Liverpool, and of his article in the current number of The Nineteenth Century. But we are bound to say that on the score of statesmanship, as far as we are able to judge, little or nothing tending to solve the difficulties of the case was added to the discussion.

We do not think it is the province of Christians to pass resolutions the intention of which is to press our Government to actions which would at least incur the danger of a universal war. Our place in the earth is that of intercessors with God. The nation needs to humble itself on account of its own sins of greed and oppression. Her appeal to the humanity of Europe is severely discounted by her own grasping policy throughout the world, and by her overbearing action towards weaker races. Surely, the attitude of the Church of God should be, like that of Daniel and Nehemiah, one of humiliation and confession of her own sins, together with those of the nation, and of prayer to the God of nations for his interposition and deliverance. If the same fervour which is manifested on behalf of the sufferers, and against their oppressors, were shown in humble prayer to God, would not the Church of Christ be contributing her best to the solution of this burning question, and the most she is capable of toward the cessation of these heartbreaking horrors?

The Echo makes the following remark touching the Governmental action of Germany in preventing the expression of popular sympathy with outraged and massacred Armenia:—

But the prohibition of public meetings, as in Germany, cannot but strengthen the impression that the interests of rulers are antagonistic to the interests of peoples, and the interests of humanity subordinate to the interests of diplomacy. And naturally it will encourage Abdul Hamid in his evil ways.

Those who read God's sure word of prophecy will be reminded of the close of Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream—"They [the kings] shall mingle themselves with the seed of men [the people], but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with miry clay [or earthenware]." The murders by the throned assassin of Turkey, and the abstention of the Powers from the rescue of the oppressed, point in the same direction.

The Russian Bourse Gazette is leading opinion in that country in the direction of greater friendliness to Britain; and prepares the way tentatively to a more amicable understanding between the two powers. Even the German papers, hitherto the most callous of all Continental journals in their references to the Armenian atrocities, have taken a new departure in the direction of a deeper sense of the moral issues bound up in the present position of affairs. The influence is at work everywhere; the conscience of Europe is clearly being touched at last. A warm breath of pity seems penetrating over the mood of Arctic indifference which has so far been paralysing the councils and the policies of the Continental powers. This is the moment when the hearts of all devout and earnest citizens should be lifted in earnest prayer that the Ruler of Princes and Lord of all peoples may send his Spirit abroad with power, and stir up Europe to a due sense of her responsibility and great opportunity.

The method of treatment followed in the Duxhurst and other well-conducted Homes for Inebriates is a great advance on the old haphazard method of reclaiming drunkards by dealing with them as though they were at all times fully master of their own appetites. It would, however, be a sorry result if those who are beginning the downward road of intemperance were made to feel that they are not responsible for the formation of the habit. It is then that the responsibility is clear and unmistakeable. That man commits moral suicide in cold blood, as it were, who, knowing that he has an hereditary tendency towards drink, plays with it, and indulges in its fascinations. Let us be merciful to those who have gone beyond the reach of self-government, and need all that moral suasion and medical skill can do to reclaim them. But still more earnestly should we implore those who know their weakness beforehand to have nothing to do with the accursed thing.

The amount of leisure time young men have in some places ought to be felt to be a great privilege. A friend of theirs in Edinburgh testifies that when he met a whole class of young men, mostly apprentices, he found that every one of them seemed to have each evening many hours to himself, "an amount of available time for which older and busier men would give their ears." That is so in some places, and those who have the time cannot be too diligent in using it in self-improvement. It is from the ranks of these young men in provincial towns and country villages that the church has drawn some of her best workers. Unfortunately the young men of London and our great cities have little time for anything but business, and when that is over they are too tired for intellectual exertion or Christian work. Towns may be good places for the fully-formed man to live and struggle in; the country is the place to make a man of him.

The Brewster Sessions this year appear to have been content with a very mild policy. They have commonly renewed old licences, and granted a few new ones. We believe, however, that they have, in granting new licences, demanded the surrender of some old ones, so that, in reality, there has been less increase than appears to be the case. Magistrates, however, have small encouragement to curtail the drink traffic whilst they know that the Quarter Sessions will undo all their reformatory work. Their power should be a reality. As things are, the trade defies the conscience of the nation, and goes on with its desolating work.

The Original Secession Magazine supplies a deeply-suggestive note on the awful cry of our Lord on the Cross, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" The explanation given is that of the late Rev. Wm. Grant, of Ayr:—"It is our Lord Himself who has taught me to ask why He was forsaken. Not for his own enlightenment did He put that question; He knew its answer. Father, said He at the tomb of Lazarus, I thank Thee that Thou hast heard Me. I knew that Thou hearest Me always, but because of the people which stand by I said it. Even so now, the meaning of the cry was, 'My God, I know the reason, and approve it, but for the sake of them that stand by I ask aloud, "Why hast Thou forsaken Me?"' He asked it in our hearing that we might seek an answer, but He asked it of God that we might not lean to our own reason, but, looking up, might seek an answer from God."

The answer to the question is given in those familiar Scriptures which tell us that Christ "bare our sins in his own body to the tree...suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God." His blood "was shed for the remission of sins." "Here," wrote Mr. Grant, "is the answer to the question, an answer so short and plain, that he who runs may read it, and yet so full and large, that he who longest stands to gaze upon it will find in it an answer to all he wants to know."

"We do not discard our convictions, nor merely concede that others shall enjoy theirs; but with justice demand that the same right of utterance we claim for ourselves shall be as sacredly respected in their case as we insist of them to respect it in ours. By fair, candid, and courteous discussion each may naturally and reasonably endeavour to impart to others the light he himself has received." This is good counsel which may well be borne in mind at all times.

The Manchester City Council, having had its attention called to the success of well-conducted model lodging-houses in Glasgow and London, has determined to spend £75,000 in the erection of four common lodging-houses in different parts of the city.

Prayer for Armenia.—The usual weekly prayer-meeting at the Metropolitan Tabernacle was on Monday devoted to special prayer on behalf of the Armenians. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon presided, and amongst those who took part in the service were Revs. J. Douglas, J. Waite, Tolfree Parr, Frank Smith, and Mr. C. B. Sawday. There was no resolution of sympathy, but great enthusiasm was shown by a large congregation.

"Secret Commissions."

THROUGH the correspondence columns of The Times, Sir Edward Fry, the well-known ex-judge, has been exposing one of the most serious blots on our modern commercial system—that of giving and receiving secret commissions. The facts thus disclosed show how largely our trade and industry are honey-combed by this illegal and dishonest method of money-getting. The whole thing is indicative of the low moral tone which is leavening the industrial world, as an inevitable product of the modern desire to attain riches at any cost. It has generally been claimed that Great Britain has attained its high place of power and prestige among the nations of the earth by the exercise of such virtues as high-principled probity and straightforward dealing. If the contrary now holds good it is only a truism to say that England has entered on her decline in the scale of morals.

Sir Edward Fry's statements and charges are well defined and easily grasped. In his first letter he made six allegations as to the most common channels of fraudulent or dishonest dealing of the kind under consideration. These were:—

- Over insurance of vessels.
- Bad and lazy work done by wage-earners.
- Adulteration of articles of consumption.
- Infringement of trade-marks, and cognate attempts to benefit by the skill of others.
- Misrepresentation of the character and quality of goods.
- Bribery in the form of secret commissions.

He very properly stigmatises all these practices as a disgrace to our civilisation, "specially disgraceful in an age which prides itself on its recognition of that social tie between man and man, which every one of such practices tends to break or loosen." To prove that he is not attempting to hit a shadow, Sir Edward backs up his charges by an array of ascertained facts as to the undoubted prevalence of these evils. The correspondence that has followed has fully confirmed that position. One paragraph from the Judge's second communication will indicate the wide ramifications of the vicious system of secret bribery:—

One of my correspondents, a nursery gardener, writes to me that the practice of giving commissions is so prevalent in that trade that it is only under exceptional circumstances that any nurseryman could gain a living who refused to pay a commission to a head gardener. My own experience tends to confirm this statement. It opens up to the mind the great prevalence of commissions paid by tradesmen alike to indoor and out-of-door servants. It is needless to enlarge on the temptation which these commissions present to the giving of orders in excess of what is wanted, and the passing without notice of charges of an unfair and extravagant height.

In a leading article, based on the second letter from its correspondent, The Times of Saturday last deals vigorously with the disclosures made, and sums up the matter in these clear and common-sense terms:—

All secret commissions are in effect either given as bribes or extorted as blackmail. Fraud of some sort is of their essence and intent, and no reason is obvious why the law should be more tender to them than it is to other and not more mischievous forms of fraud. Of course detection would often be difficult, but the fear of it might compel traders of the weaker sort to eschew temptation, and traders of the baser sort to be honest in spite of themselves. In the meanwhile any honest man who conscientiously doubts whether in given circumstances he may or may not give or take a commission in any form can easily quiet his scruples by asking himself whether the transaction is one which he would hesitate to disclose to his principal or to acknowledge before the world.

The mischief being thus undeniable and well-nigh universal in its scope, Sir Edward Fry naturally goes on to consider in his second letter what can and ought to be done by way of remedy. He points out that employers who may have suffered through the bribery of their employes, may recover all such ascertained amounts by process of law; and may summarily dismiss all such offenders. He also urges the amending of the law so as to make these secret transactions not only illegal but criminal. As to the duty of individuals who are tempted to enter on these dishonest courses, he says:—

Furthermore, I think that no one ought to regard the offer of any bribe in any form as private or confidential, however much the wrongdoer may strive to put it under the seal of secrecy. No one can either in law or in morals impose on a third party a duty to be silent as to his unlawful designs. Rather the duty lies the other way, viz., to communicate to the principal the wish of his servant or agent to defraud him. If this view of duty were acted upon it would create such an insecurity in the practice as would greatly tend to lessen it.

Finally, he hopes that the pulpit will take the matter up, and, not content with commending honesty in vague and general terms, will denounce "those particular forms of dishonesty to which members of the congregation may be mainly exposed." This suggestion is one which we trust our preachers will very widely adopt. "Thou shalt not steal," may well be chosen as a text for frequent and pointed discourse. If the trumpet is blown with no uncertain sound, the preacher's skirts will at least be clear of the guilt of his hearers.

Compensations.

God takes away the snowdrops
To send the daffodils;
He lets the violets wither,
But their place He quickly fills.
When May is nearly over
Shines out the golden broom;
How we should miss the cowslips
If the roses did not bloom.
When breezy hills no longer
Are carpeted with thyme,
Blue harebell, purple knapweed,
And heath are in their prime.
They fade—and by the brooklets,
We see the meadow-sweet,
With water-loving loosestrife,
And pale valerian meet.
And when September blossoms
Are few and far between,
God lets the scarlet berries
And purple fruits be seen.
Not only in the lesser,
But in the greater too,
He takes away the old things
To give us something new.
Thy summer nearly over,
Have neither care nor fear,
Thy God can make the autumn
The glory of thy year!

EDITH ELLEN TRUSTED.

Surrey Chapel is a well-known centre of Primitive Methodist effort in Blackfriars-road, S.E. The site and property cost £14,000, and a debt of £6000 still remains on the premises. In a circular just issued, the minister, Rev. J. Tolfree Parr, states that a friend has offered a gift of £750 on condition that the debt is reduced to £3000. From other sources, promises have been received, making a total of nearly £2000. Mr. Parr writes:—"Our own people, already taxed to the utmost to maintain the numerous institutions of the mission, are making great sacrifices in order to assist the schemes, and now we appeal in Christ's name to all stewards of his bounty who sympathise with evangelistic and social work amongst the poor, to help us to realise this great deliverance." Mr. Parr's address is 62, Nelson-square, S.E.

Phaethon and Lucifer.

Notes of an Address to Members of the Y.M.C.A. and Daniel's Band, Newport, Mon.

As when the weary traveller gains
The height of some o'erlooking hill,
His heart revives when, o'er the plains,
He views his home tho' distant still.

IT is sufficient for the human traveller to gain the height of a hill to see his home in the valley beneath, but a bird soars higher because it needs to see farther. It would not see its distant home unless it could soar far above the hills of earth, into the blue height of the heavens. A bird's-eye view enables us to get a sufficient area under observation, and to see things in their true proportion.

In order to understand any subject clearly we must begin at the beginning. When Milton writes of an earthly paradise lost to man, he lays the foundation of the story in a heavenly paradise lost to angels. As the tree grows higher so its roots strike deeper. As history advances and human rebellion lifts up its head against the Ruler of the universe, so it looks backward to the first rebellion in heaven, and identifies the King of Babylon, the mightiest monarch among men, with Lucifer the Shining One, and the King of Tyre with the anointed cherub that covereth, the one wiser than Daniel, who was in Eden the garden of God, in the midst of the stones of fire.

The earlier princes of this world, who claimed to be as God, and those who in later days crucified the Lord of glory, were the lineal descendants of "the prince of this world, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience." Wicked men are the children of the Wicked One. Proud men are begotten of him, who is the chief of all the sons of pride.

The same words are used by the prophets to describe the father and the children, rebellious men and the rebellious spirit who animates them; for God sees the spirit behind the man, just as the incarnate Lord saw the tempter behind the disciple, and said, "Get thee behind Me, Satan."

Light is thrown on many parts of Scripture by the corroborative testimony of early pagan mythology. Nimrod is the original of the Greek Adonis, the Egyptian Osiris, the Babylonian Tammuz. Lucifer is the original of Phaethon.

In Smith's Classical Dictionary the name Phaethon is interpreted "The Shining." In the Variorum Bible, edited by Professors Cheyne, Driver, Clarke, Goodwin, and Sanday, the name Lucifer in Isa. xiv. 12, is translated, "The Shining One." These scholars and critics may not have intended to identify Phaethon with Lucifer, and both with the spirit who fell through pride, and became Satan, the adversary of God and man. Nevertheless, the identity of the names goes far to establish the identity of the persons, and this is corroborated by the similarity of the Pagan myth to the Scripture story.

"He received the significant name Phaethon (The Shining) from his father, and was afterwards presumptuous enough to request his father to allow him for one day to drive the chariot of the sun across the heavens. Helios was induced...to yield, but the youth being too weak to check the horses, they rushed out of their usual track, and came so near the earth as almost to set it on fire." "In a few moments the whole world would have been in flames as the maddened horses rushed this way and that, had not Zeus launched a swift thunderbolt at the imprudent charioteer, and hurled him headlong into the river Eridanos."

Lucifer, the Shining One, the Light-bearer, became the Prince of Darkness. Being alienated from the life of God, the only power he possessed was the power of death. Exalting self and usurping the throne, he became the enemy and accuser and slanderer of God; not abiding in the truth, he became a liar and a murderer from the beginning of his rebellious course.

A sinner who becomes a tempter always tempts to his own particular form of sin. Lucifer fell by pride, desiring and claiming to be as God; and his temptation to mankind was "Ye shall be as God." The implanted seed bore immediate fruit; Eve at once became her own god. The tree was pleasant to her sight, good for her food, to be desired to make her wise. All thought of pleasing God was lost in the desire to please her new god—Self.

She disobeyed and ate; she pleased herself and usurped the rule of her own life, just as Satan, whose nature she had now received, had done. And through all the generations of men the same spirit and the same nature works, until the last man, the Lawless One, the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition, shall sit in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.

Many passages of Scripture receive a new significance and illumination when we carry history back beyond the fall of man to the rebellion and fall of the angel.

Thus the King of Babylon, who said in the spirit of his prototype, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built?" must learn that "the heavens do rule," that "the Most High ruleth among the children of men." These declarations, "The heavens do rule" and "The Most High ruleth," are evidently the originals of the New Testament terms, "The Kingdom of the Heavens" and "The Kingdom of God."

First, John the herald, and then Jesus the King, comes proclaiming: "The Kingdom of God, the Kingdom of Heaven, is at hand; repent ye and believe the good tidings." Satan's baleful rule has oppressed the world for 4000 years. The chosen people have been scattered and peeled for their sins, and to them first comes the appeal to repent, to turn to God, and believe that his kingdom, his reign, is nigh to come, and his salvation to be revealed. For to a world in which the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now, under the iron heel of the usurper and oppressor, what could be joyful news except that the rightful King had come to reign?

But the sons of pride cannot receive the meek and lowly in heart. "He came unto his own, and his own received Him not." God looked for judgment, but beheld oppression; "He was oppressed, and He was afflicted, yet He opened not his mouth." God looked for righteousness, but behold a cry, "Crucify Him!"

Why in the pagan myth did not Helios refuse Phaethon's request? Because Phaethon would have said, "I could have driven the horses if my father had let me try." Why did not God stamp Lucifer out of existence the moment he put forth his proud and insensate claim? God cannot stamp out history. A word once spoken cannot be unspoken; a question once asked cannot be unasked; a claim once made cannot be unmade; a deed once done cannot be undone. Although the speaker, the questioner, the claimant, the doer, might be at once destroyed, a thought, a word, an action, has passed into history, its record has been flung into the air, and will be borne, like the multitudinous thistledown, upon the wings of the wind, entering into other minds, raising the question: Was it certain that Phaethon could not drive the chariot of the sun? Was it impossible that the shining being next the throne could have exercised the prerogative of God? Could not the creature who was the chief of the ways of God govern the creation of God?

The question must be answered exhaustively. The problem must be solved, so solved that there shall be no doubt of its solution, no repetition of the question for evermore. The Divine principle must be acted on, "Try the spirits," "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

Whether Phaethon can drive the sun-chariot must be proved by experiment. Whether Lucifer can hold the reins of universal government must be tested by experience. And long and terrible as must be the process, the principalities and powers in heavenly places must see, wrought out to the bitter end, the proof that in the nature of things rebellion against God involves and entails the opposite of everything that God is and does.

The necessity of putting to the test the self-exalting creature's attempt to sit in the seat of God, and of proving his unfitness to rule, answers the question, Why does God permit the Turkish massacres? Why has He permitted evil deeds, from the fall of Adam and the murder of Abel, until now? The sin and consequent sorrow with which the Great Rebel has filled the world prove his incompetence to rule; the righteous judgments of God prove, and will in the consummation prove decisively, that the Creator alone is able to govern the universe which He has made. That is the real issue before the universe; not whether man can be saved, but whether the Creator, and He alone, is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen nor can see; to whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen. M.

From North China.

In a recent letter to a friend, Mrs. Stewart McKee, of Ta-Tung-fu, writes:—

"Stewart (my husband) was invited by one of the wealthy men of the village of Pei-Chia-Isao to open an opium refuge, which he did at once, as we have been praying for an opening in that place. On arriving there he got a welcome from everyone. As Stewart could not leave the work in the city he had to return that night, leaving two men to manage the refuge, he going out every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The next time he went all was changed, the people were about to beat the gong, which meant an uprising to turn us out. They did not want the Jesus-hall people there. Stewart saw that things had taken a serious turn, so looking to God for help, he called a meeting of the elders, the men who are responsible for what goes on in their village. He thought they were at the bottom of it, so was kind but firm in what he said. He told them he had come and did not intend to go, saying if anything should happen they would be responsible. After a lot of talk, they went and told the people that they were not to behave in this manner. All was soon quiet, and the two men were willing to stay. Twenty men were received into the refuge.

"Here is a little bit about Chinese life, or rather Chinese death. When a young unmarried lad dies he is buried in a place quite outside the family burying-ground till such a time when the middleman who is paid for the work can hear of a young unmarried dead girl, whose age and position tally with the lad's. If their parents can agree (generally about the cost), the marriage ceremony is gone through by the living. The couple are now supposed to be man and wife, and fit subjects to get a decent burial. Their bodies are taken up and buried in the family burying-ground of the lad's parents."

"It is the Lord."

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

John xxi.

JOHN discerned Him first, as it was meet. To others it was a stranger that paced the sand and looked across the steel-grey water. To him who loved and knew that he was loved, there was something in the gesture, enquiry, and tone, which unmistakably indicated the presence of Jesus. A quick remark, in whispered undertones, to Peter was enough to cast him headlong into the water and in a few moments, with rapid stroke, the strong swimmer was making for the Master's feet. The man of love discerned, the man of action pressed through the intervening space to be the first to gather the spoil of that unexpected interview.

Be always on the outlook, fellow-disciple, for thy Lord, especially in the early morning, when the world is fresh and the breeze curls the wavelets as they break in musical ripple on the sand. Ere the sun is risen above the hills, and whilst shadows lie dark and far on shore and sea, thou wilt probably find the Master taking pleasure in the works of his hands. There, where the foot of the roysterer and dissolute cannot intrude, where the voices of the world's dissipation are unheard, whilst the pulses are unstirred by the fever of the world's passion, and the atmosphere of the soul is untainted by the soil of the world's sin, at early dawn, amid nature, amongst the mountains, on the silver line of sand, in the woodland brake, in the garden, thou shalt hear the voice of thine heart saying, "It is the Lord." Thou wilt know Him by the fragrance of his breath, by the considerateness of his care, by the pity as of a father to his children, by his knowledge of mysteries hidden from all else; and when thou knowest Him to be present, gird thy coat about thee in the modesty of true humbleness, plunge through the dividing waves, and never rest till thou hast found thy way to his feet.

It is wonderful what Jesus is to those that meet Him thus. They may be tired with the night watch, weary with their run of ill-success, out of heart and hope, but they never approach Him without finding a fire kindled by his hand, the fish and bread of prepared provision, and a welcome to breakfast. Never let that chance of the morning interview pass unimproved. Never let Him stand there in vain; never let love descry Him without the strength of a mighty purpose bearing thee to his embrace.

And it is not only thus that thou shouldest meet Him. It may be that thou shalt be plying thy daily toil, tearing thyself from work thou hadst deemed more sacred; thou mayest have turned to the bench or store, saying, with Peter, "I go a-fishing." The night may have settled upon thee, of disappointment, and heart-weariness, and failure; then with a tread that no mortal ear could detect, He shall glide in, the light of whose eyes is all the light that heaven needs, and He will be standing there, amid the scenes of common toil. He is familiar with carpenters' shops. He knows well how to handle a boat. His delights are in the habitable parts of the earth—on the flags of the Exchange, amid the course of the market, where trades are plied, and handicrafts wrought. The quick heart may still whisper gently to itself, "It is the Lord," and the soul shall have broken through the restraint of the chill waters of reserve, and shall be locked in a companionship which even the presence of others cannot break.

Nor will He only come to thee amid the scenes of natural beauty and of daily toil. He will come to thee most of all when thou art mourning over thy failure in his service. Have the fish been fickle? Have thy wonted arts failed to beguile them? Have the weary hours passed, thou doing all thy little best, without one tiny fish entering thy net? Does it seem to thee as if thy hand has lost its cunning, and dost thou think sadly of the disappointment which awaits others? This is the likeliest moment of all in which to come across Him. Jesus always comes to men who seem to have failed, who have meant great things, but have come short, who have toiled greatly, and have taken nothing. Such are dear to Christ. Nothing touches his heart like patient and steadfast endurance. Nothing will so surely bring Him within reach as those empty nets and light keels. Look out for Him as the night is passing, and the day breaking, when strength is expended, and exhaustion is paralysing. Thine heart shall awake, smitten by the gleam of his face, and thou shalt say softly to thyself, "This is my God; I have waited for Him, He is come to save me. This is the Lord, I will rejoice in his salvation. It is the Lord!"

Ah, soul! It may be that this story is not far from being realised. Thy night is almost over. Lo! the morning breaks! Thy boat has nearly come to shore! In a little it will grate on the pebbles, and, as through the parting mist, which veils heaven, thou seest a form waiting to welcome thee, thy heart will make no mistake if it softly whispers to itself, It is the Lord; and on thy emerging through the cold flood on the eternal shore, thou wilt see no man save Jesus only, and find a fire of coals and fish laid thereon, and bread; and thou wilt be bidden to bring of the fish which thou hast caught, that thou mayest feed on unexpected success with Him who says, All mine are thine, and thine are mine, and my joy is perfected.

When Jesus meets the disciple, He has much to say. We need the anointed ear as well as the quick eye. He asks for love, for the noblest love of which the heart is capable, the love of respect, of devotion, of consecration, such love as we would give to God. He asks, that He may give us an opportunity of expressing it. He asks, because He loves to hear us express it. He asks with a special significance, when we have acted in any wise inconsistently with its great demand.

Hast thou not been conscious of this, fellow-disciple, when thou hast denied Him with oaths and curses, hast said thou didst not know Him, hast turned thy back on his great anguish? It was as though He says, Is this thy love to thy friend? Art thou speaking and acting consistently with the high code of love's ideal? Yet surely thou dost love in spite of this. Didst thou notice the other day, in the report of Nansen's explorations, that about the Pole there is a wide open sea, the depths of which are warm, though the surface is covered by floating ice. Thy Master and mine knows well that the heart of a disciple may be warm, though on the surface may drift the ice-floes of denial and apparent neglect. As He asked of Peter, so of us, "Lovest thou Me?"

Let us never dilute the attachment that should bind us to Him. I notice that He asked of Peter the great Divine love, worthy of God, and that Peter proposed to give him a weaker, more sentimental affection. A second time Christ maintained his demand for the supreme love, but for a second time Peter proffered Him the lower. Let us avoid Peter's mistake, and when Jesus asks the best from us, let us not put Him off with second best; when He asks the supreme, let us not give Him the inferior; let us not drag Him down to our level, but let us confess ourselves willing to rise to his. Let us bring Him such love as we have, and lay it at his feet; and, as it fails to fill out the measure of his demand, entreat Him to take it in his hand, and for silver to bring gold, for iron, brass, and for stones, jewels.

What revelations of ourselves Jesus gives us when we stand together in the presence of our brethren, and in sight of the heaps of fish which betoken the success that He has crowned us with. He shows us ourselves—nay, we see ourselves reflected in the light of his life. We stand manifested before his judgment seat, and discern what He has discerned in us.

Has He not led thee through the chambers of memory, and shown thee how much of all thy work has emanated from self? He leads thee back to thy youth, and shows how much that the world praised was the result of the forceful energy of thine eager soul—so much was wood, hay, and stubble, which thou accountedst gold, silver, and precious stones; so much was void which thou thoughtest was Nazarite consecration; so much was soulish and carnal instead of being spiritual and eternal. I hear Him saying to thee, as often to me, "Thou girdedst thyself and walkedst whither thou wouldst." Yes, that was our mistake. We were always girding ourselves up to new resolves, endeavours, sacrifices, exploits. We were fond of taking our own way.

I loved the garish day, and spite of fears
Pride ruled my will.

Oh, Time, wilt thou not give us back those opportunities? Is the principal swallowed up in thy capacious maw, and only the poor interest of tears and experience left? Alas for us! So many steps in vain! So much walking to no effect!

Remember not past years.

Then the Lord foreshadows the future: "Another shall gird thee, and carry thee." This might make us fear, if we were to interpret it as indicating the coming of a stranger, a detractor, or Satan. But if the "other" is a veiled allusion to Himself, or to the Holy Spirit, by whom holy men of old were borne along, we are content. Let it be even so, O Thou other Comforter. Come and bear us whither Thou wilt, though the flesh cry out, and the cross loom in front, and after it the grave in which we rest at last. Beyond it all, lies the upper chamber, the scenes of Pentecost, the church built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, the New Jerusalem, with the disciples' names inscribed on its stones.

In the presence of the Lord, all curiosity is silenced. Dost thou look into his face, and try to read the destiny of some twin soul, asking, What shall this man do? Thou wilt get no clear response. It may be because thy request was prompted by some kind of selfish longing. It is not for thee to know, but to be; not to compare thy lot with others, but to be strong and brave and true. All depends upon the Master's will, which is taken and which left, which carries and which speeds home, which is alive until He come and which passes to meet Him by the shadowed cloisters of death. Our business is to follow Christ.

Let us turn again to earth, with its demands and sorrows and sins, following Jesus as He goes about doing good, following Him to the Ascension mount, following Him in thought and desire to his throne; and, penetrating every mystery, all perplexities, each enshrouding cloud, with the unfaltering conviction of faith let us dare to say, "Though I cannot read his purposes, or distinguish his form, or even hear his voice, I know it is the Lord, let Him do what seemeth Him good."

Welcome to Mrs. Harrison Lee.—A pleasant social meeting took place in one of the large rooms of Exeter Hall, on Thursday last, to give a public reception to Mrs. Harrison Lee, of Melbourne, special lecturer to the Victorian Temperance Alliance. This lady is not only a vigorous worker in the good cause, but also represents many fellow labourers across the ocean and chiefly in our great Australian Colonies. On the rail of the platform was hung a travelling rug with the names worked on it of 600 friends who have benefited by her counsel. The Hon. Conrad Dillon, chairman, gave Mrs. Lee a hearty welcome in the names of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union and the National Temperance League. Mrs. Harrison Lee acknowledged the many kindnesses she had received from members of the Temperance body in England. She cordially pressed them to go over and help among the sparse population in Australia, where there was plenty of work for them to do.

The British Association.

[BY A CORRESPONDENT.]

A MEETING of the British Association is not usually reckoned among the religious conferences of the year, and yet in its inwardness there is a certain religious element which one may not overlook. The recent meeting of the B. A. at Liverpool furnishes food for much thought in this special aspect; the very attendance, which this year was large (about 3,200), and came close to the Manchester record meeting, is of itself significant. Here were gathered not only scientists, but a large number of outsiders, and among them a considerable sprinkling of ministers of religion. What does this import? Surely that the dividing wall of prejudice which once formed such a sharp line of cleavage between religion and science is year by year crumbling still more away, that Christians are waking up to realise that there never has been or can be real antagonism between science and religion.

This year the meeting has been characterised not so much by any one great discovery, but by a definite, steady advance in research on all sides. Sir JOSEPH LISTER dealt with a number of striking illustrations of the interdependence of science and medicine. He showed how much each has borrowed from and contributed to the other during the past fifty years. The Röntgen rays are a mine of wealth to the surgeon, and most important applications of them to medical practice are now being made. Anæsthesia, "that priceless blessing," is celebrating its jubilee, and has opened a new era in surgery.

In the mathematical section, Professor THOMSON, in his address, touched on an important point when he remarked on the great increase of science teaching in our schools and colleges. We shall agree with him that this is well and good, if the pupils are not required to skim the surface of a large number of branches. The danger of this he noted in his paper, and his warning should not pass unheeded. The surface science which the girls and boys of our elementary schools carry away with them is a dangerous possession, and calculated, I believe, to foster a spirit of dogmatic scepticism—the idea that they have sounded the depths, when in reality they are hardly in the shallows.

The economic section is always a popular one, and naturally so, when it deals with questions that closely touch humanity. Mr. LEONARD COURTNEY'S carefully-thought-out address reviewed the position of economic thinkers of the past and their apparent failures to influence and raise the standard of social life. He examined various principles that they laid down, and their soundness or otherwise as workable in the present day. Their belief that the secret of social regeneration lay in the utmost allowance of freedom of action to every individual, so far as that action affected himself, coupled with the utmost development of self-reliance, is still, urged Mr. Courtney, "our belief, and our best hope lies in the fuller acceptance of these principles. But," added he, "the economist must feel if he is to animate multitudes that he too has a religion. Beneath the calmness of his analysis must be felt the throb of humanity."

The devotional meeting on the B.A. Sunday is always one of deep interest. Convened by well-known Christian scientists, such as Sir William Dawson, Prof. Barrett, Dr. Gladstone, Prof. Macalister, Prof. Lloyd Snape, it is a beautiful illustration of the link between the Book of Nature and the Book of Revelation. About sixty attended, and short addresses were given by the chairman, Sir W. Dawson, and Prof. Macalister, others taking part in the prayers and reading.

Professor MACALISTER said 1 John i. 5 summed up the object of all the B.A. work. It was a search for light, and here we found what was the centre of light—the real light—God Himself. Let us work on these lines. Sir W. Dawson pointed out that it belonged to Christian scientists to bear their testimony (1) to the evidence of design in nature; (2) to the authority of revelation; (3) to faith and its paramount importance.

Looking at the meetings of the week as a whole one could not fail to be struck with the reverent, patient, undogmatic tone of inquiry adopted by the majority of speakers. Here and there was a discord as when one declared that nature had made a great mistake and rectified it; and another that the communing with nature in the study of geology would so influence man's nature "as to make him live in charity with all men." But taken as a whole the tone was otherwise and one which tacitly acknowledged "a seeing in nature somewhat that transcends nature."

A Christian Endeavour Rally.

THE marvellous way in which the Christian Endeavour movement has taken root in the soil of every nation under the sun, proves that it has met a distinct need in the life of the Christian Churches. It seems in large measure to have solved the problem, How to retain the elder scholars in our Sunday-schools, and prevent them from lapsing into indifference. This thought must have strongly impressed any observer who was present at the meeting in the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Saturday evening, convened to welcome Dr. F. E. Clark, of Boston, as founder of the movement. The great building was filled with young people of both sexes—surely the very flower of London's young Christian manhood and womanhood. There did not seem more than a dozen bald heads in the vast assemblage of six thousand, and very few who had passed the meridian of life. It was in itself a truly inspiring spectacle, and one to give heart and hope to the most confirmed pessimist.

The proceedings were in keeping with the character of the audience—full of go and movement and abounding life. The songs were sung with a will; the prayers were fervid; the speeches were full of a high and hopeful enthusiasm. In the early part of the evening Rev. F. B. MEYER (who presided, and who is almost as popular as the guest of the evening) referred in thankful and graceful terms to the length of the Queen's reign. All rose and sang a verse of the National Anthem. Then Mr. Meyer transported our thoughts and sympathies to Asia Minor, with its persecuted and martyred Armenians, on whose behalf very importunate and impassioned prayer was made by Rev. Tolefree Parr.

It was in the very heartiest language at his command that Mr. Meyer extended the greetings of the assembled Endeavourers to Dr. Clark, on his present visit to the metropolis. There is not a minister, he said, who has had the luxury of Christian Endeavour work in his church who is not under deep obligation to Dr. Clark for instituting this movement. Wherever he had visited the churches throughout the country, he had found that the introduction of a Christian Endeavour Society had been a source of new energy, new prayerfulness, and new devotion throughout the entire community. Further eloquent words of welcome were spoken by Rev. G. E. Thorn, of Edmonton, and Rev. J. Fleming, of Great Dover-street, on behalf respectively of the northern and southern divisions of the metropolis. The responses were successively made by the divisions standing, each filling a half of the spacious auditorium. This part of the programme was most impressive.

When at last Dr. CLARK rose to reply, he was met by what is called "a true Chautauqua welcome." The great audience leapt to their feet and waved a perfect forest of white handkerchiefs, while the cheering grew in volume, with the aid of hands and feet, till it resembled the reverberating roll of Alpine thunder. For a moment or two Dr. Clark seemed almost unnerved by such an "extraordinarily kind welcome" as he described it, but he soon proceeded to disclaim any desert as founder of the movement. Human agency, he declared, has had such an insignificant and inconspicuous part in what has been done that all the kind things said of him only served to make him feel his own littleness. We can all rejoice that this movement knows no human commander or general; its only Commander is Jesus Christ our Lord.

After a little pleasantries about claiming some credit for having passed through two equinoctial gales at sea within the last four days, in order to be present; and some words of grateful memory associated with the name of Spurgeon, Dr. Clark went on, in a deeply-interesting address, to refer to the outstanding aims of the Christian Endeavour movement, viewed from the divine standpoint. It might be said that one great object was the promoting of a better idea of patriotism and Christian citizenship. In expanding this point he reviewed the moral uprising of the last two years, in connection with civic and national politics, in the United States, and maintained that such a desirable result was in good part due to the action of Christian Endeavourers. Speaking of the pending presidential election, he said he believed that all the five gentlemen nominated in connection with that exalted office were devoted earnest Christian men. They might differ in their views on certain points, and some of them might be mistaken, but they were all conscientious men, and lovers of Jesus Christ. At a recent great anti-saloon convention in Columbus, Ohio, many delegates were Christian Endeavourers. They were also throwing their influence into the international efforts now being made on behalf of persecuted peoples in other lands. Another great object of the movement is the advance of world-wide Gospel missions. "The world for Christ" is becoming the motto of Endeavourers everywhere; on this point Dr. Clark has some encouraging facts to relate which greatly interested his hearers. Then he passed on to touch on the idea of promoting a greater fellowship among Christians of different names, as well as fellowship among the nations. As to this latter point a reference to the almost strained relations between Great Britain and America at the opening of the year, and the impossibility of permitting war between two peoples so closely allied, evoked some of the warmest manifestations of the evening. The last point mentioned, and the most important in Dr. Clark's esteem, was the deepening of the individual spiritual life as the supreme object of the C.E. movement. If the individual soul gets into right relations with God, he urged, all else will follow. His closing words of exhortation as to this were deeply solemn and weighty, and formed a worthy finish to an address that must be long remembered. Before closing he alluded to the great Endeavour Convention to be held in London in 1900, when thousands of young Endeavourers would come across the Atlantic, drawn by the name and power of Jesus Christ, whom no mere worldly combination of the most alluring sort could possibly attract.

The enthusiasm and consecrated zeal generated throughout the whole of this truly remarkable meeting must leave its mark on the future course of Christian work in our great city.

St. Luke's Medical Mission.—The new report shows an attendance of 6408 for the past year. Dr. Hingston Fox gives an interesting description of the class of people treated—their poverty, endurance, and gratitude. The nurse's work has been of great assistance: "Many are those who have been helped back to sufficient health to begin again the daily duty of bread-winning, and while the opportunity was given the words were spoken; 'we trust that they may bring forth fruit, even 'after many days.''" The secretary is Mr. G. M. Gillett, 314, Camden-road, N.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, October 4.

"BUT NOW IT IS COME UNTO THEE, AND THOU FAINTEST."—Job iv. 5.

IT is much easier to counsel others in their trouble than to bear it ourselves. Full often the soul, which has poured floods of consolation on others, feels sadly in need of a touch, a voice, a sympathising companion, as the chill waters begin to rise towards the knees, and the shadow of the great eclipse falls around. The fact of our having consoled so many others seems at such a moment to leave us the more solitary and lonesome. People have been so wont to be helped by us that they hardly dare approach us; besides they suppose that all the fund of comfort from which we have succoured others must be now available for us. What can they say that we have not said a hundred times? and if we have said it, of course we must know all about it; but they do not know how wistful the heart is to hear it said to us with the accent of a sympathetic voice and the touch of a ministering hand.

Ah, it will come unto thee at last. The pain and sorrow of life will find thee out. The arrow will at last fix itself quivering in thy heart. How wilt thou do then? Thou wilt faint unless thy words have sprung from a living experience of the love and presence of Jesus. Thou must have a better hope than "the integrity of thy ways," as suggested by Eliphaz. But there awaits thee the personal fellowship of Jesus, a brother born for the hour of trial. Put Him and his will and his choice between thee and it, whatever it may be. Hide thee in his secret place and be at peace.

MONDAY, October 5.

"HE MAKETH SORE, AND BINDETH UP; HE WOUNDETH, AND HIS HANDS MAKE WHOLE."—Job v. 18.

Has this been your experience lately? Have you been made sore by the heavy scourge of pain and wounded by the nails of the cross? Do not look at second causes. Men may have been the instruments, but God is the Agent. The cup has been presented by a Judas, but the Father permitted it, and it is therefore the cup that the Father hath given you to drink. Shall you not drink it? How much He must love you, to dare to inflict this awful discipline, which makes your love and trust, which He values so infinitely, tremble in the scale.

But do not look back on what you have suffered, look on and up. As surely as He has made sore, He will bind up; as soon as He has wounded, his hands will begin to make whole. Consider the reparative processes of nature. So soon as the unsightly ruin or chasm yawns, nature begins to weave her rich festoons, to cover it with moss and lichen; let the flesh be punctured or lacerated, the blood begins to pour out the protoplasmic material to be woven into a new fabric. So when the heart seems bleeding its life away, God is at work binding up and healing. Think of those dear and tender hands, that fashioned the heavens, and touched the eyeballs of the blind, as laid upon you to make you whole. Trust Him, He loves infinitely, and will suffer none that trust in Him to be desolate.

"MY BRETHREN HAVE DEALT DECEITFULLY AS A BROOK, AS THE CHANNEL OF BROOKS THAT PASS AWAY."—Job. vi. 15.

Job complains of his three friends. He was glad when they first came to his side, as likely to yield him comfort in his sore distress. Instead of this, however, they began probing his heart and searching his life, to find the secret sin for the cause of which his heavy troubles had befallen him. Their philosophy was at fault. They held that special misfortune is always the result of special sin; and since there was nothing in Job's outward conduct to account for his awful sufferings, they felt that he was hiding some secret defection: this they urged him to confess. Job felt that in all this they cruelly misunderstood him, and compares them in these words to one of the desert streams that are choked with ice and snow in the time of the winter rains, but dwindle and dry up on the first approach of summer. And when the weary caravans come to their banks, lo, their bed is a mere heap of stones. "They come thither and are confounded."

Is it not so with human friendships? We hoped that they would quench the raging thirst of our souls; this hope increases when they draw nigh us in days of sorrow; but how often they fail us; stones for bread, scorpions for fish, and scorching pebbles instead of water-brooks. How great a contrast to the love and friendship of Jesus! Whoever came to Him to be disappointed? When did men seek Him in trouble, and find Him other than as rivers of water in a dry and thirsty land?

WEDNESDAY, October 7.

"WHAT IS MAN...THAT THOU SHOULDEST VISIT HIM EVERY MORNING."—vii. 18.

God visits us with mercy every morning. Before we are awake He is at work in the world, baptizing it with dew, feeding the birds and wild things, taking pleasure in the jasmine and heliotrope, the honeysuckle, and the rose; and with all his care for his world, He does not forget man, whom He has placed there to be its tenant. There is no life so mean and abject, so suffering and wretched, that He does not visit in order to comfort and relieve it. No heart so forlorn that He does not knock at the door: no window so selfishly curtained and shuttered, at which He does not tap. "Open to me!" the heavenly visitor entreats, "my love, my dove, my spouse!" Alas for us! that we keep the doors and windows closed to Him, as the poor widow to a beneficent friend, who called to relieve her, but she mistook him for the rent-collector.

But probably Job meant that God visits us in discipline, training, education. He is the watcher of men, not to detect their failures, but to discover opportunities of leading them on with richer, fuller experiences of his grace and life. How much time and thought the good God expends on us! Surely we may, with the patriarch, cry, "What is man." Man is more than we guess, else God would never take such time and pains with him. When a lapidary spends years over a single diamond, the most careless observer begins to appraise properly its intrinsic value.

THURSDAY, October 8.

"IF THOU WERT PURE AND UPRIGHT, SURELY NOW HE WOULD AWAKE FOR THEE."—Job. viii. 6.

So Bildad spoke, suggesting that Job was not pure and upright, since God did not appear to deliver him. The premises from which he argued were that God always delivers and prospers pure and upright men, and that therefore, if a man is not delivered and prospered, he is proved to be neither pure nor upright. The fallacy lay in the premiss. It is not universally true that God delivers his saints and prospers them with outward good. There have been in all ages thousands of devoted servants of God who have been destitute, afflicted, and tormented; and there are thousands of such to day in prisons, in hospital wards, in every condition of privation and trial; but in none of these cases can there be the least imputation on the love and righteousness of God, nor necessarily on their fidelity and goodness.

God's arrangements for us are not governed by the superficial philosophy which would make material prosperity a sign of his favour, and adversity of his displeasure. There are many considerations beside. Our privations in the outward strengthen and ripen the inward. As the outward man decays, the inward is renewed day by day. We have to learn and manifest those passive virtues which can only mature in silence and sorrow. We must be taught to be largely independent of circumstances; and to find in God Himself the springs of unfailing supply. We must learn to carry the sentence of death in ourselves, that we may not trust in ourselves, but in the living God. All these things worketh God with us to make us partakers of his holiness.

FRIDAY, October 9.

"IF I WASH MYSELF WITH SNOW WATER, AND MAKE MY HANDS NEVER SO CLEAN, YET WILT THOU PLUNGE ME IN THE DITCH, AND MINE OWN CLOTHES SHALL ABHOR ME."—Job ix. 30-31.

We shall never get beyond the need of using daily the Lord's Prayer. He has bound by the conjunction and the prayer for forgiveness with that for daily bread, as though to teach us that we shall need the one as long as we need the other. At the end of the best day that we ever spent, when we are not aware of having consciously sinned in act, or speech, or thought, we shall still have need of the precious blood. We may know nothing against ourselves, yet we shall not be thereby justified, because He that judgeth us is our holy Lord, and the standard by which we are judged is his own perfect character. A piece of cambric looks extremely fine to the eye, but how coarse to the microscope. Sheep look white against the dark ground of the early spring, but how dark if there should be a fall of snow; and our characters seem stainless, only because we compare ourselves with ourselves, or with others.

But, when our eyes are opened to see God, to behold the whiteness of the great white throne, and we stand in the searching light of heaven, we are as those who have just emerged from a ditch. I heard the other day of a woman being proud of having lived without sin for ten years. So we deceive ourselves. No, at the best we are sinful men and women, needing constant cleansing, and yet we may be kept from known sin by the grace of Christ.

SATURDAY, October 10.

"BEFORE I GO WHENCE I SHALL NOT RETURN, EVEN TO THE LAND OF DARKNESS AND OF THE SHADOW OF DEATH."—Job x. 21.

This represented the highest thinking of that age about the future. There were gleams now and again of something more, but they were fitful and uncertain, soon overtaken by dark and sad forebodings. How different to our happy condition, for whom death is abolished, whilst life and immortality have been brought to light! The patriarch called the present life Day, and the future Night. We know that in comparison the present is Night and the future Day. "The night is far spent, the day is at hand, let us put on the armour of light."

For us, too, there is something better. We wait for his Son from heaven; we look for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ. "As the waters of the sea are held between two mighty gravitations, the moon now drawing them towards itself, and the earth drawing them back again, thus giving the ebbing and flowing tide, by which our earth is kept clean and healthful, so must the tides of the soul's affection move perpetually between the cross of Christ and the coming of Christ, influenced now by the power of memory and now by the power of hope." It is said of the late Dr. Gordon: "Hardly a sermon was preached without allusion to the glorious appearing. Never a day passed in which he did not prepare himself for it, in which its hastening was not sought for with prayer." "Yet a little while (Greek, how little! how little!) and He that shall come will come."

African Institute, Colwyn Bay.—A friend now at Colwyn Bay, and who has been deeply interested in Mr. Hughes's African scheme, surprised him last week with a gift of £400, to add a wing to the building, which is wanted immediately.

An Ever-Open Door.

THERE was once an ancient city which had only one gate. All round the city was a high, thick wall, and in this wall there was but one door. So that if anyone wished to enter the city he must go in by that door or remain outside. It is the same with the Kingdom of Heaven. There is only one Door, and that Door is Jesus. If you want to get into the way of salvation which leads to heaven you must go in through Jesus, the Door. What does Jesus call those men and women who try to get to heaven by some other way? He calls them "thieves and robbers." If you were to see a man trying to get into your house through a back window, you would think he was a thief, would you not? Naturally. If he had any business in the house, he would go in at the door like ordinary folk, would he not? But some people do not want to get to heaven through Jesus, the door. So they try all sorts of other ways. They make ladders of all their good resolutions and serious thoughts, their prayers and their knowledge of Scripture. With these long ladders they try to get over the wall. But it will not do. Jesus will not own them as his followers. He will give them the name which best suits them; He will call them "thieves and robbers."

If you have read that wonderful book "The Pilgrim's Progress" (and if you have not I hope you will read it as soon as possible) you will remember how Christian saw two men, named Formalist and Hypocrisy, come tumbling over the wall into the narrow way that led to the Celestial City. When Christian asked them why they had not come in at the gate, they said it was too far from their city, and they preferred to make a short cut. They also said, "If we get into the way, what matter is it how we get in? If we are in, we are in; thou art but in the way, who came in at the gate; and we also are in the way, that came tumbling over the wall: wherein now is thy condition better than ours?"

Then Christian answered: "I walk by the rule of my Master; you walk by your own fancies. You are counted thieves already by the Lord of the way. You come in by yourselves, without his direction, and you shall go out by yourselves, without his mercy." A little farther on in John Bunyan's story we find that these two men soon went out of the way—one went on the road called Danger, and the other chose the path marked Destruction, and they were both lost. Take care, dear children, that you do not make this mistake. Never believe that prayers will save you, or that reading the Bible will take you to heaven. Ladders will not do; you must go in at the door.

It is a strange thing that so many people do object to go in at the door! One would think that this door must be very difficult to open. Is it so? Oh, no! Listen to what Jesus says, "Knock, and it shall be opened to you"! What could be easier? Even the tiniest child can knock at a door. And this door will open to the tiniest child who knocks. Then why is it that so many men, women, and children refuse to go and knock? I will tell you. They are too proud to ask Jesus to let them in. They would rather go in by themselves. They are not willing to humble themselves, and without humility Jesus tells us we cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven. You will not let pride keep you outside, will you? There is danger outside. What danger? If a wild beast were coming down the street, you would run into the first open door you could find, would you not? Well, in one of his epistles Peter tells us that "Satan goeth about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." He is a fierce enemy, worse than any wild beast, because he is seeking to destroy our souls. There is one door of safety open to you, children, and only one! Jesus is that door. If you knock He will open, and if you ask to be let in, He will answer, as He did to Christian, "I am willing with all my heart!" Then may you run in and be safe for evermore.

Danger outside the door, and safety inside. On which side will you be? GRACE WINTER.

A New Quarter.

Let every child try and get as many "Searchers" as possible right, so as to be able to compete for the next

PRIZE COMPETITION IN DECEMBER.

To be eligible every child must have been correct nine times during the twelve weeks.

No concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary.

A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly.

Answers to these competitions are acknowledged in two lists:—

1. Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue. 2. Those received later, in the one following.

But no answers can be dealt with which are received later than the Thursday morning following the issue in which the competition appears.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 39).

For children over twelve.

A — I — you — ye — one —

Take one word from each of the following texts to fill up the blanks above. The whole forms a text in St. John's Gospel. Give chapter and verse of each.

"Neither do men put new wine into old bottles."
"Thy commandment is exceeding broad."
"My son, give Me thine heart."
"Let my cry come unto Thee."
"Every one that asketh receiveth, and he that seeketh findeth."
"Perfect love casteth out fear."
"Confess your faults one to another."

For children under twelve.

Those under eight, answer four only. Answers to be written in pencil:—

PSALM CV.

1. Whose feet were hurt with fetters?
2. What did he afterwards become?
3. When was Egypt glad?
4. What did God give the Israelites to eat in the wilderness? and how did He protect them?
5. What was the name of the rock God opened?
6. What did Moses call the place, and why?

Personal.

Many thanks for the flowers, some of which were sent to the Flower Mission, and the following was received in reply: "Please convey our warm thanks to the dear children who have sent the flowers for our poor sick people; they are always most acceptable." The others were sent to The Children's Hospital, Great Ormond-street. HARRY AND BRUCE MALAHER.—A star is given for neatness and for extra care taken in answering the questions. P. S. LEIGH.—I am very glad you have been so successful, and hope you will be as fortunate next time. It is a very good beginning. EMILY AND EDITH HEARN.—Do not write your answers on the same paper, or probably one will be overlooked. MARY FREEMAN.—The age for the prize competition is under eighteen years, but you can answer the "Bible Searcher," even if you are older. EVELYN AND DOROTHY HEWER.—I shall be very pleased to send the album and shells to a hospital when they are ready. You need not have answered so many questions last week. Read the instructions carefully each time. GWEN OGILVY.—It is not necessary to write out verses in full, if the questions can be answered without, as in the cases you mention. But when the question is to write out a text, it must be done fully, without any alteration. ISABEL PURPIS.—Thank you for the album, which will give great pleasure to many poor children. It is to be sent to the Children's Hospital, Great Ormond-street. BELLA MACK.—I am forwarding the knitted socks you sent me to Dr. Barnardo's Boys. GWEN SHAW.—Thank you for your interesting letter. You must have had a splendid holiday. NELLIE CANE.—I hope you will send regularly now. FREDDA WATTS AND CECIL LOWE.—Thank you for your letters. I am glad you mean to persevere in answering each week. EMMA MATTHEWS.—I was very sorry to hear of Ernest Holmes's accident. It is a pity he could not get some one to write out the answers for him, but I hope he will soon get better. J. A. FIELD.—I will see what I can do, but I do not think I have many "nephews and nieces" over fifteen.

A. B. C. Texts for Little Children.—E.

Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure and whether it be right (Prov. xx. 11).

Any little boy or girl may understand this text. They know what sort of a child it is that says bad words, and tells lies, and goes into passions, and is rude and wild. And they know that there was only one little child quite pure and good.

Dear children, there was once on earth

A little Child, who from his birth

No sinful passion ever knew,

Nor said a word that was not true,

Nor wished for aught that He had not,

Nor cried for more than He had got.

His name was ———? Try to be as like Him as ever you can.

Psalm XLVI.

(New Metrical Version.)

A REFUGE for us and a Stronghold is God—

A Help to endure it when under his rod.

We therefore will not be o'erwhelmed with fear,
Though the earth should beneath us in motion appear—

Though the mountains around us should lifted up be,
And deposited deep in the heart of the sea;
Though the waters thereof troublous roaring should make,

And the waves of the sea cause the mountains to shake.

A river there is that God's city runs nigh,
And gladdens the Holy Place of the Most High.
With God in her midst Zion ne'er shall be moved;
He surely will help her He ever hath loved.
The nations raged wildly; kings joined in the fray;
God uttered his voice: the earth melted away!
The Lord of Hosts dwelleth amongst us in power—
Yea, Israel's God is our Refuge and Tower!

Behold! on our side how Jehovah hath fought,
And what desolations on earth He hath wrought!
He wars to the ends of the earth to cease makes:
The bows and the spears of our foemen He breaks,
And burns their war-chariots—all for our sakes!
Be still, then, and know that God only is He;
Throughout the whole earth He exalted shall be.
All nations his greatness and glory shall see!
Jehovah of Hosts dwells amongst us in power;
Yea, Israel's God is our Refuge and Tower!

Pastor Chiniquy in England.

A MEETING of sympathisers and friends was held at the National Club, Whitehall, on Wednesday afternoon last week, under the auspices of the Protestant Alliance, to welcome, on a visit to these shores, Pastor Chiniquy, whose services in the Protestant cause in Canada are well known by our readers.

Mr. T. A. DENNY occupied the chair, and after a prayer by Canon McCormick, he referred to having presided for Pastor Chiniquy many years ago in Exeter Hall, when the meeting proved a somewhat stormy one, owing to the presence of an opposing element in its midst. He maintained that the cause of Protestantism was by no means dead, and that, despite the progress of Romanism in some quarters, it would be a large undertaking to kill the Protestants to be found in this country. He deprecated the false charity which was only manifested on one side, and instanced the recent declaration of the Pope as to the "invalidity" of Anglican orders as showing that the demand of Rome is "all or nothing."

Mr. A. H. GUINNESS, the secretary of the Alliance, read a long list of influential names in clerical, military, and other circles, of those who sympathised with the object of the meeting, but were prevented from being present.

Pastor CHINIQUY then followed with a stirring address. Although in his eighty-seventh year, he seems hale, hearty, and vigorous as ever, and certainly seemed to earn the chairman's description of him as "A great champion of a great cause, fighting the battle of freedom, of truth, and of God." "I do not come," he said, "as a learned man or as a teacher, for there are very many better able to occupy such a position than I; but I come from Canada at the request of many English friends to do what I can to open the eyes of the English people to the dangers to which they appear to be drifting. Not long ago, in the United States, a train heavily laden with passengers was proceeding at full speed towards a bridge which had just collapsed. A man who had seen the disaster ran back and stopped the train. I am like that man, and my desire is to do something to prevent this country from committing itself to the broken bridge of Romanism. For twenty-five years I was a priest in that Church, and honestly desired to serve God. It is a mistake to suppose that all Roman Catholics are not honest. Many of them are thoroughly so, though they are mistaken, and, having been brought up in that system, seem to require almost a miracle to open their eyes to their true position. During my stay amongst you I hope to have the opportunity of addressing meetings in many parts of the country. It is not my desire to abuse Roman Catholics, for I have known many noble and honest hearts amongst them, but our duty is to give the truth to those who know it not. I am sorry to find, so far as my observation goes, that Protestants are too silent, and thus lose many converts who might be won if as Christians they had more zeal. You are too much on the defensive. Do you fear the future? Christ is in the boat, though the tempest is raging, and though the machinery of the Romish Church may be powerful, yet 'the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong,' but the side on which God is will have the victory."

He made a graceful allusion to the Queen as being, in a sense, the grandmother of two of the greatest kings of Europe; and inasmuch as England is, figuratively, the mother of the Queen, he maintained that this country should rise to a position higher than that to which Her Majesty has attained. He believed that a great future lay before the British Empire if only the people of God were true to themselves and loyal to Christ. He himself had been the first on the continent of America to give deadly blows to Rome in Canada and the States, and he found that there were only three weapons that could be used effectually against her: First, prayer, in the spirit of love, for all those who were bound by the fetters of the priesthood; second, the spread of literature, and itinerating agents, to make known in all places her true character; third, a good example and holy walk, so that the Roman Catholics may not have reason to say, "Why should we leave our church to join people who are living no better lives than ourselves?" This third point the speaker emphasised in detail, in a very earnest and practical strain by urging, among other things, total abstinence from alcoholic drinks, in view of the terrible havoc which they are making in the ranks of Protestants and Romanists alike, in England, America, and in other lands.

Mr. Guinness then announced that arrangements had been made for Pastor Chiniquy to address meetings every day until December 1. Friends who are able to arrange such gatherings, or desire to aid such work in any way, are invited to address Mr. Guinness or Pastor Chiniquy, c.o. the Protestant Alliance, 430, Strand, London, W.C.

PASTOR CHINIQUY.

Tremont Temple, Boston.

The preaching of Rev. John Robertson, of Glasgow, has so stirred the multitudes that thousands have been turned away from the Temple doors, unable to gain admittance, because the audience room, one of the largest in America, has been overcrowded. Mr. Robertson is holding services twice daily, and, in the midst of great political excitement preceding the Presidential election, is seeing his messages confirmed by the Holy Ghost.

We desire to have the work so well begun become deep and widespread, until all our land shall come under its influence, and waves of grace sweep over to your own fair shores. Will not your readers in their prayers remember the work of Mr. Robertson at Tremont Temple, so that it may become of international importance? HORACE F. BARNES, Associate Pastor.

Boston, U.S.A.

Punjab Villages.—During the last cold season Mr. R. Venables Greene, of the Punjab Mission, with his party of six native Christians, visited some 200 villages, preaching the Gospel and performing numerous ophthalmic operations. At one centre they were accommodated by the village Zaildar, or chief, who invited them to put up their tent in his yard, and placed a building at their disposal for operations. The necessity of taking a supply not only of medicines, but also of bottles, was brought home to them. In one instance a poor woman produced as a receptacle for eye-drops—the best she could find—a blacking-box, and that not quite empty!

Christian Police Association.

THE autumnal conference of this Association was held last week in Sheffield. On Monday afternoon a welcome meeting was held, when the Vicar of Sheffield offered the Association a very hearty welcome; and he did so in the name of all Christian friends in the city. There were many warm hearts in Sheffield; he had not been there very long, but he had been there long enough to find how warm were their hearts, and how firm and gripping their hands, and so he could really say from what he knew of them that the Christian people of Sheffield would give the Association a very hearty welcome, and would feel a very deep interest in all that went on at their Conference.

Mr. J. H. Barber also welcomed the Association to Sheffield in a few cordial words. Few men had more onerous and responsible duties than the men in blue. There needed so much of coolness and so much of gentleness and so much of forbearance to prevent great difficulties arising; and he need not tell them that it was not the man who brought out his staff and knocked somebody down on the slightest provocation who made himself really respected and kept the peace of the town. Policemen needed qualities not only of courage, but also of forbearance and consideration, and he felt that qualities of that kind were best promoted by Christian principles and Christian endeavour.

The evening meeting was numerously attended. In addition to the members and supporters of the Association, many members of the various religious denominations of the city were present. The proceedings were mainly of a devotional character, the first hour being occupied by alternate prayers and personal testimony by converted policemen, and the addresses were spiritual throughout.

Rev. G. C. Grubb said that the sight of the Lord Jesus Christ in the heart was the remedy for every sin, for every sorrow, for every temptation, and for every difficulty. It was the only thing that would pluck man's feet out of the nets of Satan, which were always lying for them. The whole secret of the Christian's life was nothing more nor less than to learn how to have the eyes ever towards Christ.

The second day was largely devoted to prayer and conference on matters connected with the work. Amongst others addresses, were given by Mr. W. K. Campbell and Mr. E. C. Millard.

At the afternoon sitting Miss C. Gurney, hon. secretary of the Association, gave an account of the Police Missionary Union, a branch of the Association, supported by the force, which sends out missionaries to the police of foreign countries, including Japan, China, India, and Ceylon. At the invitation of the Association, a large number of the city policemen and their wives attended tea, which was followed by a public meeting in the evening. Dr. Stoney presided, and an address was given by Rev. G. C. Grubb.

The Goud Famine.—In a letter from the Rev. Eustace D. Price, C.M.S. missionary, Mandla, Central Provinces, India, dated Aug. 30, he says:—"The famine is in Mandla also. I saw skeletons in the compound—fearful objects. We are having deaths in our compound daily. They come to us too late to be saved. We are feeding some fifty families daily at Marpha and some forty individuals here. We need help for these poor people, who are starving from the failure of their crops through the drought."

Dorking Convention, October 19 to 23.—Rev. H. C. Sturdy, Vicar of St. Paul's, Dorking, says in his letter of invitation:—"The Convention will commence on Monday, October 19, at 8 p.m., when a special sermon will be preached by Rev. T. W. Jacob, Vicar of Shirley. It is not our custom to choose any set subjects, but rather to trust the Spirit of God to direct each speaker as He wills. We have found a wonderful sequence of thought and guidance as to the messages which we have had in former years, and our attitude is, 'I will hear what God the Lord will speak, for He will speak peace unto his people and to his saints; but let them not turn again to folly' (Psalm lxxv. 8). I entreat all who come especially to remember the main object of our Convention. It is not to hear addresses, or to receive instruction in the Word of God only; but it is to wait upon God Himself, it is to seek from Him, and through his messengers, that special teaching which everyone needs, whether of reproof, encouragement, warning, or exhortation."

M. Henri Pierson, ZETTEN, HOLLAND.

THIS esteemed Christian philanthropist was born at Amsterdam in 1834. While he was a child, his parents came under the influence of a great revival of religion which broke up the prevalent formalism. They were associated with earnest believers and devoted workers in the kingdom of Christ. One of the best friends of the zealous Pastor Heldring, of Zetten, was the father of M. Pierson, the Amsterdam merchant. The faith of M. Pierson, born in the warmth of a consecrated Christian home, had to undergo a fight with the rationalism which in his young manhood attacked the Scriptures and rejected the greater portion of them.

He graduated at Utrecht University, and in 1857 accepted the charge of the Protestant church at Heinenoord, a village of about 1200 souls, near Rotterdam. Among these staunch Calvinists he laboured for about twelve years. His next place of labour was at Bois-le-Duc, where the population, 25,000, is nine-tenths Roman Catholic, and the Protestant church is small and poor. Here he won the name of a good shepherd. His house was a refuge for the poor and sorrowful. His voice was often raised in defence of those who were persecuted and oppressed. Not a few Romanists, in search of a purer faith, found in him a friend and guide, as well as a comforter in times of affliction.

His literary lectures delivered at Bois-le-Duc gave him a hold upon the public mind. His delight in poetry, especially that which is imbued with love of the Gospel, is great, and by lectures he found a way of access to many minds. When, however, he left this his second charge, his name as a good and useful pastor was above everything else; other things were only helps to the chief work.

When M. Pierson was a boy he had often stayed at Hemmen, a small village near Zetten, where M. Heldring was the minister of the parish, and where he carried on a great work among sinning women and girls who were friendless and exposed to temptation. He had four kinds of institutions, and a chapel in the midst of them. M. Pierson's father had been a liberal helper of this divine work, the difficulties and trials of which were well known to the son. Nothing but the sense of duty to his Saviour was present to his mind and the mind of his wife, when they decided to undertake their arduous task. The place was a remote part of the country where the minister could have no intercourse with his equals, and where he could not find suitable schools for his children, two daughters and four sons.

The second worker in social and religious reform at Zetten was well fitted to follow the first. M. Heldring, it has been said by a friendly observer, "laid the foundation-stones; M. Pierson is building on them. The former gathered around him the helpless, the erring, the lost women and children of his people; softened the hearts of the rich and powerful; and fixed their attention on the needs and wants of the children of the poor. M. Pierson addressed himself not only to the powerful and influential men of the nation, but to the people in the first place, summoning them not only to succour the fallen, but to undertake the strife against sin itself. The task of M. Heldring was to soften the heart of his people, that of M. Pierson was to make it strong." He was about to enter by an unknown road upon a task which is essentially the task of all the religious reformers of the free Protestant nations of this age—that, namely, of cutting up the roots of sin so far as they are fastened in national customs and laws which may be changed or abolished by the action of the people themselves.

When he took charge of M. Heldring's parish and institutions—one of which it ought to be said is a large school for girls of the better class, more especially clergymen's daughters of from fourteen to eighteen years of age, who desire to be trained as governesses or teachers, but whose parents cannot afford the expensive private schools, and yet would not send them to the neutral or secular schools of the State—he added two more homes; one a school in which to prepare girls for their examinations, the other an asylum for unmarried mothers and their children. Each of these institutions is in the charge of a lady from whom M. Pierson does not exact a hard obedience, but by whom he likes to be consulted—the best, and indeed the only possible method when you get the best workers. He and Mrs. Pierson "live in the midst of the lady-helps like a dearly beloved father and mother surrounded by grown-up children, not interfering, but ever ready to help and comfort."

M. Pierson preaches twice on Sundays; he also gives much of his time to religious instruction in his homes, preferring this method of work to the method of private conversation, a thing which he wisely leaves to the different directresses at the head of each institution. Being fond of singing and of telling stories, he goes every fortnight or every week, as the case may be, to certain of the homes or schools to sing and to play the harmonium, and tell the young people something useful and pleasant. Exclusion from these entertainments is a punishment few will risk.

As long ago as 1852 good Pastor Heldring and a friend published an anonymous pamphlet in which they condemned every method of regulating the social evil. "He felt instinctively that there was something rotten in the State which allowed the introduction of such measures," and as soon as he heard of Mrs. Josephine Butler's efforts to obtain the abolition of regulation in every land where it existed, "he took note of it, and expressed his hope that a new era was approaching." That pamphlet lay for some years in a bookseller's garret, when it fell into M. Pierson's hands, and proved of great service in correcting those mistaken friends who, when M. Pierson joined the crusade against regulation, blamed him for political action, a thing of which they believed his predecessor would never have been guilty. The pamphlet showed that that was just what his predecessor would have done.

It was in 1877, a year after Heldring's death, that M. Pierson attended the Conference in Geneva in favour of abolition of State regulation of vice, and came home with the persuasion that the subject was a much more important one than he had imagined. He immediately felt two things, he says: "first, that we had been made dupes of a false and stupid medical science, so-called; and, second, that our question was 'the tendon of the heel of Achilles' of the whole matter of moral reform. These two points fitted in precisely with my state of mind; for I hate the humbug of would-be scientific men (I have seen too much of it), and I enjoy dealing with a question which involves a great many other questions, and which may be said to be a touchstone to try the minds of men."

M. Pierson needed no converting, only firing; and that was effected by the Geneva Conference. In August, 1877, he straightway began his missionary work by preaching in the cathedral of Amsterdam. Some doubted the propriety of such a theme in such a place, but altered their view. He has also preached on the same subject in the cathedral of Rotterdam to as many as 5000 persons. In meetings for men only he brings home to them their duty on this vital question. At first he thought it was pressed forward on purely humanitarian grounds, but when he saw that it was urged by the English leaders on Christian principles he gave the movement his strongest support. He rightly holds that in Christian countries "Christians are responsible for the spirit in which the laws are made." He was chosen last week at Berne as the new President of the British, Continental and General Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice.

Famine in Swaziland.

In response to a communication sent to THE CHRISTIAN some weeks ago friends interested in the Swazies have sent contributions to help the natives in their great extremity.

Miss Harris, of the South Africa General Mission, writes:—"Down below the natives have sown mealies again, and they were about three inches high above the ground when the locusts came again in myriads and destroyed every blade. One cannot but feel intense pity for the people.

"The other day we went to our kraal, as we call it, and inside our enclosure we saw eight women and a man sitting on the ground in the most dejected attitude. We could scarcely get a word out of them. They said they had come up from below, looking for food. Our kraal has food, but not enough to supply all comers.

"I tried to have a little talk with them, but they were all too dejected, tired, and hungry to listen. So then I told them if they all came to the house before starting in the morning they should receive a little sugar. We could not, however, resist their hungry looks, and when they arrived in the morning, not having broken their fast, a good potful of mealie meal soon put life and smiles into them, and then they listened as we told them of Jesus and his love. I wish you could have seen the change in their looks before and after food. It would have done your heart good.

"Misses Gabb and Carmichael are now on their way to Hebron to assist us. We hope to gather the bairnies of the starving people in our school. We feel sure God is working. Mr. and Mrs. Searle are having much blessing in their work, and the dead city of Maritzburg seems awaking."

Salisbury Conference.

THE twenty-second assembly of this Conference, in many respects unique, took place last week. It maintains more of the character of conference than many of the annual conventions, and the strongly marked, versatile, energetic, and genial personality of the convener, Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, rector of Fisherton, gives tone to all the proceedings. The well-chosen subjects for consideration at the principal meetings were Communion with God, Obedience to God, Consecration to God. The addresses generally were worthy of their theme. We regret that our space does not enable us to give at least a summary of them. The speakers were Revs. R. Middleton, R. Graves Walker, J. Hudson Taylor, J. Wilkinson, J. J. Luce, &c.

In his opening address of welcome, after a devotional service of much fervour, Mr. Thwaites referred with intense interest to the great mission field, and especially to India, whither he is going, for the second time, to spend the winter months.

While we cannot report the addresses, we note other features of the conference.

Prayer meetings at seven and ten a.m., at the latter of which Mr. Thwaites gave each day a brief expository or hortatory talk of eight or ten minutes. At one of these he summarised the prayer of Jabez as seeking Divine blessing, Divine enlargement, Divine power, Divine keeping, with a pungent, present, personal application.

In the first afternoon Dr. BARNARDO told the story of his well-known work with many telling illustrations of the good effected amongst waifs and strays of the honest and respectable poor, as well as amongst the vicious, the criminal, and the lazy, and the steps which had been taken to reclaim them. The story of Judy will never be forgotten by those who heard it. On the second afternoon Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR told the ever-fresh and thrilling story of the China Inland Mission. Rev. J. WILKINSON also had an opportunity of urging upon his interested audience what he believed to be the unabrogated command, "To the Jew first."

The Maundrel Hall was well filled on Thursday afternoon for the missionary meeting, and the interest manifested was very lively. The first speaker was Mr. W. R. MILLER, of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union. He said they had already been greatly encouraged. There were 1168 Volunteers, coming from ninety-three colleges, and 232 were now in the field. Doors were opened wide, and it was for them to walk in.

Miss HUNT, of the C.E.Z.M.S., Calcutta, emphasised the remarks of the preceding speaker in regard to open doors. In Calcutta there were many openings for work among nominal Christians, Eurasians, and in the colleges and schools. An important part of their work was the training of native girls for school teachers, and of others for Bible-women. Miss Hunt gave some deeply interesting accounts of the conversion of Hindu women to Christ, and appealed for help to provide teaching for these converts, so that they might become missionaries to their fellow-countrywomen.

Bishop TUGWELL, of West Equatorial Africa, gave the concluding address. He alluded feelingly to the great sorrows and trials the Mission had more recently experienced in the deaths of Mr. Watney, Miss Goodall, and Mr. Smith, of Salisbury, and of Mr. Ormerod, who was not allowed to carry out his cherished purpose. The Bishop rapidly sketched the chief features of the work in which he is engaged, and made a powerful appeal for men for workers in the Yoruba country. They were in a deplorable condition, and he earnestly pleaded for reinforcements.

The visitors and some of their hosts and hostesses lunch together, and give, before they separate, a number of five-minute testimonies as to Christian work at home and abroad.

Mrs. THWAITES spoke of the importance of woman's work in connection with missions. Last year her husband had asked all who were desirous of engaging in the missionary work of the time to stand up, by way of expressing their readiness to go forth should the way be opened for them. Among those who responded was a young woman, a domestic who had risen, and candidly said that salary was no object to her, and that she only desired to serve her Lord in the foreign field. Tidings had since reached them that she was doing good service in India, and it was to be hoped her example would stimulate others to present themselves for this greatly-needed work.

Mr. LENG had an earnest word to say on behalf of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, whose readers were making the Gospel known from house to house, and cabin to cabin. Success had attended the efforts of the Irish-speaking readers, and of the itinerants who went through the length and breadth of the land, scattering the good seed. Their work was entirely undenominational, and the Divine blessing had largely rested on it. The people of Ireland were beginning to do their own thinking, and that doors were open for God's Word which had long been closed against it.

Rev. NORMAN BENNETT spoke cordially of "camp" work and the good done among boys who had come under its influence. The result had been of the most striking character, for boys had gone back to their respective schools ready to work for Christ with youthful earnestness. It was a work he thought which should prove more and more interesting to Christian people, and one which should elicit their best co-operation.

Mr. MACKENZIE, of the Monthly Tract Society, gave some very pleasing instances of the blessing which had flowed from the visits of these silent messengers to so many homes throughout the kingdom. One little tract had been made useful to a domestic servant, then to her mistress, and eventually to a clergyman whose ministry the latter attended.

Mr. KING, a delegate from a seaside home at Brighton, gave an excellent account of the good work going on there.

A company similarly composed met for tea, after which brief words of exposition or experience were spoken, one or two speakers being named, others following spontaneously.

Dr. BARNARDO, in a very practical, pleasant, and edifying way, opened up Mary's anointing of the Lord with her costly ointment. When sitting at Jesus's feet, and hearing his word, she had learned, as none else had learned, the exodus of her Lord through death unto resurrection life, which had also been the theme of conversation on the Transfiguration Mount.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR spoke of the love put into little things as pleasing God—much in the spirit of George Herbert—

Who sweeps a room but for his cause
Makes that and the action fine.

Rev. R. MIDDLETON told some touching stories of the munificent giving of the very poor. An old woman receiving parish relief of 2s. weekly, and paying 9d. for rent, gave the only thing she had, a shawl, sent by her son from India, which realised 10s. A boy gave 4d., saved by foregoing sugar and butter; he was very glad to give it, he said, but thankful when self-denial week was over. A housemaid brought £2, twenty per cent. of her year's wages. The extreme devotion of his people had, he said, affected their minister to tears. He added that a young lady had gone out as a missionary, and the working men of his congregation volunteered 6d. a week each, and undertook to provide her salary.

Mrs. BALE, of Bath, told of a miller abroad, who, on his conversion, determined to obey all God's commandments. Coming to the fourth, he remembered that Sunday was his business day. But he said, "I'll obey." The people said he'd be ruined. But there came a drought. All the streams were dried except that which turned this miller's wheel.

Rev. A. HAMILTON, Bath, urged the duty of intercession, from 1 John v. 15, in observing which we may be an unspeakable help to one another. We may take life for an erring brother, and for our unsaved relatives and friends. Dr. Pierson tells of two journalists in London, of whom one went to sleep while the other was absent, so that the latter could not get in. Failing to awake his fellow, he telegraphed to headquarters in Edinburgh to ring him up, and thus quickly gained admittance. By way of the throne we must speedily and effectively influence sleeping or dead souls.

Rev. J. WILKINSON said the question, "What is man whose breath is in his nostrils?" should rather be, "In whose nostrils is a breath." There is no more. Among many other pithy sayings, were these—"It is better to love a brother into the right, than scold him out of the wrong." "An act repeated produces a habit; a habit continued forms character, and character decides destiny."

Miss PERKS, of Winchester, said that on the following day she and her helpers would be on a troopship carrying 2000 men. They would mail 700 letters that week to soldiers and sailors in all parts of the world—15,000 letters during the season—11,000 invalided men. How few know where any regiment or any war vessel is stationed, though we are all indebted to our redcoats and bluejackets. How important that friends should help in work among them.

Rev. Mr. HUGHES represented the Irish Church Missions, of which he told some touching incidents and invited friends going to Dublin by all means to visit the Sabbath services in Townsend-street. He told of one man in the hospital, on account of his wife throwing hot cocoa over him because he went to the Protestant meetings.

Miss OLIVE, of the C.P.A. Deaconess' Home, Bristol, sought to win children to Christ. She had heard two little girls of eleven and nine talking, and on her speaking to them, the elder said, "Both Ethy and I have given ourselves to missionary work. I did it a long time ago."

Mr. JAS. RIGSON, C.S.S.M., believed that the present prevalent missionary feeling was greatly promoted by reading God's Word. In connection with the Scripture Union, Mr. Fox, Secretary of C.M.S., found that many missionary candidates had been led to Christ at seaside gatherings, and then became interested in missions through their Bible reading.

Lady DODSWORTH thanked God that the Master was coming speedily. Unconnected with any special agency, she asked, How are the agencies to do their special work except we help them? If you are not a gleaner nor a member of a sowing band of a Children's Scripture Union, go and join one, and if there is none in your town start one. Do you want a warmer climate? In Egypt, Palestine, India, Africa, how missionaries need co-operation! How a personal visit would encourage them! We are his witnesses—one hand for home missions and one for foreign.

Of the secondary meetings, we might say of the whole Conference nothing was more important than the four meetings of the school children—elder and junior boys and girls. They were held morning and evening, Rev. Norman Bennett taking the elder boys, and Mr. Monro Collings the elder girls. Real good work was done, of which we hope to hear in time to come.

The Gospel in Ireland.

ADVANCES IN OPEN-AIR WORK.

WE have been accustomed in the past to call Ireland "the distressful country"; and not without cause. For generations past it has been the cockpit of rival politicians, and the stronghold of a semi-Christianised paganism. Add to this, that it has suffered intensely from the injustice of absentee landlordism, and the distress of many kinds will be apparent. Into the purely political arena we do not venture; the social question seems to be slowly solving itself. The religious outlook is, in some respects, brighter to-day than it has yet been in our time. Here, for instance, is a portentous and cheering fact, culled from the latest report of the "Open-Air Mission for Ireland":—

The rapid multiplication of open-air meetings in this country within the past few years is an evidence of the guiding of the Holy Spirit. Ten years ago street-preaching was unknown in Ireland, south of Portadown, and was believed to be impossible. Now the Gospel is preached every week in the streets of Dublin, Williamstown, Blackrock, Kingstown, Arklow, Cork, Galway, Athlone, Tullamore, Portarlington, and Sligo; and during the summer months at Killee Howth, Bray, and Greystones.

To those who recollect the severe struggles not so long ago that marked the early efforts at street-preaching in Arklow and Cork, this advance will indicate clearly the guiding and over-ruling hand of God. The presence in London of Mr. T. A. Coghlan, assistant organising secretary of the Open-Air Mission for Ireland, has afforded an opportunity for some most interesting conversation with him as to the past progress and the present aspects of this hazardous enterprise. One soon discovers in Mr. Coghlan many of the qualities that are so essential to successful pioneer effort in Ireland—pity for his countrymen so long and sedulously kept in spiritual darkness by their so-called religious guides; unflinching courage in the exercise of natural and undoubted right; willingness to face danger and endure hardship for Christ and the Gospel's sake; and last, but not least, the grace of humour with which all our Irish friends are so liberally endowed.

One of the first questions put to Mr. Coghlan was as to the source of the bitter opposition to the society's operations. The answer was a most reassuring one. "By simply reading the published accounts one would think that the whole country is up in arms against the Gospel. The fact is that the opposition has come entirely from a section of the baser sort of the people, organised by the priests. In the town of Athlone, for instance, it was necessary to import a number of men from the country—from one district which happens to be very subservient to the priesthood. The townspeople would never have opposed the open-air work. In fact, I have spoken to Roman Catholics who said they were very sorry for what had happened. No respectable Roman Catholics have had anything to do with the opposition. Two of our agents were standing one day on Athlone railway platform when a priest stepped from the carriage. A townsman standing near came over to our agents and said, pointing to the priest, 'There is a street preacher, too; but it is with a blackthorn stick that he preaches.' A few years back no Roman Catholic would have dared to speak in that way of his priest.

"In Athlone," continued Mr. Coghlan, "the opposition has now entirely subsided. It is true that at a political meeting some time ago the parish priest, in the peroration of his speech, referring to the street preachers, spoke to this effect: 'The Government have failed to drive them out; the police have failed; and I have failed. Now it is your turn to try.' The people took no notice of his exhortation and the opposition has entirely ceased. The local secretary there says in his last report that 300 people may be seen listening to the preaching, and twenty Christian young men and young women come out as workers in the market square. When we went there the spiritual life of the town was at a very low ebb; to-day there are few towns in Ireland, or England either, where you will find such abounding spiritual life among the Christians."

Athlone is evidently a specimen of other places in the South of Ireland where the same courageous experiment has been made. Mr. Coghlan has something like the same story to tell of Galway, where the opposition was at one time of a desperate character. Indeed, a county Dublin magistrate who went down to Dublin to help in the preaching has not recovered yet from the injuries he received. But now the attitude of the place is completely changed, and the open-air preachers are generally held in high respect. Within the last month Mr. Coghlan had a crowd of attentive listeners in the town square and there was not a trace of opposition. Moreover there has been positive fruit. One example that may be mentioned is that of a local doctor who left the Romish Communion, and now boldly proclaims the evangelical Gospel. The priest, of course, does his best to harass those who come under the influence of the truth. He will meet poor women as they come out of a sewing class and will drag them about the street by the hair of the head; and he will try to prevent them from getting shelter in a lodging-house. There have been not a few conversions, and as at Athlone the spiritual tone of the Protestant Christians has been lifted up.

In the towns of Portarlington and Tullamore there has never been any opposition at all. In answer to a question as to how this might be accounted for, Mr. Coghlan had no hesitation in attributing it to the fact that these places are centres of what is known as "Parnellism." Independence of thought and action in politics has brought with it greater liberty from priestly thralldom, and it is easier to introduce Gospel work among them. They are free to listen, and they will freely converse with the preacher afterwards. Of course, it must take time before the people in any large numbers will break away from the terrible system that has bound them so long; it is often a terrible shock to them to find out the hollowness of the faith of their childhood.

The town of Sligo has now the unenviable reputation of being the only place in South Ireland where organised opposition to the street-preaching exists. This opposition, however, is almost entirely the doing of one man, Mr. McHugh, the Roman Catholic mayor of the place, who impresses into the service the lowest class of corner boys. The police protect the preachers as far as possible, and sometimes come into serious conflict with these half-drunken rowdies. At first, some of the Protestant Christians in Sligo and other parts of Ireland were antagonistic to this aggressive open-air work, but the course of events has brought an entire change of view in most cases, and those who formerly criticised and objected now subscribe towards the continuance of the preaching.

On a general survey of the work of the Mission, so far as it has gone, Mr. Coghlan declares that the results have preceded the most fervent expectations they could have formed. It was thought and hoped that the next generation after being familiarized with the preaching would abate their prejudices and give a hearing to the Gospel, but the workers are happily surprised to find the difficulties vanishing and the minds of the people being influenced, by considerations of justice and fair play, to listen to the Gospel. The present resources of the Mission are heavily taxed and they must receive help, both in means and in additional workers, before they can extend the scope of their testimony. But they hope to go on, in the strength of God, till the Gospel is freely proclaimed in the open-air, throughout the length and breadth of Ireland. The people are becoming undeceived as to the true character of Romanism, and if they are not led on to the simple saving message of the Gospel, there seems no alternative but infidelity and indifference, as it is in so many parts of Papal Europe.

A special need of the moment, mentioned by Mr. Coghlan in the course of conversation, ought to be laid before our readers. It will be recollected that several of the preachers in Sligo were summoned before the magistrates for obstruction. It is only needful to say that the magistrates in this case were at once the prosecutors and the judges (and in one important instance a witness), to show what a travesty of justice it involved. The evidence given was on the whole entirely in favour of the accused, against whom no show of obstruction could be proved; nevertheless there was a sentence of seven days' imprisonment. This strangely constituted bench declined to state a case for the superior court, and the preachers went to prison for a week. The High Court, as soon as it could be moved, formally quashed the sentence as ultra vires, but did not give costs against the unjust judges in the lower court. The result is that the Mission is saddled with the heavy costs of the case, as heard both in Sligo and in the Court of Appeal, amounting to £300. The greater part of this sum is still unsubscribed. It would be a Christian and graceful act on the part of English friends, to make up this amount, as a token of sympathy with our brave Irish brethren, who are carrying out the Master's last command under circumstances of very exceptional difficulty.

Schools in Dublin.

IN a recent communication, with respect to the work of the Irish Church Mission schools in Dublin, Mrs. Smyly writes:—

It is amusing to see the love these children have for their teachers and friends. On re-opening, one little child, not long in school, ran up and embraced a lady who came to see them. Another said to the teacher, with a glowing face, "My ma says I may come, and she says three hail Marys for you every night." Thus the poor ignorant parents value the love shown to their little ones; in many cases they get hold of the truth, and are converted; unconsciously, at first, to themselves. Many cases occur to my mind as I write of whole families brought to the Lord through the children. Drink is given up, the money formerly spent in the public-house going to feed the children.

The seven homes have been quite full all this year, and the 600 children are all in good health. Friends often ask when they see the number of boys of all ages, "What do you do with them when old enough to go out and earn for themselves?" We can say that we never find any difficulty in providing for them. Situations are sought and prayed over, and the result has been most satisfactory. In all parts of the world we hear of our boys filling good situations. One called a little while ago—a well-dressed, well-to-do young fellow. After some conversation with the master, he asked to see his old home. It was years since he had left and gone abroad, but he had never forgotten the Boys' Home, Grand Canal-street, and had sent money to help others who were in need as he himself had been.

I could tell of many lads who, for want of knowing the Saviour from sin, had lost their way in the world, and come down to poverty without a friend or home. They were received into the "Helping Hand" Home, taught to know the true God and his love for the poor wanderer. They became new creatures in Jesus, and are now occupying most respectable positions. As a rule, these lads remember and contribute to the Homes that befriended them in time of need. I could tell many examples of the work of God in these Homes, and in the Dublin Mission, of which they form a part—of his blessing on the desire of his children to bring the lost ones to Christ, that they may be saved.

The South Africa General Mission has issued a new edition of its excellent map-book. The primary object of the booklet is to give some account of Christian work in South Africa, but to many it will prove of general service by reason of the fitness and excellence of the accompanying map. Glasgow Convention.

THE Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life met this year at Glasgow under unfavourable conditions, owing to the continued wet weather. In spite, however, of drawbacks, there was no falling off in interest or diminution in the solemnity of the gatherings.

On Monday evening Captain Tottenham spoke the opening words on the statement to Lot (Genesis xix. 22). Dr. WHIRE (Winchester) followed with an address on "The Three Alsos" in John xiv. Much of the time at this meeting was given to prayer.

On Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, there were four meetings each day—at 7 and 11 a.m., 3 and 7.30 p.m. The addresses all through were of the most practical and helpful character, dealing with difficulties in the Christian life, and faithfully laying bare the hindrances and drawbacks likely to keep back the Holy Spirit from doing his full work in the soul and life of the believer. On Tuesday the speakers were Dr. White, Rev. F. B. Meyer, and Rev. Charles Inwood. Mr. Meyer spoke later on the meaning of Paul's fear that he might in the end be a "Castaway," and the danger of it in the lives of all. In the evening Mr. Inwood spoke on the Nazarete's vow and the loud call which comes through it for "Separation," even if it be at the expense of peculiarity and the suffering of great pain.

On Wednesday, Mr. MEYER gave the first address for the day, on "God's method of working with his people"; and later in the day he spoke again on "The Kadesh Barnea in the life of every believer." "The Israelites who came up to Kadesh Barnea are the type of the believing soul in its pilgrimage. The tests whether we have gone over the border line, are (1) the contrast between wandering and rest (2) that between want and supply, and (3) that between failure and victory." Mr. DARLOW SARGEANT spoke on "Suffering to serve," and on "Walking in the light of life" (John viii. 12). Mr. INWOOD gave an address on "Witnesses for Christ"; and special supplication and intercession were offered in connection with a meeting being held simultaneously in Glasgow, to consider what steps might be taken to afford help and succour to the suffering Christians of Armenia.

Thursday was marked by the addition of Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR to the roll of speakers. In the course of an address on "Have faith in God," he recounted his personal experiences of the goodness of God in connection with the work of the China Inland Mission. Mr. Darlow Sargeant spoke solemnly on "The possibility of living a fruitless life" (1 Cor. iii. 8-11). Later in the day, Mr. Hudson Taylor gave a helpful Bible-reading.

On Friday Mr. HUDSON TAYLOR spoke on "The Song of Solomon, as an Illustration and Expression of the Believer's Fellowship with Christ"; later he gave a Bible-reading on "The Secret of Fruitfulness," based on John xv. He gave a most interesting account of the way in which God had led up to the foundation of the China Inland Mission, and had proved his faithfulness by providing for all its needs. Dr. ELDER CUMMING gave an address on "The Lessons of the Healing of the Gadarene Demoniac."

Evening after evening the speakers endeavoured to bring those who had been influenced to definite decision for the consecrated life, and the results were encouraging. Before the final benediction was pronounced Captain Tottenham invited all who were prepared to devote their lives to foreign mission work to stand; fifty or sixty answered the call. The Convention was followed on Saturday morning by a hearty thanksgiving service and by a missionary meeting at which Mr. Hudson Taylor, Mr. Gardiner (Ceylon), and others told a wondrous tale of the mighty works of God among the heathen.

West London Mission.—On Friday, October 16, meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life will be held in St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, morning, afternoon, and evening. The speakers will represent various branches of the Christian Church, and such an opportunity may well be embraced by earnest Christian workers in our city at the opening of the winter's work.

The Gospel in Spain.

THE Spanish Evangelisation Society has been working in Spain for forty-one years. A little parcel of Spanish tracts, given into the care of a Scotch seaman who was sailing for Cadiz, was the "grain of mustard seed" from which this mission has sprung. Now the Society has four centre stations and ten out-stations, and is seeking so to extend its work as to reach the unevangelised masses of people in the south of Spain.

The following sentences, quoted from an account of a visit paid to Rota, a village near Puerto Sta Maria, gives some idea of the sore need of the Spanish people for "the good tidings of great joy." The writer is Mrs. Moore, who with her late husband, Dr. Moore, worked so earnestly in Spain for many years. Referring to the people she met in Rota, Mrs. Moore wrote:—

I have never seen such eagerness for the Gospel; they seem to drink it in. . . . After talking a little I quoted to them the words of our Lord: "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." I can hardly give any idea of the rapt attention of these people, especially the men, who listened with their souls in their eyes as I told them of Christ as a labouring man; how He knew want, and was often "weary and heavy-laden," and had not where to lay his head, and that, therefore, He could feel for them. "True, true," they exclaimed constantly.

These people think of Christ either as a babe in his mother's arms, or as a dead Christ hanging on the Cross; but the idea of Christ having been like themselves when on earth, and therefore able to sympathise with them, is so new to them that they are filled with wonder; and as I went on to tell them that it was to the poor the Gospel was first preached, and that by faith in Him they could go to heaven "without money and without price," they looked at each other as if to say "Do you hear that?"

Mrs. Moore further writes referring to Christian missionaries in Spain:—"These brethren need our prayers and sympathy. As one said to me when passing on our way home, 'Do not forget to pray for us and this poor Spain. We are fighting against such odds.' I believe, and many others do, that Spain will be won some day soon for Christ, and when that day comes the nation will rise from the dust, so to speak, and from being a down-trodden and oppressed nation, will lift up its head once more because 'the King of Glory' has 'come in.'"

This Mission is in need of support at present. Will Christian friends help? Miss Rosalba G. Peddie, 16, Viewforth-terrace, Edinburgh, is secretary of the Society.

Story of a Jamaica Church.

CHRISTIAN work in the West Indies is watched with intense interest by many British Christians, the self-reliance and progressive disposition of the Jamaica Christians being specially noteworthy. The story of the Baptist Church at St. Ann's Bay illustrates the good qualities of the people, and points a strong appeal to their friends in other lands. The work has for some years been closely associated with the name of Pastor George House, who is at present enjoying a brief furlough in London.

Mr. House is an Englishman, and spent his youth in the Isle of Wight, where he was found of the Lord and put into Christian service. Deciding to devote his life to pastoral work, he entered Harley College, Bow, and after a course of training left for the West Indies in 1878. Connecting himself with the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society, he laboured in the swampy districts of St. Elizabeth, opening up new centres, and forming converts into churches, with day and Sunday schools and other allied institutions.

In 1889 he was called to the charge of the church at St. Ann's, the work of which grew very rapidly in his hands. In the summer of 1893 the chapel at this place was destroyed by fire. This was a terrible calamity, the building having become endeared to hundreds of the poor black people as their spiritual home. The charred ruins were not yet cold when the distressed flock entered into a solemn covenant to stand by their pastor in the work of rebuilding. "The people had a mind to work"; and they brought their boards and other contributions, and with extraordinary diligence erected a new house of prayer. Being an eminently practical man, the pastor acted as architect and workman, and personally superintended all the operations. Labour was given for love's sake, and liberal subscriptions besides. The new chapel was opened a year ago. It affords accommodation for 1200 persons, and is well lighted and ventilated. A structure which by contract would have cost £2000 was by means of much gratuitous labour put up for £1400, and the gifts in money and material were so liberal that when all was complete only £400 still remained in the way of debt.

This great work over, Mr. House has been taking a holiday—the first since 1878. Year in, year out, he has toiled, and now, coming home to see friends, he brings an appeal from his church for contributions to relieve their financial burden. People that have so grandly helped themselves deserve encouragement. The Jamaica Christians are, as we have pointed out, self-reliant; their pastor is energetic and devoted in a high degree. During the past seven years fifty members have been annually added to the church by open profession of their faith in Christ. There are seven Sunday-schools, four day-schools, with nearly 700 scholars, and two out-stations. Mr. House desires to return to his work, but he wishes to be able to inform his coloured flock of the extinction of the debt on the chapel. To do so he must receive £210 during the next few weeks. Communications may be addressed to him at Harley House, Bow, E.

The Great Need of the Church.

THE Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England has issued its pastoral letter, which has been prepared by Rev. A. N. Mackray, of Croydon. The subject is: "Revived spiritual life, the great need of the Church." It says:—

"Proofs of the prevalence among us of a feeble and unfruitful life are, alas, not far to seek. Conversions to God and his service are not the common and constant seals of our ministry of his Gospel. There is a very inadequate sense of the sinfulness of sin. Many of our fellow-believers lack their rightful assurance of pardon, fellowship with Christ, and joy in the Holy Ghost. There is a dearth in many congregations, especially, of male workers. There is not a fervent and habitual expectation of Divine blessing through the ordinary services of the sanctuary. Lack of prayer has brought loss of power. The blessed hope of the Church is not the deterrent and incentive it should be....

"We need, each congregation apart and each soul apart, to discover for ourselves the mournful causes of our feeble and fruitless lives. The grace of self-examination is indispensable. And if in the care of your souls and for the cause of Christ we have to lay stress upon such hindrances to your spiritual life and prosperity as we now simply name, we are only, we believe, giving expression to your own misgivings and fears:—The luxurious, self-indulgent habits of our well-to-do people; the excessive devotion of the young to sports and pastimes, wholesome as they may be under due restraint; the countenance given to amusements which are full of moral peril to all concerned with them; the unscrupulous haste to be rich and love of hoarding; social rivalries and jealousies; the crowding out of prayer and meditation from an ill-arranged daily life; selfish content with the welfare of 'our own congregation' to the neglect of the larger interests of the Church and the world-wide purpose of its living Head....

"Not for your own sakes alone do we beseech you to unite in prayer for revival, though who of us needs not nor desires larger measures of the Spirit of truth, holiness, and power? Not for our Church's sake only do we make our request, though every loyal member must long for her cleansing and consecration; nor even for the sake of lost souls around us, though our hearts have turned to stone if we leave them to perish in their sins. But through all and beyond all let us seek for spiritual renovation and reinforcement for the sake of our risen and adorable Lord. The Pentecostal Christian was and is the living witness to the efficacy of Christ's atoning sacrifice and the reality of his heavenly life and reign. Revival brings glory to the Lord as well as a victorious energy to his Church that overcomes the world. And if by the way of repentance and prayer, according to the good word of promise, there comes to our Church—to professors and students, missionaries and ministers, fellow-workers in and out of office, and members mature and immature, a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, such work of faith and labour of love and patience of hope will follow as shall prove afresh that Jesus who was crucified is by the right hand of God exalted and has received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost."

Letters to the Editor.

THE ANSWERING OF PRAYER.

WE have received a large number of letters on "The Answering of Prayer," some writers aiming to satisfy the questions of "Inquirer" in our issue of September 10, others to neutralise the arguments of "L. J. P." in the following week.

J. A. L. (Tain, N.B.) tersely says:—"Prayer ought to be addressed to God in faith, with fervour, with frequency, and perseverance, for spiritual blessings and temporal good, with a firm assurance that the answer will come in God's good time; though it tarry, wait for it. No prayer that faith has ever uttered will remain unanswered; delay is not denial. If the special blessing asked for is not bestowed, an equivalent will be given."

Another correspondent, L. M. GODDARD, concludes a thoughtful letter:—"It is to the obedient disciple, whose burning desire is for the advancement of the Father's Kingdom, that the power with God to prevail in prayer is given, and it is the obedient disciple, who learns to trust God with the whole heart, who finds like Israel of old that 'not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you.' For 'they who trust Him wholly, find Him wholly true.'"

WHY SOME PRAYERS ARE NOT ANSWERED.

Many have written in reply to this question. A YOUNG CHRISTIAN says: "Sometimes God tries our faith by not answering just at the time we wish. It may be that it is a branch which beareth fruit, and He is purging it that it may bring forth more fruit." HOPEFUL writes: "I heard a minister once say that our prayers were sometimes answered without our knowing it, for the answer came in at the back door, whilst we were expecting to see it at the front. One of the best object-lessons in successful prayer is contained in the first epistle of John. From chapter v. 14 we learn the nature of the disciple's faith, and that was, if they asked anything according to the will of God, He would give them what they asked for. From chapter iii. 22 we learn what they did—'Whatsoever we ask we receive of Him.' Why? 'Because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight.' As we look at these truths, Satan and our own evil hearts will be sure to tell us that we cannot follow their example on account of our unbelief, ignorance, and weakness; but we should never listen to this temptation for a single instant. The simple promise, Ask and it shall be given you, is the key to all the precepts or commands, and they are the keys to all the promises."

THE PROMISES ON PRAYER.

H. M. S. writes: "What wonderful statements and promises are made on this very subject! 'Ask me,' says God, 'of things to come; concerning my sons and concerning the work of my hands command ye Me' (Isa. xlv. 11). Look at Isa. xliii. 26 and Isa. xlii. 6, 7. And then again, in that most wonderful book of all, how touchingly Christ, speaking to his Church, pleads with each individual believer—'O, my dove,' He says, 'that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs; let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice, for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely' (Song of Solomon ii. 14). Surely if He deigns to speak thus to us we shall not be slow in responding to his call. We have need of patience, and the Lord will answer us; 'the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie; though it tarry, still let us wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry' (Hab. ii. 3). 'I will hasten my word to perform it.'"

A MOTHER writes: "I believe I am right in saying that God's promises to answer prayer are nearly all—if not all—conditional; therefore, if our prayers remain unanswered, the cause must be that either we do not fulfil the conditions or that God does not fulfil his promise; and as we know this cannot be, that He never fails, we have to confess, if we are honest, that the failure lies only at our own door. Without faith it is impossible to please Him, for he that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him (Heb. xi. 6). And this is the confidence that we have in Him, that if we ask anything according to his will He heareth us; and if we know that He hear us whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of Him' (John v. 14, 15). Hence we see that to be able to count upon our prayers being answered they must be according to his will; but is it not apparent that one who is abiding in Christ and obedient to Him in all things could not desire anything contrary to his will?"

TEACHING BY COMPARISON.

As to the comparison founded on the relation of parents to children, A. C. S. writes:—"I am sometimes struck with my own actions towards my children's requests. It would not be good or right to grant all they ask, and sometimes I defer the answering to teach them submission and patience, and prove their faith in my promises and word. Then, when I do give, I often notice that their joy is greater than if granted at once. 'The trial of our faith worketh patience.' How sweet are deferred answers to prayer!"

E. N. makes the following remarks:—"Prayer is to me a constant talking to my heavenly Father, telling Him what I feel, what I fear, what I should like, and asking Him in all things to make me ready to do his will or bear what He would have me bear for his glory—asking for help or strength in the smallest difficulties, or pains, or for their removal. In pain and suffering I have had constant answers, but I always ask for either the removal of the pain or strength to bear it, and one or other is surely given. In all prayer we must acquiesce in God's will, and be ready to glorify Him in whatever way He sees best. We must not fear, we must trust, and He will never fail us. He will always give us strength to bear, where He sees it right not to remove the pain."

PRAYING IN THE SPIRIT.

Finally, L. J. P. writes again, but we cannot find space for his letter in its entirety. He regrets that "Spera Bene" misunderstood his first letter, which was intended to encourage young converts, and not to restrain prayer before God. The pith of his letter is contained in the following lines:—"Prayer is a spiritual thing, and unless we feel that 'drawing' out of ourselves, which is the direct influence of the Spirit on the human soul, we may fairly conclude that we are not praying, but talking to ourselves as it were. It appears to me that prayer at any moment, without a direct leading of the Holy Spirit cannot possibly be heard, and into this class of prayers will fall the habitual night and morning prayers of many godly people. The habit of such prayers may be noble enough, and no one would care to dismiss them summarily from our daily round, but I leave it to experience to decide whether or not they are heard of God. I can only speak for myself in this matter; I have been led to pray many scores of times directly of the Holy Spirit, and when this occurs, what can I do but be absolutely at rest, whether such prayers are answered or not? The Spirit knows the mind of God in the matter, and leads the person to make the request, and when such leading occurs, it seems to be an impossible thing that the prayer should be unanswered. That is what I do mean by stating that some 'do not in the least trouble whether prayer is, or is not, answered.' But, when this leading is not present, disappointment in prayer is inevitable, for I contend that such prayers are not heard of God."

BOOKS ON PRAYER.

With reference to Miss Anna Boobyer's letter last week on her book, "Broken Purposes, but Answered Prayers," we are asked to state that the book may be had from the author (Dulwich House, N. Malvern), for 1s. 3d. post free. A limited number of free copies are offered only to those who are in perplexity, and cannot afford to buy. Another correspondent recommends Mr. George Müller's booklet, "The Prayer-hearing God" (9d. a dozen), from Mr. Sarsfield, Bible and Tract Warehouse, 78, Park-street, Bristol. A third correspondent earnestly recommends Dr. Handley C. G. Moule's valuable little books "Thoughts on Secret Prayer," and "Prayers and Promises." We may also mention Rev. Andrew Murray's very helpful book, "With Christ in the School of Prayer;" and "Asked of God," and other, by Mrs. Anna Shipton.

UNITED PRAYER FOR RULERS.

DEAR SIR,—It is of the greatest importance at the present time that all who love the Lord should agree to unite together in prayer for our rulers, that they may have wisdom and sound judgment given to them to direct aright the affairs of our country in the present momentous crisis in Eastern Europe. Public meetings have their place and uses, but only those who are the Lord's people can help effectually by prayer, and in no other way can they do more efficient and important service for their country at such a time than by earnest, united, believing prayer at the Throne of Grace. From experience we can bear witness that it has a distinct and marvellous effect.

It is sad to see the jealousy and dislike of England which is so apparent in the articles appearing in the Continental press, and although we have reason to believe that this is due in large measure to the controlling influence of the Jesuits, who are naturally England's bitterest enemies, and who, in any case, must obey orders from Rome, yet we know that these articles have their effect in inflaming the minds of thousands, and in stirring up jealousy and distrust, which may take long to subside.—I am, &c.,

MR. KILBURN'S MEMORY SCHEME.

DEAR SIR,—I did not expect that your kind and friendly notice of my system of memory training would bring me so many letters and applications for help. As it would be difficult, if not impossible, to reply to all these letters separately, will you kindly allow me to reply through your columns, and to say that I cannot, however much I might wish, impart my system in one lesson, much less in one letter? To try and give general hints or an "outline," as some ask, would be of little use. I feel it to be my duty to try and help as many as I can. It would not be possible for me to undertake private pupils. Were I to do this here, in Germany, in Sweden, in England, or in America, my hands would be filled many times over. All that I can do at present is to take up large classes. The way is now open for me to do this here through others by correspondence. I hope to do the same also in Germany.

Owing to some unexpected changes, all doubt as to whether I am justified in leaving Russia has been removed from my mind, and I am now expecting to spend the winter in England. It is thus possible that I may be able to take up correspondence and other classes, for the sake of helping the funds of benevolent and Christian institutions, as well as helping Christian workers.—Very truly yours,

J. D. KILBURN.

IS MY INFANT SAVED?

DEAR SIR,—Most Christians believe that children dying in infancy are saved; but many are unable to give a Scriptural or intelligent reason for the hope that is in them. Often it is attributed to the uncovenanted mercies of God. Not seldom even parents who do not maintain the pagan and Popish figment of baptismal regeneration rely more or less upon the efficacy of baptism in securing salvation for their little ones. Others are in painful uncertainty as to whether they are saved or not, and this uncertainty is a cause or an effect of a painful lack of confidence in God.

I believe that children dying in infancy are saved because Jesus "tasted death on behalf of everyone"; He is "the propitiation for the whole world." This must certainly mean that his atonement delivers everyone from the guilt of original sin. It is true that we sinned in Adam, just as Levi paid tithes in Abraham, for as Levi was in the loins of Abraham when Melchizedek met him, so were we, everyone, in the loins of Adam when the ancient serpent met him. But this hereditary guilt of the creature is absolutely and entirely met and expiated by the atoning death of the Creator (John i. 3), the Word made flesh. Every parent therefore, whose child has been removed before being capable of conscious and wilful sin may be assured that they are saved through the precious blood of Christ.

Jesus did not say that except little children be converted and become like adults they cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven; but that except grown-up people be converted and become like little children, they cannot enter there. He said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." "The Son of Man who is in heaven" recognised the little children as those whose citizenship is in heaven.

What significance and encouragement this gives to the injunction and the promise: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." This means train him up "according to the tenor of his way," study his character, watch his tendencies, sow the good seed of the Kingdom in his heart and mind, pray for and with him. As "of such is the kingdom of heaven," let your conversation be in heaven; introduce him by faith to Jesus. He will understand heavenly things because that is his home. The sinful tendency inherited from Adam through his parents will be overcome, or, even if it should gain the ascendancy for a time, the promise is sure, for it is yea and amen in Christ Jesus.

Oh the privilege, oh the responsibility, of the parent, especially of the mother, in the early formative years of childhood! And yet no less of the father. The wife obeying the husband, and the husband giving honour to the wife as the weaker vessel; both walking as heirs together of the grace of life, that their prayers be not hindered.

I shall be glad to be assured by any of your readers if I am right, or corrected if I am in error, in these conclusions.—Yours, etc., A PARENT.

Christian Endeavourers' Song.

"Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?"

[Tune: "Onward, Christian Soldiers."]

HEAR, a voice is speaking,
"Who will go to-day,
Who my service seeking
Will not say Me, 'Nay';
Who will hold my banner
Forward in the fight,
'Gainst my foes engaging,
Stand for God and right?"

Now to sacred warfare,
Right against the wrong,
By the Cross triumphant,
By the Spirit strong!

Answer, O true-hearted!
"Here am I; send me!"
From the craven parted,
From the listless free;
For the cause that's holy,
For the right that's grand,
For God's warfare solely,
Join we heart and hand!

Hear the tramp of legions
Marching as they sing,
"Glory to our Leader, Glory to our King!"

One in holy purpose,
From the near and far,
Hear their voices ringing,
Marching to the war!

On God's might relying
Till the victory's won,
Satan's host defying,
Gird our armour on;
Jesus leads his army
'Neath his flag unfurled,
Hellish foes defeating,
Right shall sweep the world!

Now to sacred warfare,
Right against the wrong,
By the Cross triumphant,
By the Spirit strong.

ALFRED S. DYER.

Proposed Missionary Conference.—The officers and representatives of the Foreign Missionary Societies of the United States and Canada have decided to hold a conference similar to that held in London in 1888. The place selected is New York City, and the date 1900, probably in the month of April. A committee of five gentlemen has been appointed to draw up a plan, and to communicate with others, both in America and in Europe.

Leprosy and Lepers.—The October Occasional Paper of the Pakhoi Leper and Medical Mission, in connection with the C.M.S., gives some deeply interesting information regarding the dire malady and its victims. In an article on "Lepers, Leprosy, and Alleviation," we read: "Speaking generally, we are brought to face, scattered throughout India, China, and the Colonies, about half-a-million of our fellow-creatures suffering from the terrible scourge. Very many live a vagrant's life, wandering about the streets, exciting only disgust among all who come near them. Their miserable existence is prolonged by begging and stealing. No relations or friends will suffer them near their dwellings: they are outcasts of society, and do not receive even the notice and kindness granted to dogs." The Pakhoi Hospital has accommodation for two hundred in-patients, and in connection with the work there is need of nurses and evangelists. Further particulars may be had from Mr. W. E. Harcomb, 15, Devonshire-street, Islington, N.

Work for Herring-Curers.

BEING lately in Aberdeen, a friend allowed me to accompany her to Point Law to visit the bothies, where the women and girls are accommodated during the fishing season. At the time of my visit 800 were sleeping there, and a good work was being carried on by the Y.W.C.A. About a dozen ladies were engaged on Sabbath afternoon visiting the rooms, going two by two to yards appointed for them.

The rooms are generally above the works, and are entered from an outside gallery, sometimes three rooms being on one stairhead. These rooms contain eight or twelve wooden beds, a small stove, a few dishes, and the big wooden boxes belonging to the women. The walls were hung round with the working dresses, but some of the "kists" which were open displayed a good supply of better clothes.

When we arrived we found the girls neatly dressed, and receiving visits from their brothers and friends. Many had been at morning church. In one room we were told that the assistant at the Gaelic church was to have a meeting in that room at 6 o'clock, as most of them came from the village where his father was the schoolmaster. The ladies had a little talk with the girls, and then asked them if they would like some singing. Some well-known favourites were proposed by the girls and beautifully sung. One of the visitors spoke for a few minutes about the words of the last hymn or read a few verses from the Bible, closing with a short prayer. The rapt attention given to the service was an inspiration to the speakers, and as we left the room every one shook hands and expressed thanks or invitations to come back again soon.

Six or eight such meetings were held, and then the workers met for a cup of tea at the mission room at the point of the pier, and an hour of rest or intercourse before resuming the work. It has not been found desirable to hold a public meeting on Sunday, as there are many opportunities for them to attend such; but every Monday evening there is a meeting, which has proved a time of blessing to many.

The Episcopal Church of Scotland has also a station on Point Law, where besides a nice hall for meetings, which is also used as a reading room, they have a well-equipped surgery, with a trained nurse always in waiting to attend to cuts and bruises. During the week women are always coming for help, but at the week-ends when the men are in harbour they are kept specially busy. R. B.

Dublin Medical Mission.

The important door which has been opened by this mission in the city of Dublin is daily proving to be the door which "He openeth and no man shutteth." The opposition which was so much felt at the start has been of no avail in keeping the numbers from the dispensaries.

We added a second doctor to our staff last winter, but owing to an unexpected heavy outlay on sanitary work on our premises (found to be absolutely necessary), we were obliged to reduce our medical staff again this summer, and the committee much regretted having to sever their connection with Dr. A. G. Fenn. Meantime we had secured a second nurse, who proves a great help to the work.

The secretarial part of the work having increased beyond my ability, the finances suffered much in consequence, and consequently the committee have appointed Miss H. Pillar as assistant secretary.

We are most anxious to be in a position to secure again a second doctor for the winter's work, but at present, owing to our bank account being overdrawn, we cannot add to our medical staff.

Will not those who sympathise with and love our Irish poor help us in this Christ-like work, which has been so richly owned of God?

Armenian Relief.—Lord Kinnaird, as treasurer, has completed the transmission of £4100 from the Armenian Massacre Relief Special Fund of the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society. This sum has been distributed to Aintab, Bitlis, Cesarea, Erzroom, Harpoot, Hadjin, Mardin, Marash, Malatia, Oortu, Trebizond, Van, and other centres of massacre and desolation. Further funds are greatly needed to alleviate the distress of the coming winter, which threatens to be more severe than the last.

M. Henri Lasserre.

THIS French litterateur, whose writings made the fame of Notre Dame de Lourdes, is a Romanist of signal patience and resignation under rebuke and ban, emanating from the Pope and the power behind the Papal chair. As is well known, M. Lasserre published some years ago a translation of the Gospels into elegant French, and the Pope joined with lesser dignitaries in blessing the work. In a remarkably short space of time the book ran through many editions, and then came a surprise—the book was placed in the Index as dangerous and unfit for the use of "the faithful"!

M. Lasserre at once withdrew the book from sale, and appealed to the Pope. This, however, was in vain, and no reasons were forthcoming as to the grounds on which the ban was imposed. More recently M. Lasserre wrote an essay and sent it to the Pope, pleading for consideration and a reversal of the judgment of the Propaganda. So far this has been useless; but in the meantime the situation has been complicated by the unauthorised publication in Paris newspapers of extracts from the essay, reproduced from one of the few copies which M. Lasserre had printed for his intimate friends.

In the words of Pastor Draussin in L'Eglise Libre: "Rome does not wish the laity to study the Holy Scriptures, so she does not run the risk of giving them better translations than those made by the doctors of the Church, even although those translations are of undoubted orthodoxy from a Papist point of view. If it should be recognised that a layman can understand the Holy Scriptures by himself, what would become of the authority of the clergy?"

"Welcome" Mission, Harrow Green.

ON Wednesday, last week, a most enthusiastic gathering celebrated the opening of the new mission hall in this poor neighbourhood of the far East-end of London. Mr. F. L. Edwards, of Loughton, presided. The work had been carried on for twelve years in a disused public-house, when about two and a-half years ago the workers resolved to commence a building fund for a commodious hall, in which to hold Gospel meetings. It was the day of small things with them, but it was by no means despised. About twenty-five collecting boxes were put into circulation, and £20 has been raised by this means alone. Two months after this step was taken the friends were greatly encouraged by receiving a cheque for £100 from the estate of a deceased gentleman, and then they set to work in earnest to raise the necessary sum. The cost of building and furnishing the new hall, and re-furnishing and renovating the old premises, which will be used as class-room, is £710. At the opening meeting about £40 was required to make up this amount, which, through the generosity of the friends then present, was at once forthcoming. On the last Lord's Day the work was commenced in the new building free of debt, so far as the mission premises are concerned. There is yet a mortgage of £400 upon the freehold, which it is desirable to redeem without delay; and with increased responsibilities new subscribers are needed, so that the work shall not be hampered for lack of means. The last annual report and any further information may be obtained of the superintendent, F. T. WATT.

Requests for Prayer.—For a mission at Ballinasloe, co. Galway, during the Horse and Cattle Fair, October 4-9, by Messrs. Rainey, Talbot, Crosbie, and others.—For a Gospel mission at Bognor, October 4 to 16, by Mr. Brealey, of the Black-down Hills Mission.—That the Lord will graciously deliver a clergyman and his family from threatened ruin.—For blessing upon services being held by a young evangelist in Southport and Manchester this week (to October 2). — For blessing on a mission at the Y.W.C.A. at Leicester, to be conducted by Miss Haddon, beginning October 3.—For mission services for young people being held by Mr. Newton Jones in various places, and specially for a series now being held in Birmingham.—On behalf of special services in the mission room of Mrs. S. Dunn, Kingswinford, Worcestershire, beginning October 3, by Mr. Edward Rea.—For a mission for two weeks in Liverpool, commencing October 4.—For abundant blessing on a mission for men by W. R. Lane to be held at the Paddington Baths Hall the last week in October.—For blessing on a month's mission at the Vale Mission-hall, Guernsey, during October, by B. H. Angel.—For much blessing on special services in Hereford, Sunday next, by T. M. Wintle.—For blessing on work in connection with the Sedgley Home Mission.—That our weak boy may be strengthened with might by God's Spirit in his inner man, and used in the King's service.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE anniversary of the Bath Y.M.C.A. Sunday afternoon Bible-class was held last week, Mr. C. S. Ellery presiding.

Mr. Frank L. Smith, American evangelist, is conducting a mission to men at Exeter Hall, extending from September 28 to October 7.

A central freehold property has been secured for the Penzance Y.M.C.A., at a cost of £775, which, with a few alterations, will admirably meet the requirements of the work. Over £400 has already been promised.

News is to hand this week that the College Association at Aintab, Central Turkey, "is still keeping on, and doing good work, under very great difficulties." The correspondent adds, "We are always waiting for the Day Dawn."

The annual report of the Rio de Janeiro Association has reached us. The work goes on well, thirty-seven new members having been added this year. The evangelistic and educational operations are full of vigour. A new and larger building is needed, and should funds be forthcoming will be put up shortly.

The Bristol Evening News publishes an interview with the general secretary of the Bristol Y.M.C.A., Mr. R. M. Morphet. The work of this Association is in a very efficient condition. The revised membership list contains 659 names, in addition to 150 juniors, and there are also between 300 and 400 subscribers to the reading-room.

A mission has been conducted by Mr. W. A. Boyd, Dublin, under the auspices of the Ballymoney Association. Large numbers of men gathered each night in the New Town Hall; many were convicted of sin, and brought into saving contact with Jesus Christ. The members of the local Association have been stimulated to further zeal for the Master.

At the invitation of Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton, some seventy delegates from the N.E. Metropolitan Union attended a most helpful conference at Warlies, Waltham Abbey, on Saturday last. Brief reports were given by various delegates. There was a most helpful discussion on "Weaknesses in Y.M.C.A. Work," introduced by Mr. Robert Burn.

Mr. Archibald Stewart, general secretary Melbourne Y.M.C.A., writes:—"During the past few months we have had nearly fifty additions to the roll of membership. Receipts of anniversary twice the amount of last year. The spiritual work of the Association is in a much healthier condition; in fact, there is an improvement throughout the institution."

New premises have been opened this week by two London Y.M.C.A.'s. The Association at Woolwich has removed to more central quarters, and at Wimbledon a commodious house in the Worple-road has been acquired for the work. In each case the ceremony was graced by the presence of Sir George Williams. The Association at Southwark is removing from Newington-causeway to rooms it originally occupied in Trinity-square.

Mr. J. Poynton Haden presided, on the 22nd ult., over the quarterly meeting of the Trowbridge branch, which was largely attended. Reports showed an average through the summer of seventeen at the weekly prayer meeting and nineteen at the fortnightly Bible-class. The meetings of the open-air mission received good support, and the season will be long remembered by many. The clubs have also done well. A new library has been fitted up by the kindness of Messrs. Woodfin and Saxty.

The annual conference of the North of Ireland District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s was held at Ballymena, extending over two days. On the first, after an excursion to Glenariff, a public meeting was held, under the presidency of Mr. William Young, when the speakers were Revs. James Cregan and Pierce Martin and Mr. W. Hind Smith. The business session, on the second, was presided over by Mr. J. G. R. Porter, the noon session by Mr. B. D. Wise, C.E., and the afternoon session by Mr. Thomas Greer. Papers on several important Association topics were presented, followed by practical and interesting discussions. In the evening a public meeting took place, Mr. Alexander Caruth in the chair, and addresses were given by Revs. Charles Davey and Joseph Potter.

The annual meeting of Dundee Association, was held in the Association Hall last week. Ex-Provost Moncur, the President, occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance. The annual report stated that the Association was in a flourishing condition. The religious work was carried on with considerable vigour and success. There were now some forty meetings per week held under the auspices of the Association at the Rooms, Cherryfield, at lodging-houses, and in the open air. The chairman, after expressing his gratification at seeing such a large attendance, which was an indication of increasing interest in the work of the Association, said it would be gathered from the report that the institution was a great centre, in which a large amount of work was being carried on, having for its object the educational, moral, and spiritual advancement of the young men in the city.

The twenty-sixth annual conference of the Y.M.C.A. and Fellowship Unions of Scotland was held at Perth last week. The opening meeting took place in Free St. Leonard's Hall. Mr. Andrew Hutcheson, Vice-Convenor of the County, presided, and there was a large attendance. Professor George A. Smith, Edinburgh, was the principal speaker. On the last day a conference was held in the Working Boys' and Girls' Hall, when Mr. Thomas Nicol, Edinburgh, occupied the chair. The subject was "Some Useful Agencies in Y.M.C.A. Work." Mr. A. R. Calder, hon. secretary of the Leith Gymnasium, opened the conference with a paper on "The Place and Value of Recreation." Mr. A. Bell, National Union travelling secretary, read a paper on "The Place and Value of Temperance Work." "The Place and Value of the Bible Class and Fellowship Union" was discussed by Mr. W. Henderson. In the afternoon a large number visited Rossie Priory on Lord Kinnaird's invitation. They were received by Lord Kinnaird and Lord Overtoun. A conference on "Foreign Missionary Work" was held in Rossie Priory Chapel. Lord Overtoun presided. The speakers, who were drawn from the foreign mission committee of the Y.M.C.A., detailed the work of the young men in distant lands.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE Irish Endeavourer is publishing a series of articles on "Great Movements of Our Century." The September number contains an appreciative sketch of the Y.W.C.A., with a portrait of Lord Kinnaird.

The "Quiet Days" at 25 and 26, George-street, Hanover-square, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, October 7, 8, and 9, to be conducted by Colonel Oldham and Mrs. Penn Lewis, are intended as a preliminary opening of work at the new centre. The meetings will be held at 10.30, 11.30, 3.30, and 8.30 each day. Wednesday afternoon will be a farewell meeting to some who are leaving for Y.W.C.A. and mission work abroad.

The Central Institute, which was closed for a time in consequence of the removal to 25 and 26, George-street, Hanover-square, re-opened on Sunday afternoon last with the usual Bible-class. The Monthly Record shows that much useful work will be undertaken this autumn, including mission services, popular lectures, household economy, cookery, dress-making classes, etc. Miss Willmot and her active band of workers will extend a cordial welcome to any strangers wishing to join the Institute.

Christian Endeavour.

DURING the past year two Endeavourers have gone from South Dakota as foreign missionaries.

The Manchester and District Union numbers 188 societies and 7800 members. The convention just held has been full of fire and intensity.

A united gathering of the societies forming Leeds and District Union was held on Saturday. Twenty-eight societies responded to the roll-call.

The second annual convention of the Birkenhead Union has been held with great interest and crowded gatherings. The Union has now forty societies, with a membership of 1500.

The four Presbyterian C.E. societies in Vancouver, B.C., pay the rent, fuel, and light for one of the Chinese missions in the city. The members of the societies go as teachers, each society being responsible for one of four evenings of each week.

The eleventh quarterly convention of the Huddersfield Union was held on Saturday week in Moldgreen Chapel. Seeing that so many junior societies have been formed in the district, it was thought advisable to recognise them and encourage others who are hesitating. In place of the usual afternoon conference a junior rally was held. The evening meeting was presided over by Rev. J. Peill, who read a very encouraging letter from Miss German, who went out as a missionary to India twelve months ago.

The autumnal conference of the Torquay and District Union was held at Dartmouth on Wednesday, under the presidency of Mr. E. M. Skinner. The afternoon session was devoted to "A model Christian Endeavour prayer-meeting," followed by an address on "The Cultivation of the Spiritual Life," by Rev. G. D. Evans (Totnes). The evening meeting commenced with the roll-call, to which fourteen societies responded. Addresses were given by Revs. C. Warring on "Faithfulness" and C. Goodall on "A Plea for Decision."

The largest circle of the Temperance Ironsides yet formed in the United Kingdom was initiated by Mr. Tennyson Smith, as the outcome of a successful mission in the Queen's Hall, Birkenhead; 110 subscribing members gave in their names to be enrolled.

Temperance Notes.

THE Caledonian Railway Company have issued a notice warning the men in their employ that anyone seen entering a public-house will be dismissed.

A café at Derby, instituted by a temperance committee, furnishes temperance refreshments at all kinds of outdoor gatherings, including horse-races.

A girl of fifteen was charged with being incapably drunk in London. The police-court missionary having intimated that the accused had signed the pledge, she was discharged.

At the Church Congress, papers on "Intemperance: Its Causes and Possible Remedies," will be read by Canon Hicks, of Manchester, the Dean of Hereford, and Sir Willoughby Wade.

The thirtieth half-yearly celebration of the Lord's Supper with unfettered wine was held in Queen-street Hall, Edinburgh, on the evening of Sabbath last. The large hall was well filled, and the audience was largely composed of Christian workers belonging to all denominations.

The chairman of the Chester magistrates has been commenting upon the disgraceful circumstance that out of ten cases brought before the Court that day seven were cases of female drunkenness. If it had not been for the sake of the children, most of the accused would have been sent to prison without the option of a fine.

Habitual drunkenness is now one of the legal causes for divorce in Victoria. During the hearing of a case, a judge, replying to a barrister, said: If getting drunk on Saturday night and remaining so until Monday was to be regarded as habitual drunkenness, he would have to divorce two-thirds of the working-men of Victoria.

A Marylebone magistrate, in refusing to grant the transfer of a public-house licence, commented upon the fact that the applicant was not directly the purchaser, and said that the person who ought to hold the licence was the actual purchaser, not a "shadow man." He declined to be a party to what he described as "farming-out public-houses."

The Consul-General at Christiania, in a report on the trade of Norway, refers to the Gothenburg system, stating that in two important towns the "Bolags" for the sale of spirits has been vetoed by the people. On the other hand, an agitation is being raised by those interested in the liquor trade, and thus the future is at present somewhat uncertain.

Lord Morpeth, presiding over a public meeting held in Leeds in connection with the annual gatherings of the Yorkshire Band of Hope Union, said they should seek to enlist the support of educational bodies on behalf of temperance principles. He thought the permission of the authorities could be obtained for Band of Hope Unions to hold classes in Board schools.

The Congregational Total Abstinence Association is about to appeal to the churches to observe the last Sunday in November as "Temperance Sunday." Its committee report that nearly eighty per cent. of the ministers in England and Wales are known to be total abstainers, namely, 2290 out of a total of 2950. In Scotland the proportion is still larger, and in Ireland there are no exceptions.

The liquor question has always been a burning one in Canada. A large number of people are said to be in favour of more stringent regulations, and there are others who would favour the prohibition of the traffic. The Canada Temperance Act of 1878, commonly known as the "Scott" Act, is still on the Statute-book, but for some reason or other it is not as popular as it was a few years ago. It is only in force in two cities and twenty-seven counties. For some years past there has been an agitation in the different provinces, largely in Ontario, for total prohibition. A deputation recently waited upon Mr. Laurier, the Prime Minister, upon the subject. Mr. Laurier, who has always been an advocate of temperance, promised to obtain legislation next year providing for a plebiscite upon the question. If public opinion is in favour of prohibition, the Government, he states, will bring the necessary legislation before Parliament to carry it out.

One of the latest publications of the London Auxiliary of the U.K.A. is a leaflet setting out the drink statistics of London, from which it appears that the amount spent in alcoholic liquor by the dwellers in the Metropolis reaches nearly £20,000,000 per annum. This sum, it is computed, is a great deal more than half the rateable value of London, while it would pay the London County Council estimate for this year six times over, and the School Board maintenance account added to the sum necessary for the erection of new schools could be paid nearly eight times over with one year's drink bill. The cost of poor relief in the Metropolis is about two and three-quarter millions, or about one-eighth of the sum spent in intoxicating drink, and the whole of the County of London debt could be paid in one year, leaving a good three-quarters of a million in the bank if the money could be spent in this way instead of going into the publican's pocket.

SOLOMON'S WISE CHOICE.—1 Kings iii. 5-15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Psa. cxi. 10.

SOLOMON has only just reached the throne. No selfish ambition has prompted him to seek this position for himself. What will he do with it? He is yet a young man—not twenty years old. His present choice will determine what his future reign will be. Such a crisis comes to all of us. To a large extent it is true that the choice made in youth determines the manhood, and even extends into eternity. A foolish choice, dictated by mere ambition or love of pleasure, may mean ruin. Solomon's example should be followed by all.

His choice was made at Gibeon (5), about six miles north of Jerusalem, where stood the Tabernacle erected by Moses. It was the great high place (2) until the temple was built. The occasion was a very solemn one (4). He, with the leaders of the whole nation (2 Chron. i. 8), were engaged in a religious service, the object of which was to unite the people in the religion of their fathers, and to acknowledge God, by whom he had been established on the throne. "The beginning of wisdom" (see Golden Text) was already his. God can speak to such a man. Be as wise. Do not forsake God and his worship, and then make your choice. If you do not have God for your adviser, you will inevitably follow evil counsellors to your own confusion. Begin with God.

The choice was offered to him in a dream (5). It was not unusual for God to communicate with men thus. Joseph, Pharaoh, Daniel, Nebuchadnezzar, and others are instances (see Job xxxiii. 14-18, and the prophecy quoted in Acts ii. 17, 18). But there is often a connection between the dreams of the night and the thoughts which have occupied us through the day. Solomon's whole heart had been occupied with God; the communion was not interrupted even in sleep (see Psa. cxvii. 2, margin of R.V.).

What a remarkable offer was made to him! "Ask what I shall give thee" (5). It is as though God laid open the whole of his treasures and gave Solomon the power to help himself. He puts a blank cheque into his hand, and allows him to fill it up as he pleases. It is not every man to whom such an offer could be made. There are promises quite as large, but they are appended to conditions. (Read, and learn Psa. xxxvii. 4; John xv. 7.) Fulfil the conditions, and then ask what you will.

Note how the choice was made (6-9).—Solomon deliberated. He remembered his father, and how God had dealt with him (6); and applied to himself the lesson of his father's life. David had been far from perfect; yet his very imperfections, and failures, and sins only served to impress Solomon more deeply with the importance of living in the fear of God. Every son ought to be better than his father, because he can learn through his father's experience. He thought of his position, with its great responsibility, and its need of wisdom far beyond what he possessed (7, 8). He did not care for the position of king, except as he could discharge the duties of a king. He knew that the prosperity of the kingdom and the religious condition of the people depended upon him. These considerations influenced him in his decision. Be as wise. God's complaint against men is that they do not consider (Isa. i. 3). In this pleasure-loving age there is great fear lest young people should act thoughtlessly. Is your present attitude towards God and his Son the result of serious consideration? Eternal issues depend upon the choice made in time—are you making the choice without thought?

His wise deliberation led to a wise choice (9). It was wise because it was not a selfish choice, "Thou hast not asked for thyself" (11); and because he set a right value upon other things. "Long life"—he knew that true life is not measured by its length but by its character. "Riches"—of what use are they if they are man's chief good? Wisdom to glorify God and to serve the people as their king was his first desire. Would you have a worthy ambition? Seek for that True Wisdom which begins with "the fear of the Lord," and which is "a fountain of life to him that has it," and in which are included "durable riches and honour" (see Prov. viii. 18). This you may have, for there is a definite promise to everyone that lacks it (Jas. i. 5). Solomon asked better than he knew. The less is included in the greater (12, 13). Remember this in making your choice (Matt. vi. 33).

Do not misunderstand God's gift. It did not remove from Solomon the need of watchfulness and prayer. Obligation still rested upon him (14). Negligence produced its inevitable result in him. His splendid start was followed by a lamentable conclusion. Imitate him in the start. Be warned by his after abuse of the Divine gifts.

Scottish Notes.

A FISHERMEN'S institute has been opened at Golspie by the Duchess of Sutherland, at whose expense it was erected. Her Grace said that the place had been provided so that some safe and wholesome resort might be open to young fishermen apart from the temptations and dangers of the public-house.

Rev. W. B. Inglis, Free Church minister of Foveran, Aberdeenshire, has been appointed to Union Presbyterian Church, Valparaiso, South America. Mr. Inglis is a son of the late Rev. Andrew Inglis, long the respected occupant of the pulpit of Dudhope Free Church, Dundee. Mr. Inglis purposes leaving for South America in the end of next month.

The usual autumn conference of U.P. ministers has been held at Bridge of Allan, when some seventy-five brethren attended. The general topic of discussion was "How to deal with the tendencies of the times." Sceptical and social tendencies, etc., were the theme of lively and helpful papers and conversations; and the assembled pastors were urged to self-sacrificing, and courageous work for Christ through the coming winter.

A telegram from the British Consul at Beira, Portugal, to the Foreign Mission Committee of the Church of Scotland announces that Rev. James Slater, B.D., died there of typhoid fever on September 16. Mr. Slater sailed from Southampton for Africa only on August 8. He was a distinguished student of Aberdeen, and was recently ordained for the African Mission, and was on his way to Blantyre British Central Africa. Deep regret is felt for his early death.

Irish Notes.

EVANGELISTIC missions have been conducted by Mr. J. B. Anderson in Bethany and Newington Presbyterian Churches, Belfast.

A convention for the deepening of spiritual life has been held in the Men's Christian Institute, Kingstown, under the presidency of Professor Mackintosh and Rev. W. E. Burroughs. The proceedings were well attended and very impressive.

A farewell meeting in connection with the departure of Miss Vaughan, Miss Jackson, and Miss Kinahan, Rev. W. Williamson, and Mr. Kamoke for the foreign mission field has been held in May-street, Belfast. The ladies go to China, and the gentlemen to India.

Rev. W. A. Bracken, of Sligo, and secretary of the Irish branch of the Methodist Missionary Society, has issued a circular requesting all Methodists to observe the first Monday in October as a day of special intercession on behalf of foreign missions, and suggesting that on the preceding Sabbath a sermon should be preached in all Methodist chapels on the evangelisation of the world.

C.M.S. Notes.

BISHOP TUCKER has been suffering from dysentery, but a note written on August 24 contained the news that he was better.

There has been a great deal of sickness at Lagos this year, and as many as fifteen Europeans have died there during the first six months.

It is proposed to hold a large meeting for children in Exeter Hall on October 24th. The arrangements are being made by the London Lay Workers' Union.

During the last four months no fewer than four European missionaries have died:—Miss Entwistle, of Western China; Rev. Dr. C. Baumann, of Benares; Rev. G. T. Fleming, of Colombo; and Mr. J. P. Nickinson, of Nassa.

A missionary in the province of Fah-kien, speaking of the marvellous movement towards Christianity which is there being manifested, says, "The progress is not from the foreigner, but from native efforts, one bringing his brother, the other his father, cousins, and so on."

News has been received of the death of Rev. John Williams, a qualified native doctor, who for twenty-eight years had laboured alone at Tank, near Dera Ismail Khan, in the Punjab, among the wild Waziri tribe. During the Afghan War he was the only man who could remain among them without losing his life.

The Children's Mission, 251, Southampton-street, Camberwell, S.E., has, according to its new report, had a good year, notwithstanding many difficulties arising from lack of accommodation. The Sunday-schools sewing meetings, Band of Hope, Gospel services and other efforts have been well sustained, and fruitful in result. During winter free breakfasts are given to numbers of hungry children.

Church Trouble at Leamington.

For some fifty years, a thoroughly evangelical Church of England work has been carried on in Leamington by the late Rev. H. Fisher and since his death by Rev. J. W. Dance. Difficulties arose after Mr. Fisher's death and the congregation lost their place of worship. Holly Walk Chapel was, however, purchased and opened for service, but unhappily, the vicar of the parish objected, and a long correspondence ensued with the Bishop of Worcester, which ended in the inhibition of Mr. Dance.

In acknowledging this, he wrote:—"Your messenger duly delivered into my hands your inhibition, and as it has been your pleasure to mete out to me the punishment proper to one guilty of a criminal offence, seeing that I have done nothing more nor less than to preach the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, as called out and sent to do by the Holy Ghost, I accept this mark of dishonour with all thankfulness to our Lord Jesus Christ that He has counted me worthy to suffer shame for his name's sake."

A crowded meeting was held (after a week of prayer) on Monday week in St. Luke's schoolroom, when it was finally resolved that God's hand was so clearly in the work that it must be maintained at all cost. Hence the services in St. Luke's, Holly Walk, Leamington, will now be carried on independently and on evangelical church lines. Many will feel sympathy with pastor and flock cast out from the association of the church they love, but willing thus to take their stand for freedom.

At the outset they are compelled to make an urgent appeal for help in clearing off certain debts for purchase and repair, amounting to £1,180. We feel sure some will be glad to help such a cause. Address, Rev. J. W. Dance, Boyne-villa, Leamington.

Weaver Brothers in Callander.

SOME of your readers were deeply interested in the account given in last week's CHRISTIAN of the Lord's work in Callander, for many are continually testifying to the double blessing which may always be experienced there—namely, physical blessing from the lovely pure mountain air and scenery, and spiritual refreshment from the blessed work carried on uninterruptedly in the Mission Hall erected there some years ago by Mrs. Colonel Robertson. This work is verily a Christian romance from its origin to the present moment, and the testimonies of blessing received would fill volumes. Year after year summer visitors return, again and again, because they know of the spiritual reviving and help they are sure to receive.

Every now and then, in addition to the regular work of the Mission, extra efforts are put forth for the ingathering of precious souls to the Redeemer's Kingdom. The Messrs. Weaver Brothers have just finished a fortnight's special meetings, and their preaching and singing of the sweet Gospel message has refreshed and quickened the hearts of the Lord's own, and to the praise of his name there is every reason to believe souls have been truly converted to Him. The Messrs. Weaver are manifestly God's prepared and sent ones; and they go to Aberdeen from Callander for further evangelistic work. May they long be spared to gather in the lost to the Saviour's fold; and they leave behind them in Callander a sweet savour of blessed fragrance, because "Christ only" is their constant theme, and many hearts are sad and sorrowful as they bid them farewell. A very gracious rain has, through them, refreshed God's heritage, "mercy drops round us are falling, now for the showers we plead."

A CONSTANT READER.

Naples Sailors' Rest.—During my lecturing tour this year in Great Britain the work was well maintained. As stated in our last report the improvement among seamen continues. Formerly there were determined infidels in ships coming here; at present there are no open signs of scepticism. Over 3000 copies of the Scriptures have been circulated this year. The moral tone of the men is considerably raised, and it is rare to see a drunken sailor in our streets. Last month the seventeen ships of the Mediterranean Fleet, while lying at Castelmare, in the Bay of Naples, were visited, and little books distributed. This service took two days, including the voyage from and to Naples. The seamen were very hearty. We are anxious to increase appliances at Catarina Rest, in the island of Sicily; and as for Naples and the immediate ports, it is our bounden duty to continue the work with energy. Several new workers have joined our staff, including an English colporteur.

STEPHEN BURROWS.

7 Vico, 2° del Piliero, Naples.

Few more hopeful signs in connection with missionary work can be observed than an increase in the spirit of prayer among the supporters of the various societies at home. The weekly prayer-meeting in the mission houses, the formation of special praying bands, and the observance of special times of prayer, all indicate that a deeper sense of dependence upon God is entering into the hearts of his people. Last Sunday and Monday, e.g., Methodists everywhere gave themselves to prayer for missionary work. Presently the friends of the L.M.S. will have a week of prayer—at least, the ladies will, and their example is sure to be contagious. The Methodist Recorder notes that the China Central Lay Mission, which the late David Hill was so greatly interested in, has quietly, with the least possible notoriety, taken hold upon God's strength, and therefore has prevailed also with man. It believes that a conviction has been recently rooting itself in the ministry and among all classes of Methodist Church members that nothing would tend more effectually towards a great revival of missionary zeal and self-sacrifice than the creation of a Common Missionary Prayer Union.

Ideally, of course, every church is a missionary prayer union, and a temperance society, and an anti-opium society, and a peace society, but in point of fact hardly any church combines all these things. Special societies have to be formed out of the members for special objects in which they are interested and wish to be promoted. This may be unavoidable, owing to differences of view and feeling, but all the same it is inexpedient and very detrimental to the good work to be done. "That they all may be one"—were that prayer answered even within the limits of each local church, it would transform all our work, giving it new impulse and crowning it with unfailing prosperity. Only let professing Christians be one in heart, in purpose, in prayer, in labour, and the knowledge of God will soon be spread to every land. As a sign of the better time we hail the remark of The Methodist Recorder that "our own missionary society needs more than anything else an 'upper room.'"

A story is told of the widow of Schumann that before she played any of her husband's music in public she used to read over some of his old love letters, so that "she might be better able to do justice to her interpretation of the spirit of his work." Yes; the spirit of the Gospel is what all workers should have in the work of the Gospel, and to obtain that perhaps the best way is to sit down and read over and over again the Saviour's words of love. Our own hearts must have the dew of grace upon them, and feel the love of God in them, if we are to speak with persuasiveness and power. There is a danger of giving too much time to mental preparation for public service, of being absorbed in it, and then of going to men with dry hearts and dry words. It was the custom of a saint of last century never to speak unless the fountain of love was opened in his heart. To open that, we must see how open it always is in the heart of our Lord—"we love Him because He first loved us."

Truth lies at the foundation of life. It is the rock on which true Christian character is built. This is true of the details of conduct as well as more important issues. It is harder to be perfectly truthful in little matters than in great. As John Ruskin says: "To speak and act truth with constancy and precision is, perhaps, as meritorious as to speak it under intimidation or penalty; and it is strange how many men there are, as I trust, who would hold to it at the cost of fortune or life, for one who would hold to it at the cost of a little daily trouble." It is, therefore, an essential thing that we should avoid all those minor insincerities that so often cloud human life, and put men into mutual relations of falsity and insincerity. "Wherefore, putting away falsehood, speak ye truth each one with his neighbour, for we are members one of another."

It is one of the sources of depression that we can so seldom see the Divine plan in our lives. We are like the individual workmen of Solomon's temple, toiling far away in forest and mine, before fiery furnaces, and in the lonely workshop each doing his appointed task, but having no vision of the Temple rising in silent and impressive grandeur at Jerusalem, "without sound of hammer or axe or tool of iron." Many of us are seldom visited with any sense of the ideal side of our daily work and duty. The light we have only shines from day to day. The wholeness and grandeur of life is hidden from us. We are toiling for an unknown end, agonising and fighting for dark unrecognised issues.

It is here that faith should step in. We should remember the words of the Good Master to his impatient disciple, "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." He cannot explain to us now the meaning of the tasks he imposes on us, or light up the dark surroundings of our life into glory. But the time will come when the eternal day will dawn, and looking back on our earthly career we shall see life in its wholeness, and understand the hidden mystery and the dark enigma. Till then it is for us to work on in dark and in twilight in faith and trust, glad to do the Master's will, and filled with the sense of honour that we are permitted to serve Him at all.

The benefit of the Christian Endeavour Movement on those churches that have adopted it was well illustrated by Rev. F. B. Meyer at the great meeting recently held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle:—

There is not a minister who has had the luxury of Christian Endeavour work in his church who is not under deep obligation to Dr. Clark for instituting this movement. Wherever he had visited the churches throughout the country, he had found the introduction of a C.E. Society had been a source of new energy, new prayerfulness, and new devotion throughout the entire community.

Further, it is generally acknowledged that in churches where the Society has been introduced, the problem of "How to retain the elder scholars" has been largely solved. Known by its fruits, it has more than amply justified its existence.

In Liverpool there is a district with 200 streets, 12,000 houses, and 60,000 people, without a public house in their midst, owing to the decision of the owner thirty years ago that no house of the kind should be built upon it. The results are remarkable, the death rate being only one-third or one-fourth of that in an adjoining district where public-houses exist; the poor-rates having gone down from two shillings and sixpence, to tenpence or a shilling, and the value of house property being thirty per cent. higher than in the districts with public-houses. When will the people learn that facilities for drinking mean poverty, wretchedness, and degradation? When will all professors of the Saviour's name learn it? He came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them.

There is evidence for believing that in the ultimate settlement of the drink question the drink-sellers themselves will be on the side of temperance. The richer men with better houses will probably, as is now proposed at Birmingham, aid in weeding out the poorer men with the worse houses. Afterwards the weeded-out will have their revenge by joining the temperance party in suppressing the remainder. The trade is divided, and "a house divided against itself cannot stand."

In "The Ritual of Health" (Jarrold), Dr. Pattin speaks up for the British Sabbath, "so anathematised by the industriously idle." On hygienic grounds he would claim one day in seven for rest. In these days of high pressure the human machine will break down without it. But by rest he does not mean idleness, but change, a turning of the man to new services. What better change, he asks, can a man find from worldly care than "an effort to realise his true relationship to his fellows and external nature, and of all to the Deity"? The prophet of Israel, speaking in the name of the Lord of the Sabbath, pronounced peculiar benedictions, for time and eternity, on the man who should honour the day, "not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words." Those who "call the Sabbath a delight" are certain to "delight themselves in the Lord," and to be satisfied with heavenly blessings (Isa. lviii. 13, 14).

Helping the Armenians.

My Armenian friend and brother in the Lord, who for some years has been my faithful companion in travels through Russia and Siberia, and who has served me as interpreter in several languages, had to flee from his own country (Trans-Caucasia) to escape imprisonment because of his connection with the Standist movement, is now living in Constanta, in Roumania, where he is labouring in the Gospel amongst the various nationalities who flock together in that rising seaport. There are many Russians who, like himself, have had to flee from Russia to secure liberty of conscience and of action for themselves, and also many Armenian refugees find their way to Constanta. They come from Armenia stripped of everything, having escaped with their bare lives. My friend seeks to minister to their temporal and to their spiritual needs, and I know from personal observation that a more receptive community can scarcely be found anywhere. The Armenians are generally found to be too proud to beg or accept alms. My friend seeks to find employment for them, so that they may earn their own living. He is now building a hall, in which he hopes to hold Gospel meetings both for Armenians and for Russians, whilst he also seeks to give employment to those who seek to win their bread. This way of ministering to the sufferers commends itself as a most effective service. My friend is not rich, and he would be grateful for fellowship in this noble effort.

I propose, God willing, in November once more to visit Hungary, Roumania, and South Russia. I shall be glad to convey any pecuniary assistance to my friend.

British Deaf Mutes.—It is computed that there are more than 35,000 deaf and dumb persons in the British Isles. Various Christian agencies minister, as far as it is possible, to their spiritual necessities, but there are some 6000 who do not appear to be thus reached. To bring the Gospel to these, a committee has been formed; and an experienced evangelist, himself deaf and dumb, has been engaged to itinerate amongst them. He will work on undenominational lines, and the support of those who sympathise with such work is invited. Possibly other agents may be employed, should the way be made clear. Those interested in the project may obtain full particulars from Lt.-Col. Alves, 43, Cromwell-houses, Queen's Gate, S.W., or Major Hewitt, Oakley House, Spring Grove, Isleworth. The former is hon. treasurer, the latter hon. secretary.

Choosing our Business.*

By Rev. ALEX. WHYTE, D.D.

IT is a time of most tremendous import when a young man is still choosing toward what city he is to pitch his tent for life. And how often our young men make their choice as if the history of Lot had never been written. Think, fathers; think, mothers; think, young men, also, with so much at stake—think what the temptations and dangers and the almost sure issues of this or that choice in life must be. All our trades, professions, occupations in life have, each one, its own perils and temptations and snares to the soul; as well as its own opportunities for gain and honour and praise and service—the ministry, teaching, law, medicine, the army, political life, newspaper life, trade, the money market of all kinds, and so on.

Open your eyes; count the cost; are you able? Will you venture? Take that line of life you are just about to choose. Take time over it. Look all round it. Imagine yourself done with it. Look at this man and that man who are also done with it. Would you like to be like them? Read Genesis chap. xiii. and xix., and take those two chapters with you to your knees, and so make your choice. Look at your motives in making your choice. Look at its dangers and temptations, and especially at its companionships. Look at the people you will have to part company with, and at the people among whom you will henceforth dwell, and then let the die be cast. Lot chose all the plain of Jordan and pitched his tent towards Sodom...

To read Second Peter on Lot is far more comforting than to read Moses. For Peter tells us that when God turned the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, He delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked. But, then, to read that only makes us stop and say and ask, Why did a man with a beginning like Lot, and with past experiences like Lot, not rise up and leave a life and a neighbourhood, and an occupation, and a companionship out of which so much danger and so much vexation of soul continually sprang? The reason was that as our merchants would say. He had invested money; he had embarked himself and his household in the land round Sodom, in the produce of Sodom, and in her splendid profits. And with all the vexations that wrung his heart Lot could never make up his mind to be done with Sodom and Gomorrah for ever.

I suppose there must be great men among ourselves who have chosen early in life, or who have inherited, or who have built themselves up a business, the partners in which, the questionable righteousness of which, nay, the not questionable unrighteousness of which often vexes their hearts far more than we know or would believe. But to come out of that manufacture, that import, that export; to refund with money those moneys; to rise up at the loss of thousands and thousands, nay, possibly at the loss of every penny a man possesses; to leave a splendidly-paying business merely at the twinge of a secretly tortured conscience—no man ever does it.

Lot therefore is the father of all those men whose righteous souls are vexed with the life they are leading, but who keep on enduring the vexation. And Peter's New Testament point is this, that righteous men will go on enduring vexation like that of Lot, but the Lord Himself rises up, and comes down to deliver them. Lot's deliverance came through a catastrophe, the sound of which and the smoke of which blows like opening hell into our eyes this day. Just what God will have to do to deliver your soul and mine from the things that so endanger our souls and so vex them, his time will tell, only this we may rely upon, that the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of their temptations, and He will do it too, if He has to burn up all we possess with fire and brimstone from heaven. In that terrible day may his angels be near to lay hold of us!

"Let us Pray."

IT is difficult to imagine anyone reading the recently published biography of the late Mr. Reginald Radcliffe without being profoundly impressed, not only with the striking personality of the man, but also with his peculiar power and pleasure in prayer. His whole life was pre-eminently a life of prayer. Real and reverent intercourse with God was the atmosphere he breathed. Prayer was the secret of his great knowledge of God, of his acquaintance with the heart of the Scriptures, of his separated and saintly life, as it was the secret of his marvellous success as a soul-winner in this and other lands. To him God was real, living, present, and the prayer of faith the only motor for the chariots of saving, and renewing, and delivering grace.

As a book these recollections rank high, and it is not over-estimating its value to say that in itself it is a liberal education in the principles and practice of evangelistic work. Concerning the revival in Aberdeen we read: "It would require a volume to recite the triumphs wrought by the Spirit of God through prayer and the preaching of the Word." And the writer adds, "The secret of the blessing which came from God to the awakening of whole districts, the quickening of Christians, and the salvation of multitudes was prayer, continued, fervent, believing, expectant." What a revelation of Reginald Radcliffe's own utter weakness and absolute dependence upon and confidence in the living God is seen in the incident that follows. On one occasion we are told: "The church was crowded, and he commenced his address; but as he went on we who had come with him felt the absence of the power of God, and with sinking hearts began to call upon God. He, too, felt that God was not speaking by him. He suddenly paused, said we must appeal to God, and he poured forth his soul in prayer. As he prayed the house was as if shaken; every heart was moved; a great awe of God fell upon all, and God wrought mightily."

How great and how painful is the contrast to-day. In our churches, chapels, halls, the hearers are instructed, pleased, amused, edified, perhaps sometimes bored, but how seldom do we hear of "a great awe of God" falling on them! It is to be feared that many evangelical preachers think more of theological accuracy than of spiritual emphasis, forgetting that even the Gospel has little power over the heart unless it be preached in the present power of the Spirit. And although here and there faithful men of God are burdened with the weight of souls, and are seeking by all means—and not without success—to save some, yet our most successful preachers and evangelists are the first to deplore the spiritual dearth and impotence that abounds.

Now the cause is not far to seek. It is not in God. His hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither is his ear heavy, that it cannot hear. But it is in ourselves. We have not, because we ask not. We have failed to come with one heart, with one voice, and as one man to the throne of grace, and so the windows of heaven are only half opened. We have our ordinary services, our special missions, our conferences one with another. We have also Y.M. and Y.W. Associations, Guilds, and Societies of Christian Endeavour, besides open-air preaching and personal effort. These things we have in abundance, but they lack force and power and life, because the great lack in the Church is prayer. We have restrained prayer before God. And why? Because to a great extent we have lost faith in the supernatural, we have largely lost our hold on God.

Now it is, as we all know, impossible to detach faith from prayer, and prayer from faith; they are inseparably connected. Unbelief cannot pray. But no sooner does faith take root in the soul than it is said, "Behold he prayeth." Faith must pray. For prayer is the voice of faith; it is faith become vocal, and the believing soul is always a praying soul. And therefore, before there can be prayer, there must be faith, and faith must be increased before we can pray without ceasing. And thus our first prayer must be, "Lord, increase our faith." Then when this has been answered, our faith will be so prolific that out of it will spring unceasing prayer and intercession.

And surely this is what we need as individuals. And the Church as a whole needs it, and Jew and Gentile need it. Christ calls for it; the Holy Spirit waits to produce it; and God expects it. There are windows in heaven to be opened and a revival prayed down. There are promises to be obtained. There are sealed lands to be unlocked. There are deliverances to be wrought. There are wrongs to be righted. There are brave men, helpless women, and innocent, trusting children to be saved from death in Armenia, and prayer is a stronger weapon than the sword. Prayer moves God. A Christian child at the throne of grace may set mightier forces in motion than the greatest of earth's great men ever dream of. Talk no more of the power of prayer; talk of its omnipotence!

Let us pray—shall we? But there is no time to lose. Christ has died, and consecrated a royal road to God. A way for all believers has been opened to the footstool of the Almighty. Great boldness and great liberty are granted. Promises and encouragements abound. The sceptre is extended to all. "Ask and ye shall receive." "For this will I be inquired of." "Draw nigh to God." With such a warrant for approaching God, dare we linger outside? Yes, for but one brief moment, that we may catch the cry of dying, needy, groaning men, being hurried away in the cruel grip of iniquity to the realm and region of death. Then while the echo of the wailing still lingers in our ears, let us reverently pass, with hushed spirit and weeping eyes, into the Holy of Holies, there to confess our sin and the sin of our people, and to make our prayer with strong crying and tears for the world that knows not God.

May the Lord send all the readers of this paper at once to their knees, to make their voices heard in heaven for the oppressed, the suffering, and the sinful! Amen and amen!

W. MONRO COLLINGS.

The Spirit of Missions is the spirit of sympathy, of self-denial, and of service, which is only another way of saying that it is the Spirit of Christ. The Church must have the spirit of Missions if it would be his Church. The Church, which is his body, must be a living organism, not a withered, lifeless trunk. It can maintain its life only by seeking to extend it into the lifeless world.—T. C. SMITH, D.D.

Nepal and Its Needs.

MUCH has been said lately about Tibet, "the great closed land," but I have never yet heard an appeal for another "closed land" lying not far from it—I mean Nepal. It is as surely closed as Tibet, no missionaries being allowed within its borders. In Nepal, an independent native State to the north of India, there are at least 2,000,000 souls. Many of the poorer class, as coolies, come into British territory from time to time, and so have the opportunity, if they desire, of hearing the Gospel from the missionaries there, but so also do Tibetans. As a rule, however, both only come on business, and have no time to spare.

My husband and I have had the opportunity and privilege lately, with a missionary friend, Miss Colvill, from Calcutta, of visiting a village just on the border of Nepal, which seems a most suitable centre for pioneer work. In fact, we paid two visits. At that time we were resting at Ghoom, a village in British Sikkim, about seven miles from the village of which I speak, which is called Sukia. This village until lately has been a very small one, but within the last three or four years a weekly bazaar or market has been started, to which an average of 600 Nepalis come, bringing various kinds of produce for sale. In the neighbourhood, within a riding distance of ten or twelve miles, there are twelve tea-gardens, with from 300 to 600 coolies on each, nearly all Nepalis.

Three miles beyond Sukia, just on the border of Nepal, is another village called Simana, and over the frontier are many more. Does it not seem as if "a witness" was needed there? Picture 5000 coolies within ten miles, and from 600 to 1000 souls weekly at the bazaar or market. Does this not call for workers? Perhaps some who read this say, "But would they be easily approached?" Let me therefore tell of the results of our visits. The first time we went was on a Thursday, the day before the weekly market, which is held on Fridays. After reaching Sukia, and resting a short time, we pushed on to Simana, the village on the frontier of Nepal. Miss Colvill and myself arrived first, as we travelled in dandies, and, on speaking to the women, found they would have nothing to do with us. I showed them my medicines, asking if any needed help, but none approached us. We therefore made up our mind to enter Nepal at least, so started to cross the boundary. Just then a man with a sore on his foot appeared, holding it out. Immediately, of course, we set to work and dressed it, thanking God for this opportunity of getting into touch with the people.

By the time my husband and his friend (a gentleman who lived near us, and who, speaking Nepali fluently, was glad to help in any way he could) joined us, we were surrounded by a crowd of Nepalis and Lepchas, and in a short time we had attended to thirty patients. Just as we were ready to leave, a poor woman, who had come a little distance, rushed up with a sick child in her arms, imploring help. It vividly reminded one of the days in which the sick were brought to the Master Himself, and made one realise how their friends must have felt and acted. As it was getting late we were obliged to return to the Dāk Bungalow, where we were to sleep that night.

The next morning I was unwell, and prevented from doing all I intended. Whilst it was impossible for me to rise, Miss Colvill went down to Sukia, and gave out medicines to those who came for them, and by the time I could join her she had treated at least sixty patients. At the same time my husband and Mr. Polhill Turner, who had ridden out to join us, together with our friend, who speaks Nepali, went down to the crowded bazaar, and with the aid of a coloured sketch on a flexible black-board gave Gospel addresses to a very attentive audience of about two hundred.

We felt so strongly that there seemed work to be done in and around Sukia, that we made up our minds to pay another visit, and consider the possibility of later on returning to stay. The way in which the Nepalis listen to what is spoken is most encouraging—so different from some of the other hill races. Accordingly, before leaving Ghoom to return to our work in Calcutta, we paid a second visit to Sukia, on another market-day, riding this time, so that we might return the same day, our kind friend, who speaks Nepali, accompanying us to help us as before. As soon as we reached the bazaar and got out medicines, etc., numbers flocked to us, and that day, the Lord giving the necessary strength, we saw and gave medical help to over seventy, many of whom were from Nepal.

After that we gave a Gospel address to a good audience, and then went over a native house which is to let, and in which it would be practicable to live for a few months, although at present it has neither windows nor chimneys! If it seemed best, however, to settle in Sukia, the building of a house would be almost a necessity on the score of health, and if part of the house could be fitted up as a dispensary and small hospital, it would be very advantageous. We believe ground might be procured free from Government, but building, fitting up hospital, etc., would involve considerable outlay, and as soon as work is begun, even in a native house, money would be required for medicines and other expenses.

Who will help? I believe eventually one could get into the closed land, Nepal, with the Gospel by means of medical work, for our experience at Ghoom (where, during our resting time within the last three years, we have given medical help to over 2000 cases) has taught us what a means of getting into touch with the people such help is. It breaks down prejudice, and makes some who would otherwise be nearly unreachable willing at least to listen to the Gospel. During our stay at Ghoom this summer, Bengalis, Tibetans, Lepchas, and Nepalis, many of whom had got medical help, came to a short Gospel meeting, held in our verandah on Sunday afternoons, and listened well to what was said. To those of us on the spot it seems hard to see the opportunity and not have it in our power to embrace it. Will none of the Lord's children, who know his command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel," and who cannot go personally, not help those who are willing to enter in at this open door?

Other helpers would of course be required, but we feel sure that the Lord will supply such once the place is ready to receive them. Meanwhile we are willing to do the pioneer work.

At present my husband and myself are supplying the place in Calcutta of some American missionaries, who are at home on furlough, but who expect to return in October next. After their return we will be free to begin work for Nepal, our knowledge of Hindi, which most of the hill people speak, being sufficient to carry us on till we have learnt Nepali.

In closing, may I ask all who are longing for the advance of Christ's Kingdom to pray that the way may soon be made clear for preaching the Gospel within Nepal, and that meantime his guidance and blessing may be with all who are seeking to be used in bringing the Nepalis to know Him, whom to know is life eternal.—Yours in Christ's service, Lisson Grove, N.W.—The fifty-fourth quarterly gatherings of Christians for prayer, praise, and testimony, were held at Dauntless Hall, on Tuesday, September 29. Addresses were delivered by Dr. R. W. T. Brooks, Mr. James Sprunt, Mr. W. H. Seagram, and Dr. Thos. Neathy.

A Visit to a Hop Garden.

THOUGH the last season has been very wet, and though very great discomfort has been undergone from tents having been blown down in rain-storms at night, with the mud ankle deep in places, the general health of the hop-pickers has been good, and the ruddy glow caused by country air appears on most of the faces of those who generally live and labour in the courts and alleys of our great city. Though their life is healthy physically, notwithstanding the fact that the people are accommodated more like animals than human beings, the moral conditions are perilous in the extreme. One cannot wonder that many are led astray when the eye and ear constantly meet with that which is sinful and defiling. There is need indeed for the Gospel in such case.

As I visited the hop-pickers at Nettlestead in Kent, last week, where the venerable and respected Mr. Peter Wallis, of the Open-air Mission, has laboured for the past twenty-five years under the superintendence of the Vicar, Rev. W. F. Cobb, I was delighted to see the ready access which he had to the hearts of the people; many came to him asking for a Gospel or a tract, and over and over again he was told: "I've got that book you gave me last year," or "Please give me the tract about the hoppers who were drowned."

When the work was begun, some twenty-five years ago, there was considerable opposition, especially from Irish Romanists, but now Mr. Wallis has most certainly gained the respect and confidence of all. There cannot be a doubt that the general moral tone of the pickers has been enormously raised during the past quarter of a century by the visits of Mr. Wallis, and by the members of the Hop-Pickers Mission in other places, as well as by the influence of others upon them in their homes in London. Of direct spiritual blessing there is a happy record; but much remains to be done. Will the Lord's people remember this good work at the throne of grace? G. MACKINLAY.

"First Things First."

[Words spoken by John T. Dorland in his last address.]

HE said, "Put first things first," and lived

The yielded life he taught;

And, giving all, received from God

The life, the joy he sought.

The Holy Spirit set his seal

Where He could prompt and guide;

The message and the power were his,

'Twas He was glorified.

Though hush'd that pleading, deep-toned voice,

Though still'd that yearning heart,

He, "being dead, yet speaks" to thee,

Calls to "the better part,"

"Belov'd, put first things first," he says,

Nor think the Lord can use

As instruments unyielded powers,

Or guide us when we choose.

"Put first things first"; to Calvary

Come with thy self-life, die,

To self and sin upon his cross.

Thus emptied, thou shalt cry,

"Show me thy glory," all thou art,

My wond'rous, living Lord,

And find in thy poor heart at last,

His spirit, shed abroad.

First Calvary, then Pentecost,

From death to life; Ah! then

When Jesus reigns enthron'd in thee

Like Him, thou'lt yearn for men,

And witness to his risen power

To save and keep from sin

The Holy Spirit witnessing

To his own work within.

Give Jesus, then, his rightful place,

The first place in thy heart,

Yes! put Him "first in everything,"

And with Him bear the smart

Of hatred from the carnal mind,

Which cannot know the Lord;

Put first his glory; lose thyself,

And prove how true his word!

MISSIONARY.

A Revival Incident

AND ITS SUGGESTION TO CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

"YOU must get the church right before you can have a revival," so said an old minister as he sat beside me on the balcony overlooking Eagle Lake, Indiana. "I found that out in 1873-74, when a revival began in my church that lasted four years." "Tell me," said I, "how it came about?" "Well," said he, "it was like this. As a young man I was settled over a church, which had been faithfully ministered to for half-a-century; and had been swept by half-a-dozen revivals in that time; but there were plenty of members over fifty-five years of age that had passed through them all, and were still out of Christ. So I began preaching. But, previously, I must tell you, I had entered into the rest of faith, as they called it then. Nights and nights I had spent in prayer; I had trodden the grass of consecration pretty hard by knee-practice, and had seen that I could not consecrate myself, but must open the door to Christ, for Him to come in, and consecrate me to Himself. The burden of all my sermons at that time was, that the Church was responsible for the world, and that if the world was not won for Jesus, it was because the Church was out of condition. Nothing can stand against a united Church, clean in life and practice, and one in its fixed resolve to win the outlying world to Jesus.

"Out of this preaching of mine came a secret prayer-meeting, held in my vestry for eighteen months. I picked the people who composed it, both men and women. We used to pray definitely for the unconverted by name, keeping lists of names definitely before God. A band of young men also used to meet in my vestry, and we would kneel around the room, hand clasped in hand, praying in turn for the conversion of other young men, and when we had gone round once we would begin again. This went on, as I told you, for eighteen months.

"Towards the end of that period I set myself with renewed earnestness to preach to professors. For three months I had no word for the unconverted, and some of them began to fear that they were past saving; but during all that time I was constantly urging the church to consider its awful responsibilities, and to become a people prepared for the coming of the Lord. Finally we decided to set apart Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday for special meetings, three each day, to humble ourselves before God and confess our sins.

"On the Thursday morning, at ten o'clock, when we were about to begin the meeting, all my officers rose up in a body, and came to the front, confessing that they had been unfaithful to their duties, and then fell on their knees entreating God to have mercy on them. There grey headed professors of religion were crying aloud salvation, avowing that they had never truly experienced saving grace; members of the church were going to and fro across the room asking forgiveness of those against whom they had trespassed; and it seemed as though the very power of God had come down on the whole assembly. This had not been going on for long, before there was a noise at the door, and we found that the work-people in the neighbourhood had thrown down their tools, torn off their aprons, and were waiting in a dense crowd, that stretched across the street, for admission to the church. "With that hand," said the venerable old man, "I unbarred the door and let them in, and they filled the place, crying aloud for salvation. All the work in the neighbourhood stood still, whilst God, and eternity, and salvation filled every heart and thought. Was I not right when I said, that when the Church is right, the world will come to her pleading to be helped?

"Why," added he, "when Dr. Chapman came to hold a mission in my present church a few months ago we had twenty-seven prayer-meetings weekly, and the results were in proportion; whilst in another church, quite near at hand, with the same evangelist, and without prayer, the results were comparatively small.

"But going back to what I was telling you, we were blessed with some remarkable cases of conversion. There was one man who had been put out over some trivial matter, and had not been in the church for months; but at the invitation of a little girl of twelve he came to the Sunday evening service, and as I gave out the hymn, with the refrain, 'Will you go?' broke in with the words, 'Yes, I am going right now,' and immediately the whole congregation was turned into a Bochim, and on every side strong men were saying, 'We will go, too.' There was another case. A man had gone out of the church eighteen months before, swearing and declaring that he would never enter it again. His neighbours and children said that he never could be converted. The old minister, on the other hand, had faith to claim this hardened soul for Christ with undoubting assurance. He went to his home and said, 'John Pyc, I want you to come to church this afternoon.'

'I HAVE SAID I WON'T, AND I WON'T,' was the wrathful reply, and he came towards the minister in a threatening manner to throw him out of the house, but his arm seemed suddenly paralysed, and from that moment till the Sunday afternoon, three days and nights, he neither ate nor slept. He then sent for the minister and entreated him to pray for him. 'No,' was the reply, 'it is of no use to pray for you till you have retracted your rash vow and promise me to come to church this evening.' At last he yielded. 'I'll come,' he cried, 'Will you pray for me now?' 'Certainly.' They knelt together and he found mercy.

"That evening, he stood up before all the congregation and said, 'No one need tell me there's no hell. I have been in it for eighteen months. You, minister, took my moral boots off eighteen months ago, and I've been in hell ever since; but, thank God, my chains are broken, and I'm free.' I had no need to preach a sermon that night. The conversion of this man became the talk of the neighbourhood; and people came from thirty miles round to see what God had wrought."

This is the kind of revival we need, and the conditions are clear and easy to realise. Why cannot the godly ministers among us get the more earnest of their people to join them in definite and persevering prayer? Why cannot we induce professing Christians everywhere to cleanse themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit? Why cannot we bring all the tithes into God's store-house, and prove Him whether He will not give us the latter rain ere the century comes to a close? Nothing can resist a united, holy, peaceful church.

In Jesus' Arms.

A FEW years ago we were going out to the West Indies—my husband, and I, and our little boy and girl—in one of the Royal Mail steamers.

As it was in the month of June the number of passengers was very limited, and there was only one English family besides ourselves, most of the families being Spanish, and bound for South America; therefore I think we noticed especially this English lady and her four children, who were all in very deep mourning.

This lady's children and ours soon made great friends, and enjoyed many games and races together, for the passengers being so few the second saloon and the long passages were almost deserted. We stopped at Barbadoes en route to our destination (Jamaica), and there we took in a company of a West Indian Regiment—such fine black soldiers, in their picturesque uniforms. They were accompanied by their wives and such a number of little children and sweet little black babies.

These soldiers and their families all lived on the upper deck. They were very merry, very noisy, just like a set of school children out for a holiday!

All went well with them till one night we had a thoroughly tropical downpour of rain, when, poor things, they were half drowned. It was quite wonderful how patiently, indeed cheerfully, they bore what most people would have felt a terrible trial, for everything they possessed—food, clothes, and bedding—must have been soaked by the rain; but we heard nothing but laughter and chatter, as though it were the greatest joke in the world. The captain of the ship took pity on them, and gave them some nice second-class cabins in spite of the stewards, who declared that their habits were so dirty that it would take endless toil to make the cabins again fit for white folk.

Before our voyage was concluded we had become great friends with the lady in black, and learnt why she was making this voyage with her children. She told us she lived in one of the West Indian Islands, where her husband had a cocoa plantation. Her fifth child had become very ill with a terrible disease in one of her eyes. The doctor consulted said that she must be taken to England, so that if necessary an operation might be performed; so the mother and her five children started for England. The doctors there found too much time had been lost, and nothing could be done except to try and relieve the poor child's intense agony. They had all given her up, and told the mother she could only live a few days, and yet week after week passed and the child lingered. The doctors said it was a wonderful case, a regular fight against death; no hope, terrible agony, and yet, though utterly exhausted, the child seemed unable to die. One night the mother, watching beside her bed, heard a wailing sob. Tenderly leaning over her she said, "What is it, my precious one? Is the pain too terrible?"

"Oh, mother," said the child, "I heard the doctors tell you I was going to die; what is it to die? I am afraid to die."

With a heart bursting with grief the mother took the child in her arms, and said, "My darling, dying is only going from mother's arms into Jesus' arms."

"Oh," said the child, "if that is all I am not afraid to die."

The mother laid her back in her little bed. All through the night she lay in quiet sleep, and when the daylight came, and the mother bent over her, she saw the little face lying calm and still, with a look of repose, on the pillow, and knew that her darling was indeed in "Jesus' arms."

God grant that we may all feel that to die is but to go to those tender arms; those loving arms, ever held out in welcome to the oldest sinner, to the youngest babe.

The Gospel Carriage of the Faith Mission of Canada has arrived in Toronto after a three months' trip through North Ontario. Messrs. Robertson, Leckie, Kilborne, and Brownlow report great blessing in the work. Not a few professed to accept Christ, and many of God's people were awakened out of their sleep of indifference to enter upon active service for Him.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, October 11.

"CANST THOU BY SEARCHING FIND OUT GOD?"—
Job. xi. 7.

THERE is but one answer to that question. No one can. The very angels veil their faces before the unsufferable glory of his face.

The firstborn sons of light
Desire in vain his depths to see,
They cannot reach the mystery,
The length, and breadth, and height.

Do not be surprised, then, if there should be matters in the Bible, in your own life, and in the Providential government of the world, which baffle your thought. Remember you are only a little child in an infant class, and it is not likely that you can comprehend the whole system of your instructor. God would cease to be God to us, if we by searching could find Him out.

But though we cannot find out God by the searching of the intellect, we may know Him by love. "He that loveth, knoweth God, for God is Love." There is a way of knowing God, which is hidden from the wise and prudent, and revealed to babes. Seek to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man. Let Christ dwell deep in your heart by faith. Take care to obey all his commandments, and then the Holy God will come into you, and abide. He will give you Himself, and you will know Him, as a little child knows its parent, whom its mind cannot grasp, but its heart loves and trusts and knows. What eye hath not seen is revealed to those who love, for the Spirit searches and reveals the deep things of God. How important it is, then, that we should study God's Word, not with the scrutiny of the intellect, but with the eyes of the heart.

MONDAY, October 12.

"DOTH NOT THE EAR TRY WORDS, EVEN AS THE PALATE TASTETH MEAT?"—Job. xii. 11.

There is no appeal from the verdict of our palate. We know in a moment whether a substance is sweet or bitter, palatable or disagreeable. Now, what the taste is to articles of diet, that the ear is to words, whether of God or man. Especially we can tell in a moment whether the fire of inspiration is burning in them. This is the test which Job proposed to apply to the words of his friends, and all of us may apply to Holy Scripture.

The humble student of the Word of God is sometimes much perplexed and cast down by the assaults which are made on it by scholars and teachers, who do not scruple to question the authorship and authority of large tracts of Scripture. To all these we may apply the test of the purged ear, and it will detect a certain quality in the Bible which is absent everywhere beside. There is a tone in the voice of Scripture, which the child of God must recognise. God is speaking in the prophets, as He spake in his Son. Harken, "the Holy Ghost saith." This is the interesting characteristic in the quotations made in the New Testament from the Old. All the writers in the later Revelation detect the voice of God in the old; to them, it is the Divine utterance through holy lips.

Ask that the Lord may touch your ears, that they may discern by a swift intuition the voice of the Good Shepherd from that of strangers. It is one of the characteristics of his sheep that they know his voice, and follow Him, whilst they flee from the voice of strangers.

TUESDAY, October 13.

"THOUGH HE SLAY ME, YET WILL I TRUST IN HIM."
—Job. xiii. 15.

This was a noble expression, which has been appropriated by thousands in every subsequent age. In every friendship there is a probation, during which we narrowly watch the actions of another, as indicating the nature of his soul; but after a while we get to such intimate knowledge and confidence, that we read and know his inner secret. We have passed from the outer court into the Holy Place of fellowship. We seem familiar with every nook and cranny of our friend's nature. And, then, it is comparatively unimportant how he appears to act, we know him.

So it is in respect of God. At first we know Him through the testimony of others, and on the evidence of Scripture; but as time passes, with its ever-deepening experiences of what God is, with those opportunities of converse that arise during years of prayer and communion, we get to know Him as He is and to trust Him implicitly. And when that point has been reached and passed, nothing afterwards can greatly move us. Instead of looking at God from the standpoint of his acts, we look at his dealings with us and all men from the standpoint of his heart. Though He put us on the altar, as Abraham did Isaac, and take the knife to slay us, we trust Him. If we die, it is to pass into a richer life. If He seem to forget and forsake us, it is only in appearance. His heart is yearning over us more than ever. God cannot do a thing which is not perfectly loving and wise and good.

WEDNESDAY, October 14.

"ALL THE DAYS OF MY WARFARE WOULD I WAIT, TILL MY RELEASE SHOULD COME."—Job xiv. 14.

The Lord Jesus has chosen us to be his soldiers. We are in the midst of a great campaign, let us strive above all things to please Him. Amongst other things, let us be sure not to entangle ourselves in the affairs of this life. What purpose could a soldier serve who insisted on taking all his household goods with him on the march!

There is no pause in the warfare. We can never, like Gideon's soldiers, throw ourselves on the bank and quaff the water at our leisure. Every bush may hide a sharp-shooter, every brake an ambuscade. It becomes us to watch and pray, to keep on our harness of armour, to be on the alert for our Captain's voice. We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against the hosts of wicked spirits in the heavenly places; and we need to take the whole armour of God that we may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand.

But the release will come at last. When the soldier has fought the good fight, the time of his departure will come, and he will go in to receive the crown which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give in that day. "Come," said the dying Havelock to his son, "and see how a Christian can die." Sometimes it demands more of a soldier's courage to wait than to charge. Remember that long waiting on the field of Waterloo, when the day passed from morning to evening. If you can do nothing else, wait. Be steadfast, immovable: lying still to suffer, to bear, to endure. This is fighting of the noblest sort.

THURSDAY, October 15.

"THOU RESTRAINEST PRAYER BEFORE GOD."—
Job xv. 4.

Job's friends were bent on discovering the cause of his sufferings in some secret failure and declension. This is why Eliphaz accused him so groundlessly. They did not know of those secret habits of intercession described in the first chapter. But this charge is eminently true of some professing Christians.

They restrain private prayer.—The closet door is too seldom shut behind them, or it is kept shut for too brief a period. They do not give themselves time to get into the mid-current of intercession and be borne forward by it whither it will. The voice of the Holy Spirit is barely able to assert itself amid the hubbub of voices within. They are so taken up with speaking of the Lord, or working for Him, that they slur over private audiences with Himself.

They restrain social prayer.—Their minister never sees them in the gatherings for intercession on behalf of the work of the church and the salvation of the lost. They forsake the assembling of themselves with the saints.

They restrain family prayer.—Surely we ought to gather at least once a day around the family altar. Where Abraham reared his tent he erected the altar. A prayerless home is apt to become a worldly and unhappy one. There is no such keystone to the arch of home-life and home-love as the habit of family worship.

How foolish, how short sighted, how sinful, it is to restrain prayer. What wonder that your soul is famished when you fail to feed it, or impoverished when you neglect commerce with heaven!

FRIDAY, October 16.

"I WAS AT EASE, AND HE BRAKE ME ASUNDER."—
Job xvi. 12.

The other day, it was Sunday morning, two sparrows got from the leads of the church into the vestry, which has a lofty glass skylight. They flew up against this skylight as though to break through it to the open heaven, and then round and round the room. They were desperately afraid of myself and the verger, whom I had called, not realising that we were as anxious as they were to get them out again into the air. The only thing we could do to help them was to keep them from alighting to rest; so with long brooms and soft missiles we constantly drove them from every cornice and picture-frame on which they alighted, till they fell exhausted, and with panting breasts, to the ground. Then we captured them and set them free. They might have said many a time, in the course of that encounter, "we were at ease, and they brake us asunder, they also set us up for their mark." But if they review that episode now, they doubtless see the love which forbade them to rest anywhere in the vestry, because it desired to give them their fullest liberty.

So with Job. God would not allow him to rest in anything short of the best, and therefore he broke up his nest. Is not this the key to his dealings with you? Oh, believe that behind the perpetual change and displacement of your life God is leading you into the glorious liberty of his children.

SATURDAY, October 17.

"YET SHALL THE RIGHTEOUS HOLD ON HIS WAY."—
Job xvii. 9.

When the real life of God enters the soul, it persists there. Genuine religion is shown by its power of persistence. Anything short of a God-given faith will sooner or later fail. It may run well for a time, but its pace will inevitably slacken till it comes to a stand. The youths faint and are weary, and the young men utterly fall. The seed sown on the rock springs up quickly, and as quickly dies down and perishes. But where there is the rooting and founding in God, there is a perpetuity and persistence which outlives all storms and survives all resistance.

You shall hold on your way because Jesus holds you in his strong hand. He is your Shepherd, has vanquished all your foes, and you shall never perish.

You shall hold on your way because the Father has designed through you to glorify his Son, and there must be no gaps in his crown where jewels ought to be.

You shall hold on your way because the Holy Spirit has deigned to make you his residence and home; and He is within you the perennial spring of a holy life.

Greater is He that is in you than all that be against you.

By all hell's host withstood,
We all hell's host o'erthrow,
And conquering still by Jesus' blood,
We on to victory go.

"The Lord is Thy Keeper."

(Psalm cxix. 5.)

YOUR Bible Searcher to-day is about the things you have to keep. But if the safety of any of us depended upon our own keeping, sad would be our condition! It is because the Almighty God is our Keeper that we are able, if we trust in Him, to go on our way rejoicing.

There is one sweet little Psalm which some have called "The KEEPING Psalm," and it is a very suitable title for it. I want you each to search it out for yourselves, and notice how safe those are who have God for their Keeper. The Psalm I mean is near a neighbour to Psalm cxix., that I think you will very easily find it, and it will help you to feel that the keeping which we have to attend to is only possible because of the assurance, "The Lord is thy Keeper."

May every little searcher by the grace of God change the "thy" into a "my," and be able to say truthfully, "The Lord is my keeper"; just as in another beautiful Psalm you are taught to say, "The Lord is my Shepherd" (Psa. xxiii. 1). How pleased the tiny tots in our family are to say, of their little possessions, "It is mine."

And even the very weakest, and feeblest, and youngest of God's believing children can lay claim to the most great and wonderful possessions, and say, "They are mine, for Christ is mine."

The tiny animals in the ark were just as safe as the lion and the elephant, because God shut them in. And so the little child who trusts in Jesus is as safe as St. Paul, and St. Peter, and St. John, and Luther, and Bunyan, and Wesley, and Whitefield, and all other the many honoured saints of God who have either "crossed the flood" or are "crossing now."

I do hope you are one of the number of those "kept" by Jesus. If so, you will delight to show your love to Him in the way He has Himself appointed, "If ye love Me KEEP my commandments" (John xv. 15). L. A. B.

The Gospel Bells.

DEAR children,—You remember our last little talk about bells in general? I want you now to listen to the different tones in the Gospel peal. We often sing—

The Gospel bells are ringing
Over land from sea to sea.

What are they? We may first notice attention bells. You know when the town-crier has something important to say he rings a big bell to draw your attention, and generally commences with "This is to give notice." If you turn to Proverbs viii. 1-7, you will find the attention notes of the Gospel peal. Remember the voice is that of Jesus, "Who of God is made unto us wisdom" (1 Cor. i. 30). Have you yet given heed to these notes? It is indeed dangerous not to, for read what the same voice says in Prov. i. 24-32 to those who have refused his call and contrast verse 33, "Whoso hearkeneth unto Me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil."

Then we also hear guiding bells. Amongst a flock of sheep we often find one with a bell round its neck, a kind of guiding note for the others to follow. Remember Jesus' voice will be our guiding note through life, leading us in the right way if we will only listen to it and follow it (see Is. xxx. 21). His sheep know his voice (John x. iv.) Do you?

Again, there are summoning bells. They sound out in daily life. The church bells summon us to service; the school-bell bids us prepare for our lessons. Away in one of the towns of Norway is what they call a bell tower. When there is a fire in the neighbourhood someone runs to the tower and rings the bell to summon the fireman's aid. God has his summoning bells among the Gospel peal—his calls to particular service. Paul heard his (see Acts xvi. 9, 10). Have you heard and obeyed yours? There is many a worker in a foreign land to-day who heard the call to mission-service in youth. Remember those who will be with Christ in heaven are "called, chosen, and faithful" (Rev. xvii. 14).

Now, we must not forget the sweet musical bells. Away on the Swiss mountains you may hear the tinkling of many bells at the same time from one flock of goats or many cattle, yet there is no jarring or discordant sound. What is the secret of it? The bells are so selected that the tone of one harmonises with the other. The true Gospel peal rings always with harmonious, musical tones; let them be re-echoed in your lives. Do not let any discordant tones spoil the musical harmony of your hearts and homes. Remember it was when the trumpeters and singers were as one to make one sound that "the glory of the Lord filled the house of the Lord" (2 Chron. v. 13, 14). When each one seeks in all things to please the Lord, there cannot be the sound of strife and discord.

I cannot close without drawing your attention to the solemn tones of the warning bells. I suppose we all have heard the story of the warning bell on the Inchcape rock that was cut by Sir Ralph the Rover, and how afterwards he lost his life on that rock owing to the warning notes being silent. How dangerous it is to silence the warning notes, even though we do not like to hear them (see Jer. vii. 13-15). God warns us by his judgments (Psa. xix. 9-11) and bids us sound out the warning note to others (Ezekiel xxxiii. 7).

Give heed to the warning,
Ere life's sunny morning
Be closed in the night of the grave.

Do not only listen to the Gospel bells, but ring them out in your lives, so that their notes may be heard by others, and whatever your occupation in life may be, be also a Gospel bell-ringer. May the Lord use you much in his dear service.—Your loving friend in Him, NETA.

THINGS TO KEEP.

Answer the following questions, and state in each case the verse in which the answer is given.

Children under eight answer any four questions, under twelve any eight.

1. Something to be kept holy? (Ex. xx.)
2. Something the keeping of which brings great reward? (Ps. xix.)
3. Something to be "kept back" from? (Psa. xix.)
4. Something which the Psalmist "made haste and delayed not" to keep? (Psa. cxix.)
5. A door to be kept? (Ps. cxli.)
6. Something to "keep with diligence"? (Prov. iv.)
7. Something a good son will keep? (Prov. vi.)
8. Something to buy, but never sell? (Prov. xiii.)
9. Some one to keep pure? (1 Tim. v.)
10. Something to keep without spot? (1 Tim. vi.)
11. Something Paul kept? (2 Tim. iv.)
12. Something to keep yourselves from? (1 John v.)
13. Something to keep yourselves in? (Jude.)

DEAR UNCLE TOM,—Yesterday (September 15) it was a great day for the Hindoos. They had a large procession in honour of one of their gods named "Ganputty." In front of the procession was a bullock-cart, with a pole in the centre, on which men were performing. Next came a number of men dancing with bells and the tom-toms, and then there was a boy carrying a spear, and two more boys carrying swords. Then came the little image of Ganputty and his house. They went all round the bazaar, and then down to the sea, where they deposited it. LLEWELLYN DALE. Upper Colaba, Bombay.

The Rest-Giver.

Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.—Matt. xi. 28, 29.

NOT only when the broken law's loud thunder
The guilt of our transgressions doth attest;
Not only as, with hearts all torn asunder,
We came to Him at first to find our rest;

Not only when the touch of the Eternal
The first faint answer of our spirits stirred;
Not only in love's springtide glad and vernal,
The gracious "Come to Me" can yet be heard.

Not only when, the olden chains all riven
Which bound our fettered spirits to the clod,
We caught the music of the sweet "forgiven,"
And straightway found our peace, the peace of God:

Not then alone, but ever on before us,
Beckons the hand which we have learnt to know;
A gracious presence casts its shadow o'er us,
Familiar echoes reach us, soft and low.

"Come unto Me." Not for the wanderers only
The wakening accents of that call divine;
Nay, but in every moment dark and lonely,
Believe the heavenly message still is thine.

Are we not heavy-laden oft and weary,
Although no weight of sin upon us lies?
Breathes there on earth a heart as wholly dreary
As thine, if thou should'st miss his tender eyes?

Hast thou no weight of care, no dark foreboding?
Is there no yearning which thou hidest well?
"Come unto Me and rest," thy griefs unloading,
Confide the wish it seems thou could'st not tell.

From aching of the frame, so weak though willing,
From love's sweet service when we love it best,
From this poor world's response, so slow, so chilling,
"All ye that labour, come to Me and rest."

Rest in the love so strong, so true, so tender;
Rest in the arms outstretched upon the tree,
Rest 'neath the yoke; rest in his will's great splendour;
Rest in his home at last: "Come unto Me."

LUCY A. BENNETT.

Rev. John McNeill at Work.

THIS doughty evangelist has fully buckled on his harness for another winter's work. His autumn holiday was partly spent amid the bracing surroundings of Machrahanish, with its far-famed golf course, on the western shore of the peninsula of Kintyre. We believe he yielded to the fascination of the game; with his muscular equipment, and keen, clear eye, he must have sent many a ball whistling to its mark. Anyhow, let us trust that the Atlantic breezes and the release from mental strain have hardened him physically for the toil of the coming months. When Mr. McNeill is at work he is all at it, from top to toe. Verily he earns his bread by the sweat of his brow, and few public servants more richly deserve their holiday interval.

We have already recorded his brief but memorable missions in the far northern islands of Orkney and Shetland. Another short preliminary effort was that at Crieff, in central Scotland, the week before last, when many were attracted by his Bible readings and addresses given in the Free Church of the town. The winter months he evidently means to devote to some of the English industrial centres, and Warrington's turn has come first. It has a working population of over 50,000, and among its staple industries are the manufacture of wire-work and of soap, and the ancient, useful trade of tanning. This we believe is Mr. McNeill's first mission in Lancashire; judging from the aspect of the opening meetings on Sunday, the homely hearty character of the people will accord well with the peculiar genius of the evangelist.

The entire series of two weeks' mission services are to be held in Parr Hall, a new, spacious, and attractive-looking place of concourse, a recent gift to the town by one of its public-spirited citizens. A meeting of workers on Saturday evening was largely attended. The writer, having just arrived in the town, chanced to look into the hall on the way from the station, in time to find Mr. McNeill closing an address, into which he had evidently thrown heart and soul, as he sat down mopping the perspiration from his brow. His final sentence was all that the visitor heard, but it is to be hoped it will prove prophetic; the words were "God will give you the victory."

The opening meeting on Sunday afternoon saw the hall completely filled, with some standing. The mission is a united one, and on the platform were several local pastors, while a large well-trained choir filled the orchestra behind. Mr. McNeill very speedily places himself en rapport with a fresh community by some pleasant introductory words about the scope and nature of the mission. On Sunday afternoon he defended the idea of religious revival from the unthinking charge of a bad sensationalism. How welcome, he said, is a revival in health, or in trade. The Church ought never to slip back into the winter of sloth and unfruitfulness, but she does. Thank God for a springtime of grace and revival in our hearts, by which they are warmed and begin to bring forth Christian fruit. After describing the course of the services, Mr. McNeill made an appeal to employers to let their helpers attend the meetings. "If you have not made your fortune by half-past seven in the evening, you are not going to make it that day. Shut up your shops, and let the young fellows and girls come to the meetings. I have been astonished, in connection with a movement like this, to find Christian men who will do nothing to bring their assistants under its influence. I would not give much for Christianity like that."

The text of the discourse was Ps. cix. 59, 60, "I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies; I made haste and delayed not to keep thy commandments." In the hands of the evangelist this practical confession of the Psalmist became a splendid and "up-to-date" Gospel text. The divisions were: (1) This man thought for himself;

(2) he thought about himself; (3) he was a practical thinker; (4) he was prompt in action. It would need a detailed report of the address to convey a true idea of the wealth of cogent appeal and powerful home-thrust that was packed into each division, all leading up to the point of spiritual decision and conversion. "Until your feet are turned you are not turned. Some of you have only got this length in the matter of salvation: on the Sunday, or at a meeting like this, you turn your head and seem to listen to the preacher's message; but on the Monday it is evident that your feet are not turned, and you are still on the old hell-ward path. God give you the courage to turn. You have thought perhaps that a Christian is a weak, unmanly fellow. This afternoon the boot is on the other leg. The real cowardice is to live the life that some of you are leading; for deep down in your soul you know that you are wrong and that the Christian has the best of it." Under the spell of an earnest summons to instantaneous decision for Christ, who is the great "Turning-point," the awed congregation were dismissed.

A still larger audience was packed into the hall in the evening after the usual church services were over. Again the evangelist took the people into his confidence, and invited their co-operation in the distribution of neat cardboard tickets among those whom it was desirable to see at the meetings. If they would only show as much interest in the mission as people do in a contested election, God would make it worth their while.

One of the familiar New Testament narratives was the theme of the evening's discourse—the healing of the man sick of the palsy, in response to the faith of the four friends who carried him to Jesus' feet. The story afforded many pegs on which to hang forceful exhortations alike to saint and sinner. As to the querulous tale that some aged folk are fond of telling about "the good old times," he declared that the grandest revivals are ahead of the Church, and not behind her. People will be constrained to say, as did the Jews when they saw the miracle that Jesus wrought on the palsied man, "We never saw it on this fashion." Believers were invited to emulate the zeal and the faith of the four men who brought their friend to Jesus to be healed. "I have been round the world, and I have seen a great many things, but I have never seen four men carrying another to a Gospel preaching. I have seen four men carrying a fifth to the hospital, and I have seen four men in a particular uniform carrying a fifth to the gaol. About the last time I saw that, the fifth was a woman, and the four were not enough. Ah! you cannot afford to laugh at that. It is one of those awful sights that, alas! are but too common. But I have never seen it on this line. How these men must have loved their helpless friend. As our Scotch poet says,

The lowe o' love mak's labour licht.

Surely these four men were the real founders of the Society of Christian Endeavour; may we be like them. The great lack of the Church to-day is not the lack of learning but the lack of love." The closing appeal to the unsaved was very pathetic and moving. "Receive the forgiveness of sins from the Saviour's own blessed mouth. In receiving it your poor crushed soul shall rise to its feet with a new life and new strength, never to sink again into the clutch of sin and death."

There seems no room for doubt that Parr Hall will be the scene of many crowded and fateful gatherings during this and next week. We trust that our readers will uphold by continuous prayer the hands of the evangelist and his local co-workers. The Warrington folk believe in the value of good bold advertisement, and have made the meetings widely known; but they will value the intercessions of Christian friends in other places.

It may be well to note here Mr. McNeill's further engagements for the winter season, so that his many friends may follow his movements with an intelligent interest:—October 18 to 30, Middlesbrough; November 8 to 20, Bradford; November 22 to December 4, Blackburn; December 6 to 13, Preston; January 10 to 31, Manchester; February 7 to 19, York; March 7 to 28, Liverpool.

Mission at Dunfermline.

THE United Evangelistic Committee of Dunfermline are holding their twenty-second annual Conference, and in connection with it they have this year invited Major Whittle and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. C. Stebbins to conduct a fortnight's mission.

On Saturday preliminary addresses were given by Rev. Dr. Robson, of Perth, on "Complete in Christ," and by Rev. A. Badenoch, of Dunfermline, on "The Power of the Holy Spirit." At a brief and informal meeting, presided over by Mr. Walker, the Provost, a few impromptu remarks were made by different speakers, and Major Whittle and Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins were introduced to the congregation.

The meeting then adjourned to the Abbey Church, where Major Whittle spoke on "Enabled for Service," basing his address on 1 Tim. i. 12: "And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, appointing me to his service."—(R.V.) The power by which he was enabled was of course the Holy Spirit. Three points were dwelt upon: (1) Christ revealed in him. Gal. i. 15, 16; iii. 16, 29; (2) Christ living in him. Gal. v. 25; the walk shows the life. One of his illustrations was about an old lady who lived in North Carolina when the line dividing that State from Virginia was revised, and the part of North Carolina in which she lived was added to Virginia. She rejoiced in the change because she had always felt that the climate of Virginia was the better, and now she had the advantage of Virginian air. Yet she had not moved from her former place. (3) The Holy Spirit is the only power for service (Gal. iii. 1, 2; Acts ix. 17-22; xiii. 2-4, 9, 52). An evangelist was speaking on this subject and a young woman was heard to say, "The Holy Ghost; the Holy Ghost; the Holy Ghost." She went away filled, and her family were all converted; and her testimony spread until the whole region was moved and many hundreds declared themselves Christians.

On Sabbath morning, a meeting of workers took place, at which a spirit of earnest prayer was manifested, for there are many devoted soul-seekers in the churches at Dunfermline.

In the evening the first great meeting was held in Queen Anne's Church, originally built for the saintly Ralph Erskine, whose statue stands outside it. Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins added much to the enjoyment and effectiveness of all the meetings, and on this occasion, Miss Crosby's hymn, "Saved by Grace," and the beautiful words from Revelation, "God shall wipe all tears from their eyes" (Christian Choir, Nos. 134 and 276) were a fitting introduction to Major Whittle's address on 1 Tim. i. 14: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ was exceeding abundant with faith and love, which is in Christ Jesus." He dwelt first on sin and judgment, because "we cannot see grace until we see judgment." Major Whittle began by saying that away on the Western prairie, reading the sonnets of that good man Ralph Erskine, he little expected to preach the Gospel in the church fragment with memories of the faithful servant who there lifted up Jesus Christ and Him crucified.

The address was closed with a striking incident in the life of another good man, President Lincoln. At every step of the story the truths it illustrated were vividly pressed upon the sympathy and conscience of the hearers. These workers and those concerned as to their own condition adjourned to another part of the building, when the way of life was further expounded, and some expressed their desire to give themselves to God and to receive his salvation.

In spite of gales of wind and torrents of rain, good numbers were gathered in, and several cases entered the local Refuge and Permanent Home at Southsea.

Mr. F. Anderson's Farewell.

A KEEN interest is naturally felt in Y.M.C.A. circles in the fresh development of aggressive missionary work among the educated natives of India, resulting from the happy co-operation of the S.V.M.U. with the Y.M.C.A. in devising means to reach the students in the Indian colleges. Thus, the farewell meeting, held at Exeter Hall, on Friday evening, under the presidency of Sir George Williams, was marked by much enthusiasm. Mr. Frank Anderson, to whom farewell was said, is leaving for work among Bombay students. Within the last two years he has been much used of God among students at home, and hence his future service is anticipated with hopefulness.

After a season of earnest commendatory prayer, led by Messrs. M. H. Hodder and A. A. Head—

Mr. W. H. SEAGRAM, in the course of an introductory statement, said that for a long time the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. has had India on its heart, and in 1892 Mr. McCann was sent out for two years; and later on Mr. Pringle was sent for three years to act as secretary of the Bombay Association. Now, however, a further advance is being inaugurated. The Council has found in Mr. Frank Anderson one who, it is believed, is well suited for the work of travelling secretary in the Bombay Presidency. He has been doing a great deal of work in connection with the Students' Volunteer Missionary Movement, on almost similar lines to that of the Y.M.C.A., and now that he has placed his services at the disposal of the National Council for work among the educated young men of India, we look for blessed results. We welcome Mr. Anderson here to-night, and in sending him out we desire to wish him "God speed" in the work undertaken for Christ among the young students of our Eastern Empire.

The CHAIRMAN warmly welcomed the prospects of fresh and sustained service among the students of India. Our American friends have been ahead of us in this matter, but now the Y.M.C.A. will have its representative among the 8000 students in the colleges of Bombay, and sooner or later, he hoped, in the other Presidencies. He trusted earnest and continued prayer would be made for Mr. Anderson in his new field of labour.

The secretary of the C.M.S., Rev. H. E. Fox, spoke of the tremendous responsibility of the work to which God has called this representative of the Y.M.C.A. He will have to deal with one of the quickest-witted races on the earth, and in himself he is no match for them save as clothed in the Divine armour, girt with the sword of the Spirit, and strengthened by the Holy Spirit in the inner man. Let him go forth conscious that we at home, who cannot go, are praying for him.

Canon TAYLOR SMITH said that his heart was full of sadness and gladness—gladness that India was to have such a servant of Christ—sadness that there is no such man for West Africa. Probably, like other workers, Mr. Anderson would be troubled by many opposers; the newspapers would write him down, and he would receive anonymous letters. His (the Canon's) advice was—Take both letters and articles to the Lord, and then burn them and forget them.

Bishop TUGWELL described the keen interest with which, coming home from the foreign field, he was watching the development of home mission effort in various directions. He longed to see the Y.M.C.A. at work in Lagos and other West African coast towns. There is a wide field for it, though at first many difficulties might have to be faced.

A PARTING MESSAGE.

Mr. FRANK ANDERSON, who was enthusiastically received and who spoke with considerable emotion, began by warning his friends against the danger of expecting too much at first. The strength and stay of the work is God, whose power is without limit, but there are limitations in the weakness of the human instrument and in the mighty obstacles raised by the prejudice of men and the malice of the prince of darkness. Hence, if the half of the native students are not reported to be converted within a month or two, friends would not be disappointed. God works slowly though surely. Another danger is that the emotionalism of such a farewell meeting may pass away, and the promise to pray constantly for the undertaking may be forgotten. He trusted his friends and helpers would be on their guard against this tendency.

Three things he wished to say in parting. First, let this coming winter be marked by a deeper work in every Y.M.C.A. for foreign missions. Second, he would emphasize the power of prayer. The S.V.M.U. itself is a standing memorial of the power of intercession. There is not a single officer of the movement who, looking back on its four years' work, does not know it is due to prayer. The Conference held at Liverpool has had many remarkable results. Take one: Eleven students came from Holland to represent their country, where rationalism is rife. Special prayer was made for Holland. On returning they set to work to organise a Students' Christian Union, and a conference, attended by fifty-seven students, has been held to inaugurate the movement, promising a new and deeper spirit in the ministry and more missionaries for the future. Then, again, the great strength of such a work lies in the use of the Word of God; yet this message must be delivered by living witnesses who manifest its power in their lives. Hence he asked prayer that he and all co-workers might be living embodiments of the faith they teach, and that, should opponents arise, they may find no fault in them save as touching the law of God.

Let us remember that we are limited in our time for preaching, and the heathen are limited in their time for hearing; that only you can preach to your contemporaries; that the evangelization of the world in this generation is the only possible evangelization of the world that you or I can expect to accomplish. Let me remind you of the passion in the heart of Christ which still remains unsatisfied; let me ring out the fact that to-day there are hundreds of miles on this earth over which you may journey, and "never see the face of a Christian or even of a man who has had an opportunity to become one!" Let me entreat you that as you pray "Thy Kingdom come," you will resolve on a new devotion to prayer and action wherewith to secure its speedy fulfilment. Let me pray you, above all, to wait quietly and patiently for the Spirit until you hear his voice and feel anew the Power of his Presence.

Seven representative leaders in service for young men—Rev. A. Newbery, going to somewhat similar work at Calcutta; Mr. Henry Conder, president of the Bombay Y.M.C.A.; Mr. T. A. Denny, Dr. J. H. Gladstone; Prof. Sathianadhan, chairman of the Indian National Y.M.C.A.; Mr. L. D. Wishard, Foreign Secretary of the American Y.M.C.A.; and Mr. D. McConaughy followed with brief hearty words of "God speed" and genial well wishes for the new service on which Mr. Anderson is about to enter. Ere the proceedings closed Mr. Eugene Stock once more commended to God this young labourer and his work in the far East.

Dr. A. J. Gordon's "Life."*

IT is some consolation for the loss of this thrice beloved servant of God to have such a worthy record of his earthly career. Without reservation, we can say that it is the most ably written and the most inspiring biography we have ever read. And so it ought to be. Such men as the late Boston pastor are few and far between. A fellow-minister closely associated with him for many years used no language of exaggeration when he said at the memorial service, "I never expect to see his like; I never knew his like." There are many, less intimate in life with our translated friend, who can honestly say the same.

The excellence of the subject does not detract from, but rather enhances, the performance of the historian. Dr. Gordon's life demanded unusual treatment, and this volume will not disappoint the highest expectations. It is a great thing to have the life story of such a man written from the interior point of view. Making all due allowance for filial bias, we feel that here is a truthful picture of the man in all his moods, tenses, and relations. There is evident sympathy, too, between the theological convictions of father and son. As to the literary gifts and graces displayed by the biographer, scarcely any praise could be too high. These alone would make the book eminently readable. Happy the son who had such a father to write about; happy the father with a son gifted enough to do his task so splendidly. Mr. Ernest Gordon deserves, and will have, the thanks of thousands of Christians on both sides of the sea.

The things that first and mainly struck those who came into public contact with Dr. Gordon were the saintliness of his demeanour and the unction of his speech. His face was the speaking index of a heavenly life, and his words were in correspondence. Even when one might intellectually dissent from some of his utterances, there was the feeling that Dr. Gordon lived so near the heart and ear of God that he was almost certain to be right. Through these fascinating pages we see other and less patent aspects of the man and his life-work. His fidelity to conviction, chastened by an overflowing charity and an all-embracing pity; his pastoral devotion; his keen but well-restrained sense of humour; his open-mindedness in the candid consideration of new and unpopular views of truth; his wide outlook on the world's spiritual needs and claims; his self-sacrificing care for the restoration and relief of "wrecked" specimens of humanity—all these things are set forth so as to impress the reader with the desirableness and duty of following his example.

If every Gospel minister would read and assimilate this volume, the tone of our pulpits would be wonderfully lifted up. If Christian young men generally—or young women either—were to make a study of it, there would be very marked results in the spiritual life of the next generation. It is altogether a noble and notable book.

Aggressive Work.—23.

WHILST crossing a bridge at a watering place this season I came upon two well-dressed men standing conversing. I stopped, and handing a Gospel booklet to each, I asked if they would accept them. They took them, and I then asked if their souls were saved. One replied, "We are both church officers and were just talking about the financial position of our church, and wondering how we were going to raise an amount of money needed by expenses."

"But," I said, "are your souls saved? You cannot be in a right position unless they are." There was silence for a moment, and then the same man remarked that Paul was not sure upon that question, for he said he was afraid of becoming a castaway after preaching to others.

I replied that Paul was not in that passage talking about his soul's salvation. If they would examine the context in Corinthians they would find he was looking to his reward and crown. He had left his salvation with Jesus long before. They were unable to reply to this, and I therefore said, "Now, gentlemen, allow me to leave this with you, that you have no right whatever to be church officers unless you are saved men."

At the same seaside place a middle-aged gentleman was standing with his back against a railing listening to a band of music. I offered him a booklet and asked him if he would accept it. He took it and thanked me. I then said, "Is your soul saved, sir?" He answered, "I would not like to say it was." "But," I replied, "I think you would like to be able to say it was"; and he answered "Yes." He went on to speak in a very friendly manner, and informed me in confidence that he had always lived a respectable and good kind of life. At the same time he had held office in his church for many years. He had tried to do good and thought he had been the means of good to others, besides attending carefully to his religious duties. Notwithstanding all this he was not at rest, for he felt he was wanting somewhere and knew not where.

We had a most interesting conversation, and he listened very attentively as I endeavoured to meet his case by showing him his lost condition, and how he might at once obtain rest and peace and joy through believing in Jesus. We parted, but as we did not meet again I know not what the result of the interview was.

Passing along a handsome road on the outskirts, containing a number of large houses, I observed a considerable portion of a stone wall broken through, as though there had been an accident. Whilst looking at it a gentleman came out of the gate of a house, and I asked him what had happened to the wall. He explained that a horse had taken to flight down the hill with a cart-load of bricks and dashed through the wall, yet the poor horse was hardly hurt at all.

I remarked how strange it was that such a strong-looking wall should so easily go. "Ah," he replied, "it was rotten inside." I said, "How like that is to so many people, who are all right in appearance, but rotten at heart. They are attentive to religious observances and very respectable before the world, but unconverted and therefore lost." I then asked, "Are you saved, sir?" He gave a very unsatisfactory answer and walked away.

Some years ago I met an inspector of police at the Queen's Dock here, and talked with him about eternal truths. Not long afterwards we met again, but this time there was a wonderful change in his manner; he was quite anxious about salvation, and with tears in his eyes confessed what a sinner he had been. He said he was sure the Lord had sent me to him upon the previous occasion, for he then felt he was a sinner. We had quite a refreshing conversation, and it was evident he was not far from the kingdom. We met several times afterwards, and eventually he became a bright and joyous Christian and an active worker in the vineyard.

The C.M.S. Farewells.

TWO remarkably interesting meetings were held last week in Exeter Hall in connection with the departure for the foreign field of 149 missionaries. Of these seventy-one are returning to work after furlough, and seventy-eight are recruits. The returning missionaries include two bishops (Tugwell and Fyson), twenty-six clergymen, one doctor, seven evangelists, twelve ladies, and twenty-three wives of missionaries. The recruits include twenty-three clergymen, five doctors, twelve evangelists, thirty-five ladies (of whom two are fully qualified doctors), and three wives. More than two-thirds of the clergy are University men; thus, Oxford sends four, Cambridge nine, and Dublin three. The remaining seven are from the C.M. College. One interesting fact connected with the new missionaries is that the maintenance of all of them has been provided for without recourse to the general funds of the Society.

Tuesday evening was devoted to Egypt, Palestine, Ceylon, China, Japan, and British Columbia. After the opening address by the chairman, Sir John H. Kennaway, the missionaries were introduced—the returning labourers leading the way.

Bishop Fyson spoke of the new diocese to which he was going. It is entirely a C.M.S. diocese. It is as large as Ireland, having a population of 700,000, including the aboriginal race of the Ainu. The work had been already laid on a Scriptural and evangelical basis, but he wanted their prayers in order that wisdom and understanding might be given to him.

Rev. H. CARLESS, returning to Persia, made events in the East the burden of his brief address, affirming that the church of God had much to do with the Eastern question. "Give the Gospel to the Mohammedans" was his solution for what he called this terrible, this awful Eastern question.

Rev. J. D. SIMMONS, the veteran worker in Ceylon, came next; and, while admitting that Ceylon was the best-manned portion of the C.M.S. field, pointed out that he was the only ordained missionary in his district for 170,000 souls.

Archdeacon COLLINSON, returning to British Columbia, usefully directed our minds away from difficulties, and towards the "All-Power" on the side of the Christian worker. If they failed they might be quite sure that it was not because of the Lord's unfaithfulness, but of theirs.

Rev. J. S. COLLINS, returning to South China, the last of the group, spoke, not of the reinforcements going forth, but of those stations which were not reinforced. He rejoiced in the four going to Si-Chuan, but there ought to be forty; and upon this fact he built a powerful appeal for recruits.

Four representatives of the new missionaries were next introduced. Mr. S. PAINTER, an earnest-minded young worker, who six weeks ago was in a City house, and is now bound for Japan, spoke for the business men, taking as the text of his remarks the question, "Where can you make the best investment?" Some sought it in business, in athletics, in learning. But there were others who recognised that Christ had the first claim upon their lives, and they were they who made the best investment. Rev. W. R. GRAY, a son of the late Rev. W. Gray, so well known as secretary of the C.M.S., who is going to Japan, spoke for the Universities, and mentioned as a side-motive which led him to offer for missionary service, that he was impressed with the thought of the great vexation and disappointment which the Lord must feel at the poor response from our Universities and schools to his last command. He felt that the best contribution he could make towards remedying that was to go himself, and there he was ready to do so.

Dr. A. C. HALL, who is bound for Egypt, spoke for the medical men, and urged each one to ask God whether they are living the life and doing the work they were here for.

Rev. J. HAMILTON, a clergyman who has grown grey in service at home, yet is now going out to the foreign field, naturally addressed himself to the home clergy. Many had, he knew, on their knees considered the question whether they should go out or work at home, but there were others who had never fairly faced the question, and to them he appealed with peculiar force.

Wednesday evening was devoted to Africa, Persia, and India. Col. R. Williams, who presided, opened the proceedings with a brief address.

Canon J. TAYLOR SMITH (who was received with enthusiasm) spoke first, choosing as his text the words: "Howbeit when He, the Spirit of Truth, is come"—and He has come—"He will guide you unto all truth." He emphasised these three points: the guidance of the Holy Spirit, the call from Jesus Christ, and the response to be made by his people. Rev. W. J. HUMPHREY, also returning to West Africa, pleaded for volunteers for the Hinterland of Sierra Leone. There was only one-fortieth of the British Protectorate with any missionaries at all; the remaining thirty nine-fortieths were absolutely without. Mr. P. H. SHAUL, representing the Associated Band of Evangelists, pleaded for more workers. Rev. F. BOWERS represented Travancore and Cochin where for the past seven years he has been the only European missionary amongst five hundred thousand Mohammedans, besides hundreds of thousands of others outside the Christian religion. Rev. J. STONE put in an urgent plea for the vast Telugu-speaking districts.

Representatives of the missionaries going out for the first time: Rev. W. L. COX, representing the Universities, spoke chiefly to any Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin men present. He asked for another Oxford man to come out next year to join the settlement of Oxford men at Sierra Leone. Mr. L. B. BUTCHER, of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union, gave encouraging statistics respecting the progress of the work, and asked for their prayers that, as the Union grew in strength and influence, its members might not lose spiritual power. Rev. W. J. WILLIAMSON represented the C.M.S. Collège, and said he wanted that night calmly to think what they were—what they were as Christians, and what they were as missionaries. Mr. W. KAMCKRE represented Islington and business men. Two thoughts were, he said, uppermost in his mind—trust and obey. There was no other way of being happy with Jesus except by trusting and obeying. Rev. E. N. THWAITES asked for the prayers of those present that God's blessing might rest on the "missionary mission" which he and Mr. Standen are about to undertake in India.

The House of Rest.—The monthly meetings in the Pillar Room for the deepening of the spiritual life were resumed on Friday afternoon, when Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton, gave an address on Col. iii. 4, "Christ who is our life." He pointed out that Christ was the life of the soul for justification, sanctification, and satisfaction, and showed how completely Christ satisfied every want of man's nature in these three ways. Lieut.-Col. Oldham presided, and gave an address at the evening meeting on Heb. xii. 1, 2, urging all to lay aside the weights that hindered them in running their course and the sin which clung so closely to them. These meetings are found most helpful and refreshing by those who attend, and are characterised by deep spirituality.

Congregationalists at Leicester.

By A MINISTER.

THE autumnal session of the Congregational Union held last week at Leicester was in every sense a success. About 1100 ministers and delegates from all parts of the country were present, to whom the Leicester friends showed a very hearty hospitality, a striking feature being the number of Episcopalian homes that were opened for the reception of the guests. This is, indeed, no new phenomenon, but it has not been quite so conspicuous a characteristic of our gatherings of late years, owing to the exclusive character of the High Church movement, which has tended to accentuate the differences between church and dissent. The open house kept by the Episcopalians of Leicester is only one of many indications that this movement has spent its force, and that we are moving into quieter waters of peace and brotherhood once more.

In the following sketch I shall make no attempt to give a résumé of all the meetings, but content myself with a few central impressions and general reflections. In one sense the climax of these gatherings came at the beginning. Two notable men gave the keynote to the proceedings of the week, Dr. FORSYTH, of Cambridge, in his sermon on Monday night, and Rev. J. MORLAIS JONES in the address from the chair the following day. Both were delivered to packed, eager, receptive audiences. The sermon was on the text "Holy Father" (John xvii. 11), and dealt with the holiness of God as one of the neglected doctrines of present-day thought. The ultimate attribute of God is not love in the usual acceptance of the term, but holiness. Love needs a qualifying term to be divine. Often it is a poor weak selfish thing. Unless it is of a certain kind, it cannot be worthy of God. What ultimate fact is it then that lies behind God's love to distinguish, and enrich and balance, and lift it into the atmosphere of God's life? It is holiness. Holy love—that is God's love. Holy Father, that is God Himself. This idea was followed out in its various bearings, especially on that of atonement or forgiveness. Do not say, "God is love, then why atone?" The New Testament says, "God has atoned. What love!" Dr. Forsyth spoke severely of that school of theology which finds the full Gospel in the parable of the Prodigal Son, where nothing is said about expiation or redeeming love. The Fatherhood of that discourse is the Fatherhood of pity for human weakness; it needed the Cross to bring home to the world's heart the Fatherhood of holy saving love for human sin.

These are the pivotal thoughts of a discourse which was listened to with rapt attention, and which cannot but have a bracing and toning influence on the thoughts of all who heard it. It marked a step in return to a permanent truth of the Puritan theology which has of late years been overlaid by a tendency to sentimentalise on the love of God, without carefully distinguishing between that side of love that flows from pity, and that which is built on immovable purity. It was a heart-searching discourse. There were times when the preacher seemed to be laying bare the hidden places, and turning the search-light of divine holiness on the conscience with unsparing ray.

Next morning we were all in London-road Chapel to listen to Rev. J. MORLAIS JONES's address from the chair. It was entitled and dealt with the need and function of preaching in the Christian Church. It was a great preacher's manifesto, a glorification of his office. I need not say that it was a splendid oration. Few men would be so capable of speaking on such a subject as the man who for thirty years has held a large congregation round him in the same church in the heart of a South London suburb. Mr. Jones spoke as one who knew, with the authority of a master and the glow of an enthusiast. In answer to the clamour for the short sermons, the snippety homilies that seem to be the ideal nowadays, especially among people who want to have their spiritual teaching as they want their meals, in tasty dishes, he affirmed that the pulpit has a real, permanent place in the Church, and that the church that abolishes the preacher for the choir, or the liturgy, is a church that is doomed. It was preaching that created the Church as an institution. In every age it has been a power, and its power has been greatest in the greatest and most vital ages.

"THE CHURCH WITHOUT A PULPIT,"

The message is never complete until you see the light of it shining in the preacher's face, hear it palpitating in his voice. The man is never in the printed page. The book is only the ghost of the message. I revel in books, feast upon books, love the feel of books, thank God for books, but I want more than books: I want the living man, I want the preacher.

The address was full of other quotable points, but I must refrain for lack of space. The last portion was an earnest appeal to ministers to make the pulpit the centre of their work, and to make their preaching Biblical and earnest and evangelical in tone.

Two striking incidents marked the close of Tuesday morning's session. One was the speech of Rev. J. G. GREENHOUGH, late President of the Baptist Union, in his address of welcome to the Congregational Union on behalf of the Leicester Union of Free Churches. In this he made a telling reference to the Pope's recent rebuff to the High Anglican party in their endeavour to approach Rome.

Cardinal Vaughan, preaching on the recent manifestoes of the Pope, spoke of the silence with which they had been received in this land as an indication of the reverence in which his Holiness was held. If Cardinal Vaughan had understood English men and women, he would have known that that silence was the silence of contempt; in fact, there is not one Englishman in a hundred, unless he be a Catholic, who cares the value of the smallest copper coin what the Pope thinks about the religious status of this island. The nation, in spite of the chatter of Cardinals and the coquetting with Rome of society's butterflies, is Protestant to the core.

Lord Halifax and his friends richly deserved the answer they have got.

And that answer, though it may have fallen as a bomb-shell amongst them, has fallen upon the rest of the nation as one of those air-bubbles which burst amid the laughter of children.

Better even than this interchange of greetings was the letter read by the Chairman from the Bishop of Peterborough to him as the representative of the Union. The inhabitants of Leicester, both churchmen and dissenters, had been deeply incensed by the warning given by a young curate in the town not to attend any of the schismatical meetings to be held the following week. As a contrast to this narrow spirit, the act of the Bishop in sending a letter of kindly greeting to the Chairman of the Union, in which, while in no sense minimising the reality of the differences that separated them, he expressed a brotherly regard for the welfare and spiritual success of those assembled in the Union meetings, was very heartily received, and a no less courteous reply was sent to Dr. Creighton.

After this we gave ourselves to solid business, and in subsequent meetings discussed Church Aid Work, the Reform of the Sunday-school System, of Congregational forms of worship and sentiment, and other burning topics. We were glad that the Church Aid Society is moving into smoother waters, and that it is now able to raise the salary of aided ministers to the minimum of £80 a year, which is a stage towards the £100 minimum the Society is aiming at.

The farewell meeting to the missionaries that are returning to their spheres of labour was so largely attended that an "overflow" had to be held; altogether about 4000 must have been present. The temperance gathering on Monday night and several others were crowded out, and the sessions of the Union generally were followed with unflagging interest both by the delegates and the people of Leicester. Altogether, a fine stirring series of gatherings, full of enthusiasm and earnestness. The morning devotional meetings were also well attended; but perhaps a little more of this element, say a whole session devoted to the purely spiritual side of our work, would have touched and helped us still more. This is perhaps the weakest side or aspect of modern Congregationalism, and we should mend our ways lest we spend too much energy at the circumference of our work and rest too little at the centre.

St. George's Tabernacle, Glasgow.

THE seventh annual Conference in connection with God's work in this place was recently held. Mr. D. J. Findlay presided, and among those who took part were Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Mrs. Stott (Wenchow, China), Messrs. John Colville, M.P., John Anderson, Dr. W. Duncan Miller, W. G. Pope, Dr. James S. Webster, James Macfarlane, and William Thomson. There were crowded attendances at all the services and it was felt to be a time of great blessing.

After a season of prayer and praise, Mr. Macfarlane gave an excellent keynote to the Conference in the words "Looking unto Jesus," Heb. xii. 2. Mr. John Anderson gave an impressive address from Isaiah vi. (1) A crisis; (2) Confession; (3) Consecration; (4) Call; (5) Commission. Mrs. Stott, from Wenchow, told a most cheering story of the success and blessing which God had graciously granted on the part of China where she had been privileged to labour. She told of 500 in church fellowship, but in addition there were hundreds who had given up the worship of idols, were attending the services, and were aware of the plan of salvation. These results were largely due, under God, to the native Christians. Mr. Pope, Algiers, and Dr. Miller, Aden, followed, urging the need of more prayer and sympathy, more effort, and more men and women to go forth to the battle.

After tea and a time of testimony, Mr. Hudson Taylor gave an encouraging account of the progress of missions in China during the past forty-three years. In 1853, there were thought to be 300 souls converted in China, in 1889 there were 35,000 communicants, and in 1896 there are 70,000 communicants, besides many who have gone to be with Christ. He stated that Christian deathbeds were more frequent now in China. The first day of the Conference was brought to a close by earnest addresses from Dr. Webster, who has since left for China, and Mr. Wm. Munster, jun.

The services on the Lord's day were from 6 a.m. till 10 p.m., with short intervals, and were full of power and blessing. Those privileged to be present will not soon forget Mr. Hudson Taylor's most helpful and suggestive address on "The True Vine and the Branches." As a fitting close to this feast of fat things, a large number of God's people met around the Lord's table, the service being led by Mr. Hudson Taylor.

Recollections of Reginald Radcliffe.

LETTER BY REV. ANDREW MURRAY.

DEAR SIRS,—Very many thanks indeed for Reginald Radcliffe's biography. You may depend upon my placing them in the hands of those who will appreciate the book and profit by it. I am reading it with intense interest. Of his faith in prayer one can only say that it ought to shame and humble us. Thank God it also encourages us. One feels the inspirations which the sight of such faith gives.

The book also stirs one's soul with the longing that God may visit his whole church with the Spirit of revival. The forms will be different, because the truths and methods in which the Spirit worked through him are not longer so new. And yet God is able to raise up men full of his Spirit who will give the message He may entrust to them with the same power. I cannot read what God wrought through him without being stirred to praise and prayer, and hope.

Last Monday week we began a united meeting for prayer among the ministers of Capetown and neighbourhood to wait on God for revival. We are looking to Him to give us his blessing in it.

In our blessed Lord, yours most faithfully,

ANDREW MURRAY.

THE EVANGELIST.

What is it to Believe on Christ?

By J. W. CHICKERING, D.D.

READER, did you ever ask this question? Is it your sincere and earnest wish to have it answered? If so, this tract is intended for you. May God make it a blessing to your soul.

I will suppose that you have at some time felt alarmed in view of your sins, and inquired in your thoughts, if not in words, "What must I do to be saved?" You hear the Bible say, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life: but the wrath of God abideth on him." And you have the same answer that Paul gave to the gaoler, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Still you hesitate. You ask what this language means. You desire to know what it is to believe on Christ. It is,

TO FEEL YOUR NEED OF HIM;

TO BELIEVE THAT HE IS ABLE AND WILLING TO SAVE YOU, AND TO SAVE YOU NOW; and

TO CAST YOURSELF UNRESERVEDLY ON HIS MERCY, AND TRUST IN HIM ALONE FOR SALVATION.

To feel your need of Him. Till you do this, you will never seek Him earnestly, or trust Him wholly. You do not send for a physician till you feel yourself to be ill. It was only when Peter found he was beginning to sink, that he cried, "Lord, save me!" So the sinner never goes to Christ in a right manner, till he feels himself to be a lost, wretched being. It is not enough to know this: you must feel it.

Do you say you cannot? Oh then, how lost, how wretched you must be! Your very language ought to fill you with shame and fear. Whose fault is it that you do not feel? How long need it be before you feel? You can feel alarm when a fatal disease holds you in its grasp, you can feel sorrow when a friend is dying in agony before your eyes; and can you feel no sorrow when you think of a suffering Saviour whose love you have abused—no alarm, when you call to mind that fearful judgment to which you are hastening? Will you dare to tell your Judge, at the great day, that you could not feel your need of a Saviour?

But you say, "I do feel, at least in some degree, that I am a poor, guilty, undone sinner; but this will not save me." No, it will not. Thousands have felt this and perished. You must also.

Believe that Christ is able and willing to save you and to save you now. He is able, for He is almighty. You are a great sinner, but Christ is an infinite Saviour. Satan has been trying to persuade you that Christ is not able to save so great a sinner as you are. It is false. He is able, and unless you believe this in all its glorious extent, you will no more be willing to trust him than a man on the roof of a burning house will step upon a weak ladder which he knows will give way beneath him.

You must believe that He is willing. He has in many ways shown Himself to be willing. If you doubt it, you disbelieve and offend Him. Does it please Him, think you, when He utters this kind welcome, "Whosoever cometh unto Me, I will in nowise cast out," to hear you reply, "O Lord, I cannot think that Thou wouldst receive such a one as I, if I should come"? Yet you do in effect say this, every moment you cherish the feeling that you are too sinful to hope for pardon.

You must believe that he is willing now. Perhaps you have thought He would be willing, after a few more days or weeks spent in praying and weeping and growing better. Be assured your worst enemy wants no more than that you should continue to think so. You are growing no better. You are doing nothing to gain Christ's favour while you refuse to yield to his invitations. Until you believe that he is able and willing to save you, and to do it now, you never will be saved. The great enemy of your soul does not care to have you set a time far distant when you can go to Christ, and when He will be willing to receive you. If you will continue to place that time at the distance of a week, or an hour, or a minute, his object is gained, and your soul is lost.

But you ask, "Does not a sinner, at the moment of his actual submission to the Saviour, feel more fit to be pardoned, and is not Christ more willing to pardon him than ever before?" No, dear friend, No! He was less fit to be pardoned, for his sins had been increasing every moment up to that very time, and Christ was no more willing to pardon him than He had always been.

The next thing required of you is—

To cast yourself unreservedly upon his mercy, and trust in Him alone for salvation. This implies that you renounce all expectations of saving yourself or of being saved any other way than through the righteousness and redemption of Christ. Did you ever feel as if you had done all you could? Have you tried to think of something more to do to obtain hope and forgiveness? You have done too much in this way already.

Just stop doing, and begin to trust Christ to do all, and you are safe. A man is rowing a boat on a river just above a dreadful cataract. The current begins to bear him downward; the spectators on the banks give him up for lost. "He is gone!" they all exclaim. But in another moment a rope is thrown towards the wretched man; it strikes the water near the boat. Now how does the case stand? Do all the spectators call upon him to row, to row stronger, to try harder to reach the shore? O no; the eager and united cry is, "Drop your oars! Give up your desperate attempt! TAKE HOLD OF THE ROPE!" So all the sinner's hope lies not in struggling to save himself, but in ceasing to struggle, for while he expects soon to accomplish the work of salvation he will not look to Christ to do it for him. It is not doing, but yielding, that is required.

But you say, "Why, then, do you urge me to become a Christian, or to do anything? Why not let me sit still, and wait till Christ shall come and pardon me?" And what if the man in the boat dropped his oar, and then folded his hands and waited for the rope to save him? He might as well have died rowing as sitting still, and would as certainly have died in the latter case as in the former. But he must grasp the rope. So the sinner must lay hold upon the Cross—not by waiting till he is better, but by first concluding that he shall never be any better in the way he is going on, and then looking to Christ. As he perceives the ground sinking beneath him, and feels how lost and wretched he is, filled with mingled despair and hope—despair in himself, and hope in the power and mercy of Christ—he says—

I stand upon a mountain's edge;
O save me, lest I fall!

His prayer is heard—the heart of the compassionate Saviour is ready to welcome him—the arms of mercy are stretched out to receive him—a word of kind welcome reaches his ear, "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins are forgiven thee." He believes that word—he trusts that heart—he falls into those arms, and he is safe.

Reader, does your heart say, "Lord, I believe: help thou mine unbelief"? Will you take the Saviour at his word? Are you willing to trust him to do the whole work of your salvation?

If so, prostrate yourself before this waiting, insulted, and still compassionate Redeemer; tell Him all your heart, put your soul in his hands, and He will pardon, accept, and save you.

[The author, at his death, had the names of over 1700 persons who attributed their conversion to this tract.]

Repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.

God be merciful to me, a sinner!

To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against Him.

The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin.

If Thou, Lord, shouldst mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? But there is forgiveness with Thee.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, who forgiveth all thine iniquities.

Jesus said: Father, forgive them!

Acts xxvi. 20, Luke xviii. 13, Dan. ix. 9, Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7, Psa. cxxx. 3, 4, Psa. ciii. 2, 3, Luke xxiii. 34.

The Mongolian Mission.—Upon the occasion of a recent visit to the new station at Lao-Pei-tzu-Fu, north of Ch'ao Yang, Rev. J. Parker baptized fifteen persons, most of whom had been probationers for the past two years. Six others were absent from home, otherwise they would have been baptized at the same time. This makes a total of twenty-one baptized at the three stations during the first half of the year. The work at T'a-tzu-Kou is being maintained by the colporteur stationed at that place. Mr. Parker baptized one convert there in March. With more public mission premises, and a native preacher constantly at work, he hopes to see this branch grow. The Christians have shown themselves men of sterling worth. One of them promised that if the Society would purchase new premises he would contribute one-third of the cost. At Ch'ao Yang Mr. Parker has also baptized one whole family.

Mission to Showmen.

THIS summer it has been my privilege to see Miss Millington, the large-hearted friend of travellers and show-folk, in her own home at Layerthorpe-grove, York, and to realise, in some measure, the extent of her work among them. For years I have been struck at the way in which the mere mention of her name opened the door for Christian work. I had also been encouraged to go among the vans by her letters, but one has to enter into the tiny inner room from which these letters flow out, to understand the daily toil entailed by this constant flow of sympathy.

I saw one letter from a father, whose prodigal son is lost among the showmen, requesting her to seek for him. Another was from a mother, who is well off and wants lodgings for an ailing daughter and would prefer them near York, knowing that then she will be well cared for. The drollest was the case of a mere lad, who had made a foolish marriage and wanted Miss Millington to tell him how to get free.

With her I visited the widow of a showman, who was dying. She was living in what had once been a college. On each side of its entrance were quaint carvings, on one side the virgin and child, on the other St. Christopher, the burden-bearing giant. The latter seems to me an image of my friend. She began to carry a little burden in the service of her Master, but as she has gone on it has grown heavier and heavier. She will not faint under it, but others may lighten it for her by timely subscriptions. The joys and sorrows of showmen all over the United Kingdom come daily into her sympathetic ear, cases of need are constantly arising. Her own means are freely used, but if this mission is to be consolidated more, much more must be done in the future.

The paper which she conducts, The Caravan, has a quarterly issue of 2500. One number issued in French and German having proved a success, another is called for and ready to come out if funds can be obtained. Travelling school vans are also desirable; if friends will gather in the children for the fair week, when possible, to some hall or kitchen, and instruct them for an hour, much might be done. I believe that if friends wishing to form friendships among these wanderers were to do this, they would soon find the work profitable. Our Heavenly Father says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it to the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." The Travellers' National Total Abstiners' Union has taken 1100 pledges, and a large proportion are known to be keeping it. It is distinctly recognised as a union. R. B.

Harvest.

"Thou crownest the year with thy goodness,"

Lord of the Harvest tide,
Full sheaves after patient sowing
Bow down at the Reaper's side;
Crowned with thy lovingkindness,
Mountains and hills rejoice,
Springs break forth in the valleys,
Rocks echo the gleaners' voice.

"Thou crownest the year with thy goodness,"

Shepherd and Lord of all,
Sheep bound with joy o'er the pasture,
Fat kine lie down in the stall;
Crowned with thy wondrous mercy,
Sprinkled with blood from sin,
Saints whom thy love has conquered
Glad angels have garnered in.

"Thou crownest the year with thy goodness,"

Lord of the hearts of men,
Faith's toil—after tears and waiting—
Bears fruit, as of old, and when,
Crowned with thy lovingkindness;
Sowers and reapers stand:
"Praise waiteth for Thee in Zion"
Shall ring through the Golden Land.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.—H.R.H. the Prince of Wales has forwarded a donation of twenty-five guineas to Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Orphan Waifs, in aid of the special reserve and foundation fund now being raised for the purpose of extinguishing the liabilities incurred in the erection of the Institutional Buildings.

Home of Industry.

WE feel it is due to your readers to share with them the cheering reports to hand of those who have left us to get a start in life since last spring. Of the 150 boys and girls who sailed in two bands, there remain a dozen small boys still waiting for adoption at our Canadian Home. Those who are turned fourteen years of age are now on farms, receiving board, washing, and from two to three dollars monthly. Many of them, as winter comes on, will prefer to attend school, thus improving themselves in lieu of the four or five months' payment.

Our hearts rejoice over the settling of little girls of tender years, whose sorrows wrung our hearts as we listened to many a tale of woe. The reports we have as to their placing out, or adoption, are specially cheering.

Whilst our greatest joy is to shelter and care for orphans, we frequently meet with a whole family brought down to utter destitution through the terrible curse of drink. Children in such wretched circumstances we pity even more than those entirely bereft of parents. Whilst orphans are at times cared for, these are not only starved, but ill-served by fathers or mothers unworthy of the name. Such was a family of four, left a few months ago on a doorstep by the drunken mother, and taken for the night to a workhouse. The two small boys are still in the Home, waiting till a kindly farmer "falls in love" with them. The little girls have been received into "good and comfortable homes," both as adoptions. In one of the Homes a little girl of ours has already been brought up and trained for a useful life.

This week we have the privilege of rescuing additions to the seventy-second band, now being gathered into the Training Home. Among the first thirteen we find nine are motherless. How can we ever be grateful enough for this God-opened way of setting the solitary in families? We ask prayer for another winter's service, ere our opportunities close.

Countess Schimmelmänn's Work.

By letters received from this devoted servant of Christ it is clear that God is abundantly blessing his work in her hands. At Gühren her seamen's home, which had been demolished by persecutors, has been rebuilt, and is thronged with fishermen, who give evidence of the seed sown years ago having brought forth fruit. At Strasland, in Pomerania, a large and crowded meeting was held, consisting mainly of working-class and seafaring men, but including some members of the middle and upper classes.

In the Duchy of Mecklenburgh there have been many meetings, largely composed of persons in "high life." Many of the proudest and most worldly have been seen in tears, and numbers seeking private conversation as to their souls' salvation on the days following the meetings. Not a few have been joyfully converted, and are now rejoicing in Christ. "To-day from 12 to 1 a young nobleman sat here weeping like a child, because of the dead, formal life he had led. A lady on her knees, in misery about her lost soul, and went away saved. A Russian General is going to build a Home for sick children. He resolved on this at one of the meetings."

The Countess also mentions cases of converts from last year's testimony leading consistent Christian lives. She earnestly seeks the prayers of British Christians for a continuance of God's blessing on her witness for Him, and for his shelter from the renewed plots of her deadly enemies again to trap her.

A Call from India.—The Young Men of India say:—"Should we not undertake to secure the services in India, for one cold season or more, of one of the most successful preachers of the West, making this a feature of missionary activity for the next few years? Two great advantages appear: (1) The great stimulus this would give to missionary work in India, by the uplift to Christians and the conversion of non-Christians. (2) The greatly increased interest at home, resulting from the reports of these specialists. Many men who could not consider mission work as a life-work, might yet be able to give one or two or possibly even five years to angelic work in England."

The Dublin Convention.

THE twenty-third annual Christian Convention was held in Dublin last week. There was no falling off in interest or power. A large number of ministers of all Evangelical denominations, and from all parts of the country, were present, and were hospitably received in Christian homes in the city and neighbourhood.

The proceedings commenced on Monday evening with a social reunion in the minor hall of the Christian Union Buildings, followed by a public meeting in the large hall, at which Mr. J. R. Fowler presided. Earnest and spiritual addresses were delivered at the meeting by Revs. J. S. Fletcher, D.D., James Irvine, and George Harrison. The subsequent meetings were addressed by Rev. J. Elder Cumming, D.D., Glasgow; Rev. George Jackson, Edinburgh; Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, London; the Archdeacon of Cashel, Rev. Gilbert G. Warren, from Hankow; Rev. F. Swainson, C.M.S., from Saskatchewan, Canon O'Connor, Rev. T. B. Robertson, etc.

All the meetings were very profitable and were greatly enjoyed by the large audiences, and the reports in the press will carry the holy influence far and wide. The Archbishop of Dublin, Lord Plunket, presided on Wednesday evening, the subject being "Foreign Missions," and delivered a most sympathetic address, in which he expressed his thankfulness to God for the blessing which this Convention had proved to the cause of evangelical truth and unity in Ireland. On Friday morning a meeting for special and united prayer for Ireland and for all evangelical agencies at work in the home field was held. There was a large attendance. Thirty-two societies were remembered in special prayer to God.

Brothers Weaver in Aberdeen.

THE Free Church Presbytery of Aberdeen is engaged in special evangelistic effort throughout the city. Men on whom God has set his seal have been secured for the work. The first in the series was Mr. W. R. Lane, and the last is to be Gipsy Smith. Last week the Brothers Weaver struck in.

They began by conducting the forenoon diet of worship in Commerce-street Free Church. In the afternoon there was a meeting for Christians, and in the evening an evangelistic service in St. Clement's Free Church. Here the work has been continued throughout the week.

From the outset much interest was felt in the two sons of one who had done valiantly for the Lord, and the fruit of whose labours is still with us. Another generation has arisen since the days of the gracious revival of '59 and '60, but we have yet many amongst us to whom the name of Richard Weaver is a means of grace because of the glorious memories it recalls. This of itself inspired many of God's people with hope of great blessing. And we have not been disappointed. God has been graciously pleased to pour out of his Spirit upon us, and, as a consequence, every night souls have professed faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

By means of the intensely earnest and forceful preaching of Mr. Bewley Weaver, and the no less earnest and tender singing of Gospel hymns by Mr. Frank Weaver, God has knocked at the door of many hearts. There has been a glad response, and we believe Christ is enthroned in hearts not a few that were closed against Him when these brethren came to us. The deepening interest was abundantly evidenced by the growing attendances from night to night. Last night (Sabbath, 4th inst.), at their third service for the day, which was held in the Free North Church, the building was simply packed, every available foot of space being occupied, and large numbers having to turn away, unable to find an entrance. More than a score of persons rose in the church in token of their desire for salvation, and at the close, the ministers and other workers had their hands full, directing anxious ones to the Saviour.

We anticipate greater things as the week advances. Unfortunately for us, as we judge, the Messrs. Weaver have to leave us at the end of the week for Glasgow. We, however, trust that their way may be directed thither again, for it is evident that God has much people in this city, and that many of them would be won by a continuance of such labours amongst us.

Strangers' Rest Workers.

THERE was a large gathering at the usual monthly workers' meeting at the Strangers' Rest, on Friday last. After a few opening remarks by the chairman, Mr. Geo. Lampard, Mr. Isaac gave a report of the work at home and at Zanzibar, where workers were realising the blessedness of being held up by prayer, and being kept in peace in the midst of the disturbances which have taken place. Prayer was asked for guidance in any fresh steps to be taken for the further development of the work. An address was given by Pastor Fuller Gooch, based on Deut. x. 18, 19, dwelling on the love of God as shown in the law of Moses with regard to the stranger. God not only loved Israel, but the stranger was not overlooked or forgotten. The spiritual application of this in relation to those who are yet strangers to God, and our duty as believers in reference to them was earnestly enforced.

Mr. Glenney, of the North Africa Mission, said that some seemed to think Mohammedanism was a beautiful idea of religion, but if one wanted a description of it, it was to be found in Rom. i. A Moslem makes it part of his religion to be bad and cruel, and covers himself with the Divine sanction, making God responsible for his sins. In a letter received that morning news had come of a Moslem who had been converted, a leading man in the mosque at Omar, the site of the old Temple. He had had to fly for his life, for a converted Moslem can never stay where Turks rule, it is certain death.

Miss Johnson, who has been working in Tunis for over four years, and is soon returning, telling of the Lord's work, said there were many there who knew not God as their Father. More workers were needed to tell the Gospel to those in bondage. If we cannot go ourselves, let us pray for those who do. The Medical Mission is a great means in Tunis of getting hold of the people, but it is closed now because there is no doctor. Pray that one may be sent.

Four other missionaries, who are soon to start for North Africa, were also present, two of whom told how the Lord had led them to go forth.

Mr. McKay, of Madagascar, Mrs. Read, of Blackgang, and Pastor Rohrbach, of Berlin, also gave brief accounts of the Lord's blessing and guidance in work for Him.

Metropolitan Music Hall.

FOR over twenty years Mr. Charles Cook has carried on mission work in the West End of London. During the spring and summer months he conducts services in Hyde Park and Hyde Park Hall. With the help of an able choir, he has done much by his open-air meetings to counteract the teachings of the Freethinkers. Several young men converted at these meetings are engaged in work for Christ in the foreign and home mission fields; while thirty young women converts, in the prime of life, give their spare time to aiding Mr. Cook with their sweet voices.

Hyde Park Hall, Edgware-road, being entirely inadequate for the winter work, Mr. Cook rents the Metropolitan Music Hall for the season. This Hall is situated in a crowded district and a busy thoroughfare, and thousands hear the Gospel there. Last Sunday evening the first meeting of the season was held, and notwithstanding the disagreeable weather, the large building was crowded from pit to gallery. Sacred songs were rendered by the choir, which were greatly appreciated by the audience, and a stirring, touching address was delivered by Mr. Cook, on the words, "Whose I am, and whom I serve." An earnest appeal was made to backsliders, and in conclusion, to sinners generally. During his remarks, Mr. Cook had a word for the gambler, the courtesan, the drunkard, etc. The address was listened to attentively by a mixed audience, and over forty persons stood up, and asked for prayer.

The Lambeth-walk Mission has long needed a new mission hall, and this has at length been secured in the Tee-To-Tum, in the very heart of a crowded and sin-stained district. The necessary alterations and repairs have cost £50, of which £35 has been received. The whole work is in a hopeful and vigorous condition—the open-air, the temperance, and the various benevolent agencies are well maintained and followed by blessing. The superintendent is Mr. G. Goodman, 128, Kennington Park-road, S.E.

Letters to the Editor.

"CHURCH TROUBLE AT LEAMINGTON."

SIR,—In your last issue you endorse an appeal on behalf of the Chapel of St. Luke's in Leamington. That appeal is put forth under the plea that the congregation and its minister have had to secede from the Church of England, first, because the vicar of the parish objected to the presence of the chapel in his parish, and, secondly, because only by so doing could they preserve Evangelical services. May I state that the vicar had no objection to the presence of the chapel in his parish, nor desired in any way to put a stop to Evangelical services? He only asked that the chapel should be under his jurisdiction as vicar of the parish and be worked as one of the parochial agencies. Subject to this condition, he was willing to welcome the congregation as brethren holding the like Protestant and Evangelical principles as himself. Rather than join as brethren, the minister and people have thought it right to multiply our unhappy divisions and cause considerable damage to the cause of our common Lord.

A CONSTANT READER.

MR. DANCE'S REPLY.

DEAR SIR,—I thank you for giving me an opportunity to reply to "A Constant Reader." Perhaps the best corrective for his letter will be the republication of an authority which will not be gained. (The italics are mine.)

"Hartlebury Castle, Kidderminster, Nov. 22, 1895.

"Dear Sir,—I have heard from Mr. Fargiter with reference to the proposal to establish the Chapel of St. Luke's in his parish, and I have also had a report from his parish church council on the same subject. Since both the vicar and his church council have made such strong objections to your proposal, and have given me what I conceive to be very reasonable grounds for their opposition, I shall withhold my licence from your chapel. It is quite unreasonable to expect me to allow and give my approval to an intrusion into a parish where I am satisfied that good work is being done, where there is already good church accommodation, and, above all, when the vicar of the parish is unwilling to sanction it himself.—Yours faithfully,

"J. J. S. WORCESTER."

The minister of St. Luke's and his friends rely upon prayer to go forward. The comfort is that the Lord adds his blessing in the most unmistakable way, and now numbers of men are found sitting under the sound of the Gospel, who formerly never entered a place of worship.—Faithfully yours,

JAMES WALTER DANCE.

"IS MY INFANT SAVED?"

DEAR SIR,—Referring to the question of "Is my infant saved," in THE CHRISTIAN of the 1st instant, may I be allowed to give a few words of personal testimony? In the first case I would say "A Parent" has answered the question very satisfactorily.

I was somewhat unconvinced in my mind as to the Scriptural arguments upon the question, until I was called upon to lose twin girls in their infancy, and the question was brought forcibly before me (I may here say that I refused to have them baptized by the rector), when upon turning over the chapters of the Bible I came upon Moses' speech to the Children of Israel concerning the Promised Land in Deuteronomy i. 39, where he says, "Moreover your little ones...which in that day had no knowledge between good and evil, they shall go in thither, and unto them will I give it, and they shall possess it." This was so borne in upon my mind and heart, that it has settled the question for ever for me, for what was the Promised Land but a figure of the yet more perfect one, the rest that remains to the people of God? ANOTHER PARENT.

DEAR SIR,—Amongst a varied collection of epitaphs which have just lately come under my notice, I was rather struck with one which appears on an infant's grave, and which runs as follows:—

Bold infidelity, lie down and die!
Beneath this stone an infant's ashes lie.

Say, is he lost or saved?
If death's by sin, he died because he's here;
If heaven's by works, in heaven he can't appear.
Reverse the Bible's sacred page, the knot's untied:
He died, for Adam sinned—he lives, for Jesus died.

I quote this, as it seems to me very appropriate to the subject, "Is my infant saved?" introduced in last week's CHRISTIAN by "A Parent," and with the hope that it may serve to throw some light on the [996] subject. It comes as a bold challenge to those who doubt the sure salvation of the little ones for whom Christ died.—Yours faithfully.

THE SCIENCE OF "GIVING."

SIR,—Many years ago, when I was a young man with a small salary, the claims of the B. and F. Bible Society and of the C.M. Society were explained to me by a Christian lady, and I was asked to become a subscriber to both. On consideration I determined to do the thing handsomely by subscribing 5s. annually to each Society, but when I paid my first subscription, the old lady, while thanking me cordially, told me in the very kindest possible way that I did not know how to give, that I wanted educating in the science of "giving," and that by becoming a teetotaler and being careful of my money I could do much to help, not only the above, but other kindred societies.

I took the advice given, became a teetotaler, put my savings in the bank, and determined to spend the interest on my investments in the cause of God.

In a few years my subscription of 5s. increased to £2, then to £5 each, then I was able by degrees to take up many other good societies with smaller subscriptions.

I am a poor man still, I have had sickness myself and also in my family, but I have found the Lord very gracious and a very present help in trouble, and my dividends are humbly and gratefully offered to Him who has done so much for me.

ANON.

"STORY OF A JAMAICA CHURCH."

DEAR SIR,—It was my privilege on Sunday, February 23 of this year, to attend the service in St. Ann's Bay Baptist Church, and the acquaintance I then formed with Pastor George House is a pleasant memory. I can truly say his praise was in all the churches, and I now feel constrained, unknown to him, to support the appeal made in your columns under this heading.

I can vouch for the truth of all that is therein narrated, and while I regret my own means will not admit of giving Mr. House practical support, I do hope those who are better able to give will help forward the Lord's work in his hands.—Yours truly,

HENRY D. GRANT, Admiral.

A New S.A. Elevator.

A FRESH extension of the social scheme of the Salvation Army was inaugurated on Thursday last, when a new "Elevator and Home," to accommodate 200 men, was opened in Riley-street, Abbey-street, Bermondsey. This, as Londoners know, is in the heart of a poor and distressful district, and in a region where common lodging-houses of the poorest type abound.

From statements made at the opening meeting by Mr. Bramwell Booth, Commissioners Coombs, Cadman, Pollard, and Nicol, and Colonels Barker and Lawley, it appeared that in the various Homes and Elevators maintained by the Army in London and the provinces, some 1200 out-of-work, hopeless, and fallen men are daily sheltered, fed, and provided with work, and thus enabled to start afresh on life's battle. This enumeration is altogether apart from the people sent to the Farm Colony at Leigh. Every evidence is forthcoming not only of satisfactory social results, but also of spiritual results. Many are now truly serving Christ in the Army and elsewhere who first came to the S.A. shelters in a pitiable condition of hopeless despair.

General Booth, who presided, said that the work of the Salvation Army for the good of humanity and the glory of God was progressing in all directions, and the social side of their operations far exceeded all early expectations. Incidentally referring to the destitution in New York, he pointed out that in that city alone there were no less than 60,000 "out-of-work" people to be found. He then gave a number of statistics showing what was being done for the relief of the friendless and fallen in England and in other parts of the world.

Dean Farrar, speaking in Liverpool, said it was humiliating to think that, while one man had been able during part of a lifetime to purify the prison system, and that a small handful of people had, in fifty years, brought about the abolition of slavery, the Temperance cause, which was embraced by thousands, had made no legislative progress. The subject was eminently one for citizens, for drink was the foe of national prosperity.

SOLOMON'S WEALTH AND WISDOM.—1 Kings iv. 25-34.

GOLDEN TEXT.—1 Sam. ii. 30.

EXPLANATORY.—25. "Under his vine," etc., an expression denoting peace and prosperity. The people were as safe in their own quiet homes as behind the walls of a fortified city. "Dan," the most northerly point in Israel. "Beersheba," one of the most southerly cities of Judah. 26. "Forty," probably "four" (see 2 Chron. ix. 25). 27. "Officers," stationed in different parts of the country (see ver. 7). 28. "Dromedaries," see Rev. Ver. 29. "Largeness of heart," capacity to understand many and difficult subjects. 30. From the East came the wise men to worship Jesus (Matt. ii. 1). Chaldea and Arabia, as well as Egypt, were renowned for their wisdom. 31. These four names are mentioned in 1 Chron. ii. 6 as sons of Zerach. Mahol may be another name for Zerach, or it may be "a common noun, signifying a chorus; and 'the sons of Mahol' may signify persons skilled in poetry and music." 32. "Three thousand proverbs," some of which are preserved to us in the Book of Proverbs. Of his songs we have only one, called the Song of Songs (Song of Solomon i. 1).

In telling the story of Solomon's greatness, two things should be emphasized:—First, how it fulfils previous predictions. The extent of his kingdom (21) was foretold in Gen. xv. 18; the vast number of his people (20) was foretold in Gen. xxii. 17; while peace had been promised in 1 Chron. xxii. 9, and wealth to Solomon himself (last lesson). Secondly, how it foreshadows the Kingdom of Christ. "A greater than Solomon is here" (Matt. xii. 42). For that reason nothing is said of the burdens which all this splendour cost the people (xii. 4). Psa. lxxii. refers to Solomon's kingdom, but only as pointing to one more glorious still (comp. v. 25 with Mich. iv. 4).

Riches, wisdom, fame—the three things which Solomon enjoyed—are the objects of eager desire to many. Two questions:—

1. Do they satisfy? Of course, we naturally think. To have unlimited wealth, so that every wish can be gratified; to be wiser than all others, so that no question need remain unanswered; to have a name that is sounded abroad over every nation; what more can be necessary?

The best way is to ask the only man who ever possessed these three in the greatest degree. Solomon will speak to us if we will listen. Let one of the scholars read Ecc. ii. 4-11, and note especially the concluding words. Not that these things are evil in themselves; on the contrary, they may be so used as to greatly enhance the true joy of life. But they are "vanity"—that is, emptiness, if the soul seeks to be satisfied with them.

These are "the broken cisterns" which men seek for themselves when they forsake "The Fountain of Living Waters" (Jer. ii. 13). The attempt to quench the thirst of the soul at these cisterns is like drinking the salt sea. The more we drink the more painful and maddening our thirst becomes.

Remember the Russian story of one who entered a diamond mine in search of great riches, and filled his pockets with costliest gems. At length he became thirsty. He heard what seemed to him like the flow of water and the sound of waterfalls, but he found only rivers of gems and cascades of jewels. He had riches enough, but was dying for want of water. So is everyone who seeks what this world can give, and is not rich toward God.

2. Is there nothing better? Again Solomon will tell us if we will listen to him. There is a better wisdom than that which enabled Solomon to make his kingdom so prosperous, and to write such wise and wonderful things. There is a better wealth than that which he possessed in such unlimited measure. There is a better fame than that which was spread abroad concerning him.

Solomon says (or is it not Jesus, the Wisdom of God, speaking through Solomon?), "Receive my instruction, and not silver; and knowledge rather than choice gold" (Prov. viii. 10). Again, let one of the scholars read Prov. viii. 11, 18-21. In Christ are "unsearchable riches" (Eph. iii. 8), and in Him "are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (Col. ii. 3).

There is, therefore, something better. Which are you seeking? Concerning the unsatisfying things of this world there is no promise that if you seek you will find. You may waste your energies in a vain and disappointing pursuit, and find at last that you have missed both this world and the next. Of the true Wisdom, in which durable wealth and lasting honour are included, there is a promise which is for you. Read it in Prov. viii. 17. Have you put it to the test?

Hop-pickers' Missions.

THE HAMPSHIRE WORK.

THE work for this season is now brought to a close. It is with sincere thankfulness that we are able to report much encouragement. We were able to help the destitute by selling the 2^d. loaf at 1d., and at the close a good cake tea was provided at 6d. each, for which they paid 2d. The expressions of gratitude were very many, such as "It is beautiful," "God bless you all." We were much cheered in seeing the poor wanderers so bright and happy.

One young gipsy man, who has come into the neighbourhood for the first time, said: "It is all so new to me, the singing of the hymns and the like. I wish I could always stay here." And after the tent was down he said, "I cannot forget that last hymn, 'There'll be no parting, There'll be no parting.' I feel I cannot rest, for I may die before another year."

Another, seeing how devoted some of the workers were in the wet for them, said: "There must be something in the Gospel. I have tried everything and found no satisfaction yet." We thank God for the thought awakened. Will you follow these in your prayers?

A gipsy woman when her little girl had a penny portrait given her said, "Yes, I have a Bible in my bag, which the lady gave me last year." She then sent the child to fetch it, and told her to open it and read first chapter of John. The little girl reads a portion every day to them in the van. AURELIA CHINN.

Lenten House, Alton, Hants.

HEREFORDSHIRE AND WORCESTERSHIRE.

From an account sent us of the work of Messrs. Luff and Jones we extract the following:—

A poor old woman was put to work at the picking, and at meal time she had neither meat nor money; so a kind man bought a herring and gave it to her, which she much enjoyed, and thought highly of the giver. Just then we came upon the scene, and it happened that we gave this same old woman the famous tract, "Herrings for Nothing." The incident and the truth wrought greatly upon her mind, and they thought that she and others were greatly moved.

We discovered Jemmie Lloyd, the once famous prize-fighter, and champion of the light-weights in the days of Tom Spring and Cribb, who seconded him in his fights. He was born at Margate on January 1, 1801, and is now ninety-five years of age. He lies on a bed of rags, on the floor of a tumbledown old cottage, in one of the most lonely and forsaken spots in the whole of Worcestershire, close on the bank of the River Teme in the parish of Martley. We prayed and preached to him four years ago, when we thought he was dying, and God owned and blessed our testimony to him; and now we found him well, and he told us the above. I believe the poor old man is saved.

I noticed a large number of children at one crib. The father said: "My wife was with us last year, but she died six months ago, and left me with these ten." He was a teetotaler of thirty-four years' standing.

A man said he had four years' collections of our books and tracts. Another man said they had five years' collections of our books, and they often get them out on a Sunday and read them over, and talk of their experiences at the hop-pickings.

The people thought much more highly of us than ever this time, because we waded through mud and mire to them day by day. One exclaimed, "Goodness me, it is worth something for you gentlemen to come to us through this."

Mr. Luff said he would have so liked all the kind friends of the Mission to have seen a large group of gipsies, all men, lying on the grass in a meadow one Sunday afternoon. When we came on them suddenly, and preached to them the wonderful text in Eccl. ix., "Now, there was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it. Now, there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city, yet no man remembered that same poor man"—they certainly seemed fairly caught and dumfounded. The people listened to our addresses in an earnest and respectful manner everywhere, and in many places they begged us to give them an address. JOHN JONES.

The Annual Conference of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union has been held at Dover. The meetings commenced on Saturday, 26th ult., with an Eisteddfod, at which prizes were given for reciting, solo singing, and choir singing. On Sunday the pulpits in Dover and in the neighbouring towns were filled by the delegates, the clergy joining with the Nonconformists in opening their churches for special sermons in behalf of the Union. The first conference, held in the Town Hall on Monday afternoon, was presided over by Mr. F. Smith. Papers were read by Mr. F. F. Belsey, of Rochester, and Mr. W. B. Suttle, of Manchester. Public meetings were held in the evening in several of the adjoining towns, when addresses were given by the delegates.

Scottish Notes.

A MEETING of the Christian Endeavour Union was held last week in the St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow, for the purpose of welcoming Rev. Francis Clark, D.D., the founder of the movement.

The committee of the Senatus of Aberdeen University appointed to nominate a locum tenens for the Chair of Bible Criticism for next session has agreed to recommend Dr. Gloag, lately minister of Galashiels and an ex-Moderator of the General Assembly. Dr. Gloag is a recognised authority on exegesis, and his published works cover the whole range of New Testament criticism.

The work of the Glasgow Bible Booth, which is carried on under the charge of Mr. D. Graham, of the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland, finished up for the season at Lanark races last week. The booth has been erected during the fairs and races at Glasgow, Paisley, Dumbarton, Ayr, and Lanark. There has been sold 523 Bibles, 3438 New Testaments, 726 Pilgrim's Progress. A large number of Gospel texts, etc., and 42,500 tracts were distributed at the above places.

We learn with regret, though not with surprise, of the death on Monday of Rev. Dr. Ross Taylor, of the Free Church, Thurso. He was the oldest ordained minister in Scotland, and was ninety-one years of age. Dr. Taylor has been for many years a power on behalf of evangelical truth in the far North. In 1884 he held the office of Moderator of the Free Church. A colleague and successor, Rev. Geo. Morrison, was appointed in 1894. In our issue of March 28, 1895, we gave a portrait and sketch of Dr. Taylor's career.

For several years the question of the amalgamation of the churches comprised in the Evangelical and Congregational Unions of Scotland has been constantly discussed. At length it has become an accomplished fact, though it does not take effect until January 1, 1897. The Congregational Union agreed to union in April last. Last week a similar decision was reached by the Evangelical Union at a most representative gathering held in Glasgow. The vote was 140 for union and only 14 against. On hearing of this decision, an adjourned session of the Congregational Union was held, and the declaration for union was reaffirmed by 93 votes to 17. Subsequently the two bodies met as one, when, by unanimous vote, union was consummated.

The annual meeting of the Highland Temperance League was held in Inverness last week. Mr. Charles J. Guthrie, advocate, Edinburgh, occupied the chair. The secretary read a letter from the Duchess of Sutherland, who stated that she was sorry it was not in her power to accept the invitation to be present. She hoped, however, that Lady Henry Somerset would come next year to speak at Dornoch and Golspie, and she thought they should make arrangements with Lady Somerset to have a meeting at Inverness. The chairman said there were no doubt at present certain depressing circumstances. One was that in Parliament nothing could be done, although parties were unanimous on certain questions, such as early closing. But if they wanted to find two people who were in the densest ignorance on temperance questions he would name them—Lord Salisbury and Mr. Gladstone. Mr. Bright and Mr. Chamberlain believed in temperance, but they had not done a hand's turn for it. Mr. Hedderwick, M.P., was the principal speaker in favour of local control of the liquor traffic.

Irish Notes.

THE Belfast Presbytery's Armenian Relief Committee have already raised close on £500 for the down-trodden subjects of Turkish atrocities, both in Europe and Asia.

The first church erected in connection with the Presbyterian Extension Scheme, Belfast, has been opened at Broadway, a growing suburb of the city. It will seat about 1000 people.

The Belfast City Mission continues to do a good work. During the past three months the agents paid 15,341 visits, and got forty-six families to join churches, besides holding numerous open-air services, and distributing large numbers of tracts, including thousands of Spurgeon's sermons.

The third Irish National Convention of the Societies of Christian Endeavour was held in Belfast under hopeful auspices last week. Rev. J. G. Lamont, president of the Belfast district, occupied the chair. Addresses of welcome were delivered by Revs. Henry Montgomery and Dr. Williamson, and altogether the Convention was a means of great blessing.

Keswick in Manchester.—The committee are obliged to postpone the large Free Trade Hall Convention from October to June of next year. Full particulars later. EDWARD K. SUGAN.

Australian Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

DURING the months of July and August the Church of England has been holding a number of missions in the various parishes of Melbourne and the suburbs. The missionaries have been drawn chiefly from the country districts and from New South Wales. Bible-readings, separate gatherings for children, for men, and for women have been held, and the services have been characterised by devout attention and interest; in some cases definite results having been recorded.

Taking advantage of the evangelistic spirit of the moment, some churches of other denominations have held missions at the same time, with considerable profit to all concerned.

Rev. Llewellyn Bevan, D.D., has recently taken a very decided "forward" step in the right direction. On Sunday evenings, in Melbourne, he is lecturing on eschatological topics. He closes his service at half-past eight, and allows an hour and a-half for reasonable discussion, questions, and replies.

While Dr. Bevan is thus stirring the thinking portion of the community in Melbourne, Rev. J. Macqucen, Presbyterian minister of St. John's, Ballarat, is drawing enormous crowds to Sunday evening meetings in a large hall in that city. The services are rendered attractive by orchestral music.

The first number of The Search Light, a monthly magazine for Australia, was brought out by Mr. Henry Varley a couple of months ago. The special subjects treated of—the land boom mania of Melbourne in 1888, the gambling and drinking vices of the Colonies, horse-racing and kindred sports, in which betting figures so largely, with many other public questions, are all dealt with by the editor in his usual forcible style.

The Victorian Sunday-school Union is endeavouring to hold an Industrial Art and Floral Exhibition in the Melbourne Exhibition Building from the 16th to the 24th of October.

Christian Endeavour.

NINETEEN floating societies of Christian Endeavour have been formed in New South Wales.

A party of South Dakota Endeavourers drove 110 miles in a wagon to the last State Convention.

The famous Grace Baptist Temple, of Philadelphia, Rev. Russell H. Conwell's, contains eleven C.E. societies.

German Christian Endeavourers are planning organised work to extend the movement among German-speaking peoples.

Baltimore Christian Endeavourers sent 564 children from the slums of the city out into the country for two weeks each during the summer.

The Scottish National C.E. Union has started The Scottish Endeavour, a new monthly intended to represent the interests of the movement in the North.

"The Tenth Legion" of the New York City Christian Endeavour Union comprises all the local Endeavourers who give a tenth of their income to God.

Texas Christian Endeavourers have been protesting against the Sunday opening of the Texas Coast Fair Association's exhibitions. Now the association has announced that, in deference to Christian sentiment, the fairs hereafter will be closed on Sunday.

Dr. Baedeker in Germany.

I AM returning from a happy visit in Germany. The conference at Blankenburg, from August 31 to September 4, was most helpful, and rich with spiritual power. After this I had the privilege of accompanying Mr. Hudson Taylor, and of serving the Lord as his interpreter for a few days. Then I responded to many calls for Gospel testimony, on the lines of the Evangelical Alliance, at Essen, Düsseldorf, Stockholm, Neukirchen, near Mürs. The Lord's presence and power were in evidence, the largest halls being crowded with eager listeners. After my return to Blankenburg, meetings were arranged at Rüdtschadt and at Gotha. The Lord gave an entrance to his wonderful Gospel, and surely fruit will be found by-and-by of the seed that has been sown.

Now last, but not least, is Berlin with its many demands. Oh, it is blessed service to feed the hungry with the true bread from heaven!

F. W. BAEDERER.

Halifax.—The annual meeting of the Halifax Auxiliary of the B. and F. Bible Society took place on Monday night in the Mechanics' Hall. The Mayor presided. Rev. Carey Hood read the report, stating that the committee rejoiced in another year of much needed and useful work. Rev. Dr. Macfarlane, missionary from New Guinea, gave an interesting account of his labours.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Y.M.C.A. at Penarth has been restarted under favourable auspices.

A new Association has been formed, under promising circumstances, at Oswestry.

Dingwall Association carries on tract distribution, visitation at the hospital on Sundays, and at houses where there is sickness. It has also for some years supported a native evangelist in China.

The Hammersmith Association has opened new premises at 11, The Grove. It is hoped that with larger accommodation better and bolder work will be done for the young men of the district.

A Metropolitan Y.M.C.A. chess club has been organised, with the object of affiliating Association chess clubs, and uniting the members of London Associations in the playing of chess matches.

On Thursday evening the Southwark Association held a meeting to mark its entrance into premises in Trinity-square. The gathering, which was addressed by Mr. W. Hind Smith, was a very encouraging one.

Mr. Samuel Millar, secretary Mountpottinger Branch, Belfast, is to conduct evangelistic meetings in connection with the Dublin Association, from Oct. 22 to 30, inclusive. Prayer is asked for blessing.

The new premises of the Wimbledon Association are exceptionally well suited for Association work, and comprise reading-room, parlour, hall with gymnasium, secretary's office and lavatories, and were erected and used for some time as a Conservative club.

The work of the West Hartlepool Y.M.C.A. is progressing very favourably, in spite of considerable financial depression. The Bible-class attendance has averaged fifty during the past few weeks, and preparations are being made for the holding of a special mission to young men.

The foundation stone ceremony in connection with the erection of the new building of the Newcastle-on-Tyne Association is fixed for Nov. 4. Stones are to be laid by Sir Richard Webster, the Countess of Tankerville, Sir James Joicey, M.P., Mr. Watson-Armstrong, and Mr. Emerson Bainbridge, M.P.

An eight days' mission against infidelity, conducted by Mr. Arthur J. Waldron, of the London Christian Evidence Society, at the Manchester Association, terminated on Sunday evening. The lectures were attended by large audiences, and hearty testimony was borne to their value by Christians and 'Secularists' alike.

Large numbers of men have been gathered to Exeter Hall nightly during the past week, by the mission being conducted there by Mr. Frank L. Smith, of New York; and evidence has not been wanting of a very marked impression having been made upon the successive audiences. The mission began on Sept. 28 and continues to the 9th inst.

The Belfast News-Letter publishes a special article over two columns in length, descriptive of the vigorous work of the Belfast Y.M.C.A., and of the new building which the Association is shortly to enter. H.R.H. Prince Oscar of Sweden has expressed his desire and willingness to visit Belfast on the occasion of the opening should State engagements permit.

Farewell meetings were held on Sunday in the Hackney rooms to bid God-speed to Messrs. M. Norollah and C. H. Bird, two more of the members going forth to the Foreign Mission field—the former to Persia and the latter to China. Rev. John Gritton, D.D., Mr. David McConaughy, and others took part in the proceedings, which, in the evening especially, were of a most impressive character.

A well-attended conference of the Midland District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s took place at the rooms of the Redditch Association. The subject of "The Y.M.C.A. as a Missionary Agency amongst Young Men" was introduced by Mr. C. H. Forrest, of Shrewsbury, and gave rise to an animated and profitable discussion; as did a paper read by Mr. C. Jones, of Worcester, on "How to Secure the Confidence of our Young Men, and to Deepen their Loyalty to the Association."

A reunion of hon. secs., members and friends of the Y.M.C.A. Bible-Reading Union was held in the council chamber at Exeter Hall on Saturday, Oct. 3, under the presidency of Mr. F. W. Lawrence. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. Frank Anderson, David McConaughy, Henry Whitwell, and Dr. H. B. Wilson, hon. sec. The object of the gathering, which was a representative and successful one, was to initiate a forward movement during the coming winter in and around London, in the forming of new branches and the strengthening of existing ones.

The North-east Metropolitan District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s held a well-attended conference on Saturday, September 26, at Warlies, Waltham Abbey, by the invitation of Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton. About seventy delegates were present, representing Hackney, Walthamstow, Shoreditch, Ware, Mile End, North Woodford, South Woodford, Grays, Upton Park, Ilford, etc. The proceedings commenced with an address by Rev. John Gritton, D.D., followed by brief reports by representatives. The subject of "Weak Points in Association Work," introduced by Mr. Robert Burn, gave rise to a most helpful discussion. In connection with the conference a special service was held in the Abbey, when a eloquent sermon on "Christian Faithfulness" was preached by the Rev. W. H. Langhorne, Vicar of Walthamstow.

The annual conference of the South-western District of Y.M.C.A.'s was held on September 24, at St. Austell, the president, Dr. C. Albert Hingston, occupying the chair. There was a good attendance of delegates, and the travelling secretary, Mr. W. H. Roberts, presented an excellent report as to the work of all the Associations. Rev. A. J. Begbie, rector of Horton, Gloucestershire, introduced a discussion on "Helps and Hindrances of Y.M.C.A. Work." Mr. T. Stocker, chairman of the local Y.M.C.A., entertained the delegates to luncheon, and subsequently Dr. Hingston delivered his presidential address, in the course of which he urged that whatever special features were introduced into the Associations—and there was the greatest latitude in this respect—the word "Christian" must be the one permanent foundation-stone, and the Associations would then have the assurance of ever-fresh life and strength, and would become a power for spiritual, mental, and physical good. Mr. J. E. W. Wakefield, president of the Taunton Association, read a paper on "The Position which Recreative Agencies should Occupy in the Y.M.C.A." In the evening a public meeting was held in the new Association hall.

The Y.W.C.A.

A VERY successful meeting was held by the Warrenpoint Association, when an interesting lecture on "Savanarola" was given by Rev. Dr. Naylor.

The twenty-ninth winter session of the Torquay branch is about to commence, and classes have been arranged providing for the intellectual recreation of young women in a variety of ways. Miss Jessie Coombs, hon. sec., conducts a Bible-class on Sunday afternoon and on Tuesday evening.

The annual general meeting of the Brechin branch was held on the 24th ult. Mrs. Chalmers was re-elected president. Arrangements were made for the various classes to be held during the winter, and it was agreed to hold a conference on Oct. 24, when addresses will be given by the Hon. Emily Kinnaird and Mrs. Armistead, Longforgan.

Under the auspices of the Blackburn Association a meeting on behalf of the China Inland Mission was held at the Exchange Lecture Hall, this being the first of a series of winter addresses. Mr. James Parkinson presided. Dr. W. Wilson, a missionary of considerable experience in China, was the principal speaker, and in the course of his address referred to the great advancement made in that country in the propagation of Christianity. Mr. Marcus Wood, deputation secretary of the C.I.M., also spoke.

The Lewisham Y.W.C.A. has as its first object to make a happy and comfortable home for young girls who are engaged in daily employment, and are away from their own friends; also to be a safe temporary home for others seeking employment; to be a place of rest for some who are overdone, and needing a short time to recruit, so that they may be enabled again to fight the battle of life; and lastly, to be a place of training as dressmakers, or useful helps for those who from want of instruction are not fitted to fill any position in life. Seventy women have been accommodated during the past year.

A conference of workers and secretaries from all divisions of Y.W.C.A. is to be held in Leeds on the 20th, 21st, and 22nd inst. On the first day there will be a reception in the Mayor's rooms at the Town Hall, by Lady Barran in the afternoon, and in the evening Miss Maynard, of Westfield College, will address the day-school teachers. Subjects, such as "Thrift," "Total Abstinence," "The Factory Helpers' Union," etc., will be discussed at the following two days' meetings. Those who will take leading parts include Miss Morley (London), Mrs. Menzies (Liverpool), Miss Nugent, the Hon. E. Kinnaird, Miss Ardill, Mrs. S. Smith (president Ireland), Miss Hay (president Scotland), Miss Reynolds, and others. On Thursday evening there will be a public meeting, over which Lord Kinnaird will preside.

Great Leighs, Essex.—Services were held in the Baptist Chapel (Pastor H. Putterill) in aid of foreign missions on Sunday, Sept. 27, conducted by Rev. W. A. Price, of Bankipore, India, who gave a most interesting account of mission work in that land to good congregations. On the Monday evening a public meeting was held in the Board School, presided over by the rector, Rev. A. Clark, LL.D. Rev. W. A. Price gave an earnest address on the great needs of India, and recited some encouraging facts as to the work God is doing there by his servants.

Temperance Notes.

THE Congregational Total Abstinence Association is appealing to the churches to observe the last Sunday in November as Temperance Sunday.

The Bishop of Liverpool, speaking at Lowestoft, said he regarded grocers' licences as one of the greatest curses ever imposed upon the country.

Good meetings in connection with the Central Yorkshire Good Templar Mission were held in the Temperance Society's room, New York street, on Sunday last.

The Women's Total Abstinence Union open their autumn series of meetings at Northampton on Sunday. The full programme, given in Wings, the organ of the W.T.A.U., promises much interest.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, speaking at Rochdale, said he thought Temperance reformers had an increasing support in the country, and that they might claim to be an indestructible party. The Churches were on their side to a greater extent than ever before.

The Birmingham magistrates, having announced their intention of reducing the drinking facilities of that city, the local brewers have initiated a scheme for diminishing the number of publichouses, including a system of compensation to be provided by the publichouse owners themselves.

At the fifty-ninth annual meeting of the Western Temperance League, held in Reading, Mrs. Margaret Tanner presided, and there was a large attendance of delegates. It was reported that the workers connected with the 244 affiliated societies during the year addressed 740 public meetings.

At last week's Licensing Sessions at Bromley (Kent) there were fourteen applications for new licences. With the exception of three grocers' licences, no new applications were acceded to. It was stated that there were twenty-one licensed houses at Bromley within a stone's throw of each other.

The Leytonstone branch of the Women's Total Abstinence Union held a public meeting in the Presbyterian Church on Friday evening, October 2. The speaker of the evening was Mrs. Harrison Lee, of Melbourne, whose telling address was listened to with rapt attention. The Battersea W. T. A. Society gave on September 28 a successful free tea to more than 60 poor women, and a crowded meeting followed.

The annual meeting of the general council of the United Kingdom Alliance will take place in the Central Hall, Oldham-street, Manchester, on Tuesday, the 20th October. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart., M.P., will preside, and the proceedings will commence at 10 a.m. The annual public meeting will be held in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, on the evening of the same day. The chair will be taken at 7 o'clock by the Dean of Durham.

The Juvenile Templar Order held the National Celebration of its twenty-fourth anniversary at Doncaster on September 26, 27, 28, attended by representatives from all over England. On the Saturday a procession took place, followed by a public juvenile demonstration in the Guildhall. On Sunday the representatives occupied thirty pulpits and held many open-air Gospel Temperance meetings, ending with one in the Guildhall, addressed by Councillor Malins and others. On Monday, conferences were held and papers read and discussed, and at night a final public meeting for adults was held in the Guildhall.

On Saturday, October 3, at "The Oaks," Southchurch-road, Southend-on-Sea, Mrs. White Bamford and Mrs. N. Curnock inaugurated their new "Ideal Home," which is intended to afford timely help to those women who would otherwise become confirmed inebriates, and also as a stepping-stone back to home life for those who are leaving the more stringent rule of larger institutions. Special cases, both medical and otherwise, can now be received. Mrs. Bamford will always be glad to receive, should there be a vacancy, any tired worker needing rest for a while. Her terms and all particulars can be had on application to herself at "The Oaks," Southchurch-road, Southend.

The Raines law has not stopped, though it has somewhat diminished, liquor selling and drinking on Sunday in New York. After a fair trial, it is conceded that no one need be deprived of his liquor, if he desires it, and has the money to buy it. While the bill has closed the saloons, it has been instrumental in multiplying the number of hotels and social clubs. Many of the latter have been organised in the tenement house districts, which the courts declare have equal legal standing with the larger clubs. At these clubs the members can get their beer or other drinks on Sunday under the sanction of the law, which they formerly obtained surreptitiously in non-law-abiding saloons. The new law, however, seems to have had the effect to reduce somewhat the amount of Sunday drinking and drunkenness. Police court statistics show this. "Drunk cases" no longer crowd the Monday docket; besides on the streets intoxicated men are comparatively scarce on Sundays.

One of the needs of the day in the matter of Sunday School work is a closer rapport between the school and the homes of the scholars. Unless these two central institutions work together, all the good done in the one may be more than neutralised in the other. Signal instances now and then crop up of marvellous results in the training of young people in Christian life and truth, through the influence of an earnest Sunday-school teacher, in spite of the bad influence of a godless home. But these are rare at the best. It should be the aim of all teachers to enlist the sympathy of parents, and, where possible, the homes should be regularly visited. Wonderful results have occasionally followed such a method in influencing parents as well as children for good. It is important also that Christian parents should do their utmost to help the influence and teaching of the schools of their children. Nothing can be done to fill a parent's place in this matter; those who delegate the religious training of their young into the hands even of the Sunday-school, abdicate one of the primary responsibilities of their relation to their children, and yet is not this often done?

There is some comfort in learning from the chairman of the School Management Committee of the London School Board that the manners of English children are better than they were fifty years ago; but it is humbling to know, on the same authority, that they are still half a century behind the rest of Western Europe. Good manners help to smooth daily intercourse, and rough manners make it difficult and unpleasant. They are not to be confounded with principle and character, but there is no doubt that a beautiful soul will express itself in beautiful ways and words. Something more perhaps might be done by day-school and Sunday-school teachers in inculcating refinement of language and courtesy of demeanour. The root of all gentleness is in the love of God, but a word of instruction is required.

The selection of candidates for the ministry is a subject that is at present much exercising Nonconformists. The Calvinistic Methodist body in Wales has recently passed a series of rules and regulations with a view to direct the churches how to act in the matter. It is not always that a desire to enter the ministry is a proof of a Divine call. Some of the most unsuitable and undesirable individuals creep in through the indiscriminating encouragement of friends. Natural ability and spiritual qualities are occasionally made subordinate to other considerations. In this way a good business man, or teacher, or artisan, is sometimes spoiled to make a poor minister, and both he and the churches he ministers to suffer in consequence.

It is one of the curious features of many who have become preachers with neither natural gifts nor spiritual power, that they are so seldom able to recognise their mistake. Faithful is the saying, If a man seeketh the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work. Many go so far and forget that on this follows a stringent list of qualities necessary in a minister. It is the presence or absence of these qualities that should determine the action of every church in selecting and advising men to undertake this high and holy work.

Before leaving the United States, Li Hung Chang gave utterance to some interesting remarks in reply to an address presented to his Excellency by missionary and other religious societies. He said inter alia :—

In the name of the Emperor of China, I beg to tender to you his best thanks for your approval and appreciation of the protection afforded to the American missionaries in China. What we have done—and how little we have done on our part!—is but the duty of our Government; while the missionaries, as you have so well expressed, have not sought for pecuniary gains at the hands of our people. They have not been secret emissaries of diplomatic schemes. Their labours have no political significance; and the last, not the least, if I might be permitted to add, they have not interfered with or usurped the rights of the territorial authorities....

Opium-smoking being a great curse to the Chinese population, your societies have tried your best, not only by anti-opium societies, but to afford the best means to stop the craving for the opium; and also, you receive none as your converts who are opium-smokers.

Our recent visitor clearly has a correct appreciation of the value of Christian missions among his countrymen, and evidently knows that opium, whether smoked or eaten, is a curse. It is an important thing to be reminded that this is the repeated testimony of the strongest man in China.

"Can Satan cast out Satan?" Can sacerdotalism cast out sacerdotalism or sacramentarianism cast out sacramentarianism? Can sacerdotalism and sacramentarianism in Protestantism cast out the same things in Romanism? Just as far as Protestantism is leavened by Romanism it is powerless to overcome it. And sacerdotalism and sacramentarianism, which are the father and mother of Romanism, are increasing their kind in Protestantism. Sons of evangelical men in the past or passing generation become Ritualists or Jesuits in this. Even in Nonconformity a tendency to sacramentarianism is visible. The descendants of those who bled and burned for the Gospel's sake are going back willingly to the servitude from which we had been delivered. In the name of liberty, England gives liberty to tyranny—gives liberty to imprison her daughters in convents, helpless in this world, and hopeless for the world to come.

Thoughtlessly and with misplaced confidence, Protestant parents of all classes send their children to Popish schools and conventual seminaries, and will reap the fruit in a coming Romanised generation. The advance of Romanism is not merely to be counted by heads, but to be observed in the leaven which the woman is hiding in the meal until the whole shall be leavened.

We commend to our readers a remarkable letter from a rector, "The Eucharist a Lay Sacrament," which appeared in The Methodist Times of Oct. 8.

It is very interesting and suggestive to trace in Mrs. Butler's new book "Personal Reminiscences of a Great Crusade" (Horace Marshall & Son), the relation of prayer to the inception and to every marked step of the great struggle which she has led against State-regulation of vice. Before entering on her arduous task she herself passed through a period of great heart-searching, when her soul lived at the mercy-seat. Only thus could she have been prepared for the terrible struggle which was awaiting her; her attitude had to become like Mary's—"Behold the handmaid of the Lord: be it unto me according to thy word." Again, before the determination was reached to carry the war of holy principle into the countries of Europe where the soul and body destroying system had been long entrenched, there was a period of earnest waiting on God on the part of a small number of believing men and women. Special dealings with God have presaged special dealings with men. Prayer forced the repeal of the C.D. Acts at home. These facts lead us to believe that in some way which we cannot forecast the present threatened attempts to reintroduce the Acts into England will be defeated. But prayer must precede and accompany fighting.

Another great lesson, written on every line of this story, is the wisdom, the safety, and the efficiency of co-operation between men and women. On the front of the question it would seem to be unadvisable, and even impossible, but principle declared it to be right, and experience has justified it to the full. We can easily understand a feeling of doubt arising in some minds on certain occasions as to the propriety of women attending certain meetings, e.g., the objections of some friends of the good cause in Geneva to the attendance of ladies in hygienic sections of the Congress, when details would be entered into which no one would like to hear. But the English reformers stood true to their principles. Ladies might keep away, if they thought fit, but none should be excluded. And this rule has always acted well, both men and women, old workers in this cause, testifying that they preferred speaking to mixed meetings, because the presence of the two sexes elevated and purified the tone. To some anxious ladies Mrs. Butler gave the assurance that they would be astonished to find how easy it is for men and women to work and consult together.

How true it is that the foundation principles of Christianity, which we are in danger of overlooking, contain the mightiest forces, and have done and are doing the greatest work in the world. Principal Tymms did good service by pointing out at the Baptist Union that the doctrine of man's individual and primary responsibility to God as his Supreme Master always shattered all selfish forms of human authority. The determination of Christians to preach the Gospel has been the most potent weapon for securing freedom of thought, of utterance, and of conduct in all the affairs of life. A moment's thought reminds us that the common blessings of our free daily life are the natural outflow of the Gospel, and could have come to us in no other way. The guarantee of their continuance with us is that the truth be held fast. The principles of English public life for which our fathers suffered so much are noted in the New Testament; the Gospel is our true Magna Charta.

National Protestant Congress.—The proceedings of the seventh National Protestant Congress were opened on Monday afternoon at Exeter Hall, Strand, by a prayer-meeting, and later on a conversazione was held. Sir C. Robert Lighton presided at the opening meeting, and, after expressing sympathy with Mrs. Benson on the death of the Archbishop, observed that the Congress was organised with the object of bringing together annually, and at different places, Evangelical Protestants of all denominations, and members of all Protestant societies, to confer as to efforts for maintaining Evangelical truth and the liberties so dearly bought and secured to this country at the Reformation. Many who had no sympathy with Romanism or its hand-maidens, Ritualism and Rationalism, were not aware of what was going on in their midst, and it was hoped that one great result of the Congress would be that, when important facts had been placed before them, they would join heart and soul in resisting the enemies of their faith. He referred with regret to the loss of Sir Arthur Blackwood, an ardent supporter of the Congress. The subject discussed during the evening was "The Church of God." The chief speakers were Rev. Philip Reynolds (Highbury), Rev. J. G. Gregory (Brighton), and Professor Radford Thomson (London). We hope next week to give some account of the sessions of the Congress.

The Plague of Priestism.

IN a previous article bearing the title "The Sword over England," the present writer sought to show that the existing state of irreligion in England constitutes, from a national point of view, a most grave danger, inasmuch as it is a serious symptom of an inner moral decay which, if unchecked, will bring disaster to the nation. The purpose of this paper is to point out the national danger which threatens us in view of the widespread sacerdotalism of our time.

The prophets of God in every age have not only exposed the great sin of irreligion, but they have, with almost greater vehemence, attacked the evil of a false religion. The Hebrew prophets declared in the name of the living God, that any departure from the Divinely appointed worship would be visited with the severest of penalties. Our blessed Lord Himself pronounced his most terrible woes against those religionists who "made the Word of God of none effect through their tradition." Amongst the very last words of the great Apostle Paul, there is a prediction of the coming time when men would not "endure the sound doctrine," but would be "turned unto fables."

This Divine hostility to a false religion must not be regarded as arbitrary. It is the necessary and logical attitude of Truth towards Falsehood. The God of Truth cannot endure a lie, nor can they who have learned lessons in his Fatherly school. Falsehood at all times is unendurable, but it becomes doubly so when it wears the mask of truth.

Now, in what follows I desire to write with perfect charity, and without the use of one unjustifiable term; but at the same time to use great plainness of speech in dealing with a most painful subject.

No lover of the Bible and of human souls can view without dismay the extraordinarily rapid spread of the plague of Priestism in this our loved land. Public opinion has either veered completely round, or else it has been most heavily drugged; for while a few years ago priests were compelled to do their work largely in secret because of the hostility of the people towards them, to-day these gentlemen are working in broad daylight, in full view of everybody, and are boldly announcing their plans for the "conversion" (!) of England and Wales, and none make them afraid. What has happened to Englishmen that such a change of front has come about? Some of us, I am afraid, have been too charitable in the past, and have scarcely suspected what has been really going on. But now that all disguise has been thrown off, and ROME, ever true to her motto, Semper eadem, has informed the world what are her real intentions, it is about time to prepare for war. When a nation's life is being surrounded by corrupting influences, the parrot cry of "toleration" is severely out of place.

In declaring war against Priestism we must always remember that our quarrel is not with individual men, but with a system. It is impossible to disguise from ourselves the fact that many most saintly and evangelical people have been found in the Church of Rome, but they have been so in spite of their surroundings. God has his own everywhere; there were saints even in Cæsar's household. But where there has been one free, bold, evangelical Christian in the Church of Rome, there have been hundreds of thousands of ignorant and superstitious people who have been held in thrall by priests. No system may be judged by its exceptions, but by its common fruits.

Between pure Christianity and the dogmas of Rome there can be no compromise. The two positions are apart as the poles. Rome, on her side, has made it clearer than ever, in recent manifestoes, that she will not abate the least of her claims; we, on our part, must have as clear a position.

We have no party ends to serve, we have nothing but a strong sense of loyalty to truth when, as Christians, we declare that Rome's central dogma of the Mass is in the whole, and in all its parts, not merely a perversion of the original ordinance, but so entirely an unwarrantable human invention as to bear not the slightest resemblance to the Supper of that first solemn Thursday night.

Richly vested priests, elaborate music, clouds of incense, the pretended magical transformation of bread into flesh, and a trembling reception of the host by the communicant—will any sane man pretend to discover in this complication any sort of connection with the simplicity of the first rite? Those who believe in the New Testament cannot endure so manifest a lie as that which Rome makes

THE FOUNDATION OF HER SYSTEM.

In like manner we contrast Rome's intercession of saints with the Christian truth of our Lord's sole intercession; her doctrine of the confessional with the truth of 1 John i. 7; her army of intercepting priests with the truth of personal and direct access to God through Jesus Christ; her fierce doctrine of Purgatory with the Christian truth of Paradise. We put all these together, and then ask what possible chance there is of compromise or of union? No! these two camps are hostile, and between them there can only be war—on our side a war to conquer misled dupes, and to lead them to the truth which emancipates. The effect upon individual souls of the teachings of Rome cannot be other than disastrous. True Christianity is spiritual; everything about Rome is material, even her Christ is reached through a wafer. Rome thwarts the purpose of God at every turn. In place of the "liberty wherewith the Son makes free," she offers her localised deity, the terror of her anathemas, the bondage of her confessional, and dogmas which alike outrage reason and faith. And whoever surrenders himself wholly to this system does so at the expense of his soul's highest welfare.

It is not, however, my purpose just here to pursue this line further, but rather to speak of the effect of priestism upon the life of the nation. Wherever priests have ruled, nations have been stunted. It is perfectly true that the monasteries of bygone days were seats of learning—such as it was. But who were they that learned? And what was it that was learned? Were the common people educated, or were they kept practically as serfs? The history of mediæval times supplies an abundant answer. Old English life until the Reformation was only free as it chirruped "Amen" to the decrees of the priests, and whoever dared to vindicate truth in spite of them paid dearly for his temerity. The papal interdict was always kept in view of a liberal people, and this was a vengeance which few dared to invoke. And while Rome ruled in England, England was a common nation with but little enterprise. Let it not be forgotten that our present development has taken place since we have cast off the yoke of the Italian Bishop.

With other nations it has been and is still the same. Let any impartial observer compare Protestant and Catholic Ireland: the one bright, free, enterprising; the other dirty, superstitious, ignorant, and crushed.

Look at Spain and Italy, overrun with priests, and both of these priest-ridden countries are battling against bankruptcy.

Indeed, in the nature of things, the rule of the priests means servitude on the part of men. Priestism is despotic, it allows no room for the exercise of freedom; you must accept all their dogmas without question, even if they contradict the plainest facts. And when the mind and conscience are made captive, the day for enterprise has passed.

OUR WHOLE NATIONAL LIFE IS THREATENED by the present plague of priestism. The growing popularity of the Confessional is laying the foundation of priestly despotism over home life, and when homes are poisoned, woe to the State!

The former history of England in Catholic times is open for us to read; and the object lessons of Romanist nations are before us at the present day. In view of these, do Englishmen really mean to fling away their heritage?

And what is most important of all to remember is that to us has been committed the trust of an open Bible and the re-emphasized commission to preach the Gospel among all the nations. The contemplation of commercial degradation is unpleasant, but the degradation which would be ours if we closed the Bible, and ceased to preach the Gospel (which will assuredly happen if priests gain the supremacy), would be infinitely more shameful.

Our commercial and political prosperity is a fruit of that tree of life, which was planted in this land three centuries ago. If we consent to the uprooting of the tree, certainly the fruit will cease to appear.
